If Attorney A undertakes to represent both the family trust and the charitable trust, and the family trust fails to distribute the amounts mandated to the charitable trust, may Attorney A cease to represent the family trust and represent the charitable trust in a suit to mandate distribution to the charitable trust from the family trust?

Opinion #2:

Yes, if the family trust consents. In the event that the family trust fails to distribute the required amounts to the charitable trust, there would be an irreconcilable conflict of interest between those two clients, and Attorney A would be required to withdraw from the representation of one or the other of the trusts. Rule 5.1(b). If Attorney A chooses to withdraw from representation of the family trust, the family trust then becomes Attorney A's former client. Rule 5.1(d) prohibits a lawyer from representing an interest adverse to that of a former client in the same or substantially related matter without the former client's consent. Since the matters involved are substantially related, it follows that Attorney A may not represent the charitable trust in an action adverse to the interest of her former client, the family trust, without the consent of the family trust. In determining whether to ask for such consent, Attorney A should be mindful of language contained in comment 4 of Rule 5.1, which declares that a lawyer cannot properly ask for consent when a disinterested lawyer would conclude that the client should not consent under the circumstances. In this case, the family trust should not be asked to consent if Attorney A's continuing representation of the charitable trust will require the use of confidential information of the family trust.

RPC 145

January 15, 1993

Lawyer Approval of Settlement

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not include language in an employment agreement that divests the client of her exclusive authority to settle a civil case.

Inquiry:

I write to request an opinion from the North Carolina State Bar regarding the following language which I contemplate inserting in my employment agreements for contingency fee cases:

No settlement of my claim shall be made without the consent of both me and my attorney.

I have read this contract and understand it, agree, and sign it of my own free will.

Clearly, through this language, the client contracts to waive his exclusive right to settle the case. Would this allow me to refuse to settle the case for a given amount, and, if need be, try the case if I thought an offer the client was willing to accept was less than the settlement value of the case; or would the use of this language violate Canon VII and Rule 7.1 of the Rules of Professional Conduct? What language, if any, do you suggest I insert in an employment agreement that would assist me in resolving a situation where the client and I disagree on the value of a settlement offer?

Opinion:

Rule 7.1(c)(l) provides that a lawyer shall abide by a client's decision whether to accept an offer of settlement of a matter. Therefore, a lawyer cannot divest a client of his exclusive authority to settle his case.

There is no ethical impropriety in having the sentence, "I have read this contract and understand it, agree, and sign it of my own feel will," in the retainer agreement.

RPC 146

January 15, 1993

Invitations to Law Firm's Hospitality Suite

Opinion rules that a law firm may invite existing clients to a social function hosted by the law firm prior to a bid letting for contracts. Opinion further rules that the law firm may host a social function for nonclients who attend the bid letting as long as the law firm does not solicit employment from nonclients.

Inquiry #1:

The North Carolina Department of Transportation awards contracts on a monthly basis. Many contractors and subcontractors occupy rooms at the North Raleigh Hilton the evening prior to such letting.

Law Firm A is interested in hosting a hospitality suite at the North Raleigh Hilton the evening before such letting. Law Firm A wants to invite existing clients who may be in attendance as well as other contractors who are not existing clients.

Opinion #1:

Yes. The law firm may host a hospitality suite at the site of the bid letting for those persons or firms that are existing clients of the law firm. Rule 2.4 does not prohibit a lawyer's contact with existing clients.

Inquiry #2:

May Law Firm A send an invitation to nonclient contractors it knows will be attending?

Opinion #2:

Yes. Law Firm A may send an invitation to nonclient contractors it knows will be attending the bid letting as long as Law Firm A does not solicit business from the nonclients who come to the hospitality suite. Rule 2.4(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits a lawyer's in-person or live telephone solicitation for professional employment from a prospective client with whom the lawyer has no family or prior professional relationship when a significant motive for the lawyer's doing so is the lawyer's pecuniary gain. Assuming that the hospitality suite function is a means of promoting good will, which could lead to employment of Law Firm A by the nonclients, Law Firm A may invite nonclient contractors. Again, members of Law Firm A must be very careful to avoid solicitation of professional employment from the nonclient contractors who come to the hospitality suite.

RPC 147

January 15, 1993

Editor's note: See Rule 5.4(a)(4) for the exception.

Percentage Bonuses for Paralegals

Opinion holds that an attorney may not pay a percentage of fees to a paralegal as a bonus.

Inquiry:

A law firm employed an experienced certified legal assistant who worked exclusively in the area of real estate for many years. The legal assistant, under the supervision of the attorneys in the firm, participates in all phases of real estate practice: searching titles, preparing deeds, closing papers, and foreclosure documents.

The firm pays the legal assistant a regular salary which is supplemented by periodic bonuses. The bonuses are discretionary with the firm's partners, but are generally related to the profitability of the firm's real estate practice.

The firm wishes to implement a system of performance-based incentives for its employees. It proposes to supplement the legal assistant's salary with monthly bonuses calculated on the firm's net income from the real estate closings which the legal assistant has worked on. Each bonus would be equal to a small percentage (approximately five percent) of the compensation which the firm received for real estate services in which the assistant has participated during that month.

May the firm pay such bonuses without violating Rule 3.2, or any other provision, of the Rules of Professional Conduct if:

a) The bonuses, and the means for calculating them, are made an express part of the legal assistant's employment contract; or

b) The bonuses remain discretionary and the same method of calculating them is used for purposes of guidance only?

Opinion:

While bonuses for productivity are not prohibited, the firm may not pay the bonuses to its paralegal under either alternative set out in the inquiry without violating Rule 3.2 of the Rules of Professional Conduct. That rule prohibits attorneys from sharing legal fees with nonlawyers, except in certain circumstances not relevant to this inquiry. It is apparent from the inquiry that the paralegal's bonuses would be calculated based upon a percentage of the income the firm derives from legal matters on which the paralegal has worked. This plan in effect pays the paralegal a percentage of the legal fees received by the firm and therefore falls squarely within the prohibition of Rule 3.2. The proposed method of calculation violates Rule 3.2 regardless of whether the bonuses are made part of the paralegal's employment contract or whether they are paid at irregular intervals at the discretion of the partners in the firm. See CPR 289.

RPC 148

January 15, 1993

Division of Fees

Opinion holds that a lawyer may not split a fee with another lawyer who does not practice in her law firm unless the division is based upon the work done by each lawyer or the client consents in writing, the fee is reasonable, and responsibility is joint.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A and Attorney B do not practice in the same firm. Attorney A refers a case to Attorney B because the nature of the case involves matters not normally handled by Attorney A but within the area of practice of Attorney B (IRS estate tax matter). There is no written or oral agreement between the attorneys or with the client concerning a division of fees before, during, or after the relationship (there has never been any written or oral agreement of fee sharing between Attorney A and Attorney B in any past relationship); the client is not advised of any joint representation and the work is performed by Attorney B.

After a fee is received by Attorney B, Attorney A contacts Attorney B asking that one-third of the fee be shared with Attorney A in accordance with a practice which Attorney A has with other attorneys. Attorney B has not had any prior arrangement with Attorney A or any other attorney concerning such a fee splitting, and Attorney B is primarily concerned about the ethical implications of such a fee splitting arrangement given the following additional facts:

In the course of his representation, Attorney B had to make a disclosure to a government agency (IRS) concerning his fee which was signed under penalty of perjury. The disclosure was necessary in order to obtain a benefit (tax deduction) for his client. Attorney B is now concerned that any fee splitting arrangement entered into between the parties after a resolution of the case may jeopardize the estate's deduction previously obtained for the client. Attorney B has disclosed this to the client who has denied permission for a fee split because of the potential problems that such a reopening could have on the estate. Attorney A believes there is no ethical conflict with his receiving a one-third fee for his referral.

May Attorney B ethically fee split any portion of the fee with Attorney A?

Opinion #1:

Attorney B may not split any portion of the fee with Attorney A. Rule 2.6(d) provides that attorneys not in the same law firm may split fees only if the division is in proportion to the work done by each lawyer or if the client agrees to the division in writing, each lawyer assumes joint responsibility for the representation, and the total fee is reasonable. The inquiry makes it clear that Attorney A has not done any work on the matter and that the client has not agreed to the fee splitting arrangement. Consequently, a division of the fee would violate Rule 2.6(d). Additionally, it appears that, in light of the situation with the IRS, that any fee splitting arrangement might prejudice the client, in violation of Rule 7.1(a)(3).

Inquiry #2:

Would the answer to question 1 above be different if the additional facts above were not in existence?

Opinion #2:

No. The fee splitting proposal would still violate Rule 2.6(d).

RPC 149

January 15, 1993

Editor's Note: Portions of this opinion may be overruled by RPC 158.

Unclaimed Client Funds

Opinion rules that an attorney may not donate a client's funds to a charity without the client's consent.

Inquiry #1:

When Attorney A undertakes to represent a client in regard to a traffic ticket, Attorney A tries to estimate the fines and costs and have the client pay that amount in advance. Sometimes the client is owed a refund. Attorney A sends a trust account check for the refund together with a receipt from the court. Sometimes the client never cashes the check and it stays on the books. After a certain period of time has elapsed, may the attorney stop payment on the check and contribute the money to a charity in the client's name but without the client's consent?

Opinion #1:

No. Since the attorney knows the identity of the client and presumably has a recent address for the client from the traffic ticket, the attorney should make every effort possible to get the client to cash the trust account check. Nothing else can be done with the client's money, without the client's consent, except escheating it to the treasurer pursuant to G.S. §116B as prescribed by Rule 10.2(h)(3)(a). G.S. §116B-31.5 provides a method for voluntary early delivery of funds to the treasurer under certain circumstances. See RPC 89.

Inquiry #2:

Attorney A is considering writing clients that the total costs of the citation will be a certain amount payable in advance, that any fines and costs will be paid out of that in full and that the balance will be his fee. Would that be ethical? Is there any better way to handle this problem?

Opinion #2:

No. A lawyer shall not enter into a contingent fee arrangement for representing a defendant in a criminal case. A contingent fee is one which is dependent on the outcome of the matter for which service is rendered. Further, a lawyer shall not acquire a proprietary interest in the subject matter of litigation he is conducting for a client. Rule 5.3(a). The lawyer may collect a fixed fee in advance and an amount estimated for the fines and costs, but the client must remain ultimately responsible for the actual expenses. Rule 2.6(c). See RPC 76.

RPC 150

January 15, 1993

Linking Trust and Business Accounts

Opinion rules that an attorney cannot permit the bank to link her trust and business accounts for the purpose of determining interest earned or charges assessed if such an arrangement causes the attorney to use client funds from the trust account to offset service charges assessed on the business account.

Inquiry:

Attorney A maintains a trust account and a business account with Sunshine Bank. Attorney A has been a participant in IOLTA. Over the last several months, however, Attorney A's account has been incurring substantial charges (over $400 in the last year).

After repeated inquiries, Attorney A discovered that her business account and trust account were "linked" for the purposes of determining interest earned or charges assessed. Both accounts are subject to a charge per deposit or check, and interest accrues on daily balances such that a substantial balance in the account should offset the check and deposit charges.

Since Attorney A had repeatedly instructed the bank not to debit the trust account for charges, intending to avoid charges for new checks, etc., the bank had linked the two accounts so that the charges from the trust account were assessed against the business account. Of course, being a member of IOLTA, the interest on the trust account balance, which would otherwise have offset the charges, was sent to IOLTA. In effect, Attorney A was paying for contributions to IOLTA. Being deprived of the offsetting interest on the trust account, the numerous checks she wrote for real estate conveyances created a considerable debit.

At this point, the bank has changed both accounts to commercial accounts which do not draw interest, but the balances in the accounts create "credits" which offset the charges per check or deposit. Any negative balance on the trust account is shifted over to the business account.

Does this situation create any ethical problems? Neither account will ever yield a credit in the form of interest income, and hopefully the ongoing balances will offset the debit charges such that they will usually be "free" accounts.

Opinion:

Yes. Under Rules 10.1 and 10.3, client funds in a trust account may not be used to pay bank service charges or fees of the bank because such funds are the sole property of the client and cannot benefit the attorney. Rules 10.1 and 10.3 do permit the payment of bank service charges and fees of the bank from interest earned on client funds deposited in the lawyer's trust account. The new arrangement established by Attorney A's bank could create ethical problems if the credits and service charges to the trust and business accounts were not accounted for independently. Since the trust and business accounts are "linked" for the purposes of determining interest earned or charges assessed, it would be impossible for one to separate out the specific amount of interest earned or charges assessed for either account. If for a particular statement period the trust account earned more "credits" than it was assessed charges, while the business account was assessed more service charges than it earned "credits", the trust account "credits" could offset the service charges assessed on the business account. Rule 10.1 does not permit the lawyer to use client funds from the trust account ("credits" from the trust account) for the lawyer's personal benefit (the offset of service charges assessed on the business account).

RPC 151

July 9, 1993

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 151 (Revised).

Representation of Insured and Insurer

Opinion discusses when an attorney who is a full-time employee of an insurance company may represent the insurance company, the insured, or others respecting various matters of interest to the insurance company.

Note: The following inquiries were submitted to seek a clarification of CPR 326 (adopted January 14, 1983) which reconsidered opinion 682 (1969) and CPR 19 (1974).

Inquiry #1:

May an attorney who is a full-time salaried employee of insurance company

A appear as attorney of record on behalf of insurance company A in a declaratory judgment action brought by insurance company A?

Opinion #1:

CPR 326 (1983) was reviewed by the North Carolina Supreme Court in Gardner v. N.C. State Bar, 316 N.C. 285, 341 S.E.2d 517 (1986). The North Carolina Supreme Court held that a licensed attorney who is a full-time employee of an insurance company may not ethically represent one of the company's insureds as counsel of record in an action brought by a third party for a claim covered by the insurance policy. 316 N.C. at 286. The court also held that the attorney could not properly appear as counsel of record for the insured in the prosecution of a subrogation claim for property damage. Id. The insurance company is not a named party in either the third party action or the subrogation claim and in both cases, the insured is the real party in interest. Thus, an insurance company attorney who appears under these circumstances is acting for the insured not the company, in violation G.S. §84-5, which forbids corporations to engage in the practice of law or to represent a person in court. 316 N.C. at 291.

Where an insurance company brings a declaratory judgment action, the company is a named party to the action. A staff attorney for the company may appear as attorney of record for the insurance company in such a situation without running afoul of G.S. §84-5.

Inquiry #2:

May a staff attorney employed full time by an insurance company appear as attorney of record on behalf of the insurance company in a declaratory judgment action filed against it by its insured or another insurance carrier?

Opinion #2:

Yes, so long as the staff attorney represents the insurance company and not its insured. See answer to Inquiry #1.

Inquiry #3:

In a declaratory judgment action which names both insurance company A and the policyholder, may a staff attorney who is a full-time salaried employee of insurance company A represent both insurance company A and the policyholder if the interests of the policyholder and the insurance carrier are identical?

Opinion #3:

No. CPR 326 noted that the attorney's paramount responsibility is to the court and client which he serves before the court. This responsibility should not be influenced by any other entity. When an attorney, who is employed by a corporation, is directed by his employer in the representation of other individual litigants, he is subject to the direct control of his employer, which is not itself the litigant and which is not itself subject to professional discipline as an officer of the court. This diluted responsibility to the court and the client must be avoided.

The conflict perceived by the ethics committee is thus as much a function of the relationship of the insurance company, in-house counsel and the insured as the actual difference in their interests in the particular litigation. Even where, as in this inquiry, the insurance company and the insured have similar interests in the lawsuit, the problem of the "diluted responsibility" to the client created by the introduction of a corporate entity into the legal relationship will continue to exist.

Inquiry #4:

May a staff attorney who is a full-time salaried employee of insurance company A appear as attorney of record before the North Carolina Industrial Commission on behalf of insurance company A and its insured, the employer?

Opinion #4:

No. The interests of the insurance company and its insured in such an action conflict, in violation of Rule 5.1 of the Rules of Professional Conduct. See also answer to Inquiry #3.

Inquiry #5:

A claim has been submitted to insurance company A. The claimant's attorney and insurance company A's representative have agreed to refer the claim to voluntary binding arbitration.

There is a high/low agreement which prescribes the perimeters of possible arbitration awards, and the high is within the insured's policy limits. In this situation may an attorney who is a full-time salaried employee of insurance company A appear at a live hearing of the arbitration to represent the insurance company's interest in this claim which has been made against its insured's policy and to argue the matter before the arbitrator?

Opinion #5:

No. The insured, not the insurance company, is the real party in interest in such an arbitration proceeding. "If an insurance company, through its employees, appears for an insured, it would be appearing as an attorney for someone else. The company itself is not the party to the action. The insured is the one who is named." Gardner v. N.C. State Bar, 316 N.C. 285, 291 (1986). Consequently, the insurance company would violate G.S. §84-5 by appearing through its in-house counsel at the proceeding. Independent outside counsel should be hired to appear for the insured. The fact that the arbitration award will be within the insured's policy limits does not completely negate the intrusion on the attorney's professional independent judgment created by the in-house attorney's relationship with the employer/insurance company.

Inquiry #6:

Under the same fact situation as Inquiry #5, if the arbitration were conducted through documents procedure only without a live hearing, may the staff attorney for the insurance company appear as attorney of record in the name of its insured to protect the insurance company's interest?

Opinion #6:

No. See response to Inquiry #5. The insurance company would still be practicing law for another, in violation of G.S. §84-5, even though its activities would be restricted to the preparation and submission of documents.

Inquiry #7:

May a staff attorney employed full time by an insurance company take an examination under oath of its insured who is pursuing a first party claim under the insured's insurance policy?

Opinion #7:

Yes, so long as the in-house attorney is acting only for the insurance company in the proceeding.

Inquiry #8:

May a staff attorney employed full time by an insurance company appear as attorney of record on behalf of and in the name of the company and pursue a claim against its insured?

Opinion #8:

Yes. There is no conflict of interest or infringement of the staff attorney's professional judgment while the company is pursuing a claim against the insured for the company. The company has a primary interest in the claim and may represent itself respecting such claim without running afoul of G.S. §84-5.

Inquiry #9:

May a staff attorney employed full time by an insurance company appear as attorney of record on behalf of the company and pursue a subrogation claim on behalf of the company joining with its insured as a coplaintiff against a third party who is liable for damages to the insured?

Opinion #9:

No. In pursuing the subrogation claim on behalf of the company with the insured as coplaintiff, the insurance company attorney would be required to make decisions respecting the rights of the insured, in violation of G.S. §84-5. Such a situation also creates a potential conflict of interest in violation of Rule 5.1.

Inquiry #10:

May a staff attorney employed full time by an insurance company appear as attorney of record for the company in a hit-and-run suit brought against the name of the insurance company or brought against an unknown defendant designated as "John Doe?"

Opinion #10:

Yes. In this case, it appears that the insurance company is the real party in interest and may be subject to liability apart from the insured's liability.

Consequently, the insurance company may represent itself without violating G.S. §84-5.

Inquiry #11:

May a staff attorney employed full time by an insurance company appear as attorney of record for the company, but making that appearance in the name of an uninsured tort-feasor if the company's insured is pursuing an uninsured motorist claim? Assume for the sake of this inquiry that the insurance company has waived its subrogation rights.

Opinion #11:

No. Although G.S. §20-279.21(b)(3) in the uninsured motorist setting and G.S. §20-279.21(b)(4) in the underinsured motorist setting permit the insurance carrier to appear in defense of the claim although not named in the caption or named as a party, "anonymously" defending the lawsuit brought against the tort-feasor logically requires defense counsel to seem to be appearing on behalf of the tort-feasor. To do so constitutes practicing law, as that term is defined in G.S. §84-2.1, on behalf of another. The corporate insurer through its employees cannot practice law and appear on behalf of others under G.S. §84-5 as interpreted by the court in Gardner v. N.C. State Bar, supra.

Inquiry #11(a):

Same facts as Inquiry #11 except in this situation assume that the insurance company does not waive its subrogation rights.

Opinion #11(a):

No. See response to Inquiry #11.

Inquiry #12:

Same facts as Inquiry #11 except in this situation the staff attorney is representing the insurance company's interest in the name of an underinsured tort-feasor instead of in the name of an uninsured tort-feasor.

Opinion #12:

No. See response to Inquiry #11.

Inquiry #13:

Same inquiry as Inquiry #12 above; however, assume the insurance carrier is not willing to waive its subrogation rights.

Opinion #13:

No. See response to Inquiry #11.

Inquiry #14:

May a full-time salaried staff attorney of an insurance company appear for the company and file an interpleader action seeking court's approval for the allocation of settlement proceeds in a liability claim situation?

Opinion #14:

Yes, provided that the insurance company is a real party in interest and has rights which would be affected by the allocation of the settlement proceeds. The attorney could not properly represent the insured in this situation, however.

RPC 152

January 15, 1993

Disclosure of Material Terms of Plea Agreements

Opinion rules that the prosecutor and the defense attorney must see that all material terms of a negotiated plea are disclosed in response to direct questions concerning such matters when pleas are entered in open court.

Inquiry #1:

A prosecutor and defense attorney discuss the circumstances under which a defendant in a pending criminal case will plead guilty. It is tentatively agreed that the defendant will plead guilty to a lesser included offense as to one charge and that another unrelated charge will be dismissed. After discussion with counsel, defendant accepts the plea arrangement.

A transcript of plea is prepared which does not refer to the charge that is to be dismissed. Further, the transcript, as prepared, does not state that the defendant has agreed to plead as part of a plea arrangement.

When the plea is actually entered and accepted by the presiding judge, the defendant, under oath, states that there is no plea agreement. Neither the prosecutor nor defense counsel inform the judge about the earlier plea discussion or that in return for the plea of guilty, the defendant is being allowed to plead guilty to a lesser included offense and that another unrelated charge is to be dismissed as a result of the plea.

Under the above recited factual situation, would the conduct of all counsel be consistent with the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion #1:

No. Rule 1.2(c) of the Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits attorneys from engaging in conduct involving dishonesty, fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation. From the facts presented, it is clear that the client's guilty plea was the product of a negotiated plea arrangement. The client's untruthful answers to questions relating to the subject plea agreement and the lawyer's signature on the transcript, misrepresent the plea arrangement and thus are in violation of Rule 1.2(c). Additionally, Rules 7.2(a)(5) and (8) prohibit an attorney from knowingly using perjured testimony or false evidence and from counseling or assisting his client in conduct that the lawyer knows to be fraudulent.

Inquiry #2:

Assume a similar factual situation where the prosecutor agrees to tell the judge in open court before sentencing that the state is not opposed to a probationary sentence in return for the defendant's guilty plea, the transcript of plea states that the defendant has not agreed to plead as part of a plea agreement, when the plea is accepted by the trial court, the defendant, under oath, states there is no plea agreement and the judge is again unaware of the plea negotiations.

Opinion #2:

No. See Opinion #1.

Inquiry #3:

Assume a similar factual situation where the plea negotiation takes place between a lay administrative assistant of the district attorney and defense counsel. Assume further that the administrative assistant has not discussed the case beforehand with the district attorney or the assistant district attorney assigned to the case, but that the district attorney and his assistants are aware that the lay administrative assistant engages in such practice as a routine matter and that the district attorney has not disapproved of such practice.

Opinion #3:

Even though the district attorney may not directly participate in or become familiar with particular cases in which plea negotiations have been undertaken on his behalf by the administrative assistant, he or she is professionally responsible for the conduct described in the preceding inquiry to the extent that he or she has knowingly ratified the practice by acquiescence. Rule 3.3(c)(1) makes a lawyer professionally responsible for any conduct of a nonlawyer under his or her supervision which would violate the Rules of Professional Conduct if engaged in by a lawyer if the supervising lawyer "orders or, with the knowledge of specific conduct, ratifies the conduct involved...." Since the above described practice is described as being "routine" and the district attorney is aware of the conduct, such conduct would be inconsistent with the requirements of Rule 3.3(c)(1).

RPC 153

January 15, 1993

Termination of Joint Representation: The Former Client's Right to the File

Opinion rules that in cases of multiple representation a lawyer who has been discharged by one client must deliver to that client as part of that client's file information entrusted to the lawyer by the other client.

Inquiry:

Minor Plaintiff was injured during a surgical procedure at Hospital. Nurse anesthetist, a hospital employee, participated actively in the surgery, along with several others. Due to the focus of the early investigation by the hospital, Nurse independently sought an attorney to represent her interests and selected Attorney A, who was in private practice and who coincidentally generally represented Hospital and the liability insurance carrier for the hospital and the nurse, as a hospital employee. At the same time Nurse was represented by Attorney B, who was in charge of Hospital's legal department, and who held himself out to Nurse as her attorney during investigation of the occurrence and in protecting her in the event of a lawsuit that was felt to be "imminent."

Before undertaking representation of Nurse, Attorney A obtained approval of Attorney B and his office on behalf of Hospital and the liability insurance carrier. After Attorney A, Attorney B on behalf of Hospital, and the insurance company determined that the interests of Nurse and Hospital were the "same," they agreed to the joint representation of Nurse and Hospital and undertook investigation and management of the case, which continued for some time. Despite recognition by Attorneys A and B from the outset that reports of the incident by various participants differed, no disclosure was made of potential conflicts of interest existing at the time or that might arise later, and no attempt was made to limit the representation or sharing of information. During the period of joint representation of Nurse and Hospital, substantial information concerning the incident was gathered and placed in the file(s) maintained concerning the joint representation by both Attorneys A and B. Among the items contained in the files were statements obtained from individuals participating in the surgery by persons in Hospital's risk management department, a division of Hospital's legal department, headed by Attorney B. The files also contained hospital records of the injured party, which were furnished by Hospital. Nurse became aware of a "proposed statement" of facts concerning the occurrence, which was proposed by Attorney A as a report to be given to the injured minor's family, and, in her opinion, erroneously focused blame on her. Nurse had not participated in formulation of this statement and had not authorized it. Nurse requested a copy of the file from Attorney A for her review and use and asked if her interests were being protected. Nurse did not receive the file and did not receive answers satisfactory to her. Nurse then consulted Attorney X, who undertook to represent Nurse. Attorney X contacted Attorney A and requested a copy of all materials in the files relating to the representation of Nurse in order to assist in properly representing Nurse. Attorney A, on instructions from Attorney B for Hospital, refused to surrender statements that were given him by Hospital's risk management department, claiming that such materials are privileged as having been obtained in anticipation of litigation or trial. Attorney A also refused to surrender a copy of hospital records of the injured party claiming that those records are also privileged.

Under the circumstances, do Attorneys A and B have an ethical obligation to surrender the contents of the file(s) to Nurse and her new Attorney X?

Opinion:

Yes, otherwise irreparable harm could be done to a client needing the accumulated information to assist her defense. Rule 5.1 makes loyalty an essential element in the lawyer's relationship to a client. An impermissible conflict of interest may exist before representation is undertaken, in which event the representation should be declined. If such a conflict arises after representation has been undertaken, the lawyer should withdraw from the representation and comply with Rule 2.8. Rule 2.8(a)(2) obligates a lawyer whose employment has been terminated to surrender to the former client those portions of the file to which the client is entitled. Loyalty to a client is impaired when a lawyer cannot 1) represent the client zealously under Rule 7.1 and avoid prejudicing or damaging the client during the course of the professional relationship (Rule 7.1 (a)(3)), and 2) when the lawyer cannot keep the client reasonably informed or promptly comply with reasonable requests for information (Rule 6(b)(1)). When a lawyer undertakes representation of codefendants, an impermissible conflict may exist by reason of substantial discrepancy in the parties' testimony or incompatibility of positions. Identifying and resolving questions of conflict of interest is primarily the responsibility of the lawyer undertaking the representation and not the client's responsibility. Once Attorneys A and B determined that Nurse's and Hospital's interests were the same and, presumably, that no conflict of interest existed and then undertook joint representation of Nurse and Hospital, with the consent of Hospital and its insurance company, information gathered on behalf of Nurse and Hospital (who were deemed to have the "same interest") lost its confidential nature as between Nurse and Hospital by implied authorization, if not actual consent, under Rule 4(c)(1) and (2). Since Nurse relied on reasonable attorney-client expectations of protection of her interests and access to information, Attorneys A and B are now estopped to negate consent to the rights inuring to Nurse's benefit from the joint representation. Nurse is entitled to immediate possession of all information in the joint representation file or files of Attorneys A and B accumulated to the date of termination of representation that would or could be of some value to her in protecting her interests. This includes the items specified in the inquiry and any others that would or could be of some help to Nurse. The information must be surrendered unconditionally by Attorneys A and B without regard to whether the cost of its acquisition was advanced by either attorney or client (hospital). RPC 79. The attempt by Attorneys A and B to revoke the implied or actual authority to share information with Nurse can only apply prospectively to information gathered and work done after termination of representation.

RPC 154

January 15, 1993

Representation of Insured, Insurer, and UIM Carrier

Opinion rules that an attorney may not represent the insured, her liability insurer and the same insurer relative to underinsured motorist coverage carried by the plaintiff.

Inquiry #1:

Passenger A was injured in an automobile accident as a result of the admitted negligence of Driver B, who rented a room in A's home. Two other people were injured in another vehicle hit by B. A has underinsured motorist coverage (UIM) of $200,000 with Insurance Company X. B has a policy of liability insurance of $25,000/$50,000 also with Insurance Company X. A sued B and asserted a claim in excess of all insurance coverage. Insurance Company X hired Attorney Y. Attorney Y undertook representation of B, Insurance Company X under the liability policy, and Insurance Company X under the UIM policy.

Does Attorney Y have a disqualifying conflict of interest in representing B, Insurance Company X under the liability policy, and Insurance Company X under the UIM policy?

Opinion #1:

Yes. The provisions of G.S. §20-279.21(4) provide for certain subrogation or assignment rights by a UIM insurer against the owner, operator or maintainer of an underinsured vehicle. This would cause the interests of Driver B and Insurance Company X under its UIM policy to likely be materially different and adverse. Therefore, Attorney Y's representation of both clients would cause his representation of one client to be directly adverse to that of the other in violation of Rule 5.1(b). For example, Attorney Y's advice to Insurance Company X to pay a proposed settlement with Passenger A in such a manner as to enable Insurance Company X to proceed against Driver B under the subrogation rights provided in G.S. §20-279.21(4) would necessarily be adverse to Driver B. Conversely, for Attorney Y not to so advise Insurance Company X would be potentially adverse to that client.

Inquiry #2:

Prior to suit, B requested Insurance Company X to pay the liability limits to A but Insurance Company X refused to do so. Insurance Company X stated it had reserved the primary coverage for the two other injured parties. A offered a Covenant Not to Execute Judgment in excess of insurance coverage in return for immediate payment of the liability coverage of $25,000. Attorney Y offered to settle the case for $75,000 but refused to tender the $25,000 liability limits and accept the Covenant from A.

Does Attorney Y have a disqualifying conflict of interest in light of these circumstances?

Opinion #2:

Yes. See answer to Inquiry #1. Additionally, the circumstances set out in Inquiry #2 reveal a further conflict of interest between Insurance Company X and Driver B. It would appear that Insurance Company X's interest might be best served by allocating Insurance Company X's primary insurance policy in such a manner as to best benefit its financial obligations under its UIM policy, and such allocation might adversely affect Driver B's interest by raising her personal exposure to the other claimants injured in the accident. Attorney Y would once again be likely to have his ability to represent both clients materially impaired in violation of Rule 5.1(b).

RPC 155

October 29, 1993

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 155 (Second Revision).

Contingent Fees in Child Support Cases

Opinion rules that an attorney may charge a contingent fee to collect delinquent child support.

Inquiry:

May an attorney charge and collect a contingency fee in the amount of one-third of the funds collected for the recovery of delinquent child support when the custodial parent has insufficient means to defray legal expenses?

Opinion:

Yes. RPC 2. However, see Davis v. Taylor, 81 N.C. App. 42 (1986).

RPC 156

October 29, 1993

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 156 (Revised).

Informing Client Concerning Representation

Opinion rules that an attorney who has advised a client that he has been retained by the client's insurance company to represent him must reasonably inform the client and explain the matter completely when the insurance company pays its entire coverage and is "released from further liability or obligation to participate in the defense" under the provisions of G.S. §20-279.21(b)(4).

Inquiry:

Attorney A was retained by Insurance Company Y to represent Defendants L and M who are the named insureds on a policy of auto liability insurance issued by Insurance Company Y. A suit was brought by the adverse driver. Attorney A settled the suit for the policy limit applicable to driver's claim and obtained a Release and Dismissal with Prejudice as to driver's claim against L and M. Now Insurance Company Y has paid Plaintiff X the entire policy limits applicable to Plaintiff X's claim and has secured from Plaintiff X a Covenant Not to Enforce Judgment against L and M. With this payment to Plaintiff X, Insurance Company Y's policy limits have been exhausted. The Plaintiff's underinsured motorist carrier was put on notice of the proposed settlement prior to settlement pursuant to G.S. §20-279.21(b)(4), and the underinsured motorist carrier failed to advance payment to its insured Plaintiff X to preserve its subrogation rights. Plaintiff X has been unable to negotiate a settlement of her UIM claim with her UIM carrier and therefore is in the process of filing suit so that she can recover damages from her underinsured motorist carrier. In the case of Plaintiff X, the only action Attorney A has taken is to write a letter to L and M advising them that suit may be filed and that Attorney A has been retained to represent them. Suit has not been filed yet and therefore Attorney A has not filed an answer on behalf of L and M. Insurance Company Y would like for Attorney A to file a motion with the court when the lawsuit is filed pursuant to G.S. §20-279.21(b)(4) to be released from further liability or obligation to participate in the defense of the proceeding.

Can Attorney A represent Insurance Company Y and file this motion to be released?

Opinion:

No opinion is given as to the ethics of filing a motion in a suit that has not yet been filed. Attorney A has written L and M advising them that a suit may be filed, and Attorney A has been retained by Insurance Company Y to represent them. However, since Insurance Company Y has paid its full limits, it is "released from further liability or obligation to participate in the defense" of such proceeding by G.S. §20-279.21. Under such circumstances, Attorney A is required by Rule 6(b) to keep the client reasonably informed and to fully explain the matter to the extent reasonably necessary to permit the client to make informed decisions regarding this matter.

As Attorney A has written to L and M advising L and M that Attorney A has been retained to represent them, Attorney A should promptly inform L and M, in writing, that Attorney A will not be representing them and explain the full provisions of the statute and the situation to the extent reasonably necessary to permit the clients to make informed decisions regarding employing Attorney A, any other attorney, or electing not to be represented in any future lawsuits under the facts as given.

RPC 157

April 16, 1993

Editor's Note: See Rule 1.14 of the Revised Rules for additional guidance.

Representing a Client of Questionable Competence

Opinion rules that a lawyer may seek the appointment of a guardian for a client the lawyer believes to be incompetent over the client's objection.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A represents a client on a social security matter and determines, from confidential communications with his client, that the client is, in the attorney's opinion, not competent to handle his affairs in relation to the representation and that the client's actions in regard to the matters involved in the representation are detrimental to the client's own interest. For example, the client who sought the attorney's assistance with receipt of benefits from the social security administration, refuses to cash checks obtained for the client from social security despite the client's obvious need for financial support. The attorney believes that either a guardian should be appointed for the client under state law or that a representative payee should be appointed for the client under federal social security law. The client refuses to agree for the attorney to seek the appointment of a guardian, to seek the appointment of a representative payee, or even for the attorney to discuss this problem with the client's family. The attorney is of the opinion that the client lacks the capacity to form objectives necessary for a normal attorney/client relationship.

May the attorney seek the appointment of a guardian or a representative payee for the client?

Opinion #1:

Yes. The Rules of Professional Conduct do not speak directly to the question presented. There is language in the comment to Rule 2.8 concerning discharge and withdrawal suggesting that where an attorney is representing a client who is mentally incompetent she may "in an extreme case... initiate proceedings for a conservatorship or similar protection of the client." It follows that Attorney A may under the circumstances described seek the appointment of a guardian or a representative payee without the client's consent and over the client's objection if such appears to be reasonably necessary to protect the client's interests. In so doing, the attorney may disclose only her belief that there exists a good faith basis for the relief requested and may not disclose the confidential information which led her to conclude that the client is incompetent, except as permitted or required by Rule 4(c).

Inquiry #2:

In taking that action, may the attorney reveal confidential information so as to establish the grounds for guardianship or representative payee status?

Opinion #2:

See the answer to Inquiry #1.

Inquiry #3:

If the attorney may not seek appointment of a representative payee or guardian, must the attorney withdraw from the matter?

Opinion #3:

See the answer to Inquiry #1.

RPC 158

April 15, 1994

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 158 (Third Revision).

Advance Payment of Legal Fees

Opinion rules that a sum of money paid to a lawyer in advance to secure payment of a fee which is yet to be earned and to which the lawyer is not entitled must be deposited in the lawyer's trust account.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A undertakes to handle a traffic matter for Client B. Client B gives Attorney A a check for $400. They agree that $350 of that sum represents A's fee and the rest is to be used for costs. Attorney A and Client B have no signed fee agreement and there is no specific negotiation between A and B regarding whether the fee would be refundable under any circumstances. Nevertheless,

Attorney A considers the fee as a nonrefundable "true retainer."

Attorney A deposits Client B's $400 check into his attorney trust account and immediately withdraws $350 which he spends at once. Attorney A leaves the $50 in costs in the trust account. Two days after Client B has paid Attorney A, Client B discharges Attorney A and demands a refund of the $400. Attorney A has done no work on the matter, except for a 20 minute initial meeting with Client B. Attorney A gives Client B $50 only and refuses any additional refund on the grounds that the $350 was a nonrefundable retainer.

Has Attorney A violated the Rules of Professional Conduct by immediately withdrawing the entire $350 fee from his trust account or should he have left the fee in the account until he did more work on B's case?

Opinion #1:

In order for a payment made to an attorney to be earned immediately, the attorney must clearly inform the client that it is earned immediately, and the client must agree to this arrangement. In the instant case, it is plain that the fee was negotiated and paid as compensation for services which were to be rendered. Nothing was said by the attorney to indicate that the payment was nonrefundable or earned immediately upon payment. Therefore, despite Attorney A's misperception, the fee was a deposit securing the payment of a fee which was yet to be earned. As such, it was incumbent upon Attorney A to deposit the money in her trust account. See Rule 10.1(c)(2) and official comment. To the extent that any portion of the fee paid in this case was unearned at the time Attorney A was discharged, that amount should be paid back to Client B by check drawn on the trust account. Rule 2.8(a)(3).

Inquiry #2:

Attorney Z undertakes to handle a traffic case for Client X. Attorney Z tells X that he will handle the entire matter for $500 and that the $500 will cover his fees as well as any fines or costs in the case. Although Z knows generally how much the fines and costs are in traffic cases, the amounts do vary somewhat, depending upon the judge and the facts of the particular case. Consequently, the smaller the fine and costs, the more of the $500 which Attorney Z gets to keep as a fee.

Does this fee arrangement violate any provision of the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion #2:

No. Although the amount of the fee earned by Attorney Z may be partially indefinite at the time the fee is paid by Client X, the fee earned by Attorney Z is not a contingent fee which would otherwise be prohibited in a criminal case by Rule 2.6(c) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. In order for a fee to be contingent, the fee received by the lawyer and the amount paid by the client must both be contingent upon the outcome of the case. In the present case, the amount paid by Client X remains the same whatever the amount of the fine and whatever the costs. This type of flat charge for representation on a traffic offense gives a client certainty as to the ultimate cost of the representation.

Inquiry #3:

How much, if any, of the $500 must be held in Attorney Z's trust account until the traffic matter is resolved?

Opinion #3:

If Attorney Z and Client X intend that the $500 represents a payment of fees to be earned and costs, then Attorney Z must deposit the entire $500 in the trust account. If Attorney Z and Client X agree that the payment represents costs and a flat fee to which Attorney Z is immediately entitled, and the payment is in cash, any portion of the payment which is intended to cover costs must be deposited in Attorney Z's trust account and any portion of the payment which is Attorney Z's fee must be deposited in her operating account. See Rule 10.1(c)(2). If Attorney Z and Client X agree that the payment represents costs and a flat fee to which Attorney Z is immediately entitled and the payment of the entire $500 is by check, the check must be deposited in Attorney Z's trust account and, upon ascertaining the amount of the costs or an amount sufficient to cover the costs, Attorney Z should promptly withdraw that portion that is fee and deposit it in her operating account. Rule 10.1(c)(2). Whether the fee portion is deposited in the trust account or paid over to the operating account, any portion of the fee which is clearly excessive may be refundable to the client either at the conclusion of the representation or earlier if Attorney Z's services are terminated before the end of the engagement. Rule 2.6 (a). See also O'Brien v. Plumides, 79 N.C. App. 159, 339 S.E.2d 54, cert. dismissed, 318 N.C. 409, 348 S.E.2d 805 (1986).

Inquiry #4:

Will the answer to Inquiry #3 be any different depending upon whether Attorney Z and Client X agree that Z's fee is a nonrefundable retainer?

Opinion #4:

The situation posited in Inquiry #2 does not involve a nonrefundable retainer. See RPC 50. See also Opinion #3 above.

RPC 159

January 14, 1994

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 159 (Second Revision).

Settlement of Dispute Involving Impropriety of Mental Health Professional

Opinion rules that an attorney may not participate in the resolution of a civil dispute involving allegations against a psychotherapist of sexual involvement with a patient if the settlement is conditioned upon the agreement of the complaining party not to report the misconduct to the appropriate licensing authority.

Inquiry:

Lawyer L frequently represents patients who have civil claims against psychotherapists with whom they have become sexually involved. Such matters, obviously, have implications in regard to the therapist's license and the defense sometimes wishes to keep the allegations confidential.

May attorneys for the plaintiff and the defendant participate in the resolution of such a matter where settlement is conditioned upon the plaintiff's agreeing not to file a complaint against the defendant with the State Board of Medical Examiners or any other appropriate licensing body?

Opinion:

No. It is unethical for the attorney for either party to participate in the resolution of civil claims involving allegations of sexual involvement with patients by a psychotherapist where the settlement is conditioned upon the complaining party's agreement not to report the psychotherapist's misconduct to the appropriate licensing authority. See Rule 1.2(d).

RPC 160

July 21, 1994

Editor's Note: This opinion is overruled by 2002 Formal Ethics Opinion 2.

Lawyer as Member of Hospital's Board of Trustees

Opinion rules that a lawyer whose associate is a member of a hospital's board of trustees may not sue the hospital on behalf of a client.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A is an associate (nonshareholder) in a law firm in North Carolina. He was appointed to the board of trustees of a local hospital on October 7, 1991, and has served as a trustee since that time. The hospital is a public, nonprofit, charitable hospital governed by a board of trustees.

After the appointment of Attorney A as a trustee, Attorney B, a shareholder in the same law firm, filed a malpractice claim against a doctor and the hospital. Attorney B handled all aspects of the claim from the initial investigation forward without discussing it with Attorney A and without any assistance from Attorney A.

After oral discussions between Attorney A and the hospital attorney concerning his firm's involvement in the case, Attorney A wrote the hospital attorney a letter in which he stated that he did not feel there was a conflict of interest because he had complied with the procedures prescribed in CPR 290 . At all times Attorney A refrained from any expression of opinion about the case, as well as from formal or informal consideration of the matter, including any communications with anyone at the hospital concerning the matter, and absented himself from all hospital meetings during any discussion or vote concerning the case. Attorney B reached a settlement of the case through negotiations with attorneys for the doctor and the hospital.

The hospital now has a program which began on October 1, 1990, under which it pays a substantial portion of all malpractice claims out of hospital funds. Prior to October 1, 1990, the hospital was insured, but had a large deductible, and the settlement of this claim was paid entirely out of the deductible.

With respect to any new cases that may arise, would it be ethical for Attorney B to represent a client with a claim against the hospital, so long as there is adherence to the procedures prescribed in CPR 290 ?

Opinion #1:

No. Under Rule 5.1(b), an irreconcilable conflict would exist if a lawyer who is a member of the board of trustees of a nonprofit hospital were to represent a client who is suing the board or the hospital which is managed and controlled by that board. Rule 5.1(b). While lawyers are associated in a firm, none of them shall knowingly represent a client when any one of them practicing alone would be prohibited from doing so by the Rules of Professional Conduct. Rule 5.11(a) and CPR 66. RPC 53 is hereby overruled.

Other prior ethics opinions which appear to be in conflict with this opinion are distinguishable. CPR 290 allows a lawyer to appear before a government board upon which a lawyer from his or her firm is a member provided four specified steps are taken to insulate the attorney board member from the board's consideration of the particular matter. See also CPR 327. RPC 130 allows a law firm to accept employment on behalf of a governing board upon which its partner sits provided the representation is otherwise lawful and certain steps are taken to insulate the attorney board member from the decision. None of these prior opinions involve the representation of a client whose interests are directly adverse to those of the board and who is filing a lawsuit against the board upon which the attorney board member sits. CPR 290 and CPR 327 are unchanged by this opinion and remain in effect.

In reliance on RPC 53, lawyers have undertaken to represent clients in litigation or other adversarial proceedings filed against a board upon which a member of their law firm serves. To require lawyers who have relied upon RPC 53 to withdraw from the representation of a client in the midst of an adversarial proceeding or litigation would work a hardship upon the client. Therefore, this opinion shall be applied prospectively. Lawyers may continue to represent clients in litigation or other adversarial proceedings which were filed as of the effective date of this opinion despite service by another lawyer from the same firm on the board. However, the procedures for removing the attorney board member from involvement in the case set forth in CPR 290 must be observed. This opinion shall apply to the representation of clients in litigation or other adversarial proceedings against a board upon which a member of the firm serves which are filed on or after the effective date of the opinion.

Inquiry #2:

If the answer to Inquiry #1 is "no," is it permissible under any circumstances for Attorney A to sit on the hospital board and for Attorney B at the same time to handle the malpractice case against the hospital?

Opinion #2:

See the answer to Inquiry #1 above.

Inquiry #3:

Finally, would it make any difference in the answers to Inquiries #1 and #2 if Attorney A were a shareholder in the firm rather than an associate?

Opinion #3:

No.

RPC 161

April 15, 1994

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 161 (Revised).

Television Commercials for Legal Services

Opinion rules that a television commercial for legal services which fails to mention that bankruptcy is the debt relief described in the commercial and which describes results obtained for others is misleading.

Inquiry:

Attorney A advertises on television. The commercial does not mention bankruptcy but the announcer on the commercial says "you can get financial relief" and "you can pay your creditors as little as $25 per week pursuant to a federal payroll deduction plan." During the commercial, it is stated that relief is "under 11 U.S. Code Section 109." At the end of the commercial, no attorney's name is mentioned. Instead viewers are directed to call a telephone number which has additional recorded information about financial relief from debts. Viewers who call this telephone number listen to a 12-minute tape recording during which bankruptcy filing options, including bill consolidation under Chapter 13, are discussed. Callers are advised that they have reached "the 24-hour information hotline for debt reorganization." The 12-minute tape does not explain the circumstances under which creditors can be paid "as little as $25 per week" but it does state that the caller can combine "every bill...into one low monthly payment." Does this advertisement fall within the guidelines set forth in the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion:

No. Rule 2.2(a) allows a lawyer to advertise his services on television provided the commercials comply with Rule 2.1. Rule 2.1 prohibits false and misleading communications about a lawyer's services. A communication is false or misleading if it omits a fact necessary to make the statement, as a whole, not materially misleading. Rule 2.1(a). A communication is also false or misleading if it is likely to create an unjustified expectation about the results the lawyer can achieve. Rule 2.1(b).

Under the circumstances described in this inquiry, the failure of the television commercial to mention bankruptcy as the form of relief being described is an omission which makes the commercial materially misleading. Moreover, the statement in the commercial that the viewer "can pay creditors as little as $25 per week" is inherently misleading and creates an unjustified expectation about the results the lawyer can achieve which is not cured by the additional information in the 12-minute tape.

Rule 2.4(c) requires that the words, "This is an advertisement for legal services" be included at the beginning and ending of any "recorded communication from a lawyer soliciting professional employment from a prospective client known to be in need of legal services in a particular matter and with whom the lawyer has no family or prior professional relationship." Viewers who call the telephone number for additional information must be presumed to be in need of legal services. Therefore, the recorded messages must include the statement described in Rule 2.4(c). See RPC 115.

RPC 162

July 21, 1994

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 162 (Third Revision).

Communications with Opposing Party's Physicians

Opinion rules that an attorney may not communicate with the opposing party's nonparty treating physician about the physician's treatment of the opposing party unless the opposing party consents.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A is defense counsel in a personal injury case. Through discovery, Plaintiff, P, produces complete medical records from her attending physicians. The records of certain of these attending physicians appear to be favorable to the defendant and supportive of defendant's theory of the case. Before the case is set for trial, may Attorney A communicate with Plaintiff's physicians without seeking the consent of Plaintiff or her counsel in order to have the physician decipher his handwriting and medical codes in the records that Attorney A has received as a part of discovery in the civil action?

Opinion #1:

No. Communications with Plaintiff's nonparty treating physician concerning any aspect of the physician's treatment of Plaintiff or the substance of the physician's testimony at trial is unethical as against public policy unless the opposing party consents. See Crist v. Moffatt, 326 N.C. 326, 389 S.E.2d 41 (1990).

Note: This opinion does not address communications with treating physicians in workers' compensation cases and no opinion is thereby expressed as to any ethical or public policy limitations on such communications. See G.S. §97-27.

Inquiry #2:

Under the same circumstances outlined in Inquiry #1, may Attorney A discuss with the physician his generalized opinions without regard to the medical treatment and medical condition of the Plaintiff at issue in the lawsuit?

Opinion #2:
See answer to Inquiry #1.

Inquiry #3:
After the case has been called for trial and the physician in question is subpoenaed as a witness for defense, may Attorney A communicate with physician to discuss the matters set forth in Inquiries #1 and #2 above?

Opinion #3:
See answer to Inquiry #1.

Inquiry #4:
Under the circumstances outlined in Inquiry #3, may Attorney A communicate with physician to arrange for his witness's appearance at the trial?

Opinion #4:
Yes, Attorney A may communicate with the plaintiff's nonparty treating physician in order to arrange the physician's appearance at the trial as a witness.

Inquiry #5:
Under the circumstances mentioned in Inquiry #3, may Attorney A communicate to physician the questions the attorney expects to pose to the physician at trial, so long as neither privileged information or responses to those inquiries are sought from physician?

Opinion #5:
Yes, provided the communication is in writing.

RPC 163

April 15, 1994
Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 163 (Revised).

Request for Independent Guardian Ad Litem Where Existing Guardian Has Conflict

Opinion rules that an attorney may seek the appointment of an independent guardian ad litem for a child whose guardian has an obvious conflict of interest in fulfilling his fiduciary duties to the child.

Inquiry #1:
Attorney X represents A, a seventeen-year old high school student who was injured in a motor vehicle accident at the time that she was riding in an automobile being driven by her mother, M. There is a question as to whether the oncoming vehicle was negligent, whether M was negligent, or both. A's father, F, and M originally asked Attorney X to represent both M and A. Attorney X explained that there appeared to be a conflict of interest between M and A and that Attorney X would be willing to represent only A. M and F agreed. Attorney X entered into a fee agreement with F signing as guardian for A. No lawsuit has been filed at this time. After investigating the motor vehicle accident, Attorney X concluded that M was most likely negligent, although the driver/owner of the oncoming vehicle may also have been negligent. F left a telephone message for Attorney X indicating that he was no longer interested in pursuing A's claims since it appeared likely that M would be the major defendant and if a judgment was entered against her, it would raise F and M's automobile insurance rates. F did not respond to Attorney X's request that he come in to discuss the matter in person. Attorney X wrote to F explaining that M and F's insurance rates would go up if the driver of the other car made a claim against M and, therefore, making a claim on A's behalf would have no additional adverse effect on the family's insurance rates. In this letter, Attorney X told F that he believed that F and M had a moral as well as an ethical duty to A to proceed. Attorney X believes that A's parents are not acting in A's best interests. They appear to be protecting their own interests to the exclusion of A's interests. Having advised F that Attorney X believes that he has an ethical and moral duty to proceed, is Attorney X's ethical duty satisfied?

Opinion #1:
Yes. However, on these particular facts, where F's only stated reason for failing to pursue his daughter's claim is the protection of the family's automobile insurance rates and no other concerns or contingencies have been indicated by F, it would be permissible for Attorney X to seek the appointment of an independent guardian ad litem to represent A's interests. This would be consistent with Attorney X's primary duty to represent the interest of A, who is the real party in interest. See CPR 15.

Inquiry #2:
May Attorney X seek the appointment of an independent guardian ad litem and proceed with filing suit after the independent guardian ad litem has reviewed the case and agrees that Attorney X should proceed?

Opinion #2:
Yes. See Opinion #1 above.

RPC 164

October 29, 1993
Editor's note: This opinion is overruled by Rule 7.1(b).

Television Advertising of Legal Services

Opinion rules television commercials for an attorney's services that depict fictional clients and cases are misleading and prohibited.

Inquiry #1:
Attorney A wants to advertise on television. The scripts for the commercials are fictional and will be dramatized by actors depicting fictional clients of Attorney A. The scripts are based on representative cases of Attorney A and outcomes that Attorney A has achieved in actual cases. In each script, a fictional client of Attorney A tells the viewer why he or she used Attorney A's services and that Attorney A achieved a good outcome for the fictional client. The fictional client then recommends the service of Attorney A. Is the use of a fictional script based on representative cases of Attorney A and an actor dramatizing the role of a satisfied client a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion #1:
Yes. Commercial dramatizations of fictional cases are misleading communications about Attorney A and Attorney A's services in violation of Rule 2.1. Rule 2.1 prohibits false or misleading communications about a lawyer or the lawyer's services. A communication about a lawyer or the lawyer's services is misleading if it contains a material misrepresentation of fact or omits a fact necessary to make the statement, considered as a whole, not materially misleading. Rule 2.1(a). Viewers of Attorney A's commercials do not know that they are seeing actors and not Attorney A's actual clients. Even if a viewer is astute enough to realize the commercial contains actors, the viewer would not know that the characters, cases and outcomes portrayed are fictional. The commercials are misrepresentations of fact not only because they are dramatized by actors but also because they do not describe or depict actual events or cases handled by Attorney A.

Inquiry #2:
In the event that you find a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct, would the use of a written disclaimer on the screen, such as "Dramatization," remedy such violation?

Opinion #2:
No. See Opinion #1.

RPC 165

October 29, 1993

Providing Confession of Judgment to Unrepresented Adverse Party

Opinion rules that an attorney may provide a confession of judgment to an unrepresented adverse party for execution by that party so long as the lawyer does not undertake to advise the adverse party or feign disinterestedness.

Inquiry:
Attorney represents the custodial parent of minor children. The noncustodial spouse has agreed to pay child support in an amount equal to that determined by application of the child support guidelines promulgated pursuant to G.S. §50-13.4(c). Attorney and custodial parent wish to have the child support payable through the clerk of superior court. May the attorney mail a confession of judgment to the unrepresented opposing party for execution and subsequent submission to the clerk of Superior Court for endorsement and entry of judgment?

Opinion:

Yes. A lawyer may communicate directly with an adverse party who is not known to be represented by counsel in regard to the matter at issue. Rule 7.4(a). In order to accomplish her client's purposes, the attorney may draft a confession of judgment for execution by the adverse party and solicit its execution by the adverse party so long as the attorney does not undertake to advise the unrepresented party concerning the meaning or significance of the document or to state or imply that she is disinterested. Rule 7.4(b) and (c). The attorney should advise the adverse party that she represents her client, that she cannot give legal advice to the adverse party, and that the adverse party should seek the advice of another attorney concerning whether he should sign the confession of judgment. Although previous ethics opinions, CPR's 121 and 296, have ruled that it is unethical for a lawyer to furnish consent judgments to unrepresented adverse parties for their consideration and execution, there appears to be no basis for such a prohibition when the lawyer is not furnishing a document which appears to represent the position of the adverse party such as an answer, and the lawyer furnishing a confession of judgment or consent judgment does not undertake to advise the adverse party or feign disinterestedness. CPR's 121 and 296 are therefore overruled to the extent they are in conflict with this opinion.

RPC 166

January 14, 1994

Increases in Lawyer's Hourly Rate

Opinion rules that a lawyer may seek to renegotiate a fee agreement with a client provided he does not abandon or threaten to abandon his client to cut his losses or to coerce a higher fee.

Inquiry #1:

Where Firm A has an existing contract with a client specifying that fees will be based on usual hourly rates, is it ethical for Firm A to unilaterally impose increases to its hourly rates (ranging from 5% to 10%) without securing further consent from its client regarding these increases?

Opinion #1:

The inquiry appears to ask for a legal construction of a fee contract with a client and only provides an incomplete description of the contract. To the extent that a legal construction of a fee contract is sought, this is a question of law upon which no opinion is expressed.

There are ethical considerations raised by the inquiry. As noted in the comment to Rule 2.6 of the Rules of Professional Conduct, "[a]n attorney may seek to renegotiate his fee agreement in light of changed circumstances or for other good cause, but he may not abandon or threaten to abandon his client to cut his losses or to coerce an additional higher fee." Moreover, an attorney may not charge a clearly excessive fee under any circumstances, including renegotiation of his fee. Rule 2.6(a).

Inquiry #2:

If a schedule for hourly rates for each attorney has been attached to the original engagement agreement (which includes an agreement as to fees), would it then be ethical for Firm A to impose a unilateral increase to the hourly rates of those attorneys listed on the schedule without securing further consent from the client?

Opinion #2:

See Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #3:

Is the answer to either (1) or (2) affected by a provision in the fee contract that specifically gives Firm A the right to increase fees annually?

Opinion #3:

See Opinion #1 above.

RPC 167

January 14, 1994

Receiving Compensation from Potentially Adverse Party

Opinion rules that a lawyer may accept compensation from a potentially adverse insurance carrier for representing a minor in the court approval of a personal injury settlement provided the lawyer is able to represent the minor's interests without regard to who is actually paying for his services.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A frequently receives a case from an insurance adjustor who has negotiated a settlement of a minor's personal injury claim with the unrepresented family of the minor. Typically, the insurance adjustor will request that Attorney A obtain court approval of the settlement. Attorney A usually asks an attorney in private practice to represent the minor and his or her parents, if they also have a claim, in connection with a "friendly lawsuit" which is filed in the appropriate court for judicial approval of the minor's settlement. The attorney who is representing the minor is paid directly by the insurance company in order to avoid reducing the negotiated settlement amount. May the attorney who is representing the minor and the parents accept payment from the liability insurance company without violating any of the provisions of the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion #1:

Yes. Rule 5.6 of the Rules of Professional Conduct allows a lawyer to be paid from a source other than the client provided the following conditions are met:

(a) The client consents after full disclosure;

(b) There is no interference with the lawyer's independence of professional judgment or with the client-lawyer relationship; and

(c) Information relating to representation is protected as required by Rule 4.

When a lawyer undertakes to represent a minor and his or her parents under the circumstances described in Inquiry #1, he is bound by the duty of loyalty to represent the best interests of his clients "without regard to who is actually paying for [his] services or the interests of such other third party or entity." CPR 346. If the lawyer reasonably believes the payment arrangement will adversely affect his representation of the minor and the minor's family, the lawyer must decline the employment. See Rule 5.1(b)(l).

Inquiry #2:

If it is unethical to accept a legal fee paid by the insurance company outside of the settlement, is it ethical for the attorney representing the minor and the parents to charge a flat rate to the family for his services in aiding the approval of the minor's settlement and then allow the insurance company to add the amount of that flat rate to the total settlement so that the amount received and retained by the minor and the parents is the same as the amount for which they originally negotiated?

Opinion #2:

See Opinion #1 above.

RPC 168

April 15, 1994

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 168 (Revised). For further guidance see Rule 1.7, [cmt.] 22, and ABA Formal Opinion 05-436.

Waiver of Objection to a Possible Future Conflict of Interest

Opinion rules that a lawyer may ask her client for a waiver of objection to a possible future representation presenting a conflict of interest if certain conditions are met.

Inquiry #1:

The ABA recently issued Formal Opinion 93-372 allowing waivers of future conflicts of interest under certain circumstances. The ABA Model Rules address conflicts of interest in Model Rule 1.7. Model Rule 1.7 is substantially identical to Rule 5.1(a) and (b) of the North Carolina Rules of Professional Conduct. Is it permissible for a North Carolina lawyer to obtain an advance waiver of future conflicts from a client or prospective client?

Opinion #1:

Yes, it is permissible provided the following conditions, which are set forth and explained in ABA Formal Opinion 93-372, are met:

1) The prospective waiver of a future conflict of interest is in writing;

2) Although the future conflict may not be known to exist at the time of the waiver, the writing must demonstrate that the future conflict, when it arises, was within the contemplation of the parties;

3) It must be patently clear that the existing representation will not be adversely affected by the subsequent representation; and

4) The subsequent representation will not result in disclosure or use of information imparted by the client in the representation existing at the time of the waiver, or any subsequent representation of that client.

ABA Formal Opinion 93-372 is hereby adopted by reference.

Inquiry #2:

If a waiver of future conflicts of interest is obtained from a client or a prospective client, will it be effective?

Opinion #2:

Yes, if the conditions set forth in Opinion #1 were met at the time the written waiver was executed and, if a conflict subsequently arises, the conflict was contemplated by the parties at the time the written waiver was executed, the existing representation will not be adversely affected by the subsequent representation, and the subsequent representation will not result in the disclosure or use of confidential information of the client giving the waiver.

RPC 169

January 14, 1994

Providing Client with Copies of Documents from the File

Opinion rules that a lawyer is not required to provide a former client with copies of title notes and may charge a former client for copies of documents from the client's file under certain circumstances.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney represented Ex-client on a number of real estate transactions prior to the termination of the employment. Attorney provided Ex-client with the original documents or copies of most of the pertinent documents at the time of the closing for each real estate transaction. All of the real estate transactions Attorney handled for Ex-client were completed and Attorney no longer represents Ex-client. Ex-client has asked Attorney to provide him with copies of the documents in his closed real estate files. Attorney has provided Ex-client with copies of deeds, maps, title opinions, title insurance policies, correspondence and all of the significant information regarding the purchases and the loans for Ex-client's respective properties. He has not provided Ex-client with copies of his title notes. Attorney considers his title notes to be work product which often involves using base title notes for subdivisions or title notes from other files as well as the conveyance list files maintained by Attorney's law firm. Is Attorney ethically required to provide Ex-client with a copy of the title notes for the properties?

Opinion #1:

No. Although Rule 2.8(a)(2) requires a lawyer to deliver to a former client "all papers ...to which the client is entitled," the comment to the rule notes that "[t]he lawyer's personal notes...need not be released." See also CPR 3.

Inquiry #2:

If Attorney does not condition the delivery of the copies to Ex-client on the payment of his bill for prior legal services, may Attorney charge Ex-client for the copies he delivers to Ex-client of documents which Attorney had already provided to Ex-client at the time of the closings?

Opinion #2:

Yes. When Attorney delivered the original documents to Ex-client at the time of the closings for the real estate transactions, he fulfilled the requirements of Rule 2.8 (a)(2). If Attorney kept copies of these original documents, Attorney may charge Ex-client for any additional copies which Attorney makes for Ex-client but attorney may not condition the delivery of these copies to Ex-Client on the payment of his bill for legal services. If Attorney retained in his office files any original documents from Ex-client's real estate transactions, Attorney must bear the cost of making copies for Ex-client until such time as he delivers the original documents to Ex-client.

RPC 170

April 15, 1994

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 170 (Revised).

Joint Representation of Injured Party and Medical Insurance Carrier Holding Subrogation Agreement

Opinion rules that a lawyer may jointly represent a personal injury victim and the medical insurance carrier that holds a subrogation agreement with the victim provided the victim consents and the lawyer withdraws upon the development of an actual conflict of interest.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A represents Victim B with respect to her personal injury claim. Carrier C provides health insurance benefits under an ERISA health insurance plan. Victim B has signed a "subrogation authorization form" for Carrier C which purports to give Carrier C the right to seek reimbursement directly from Tortfeasor D for benefits paid on behalf of Victim B because of her injuries. For purposes of effecting this recovery from Tortfeasor D, Carrier C wants to retain Attorney A to also represent Carrier C. May Attorney A represent both Victim B and Carrier C?

Opinion #1:

Yes, if Attorney A reasonably believes the representation will not be adversely affected and the client consents after full disclosure of the implications of the common representation. Rule 5.1(b).

Inquiry #2:

If so, what must Attorney A do if an actual conflict of interest arises in representing both parties?

Opinion #2:

Attorney A has a continuing obligation to evaluate the situation and must withdraw from the representation of both parties upon the development of an actual conflict of interest, unless one party consents, after full disclosure, to Attorney A's continued representation of the other party. Rule 5.1(c) and Rule 5.1(d).

Inquiry #3:

Is there any way, by advance agreement with Carrier C or otherwise, for Attorney A to ethically continue representing Victim B in the event that a conflict of interest arises?

Opinion #3:

Yes, provided the four conditions for a waiver of a future conflict of interest set forth in RPC 168 are met at the time that a conflict arises. See Rule 5.1(c).

RPC 171

April 15, 1994

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 171 (Revised).

Tape Recording Conversation with Opposing Lawyer

Opinion rules that it is not a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct for a lawyer to tape record a conversation with an opposing lawyer without disclosure to the opposing lawyer.

Inquiry:

Is it unethical for an attorney to make a tape recording of a conversation with an opposing attorney regarding a pending case without disclosing to the opposing attorney that the conversation is being recorded?

Opinion:

No, it would not be a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct. However, as a matter of professionalism, lawyers are encouraged to disclose to the other lawyer that a conversation is being tape recorded.

RPC 172

April 15, 1994

Representation of Insured on Compulsory Counterclaim

Opinion rules that an attorney retained by an insurance carrier to defend an insured has no ethical obligation to represent the insured on a compulsory counterclaim provided the attorney apprises the insured of the counterclaim in sufficient time for the insured to retain separate counsel.

Inquiry #1:

Motor vehicle liability insurance carrier hires Defense Counsel to represent its insured, A, who has been sued for motor vehicle negligence. There is a compulsory counterclaim which could be made on behalf of A. Is it ethical for Defense Counsel to answer the complaint, omit the compulsory counterclaim and advise A of the need to retain separate counsel at A's expense in order to prosecute the claim within the 30 day amendment period provided by Rule 15 of the Rules of Civil Procedure?

Opinion #1:

No. There are two separate aspects of the representation of A in this fact situation. One is the defense of A and the other is the representation of A on the counterclaim. The defense of A is governed by the insurance agreement, the Rules of Professional Conduct, and the ethics opinions adopted by the State Bar. By paying premiums for insurance, A purchased indemnity coverage for liability claims and a legal defense. A did not contractually acquire a right to have a claim prosecuted on his or her behalf. That is a matter which is up to A to negotiate with counsel of A's choice. A may negotiate with Defense Counsel to represent A on the counterclaim and Defense Counsel may choose to represent A on the counterclaim if Defense Counsel reasonably foresees no conflict of interest. Defense Counsel is under no ethical obligation to assert a compulsory counterclaim on behalf of A. Having been retained to defend A, however, it is incumbent upon Defense Counsel to take reasonable steps to apprise A of the compulsory nature of the counterclaim prior to the filing of the answer to the complaint and in sufficient time for A to negotiate the prosecution of the counterclaim with Defense Counsel or for A to retain separate counsel to prosecute the counterclaim in concert with Defense Counsel's defense of the claim.

Inquiry #2:

May Defense Counsel fulfill his ethical obligations to A by drafting the counterclaim and including it in the answer on the condition that A sign the pleading as "pro se counterclaimant" and with the understanding that Defense Counsel will not represent A on the counterclaim?

Opinion #2:

Yes, if Defense Counsel does not wish to represent A on the counterclaim and A cannot find separate counsel to prosecute the counterclaim.

RPC 173

April 15, 1994

Advancing Funds to Client to Post Bond

Opinion rules that a lawyer who represents a client on a criminal charge may not lend the client the money necessary to post bond.

Inquiry:

Attorney A represents Client B who is charged with assault on a female. In light of G.S. §15A-541 and Rule 5.3(b) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, may Attorney A ethically lend Client B the sum necessary for Client B to post a cash bond?

Opinion:

No. Rule 5.3(b) prohibits a lawyer from advancing or guaranteeing financial assistance to his client while representing the client in connection with contemplated or pending litigation. Although the Rule contains an exception allowing a lawyer to advance the expenses of litigation provided the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses, lending a client the funds necessary to post a cash bond does not fall within this exception and is contrary to the policies prohibiting conflicts of interest and solicitation which underlie Rule 5.3(b). A lawyer who lends a client the funds to post a bond has a vested interest in seeing that the client is apprehended if he or she flees the jurisdiction. This creates a conflict of interest for the lawyer between his professional responsibilities to his client and his personal interests. Also, there is a strong likelihood that a lawyer could solicit clients by suggesting that he is willing to lend a criminal defendant bond money in order to solicit the defendant's criminal case.

Whether lending a client the funds to post a bond is a violation of G.S. §15A-541 is a question of law upon which the State Bar has no authority to rule.

RPC 174

April 15, 1994

Fees for the Collection of "Med-Pay"

Opinion rules that a legal fee for the collection of "med-pay" which is based upon the amount collected is unreasonable.

Inquiry:

Lawyer B charges $150.00 to collect up to $2000.00 due to a client under the medical payments provisions (or "med-pay" provisions) of the client's liability insurance policy. He charges $250.00 to collect a client's med-pay if the med-pay is $2000.00 or more. Is it ethical for Lawyer B to charge a sliding fee for the collection of med-pay?

Opinion:

No. RPC 35 ruled that a lawyer may not charge a contingent fee to collect med-pay because with most med-pay claims there is no risk that the insurance company will refuse payment and there is no dispute as to the amount due to the claimant. Therefore, such contingent fees are unreasonable, in violation of Rule 2.6(a), because "[t]he element of risk which is necessary to justify the typically elevated contingent fee is not present." Unless there exists a significant risk that a med-pay claim will not be paid, it is unreasonable for a lawyer to charge a fee for collecting med-pay which is not related to the cost to the lawyer of providing the service. A sliding fee for collecting med-pay claims is based upon the amount of the claim and not upon the cost to Lawyer B to provide the service. Such a fee structure is unreasonable in violation of Rule 2.6(a).

RPC 175

January 13, 1995

Editor's Note: The statutes referenced below are now found in Chapter B of the General Statutes.

Reporting Child Abuse

Opinion rules that a lawyer may ethically exercise his or her discretion to decide whether to reveal confidential information concerning child abuse or neglect pursuant to a statutory requirement.

Inquiry #1:

RPC 120 was adopted by the Council of the State Bar on July 17, 1992. The opinion provides that a lawyer may, but need not necessarily, disclose confidential information concerning child abuse pursuant to a statutory requirement set forth in G.S. §7A-543 et seq. In 1993 the North Carolina General Assembly amended G.S. §7A-543 and G.S. §7A-551. G.S. §7A-543 now generally provides that as follows:

> ...any person or institution who has cause to suspect that any juvenile is abused, neglected, or dependent...or has died as a result of maltreatment shall report the case of that juvenile to the director of the Department of Social Services in the county where the juvenile resides or is found.

G.S. §7A-551 now generally provides as follows:

> ...[n]o privilege shall be grounds for any person or institution failing to report that a juvenile may have been abused, neglected or dependent, even if the knowledge or suspicion is acquired in an official professional capacity, except when the knowledge or suspicion is gained by an attorney from that attorney's client during representation only in the abuse, neglect or dependency case.

Does Rule 4 of the Rules of Professional Conduct require an attorney to report his or her suspicion that a child is abused, neglected or dependent to the local Department of Social Services (DSS) if the information giving rise to the suspicion was gained during a professional relationship with a client, which is not for the purpose of representing the client in an abuse, neglect or dependency case, and the information would otherwise be considered confidential information under Rule 4?

Opinion #1:

No. Rule 4(b) prohibits a lawyer from revealing the confidential information of his or her client except as permitted under Rule 4(c). Rule 4(c) includes a number of circumstances under which a lawyer "may reveal" the confidential information of his or her client. Subsection (3) of Rule 4(c) allows a lawyer to reveal confidential information "when... required by law or court order."

The rule clearly places the decision regarding the disclosure of a client's confidential information within the lawyer's discretion. While that discretion should not be exercised lightly, particularly in the face of a statute compelling disclosure, a lawyer may in good faith conclude that he or she should not reveal confidential information where to do so would substantially undermine the purpose of the representation or substantially damage the interests of his or her client. See Rule 7.1(a)(3) (which prohibits actions by a lawyer which will intentionally "[p]rejudice or damage his client during the course of the professional relationship..."). For example, a lawyer may be unwilling to comply with the child abuse reporting statute because he or she believes that compliance would deprive a client charged with a crime of the constitutional right to effective assistance of counsel. Under such circumstances, where a lawyer reasonably and in good faith concludes that revealing the confidential information will substantially harm the interests of his or her client and, as a matter of professional responsibility, declines to report confidential client information regarding suspected child abuse or neglect to DSS, the failure to report will not be deemed a violation of Rule 1.2(b) and (d) (respectively defining misconduct as committing a criminal act and engaging in conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice) or Rule 7.2(a)(3) (prohibiting a lawyer from concealing that which he is required by law to reveal). It is recognized that the ethical rules may not protect a lawyer from criminal prosecution for failure to comply with the reporting statute.

Inquiry #2:

Is it ethical for a lawyer to reveal confidential information of a client regarding suspected child abuse or neglect to DSS pursuant to the requirements of the child abuse reporting statute?

Opinion #2:

Yes, a lawyer may ethically report information gained during his or her professional relationship with a client to DSS in compliance with the statutory requirement even if to do so may result in substantial harm to the interests of the client. Rule 4(c)(3).

Note: The foregoing opinion is limited to the specific inquiries set out therein. It should not be read to stand for the general proposition that an attorney's good faith is a bar to a disciplinary proceeding based upon the attorney's violation of a statute.

RPC 176

July 21, 1994

Conflict of Interest Involving a Legal Assistant

Opinion rules that a lawyer who employs a paralegal is not disqualified from representing a party whose interests are adverse to that of a party represented by a lawyer for whom the paralegal previously worked.

Inquiry:

Attorney A had two full-time staff members: a receptionist/secretary and a paralegal/secretary ("Paralegal"). Paralegal's normal duties included working on personal injury actions and real estate matters. On occasion, Paralegal helped with domestic actions. While Paralegal was employed by Attorney A, Attorney A represented Client A in a domestic matter. Paralegal denies working on the case on a regular basis while she was employed by Attorney A. Paralegal also denies having any knowledge of the specific facts of the case. Attorney A contends that Paralegal was substantially involved in assisting in the representation of Client A and was privy to confidential information regarding Client A. It is clear that Paralegal had some exposure to the case while employed by Attorney A.

After the employment of Paralegal was terminated by Attorney A, Paralegal went to work for Attorney B in another law firm. Attorney B represents Client B in the same domestic action in which Attorney A represents Client A.

Attorney A has requested that Attorney B withdraw from the representation of Client B because of Paralegal's prior involvement in the action. Should Attorney B withdraw from the representation of Client B?

Opinion:

No, Attorney B may continue to represent Client B in the case and may continue to employ Paralegal. The imputed disqualification rules contained in Rule 5.11 of the Rules of Professional Conduct do not apply to nonlawyers. However, Attorney B must take extreme care to ensure that Paralegal is totally screened from participation in the case even if Paralegal's involvement in the case while employed by Attorney A was negligible. See RPC 74. This requirement is consistent with a lawyer's duty, pursuant to Rule 3.3(b), to make reasonable efforts to ensure that the conduct of a nonlawyer over whom the lawyer has direct supervisory authority is compatible with the professional obligations of the lawyer including the obligation to avoid conflicts of interest and to preserve the confidentiality of client information.

RPC 177

July 21, 1994

Representation of Insured, Insurer, and UIM Carrier

Opinion rules that an attorney may represent the insured, his liability insurer, and the same insurer relative to underinsured motorist coverage carried by the plaintiff if the insurer waives its subrogation rights against the insured and the plaintiff executes a covenant not to enforce judgment.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A is retained by Insurance Company to represent Defendant M in an automobile negligence lawsuit under its policy with Defendant M which provides him with liability coverage. Attorney A makes an appearance in the lawsuit on behalf of Defendant M, files responsive pleadings and discovery, and otherwise actively defends Defendant M.

Insurance Company also provides underinsured motorist coverage for Plaintiff. Insurance Company tenders its liability coverage limits to Plaintiff pursuant to G.S. §20-279.21(b)(4) and waives all subrogation rights against Defendant M. In addition, Plaintiff agrees to execute a covenant not to enforce judgment against Defendant M. The lawsuit initiated by Plaintiff against Defendant M will continue so that Plaintiff can recover UIM proceeds from Insurance Company.

After tender of Insurance Company's liability limits, can Attorney A remain in the case as attorney for Insurance Company and protect Insurance Company's interests under its UIM coverage in the lawsuit, with Defendant M's consent, since Defendant M has no personal exposure?

Opinion #1:

Yes. Rule 5.1(b). RPC 154, also involving an automobile negligence case, addressed the question of whether a lawyer may represent both the defendant, under an insurance company's liability policy with the defendant, and the same insurance company under its UIM policy with the plaintiff. The opinion noted that the provisions of G.S. §20-279.21(b)(4) give certain subrogation or assignment rights to an UIM insurer against the owner, operator or maintainer of an underinsured vehicle. Therefore, RPC 154 held that an attorney representing both parties would have a disqualifying conflict of interest because the subrogation or assignment rights of the insurance company would cause the interests of the defendant and the insurance company under its UIM policy to be materially different and adverse. See also, RPC 110.

In the instant inquiry, Defendant M has no personal liability because Insurance Company has waived its right of subrogation against Defendant M, and Plaintiff has executed a covenant not to enforce judgment against Defendant M. The interests of Defendant M and Insurance Company are not, therefore, adverse, and Attorney A would not be likely to have his ability to represent both parties materially impaired in violation of Rule 5.1(b).

Inquiry #2:

If the answer to Inquiry #1 is affirmative, must a motion be filed and an order entered relieving Attorney A of his duty to defend Defendant M and substituting him as attorney of record for Insurance Company?

Opinion #2:

No opinion is given with regard to whether any changes in the nominal appearance of Attorney A in the lawsuit need to be made, or with regard to the procedural requirements under G.S. §20-279.21(b)(4) for making an appearance in the lawsuit on behalf of Insurance Company as the UIM insurer. However, if Insurance Company elects, pursuant to the provisions of G.S. §20-279.21, to appear in the action in its own name as the UIM insurer and to be released from further liability or obligation to participate in the defense of Defendant M, Attorney A must comply with the requirements of the statute with regard to apprising Defendant M "of the nature of the proceeding and [giving him] the right to select counsel of his own choice to appear in the action on his separate behalf." Attorney M must explain the nature of the proceedings to the extent reasonably necessary to permit Defendant M to make an informed decision with regard to individually retaining another lawyer to represent him or electing not to be represented in the lawsuit. RPC 156.

RPC 178

October 21, 1994

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 178 (Revised).

Release of Client's File

Opinion examines a lawyer's obligation to deliver the file to the client upon the termination of the representation when the lawyer represents multiple clients in a single matter.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney represented Client A on complicated litigation which resulted in the settlement and voluntary dismissal of all claims. Numerous documents were filed with the court and exchanged between the adverse parties. Client A agreed to reimburse Attorney for all out-of-pocket expenses associated with the representation. After the settlement agreement was signed, Client A obtained new counsel who required Client A to sign a release requesting Client A's file from Attorney. The release provides that only authorized out-of-pocket expenses will be reimbursed. Client A then requested a copy of the entire file from Attorney but refused to authorize Attorney to incur any out-of-pocket expenses. Is Attorney ethically required to incur the expense of copying the seven cartons of papers which constitute the file when Client A agreed to pay for the out-of-pocket expenses associated with the representation?

Opinion #1:

Yes, if Attorney would like to keep a copy of the documents in the file for her own records. Rule 2.8(a)(2) of the Rules of Professional Conduct requires a lawyer who is withdrawing from a case to deliver to the client all papers and property to which the client is entitled. By requiring a withdrawing or dismissed lawyer to provide the client with all of his or her papers and property, Rule 2.8(a)(2) recognizes that the file belongs to the client. See CPR 3, CPR 315, CPR 322 and CPR 328.

CPR 3 explains that a lawyer must provide a former client with originals or copies of anything in the file which would be helpful to the new lawyer but that "[t]he discharged lawyer's notes made for his own future reference and study and similar things not representing a completed work product need not be turned over."

Inquiry #2:

If Attorney represented several other clients in the same matter in which she represented Client A, is Attorney required to incur the expense of copying the file for each of the several clients she represented in the litigation?

Opinion #2:

No. Attorney must only incur the expense for making one set of copies to keep as her own record of the file. However, if Attorney has represented multiple clients on the same matter, she may give the original file to the client that the other clients agree should receive the original file and the other clients may make their own arrangements to get a copy of the file. If the clients cannot agree among themselves as to which client should receive the original file, Attorney may give the file to the client that the majority of the clients designate as the person who should receive the file or she may retain the file until such time as she receives a written agreement from all of the clients or a court order indicating to whom she should give the original file.

Inquiry #3:

Attorney is still representing a majority of the clients on the particular matter and the original file is required for the representation of the remaining clients. If Client A decides to obtain new legal counsel, is Attorney required to incur the expense of copying the file for Client A?

Opinion #3:

No. She must give Client A a reasonable opportunity to make copies of the materials in the file but does not have to do so at her own expense. However, any original documents in the file that relate solely to Client A must be given to Client A. If those original documents are not given to Client A, Attorney must make a copy for Client A at Attorney's expense and, until the original is provided to Client A, Attorney must provide and pay for copies of the original document requested by Client A. See RPC 169.

Inquiry #4:

Who is entitled to retain the original documents procured, filed, or exchanged on behalf of all the clients?

Opinion #4:

See Opinion #2 above. If the clients cannot agree who should get custody of the file, Attorney must give each client a reasonable opportunity to copy the materials in the file at his or her own expense. Attorney may withhold the delivery of the original file to one of the clients until she receives a court order or written agreement of the clients indicating that the original file may be released to a designated individual.

Inquiry #5:

If Attorney delivered original documents, but not the entire file, to Client A during the course of the representation, has she fulfilled the requirement under Rule 2.8(a)(2) to deliver the file to the client so that she may charge Client A for additional copies of these original documents?

Opinion #5:

When Attorney delivered original documents to Client A during the course of the representation, she fulfilled the requirements of Rule 2.8(a)(2) with regard to the delivery of those original documents. See RPC 169. If Attorney kept copies of the original documents, Attorney may charge Client A for any additional copies of those documents which Attorney makes for Client A, but Attorney may not condition the delivery of these copies upon the payment of her bill for services. See RPC 169. However, to the extent that there are other documents in the file, either originals or copies, which were not previously provided to Client A, Attorney has not fulfilled the requirement under Rule 2.8(a)(2) to deliver the entire file to the client upon the conclusion of the representation. With regard to Attorney's duty to deliver the file when she has multiple clients, see Opinions #2, #3, and #4 above.

Inquiry #6:

If the original documents were timely filed with the court or delivered to a third party on behalf of Client A and/or the other clients, has Attorney fulfilled the requirement under Rule 2.8(a)(2) to deliver the file to the client so that she may charge Client A and/or the other clients for additional copies of these original documents?

Opinion #6:

No. See Opinion #5 above.

RPC 179

July 21, 1994

Settlement Agreement Restricting a Lawyer's Practice

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not offer or enter into a settlement agreement that contains a provision barring the lawyer who represents the settling party from representing other claimants against the opposing party.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A and counsel represent several plaintiffs whose civil rights and constitutional rights were allegedly violated as a result of the conduct of defendant municipality and several of its employees. During the course of litigation and settlement negotiations, individual settlement offers are made by Attorney B and his counsel who represent the municipality and its employees.

Attorney B submits to Attorney A a settlement agreement and release that requires Attorney A and his counsel to join in the release and agree not to represent any potential claimants (other than those already represented by Attorney A and counsel) who may have also been damaged by the alleged conduct of the municipality. The settlement documents also contain provisions requiring confidentiality as to the terms and content of the settlement agreement and the sealing of the agreement by court order. Because the defendant is a municipality, in order to seal what would otherwise be public records, a court order will have to be entered pursuant to G.S. §132-1.3(b).

May Attorney A enter into such an agreement?

Opinion #1:

No. A lawyer may not be a party to a settlement agreement wherein he agrees to refrain from representing other potential plaintiffs in the future. To do so would be a violation of Rule 2.7(b) which prohibits a lawyer from entering into an agreement, in connection with the settlement of a controversy or suit, that restricts his right to practice law. Although public policy favors settlement, the policy that favors full access to legal assistance should prevail.

Nevertheless, participation in a settlement agreement conditioned upon maintaining the confidentiality of the terms of the settlement is not unethical. The amount and terms of any settlement which is not a matter of public record are the secrets of a client which may not be disclosed by a lawyer without the client's consent. If a client desires to enter into a settlement agreement requiring confidentiality, the lawyer must comply with the client's request that the information regarding the settlement be confidential. See Rule 4.

Inquiry #2:

May Attorney B offer such a settlement agreement?

Opinion #2:

No. A lawyer may not offer a settlement agreement that contains a restriction on a lawyer's right to practice law as a condition of the agreement. See Rule 2.7(b).

Inquiry #3:

What should Attorney A do when his client desires to accept the agreement?

Opinion #3:

Attorney A must advise his client that neither he nor Attorney B may ethically participate in an agreement restricting a lawyer's right to practice law.

Inquiry #4:

May Attorney A withdraw with the permission of the client so that the client may accept the monetary terms of the settlement?

Opinion #4:

Since the participation of both the plaintiff's attorney and the defendant's attorney in such an agreement is unethical, this inquiry is moot.

Inquiry #5:

May Attorney B settle with Attorney A's then former client after Attorney A withdraws?

Opinion #5:

See Opinion #4 above.

Inquiry #6:

May Attorney A and his client agree, as part of a settlement, not to be heard when Attorney B seeks, at an ex parte proceeding, to seal otherwise public records under G.S. §132-1.3(b), when Attorney A believes that there is no apparent basis in law for requesting the sealing other than preventing a class action or additional lawsuits?

Opinion #6:

It is not unethical for Attorney A to agree not to be heard when Attorney B attempts to show to the court that the requirements of the statute allowing the sealing of the record have been met. See G.S. §132-1.3(b). It is the responsibility of Attorney B to not advance claims that are unwarranted under existing law unless there is a good faith argument for an extension or modification of existing law. See Rule 7.2(a)(2).

RPC 180

July 21, 1994

Editor's Note: See 99 Formal Ethics Opinion 2 for additional guidance.

Communications with Opposing Party's Physicians

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not passively listen while the opposing party's nonparty treating physician comments on his or her treatment of the opposing party unless the opposing party consents.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A is defense counsel in a personal injury case. When the case is set for trial, Attorney A subpoenas Plaintiff's treating physician ("Doctor") for trial. Doctor then contacts Attorney A to discuss the subpoena. Although Attorney A asks no questions regarding Plaintiff's medical treatment, Doctor begins to discuss Plaintiff's medical condition with Attorney A. May Attorney A passively listen while Doctor discusses Plaintiff's medical treatment, or does Attorney A have an affirmative duty to inform Doctor that he cannot participate in communications regarding the treatment of Plaintiff without Plaintiff's consent other than to arrange for Doctor's appearance at trial as a witness?

Opinion #1:

Attorney A may not participate, either passively or actively, in communications with Plaintiff's nonparty treating physician concerning the physician's treatment of Plaintiff unless Plaintiff consents. To do so is contrary to public policy and, therefore, unethical. See Crist v. Moffatt, 326 N.C. 326, 389 S.E.2d 41 (1990) and RPC 162. Attorney A must inform Doctor that he may not participate in such communications.

Inquiry #2:

After the case has been called for trial and Doctor has been subpoenaed as a witness for the defense, may Attorney A accept medical records in the mail directly from Doctor?

Opinion #2:

Yes.

RPC 181

July 21, 1994

Disqualifying Opposing Counsel by Instructing Client to Seek Consultation

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not seek to disqualify another lawyer from representing the opposing party by instructing a client to consult with the other lawyer about the subject matter of the representation when the client has no intention of retaining the other lawyer to represent him.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A meets with Client for a consultation about a family law matter. During the consultation, Attorney A recommends that Client set up appointments with Attorney X and Attorney Y. Attorney A advises Client to discuss his domestic case with the two other lawyers but with no intention of retaining either lawyer to represent him. The sole purpose for consulting with Attorney X and Attorney Y is to create a conflict of interest so that neither Attorney X nor Attorney Y can represent Client's spouse in the domestic action. Is it ethical for Attorney A to give this advice to his client?

Opinion #1:

No. Rule 7.2(a)(1) prohibits a lawyer from taking action on behalf of his client "when he knows or when it is obvious that such action would serve merely to harass or maliciously injure another." Assisting a client in creating a conflict of interest in order to obstruct the opposing party's access to counsel of her choice is action that serves merely to harass the other party and is an impediment to the right of clients freely to choose counsel.

Inquiry #2:

Does it make a difference if Client has paid a retainer fee to Attorney A before receiving this advice?

Opinion #2:

No.

Inquiry #3:

Does it make a difference if Client, and not Attorney A, raises the issue by asking Attorney A whether he should consult with Attorney X and Attorney Y for the purpose of preventing his spouse from hiring either lawyer?

Opinion #3:

No. Whether the lawyer or the client first suggests this course of action, it is unethical for a lawyer to encourage his client to seek to disqualify certain lawyers from representing the opposing party.

RPC 182

October 21, 1994

Disclosure of Client's Death

Opinion rules that a lawyer is required to disclose to an adverse party with whom the lawyer is negotiating a settlement that the lawyer's client has died.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney is retained by Client to handle a slip-and-fall personal injury case of questionable liability. During the course of representation, but after Client has been treated by his doctor for injuries caused by the fall, Client dies of AIDS. Attorney continues handling the matter without informing the tortfeasor's insurance company of Client's death. Attorney's decision not to disclose the death to the insurance company is based on Attorney's belief that to do so would undermine Client's case. In addition, at least one of Client's heirs requested that Attorney not disclose the death of Client to the insurance company adjuster.

No lawsuit is ever filed, and no defense counsel is involved. Attorney negotiates a settlement with the insurance company and receives two settlement checks, both made out jointly to Attorney and the deceased Client. One check is issued under the insurance carrier's medical payments coverage, and the other under its liability coverage. At no point during the course of Attorney's representation did the insurance adjuster question whether Client was still alive or inquire about Client's current condition. Attorney never made any representations to the adjuster as to Client's current condition.

May Attorney arrange for the appointment of an administrator and have the settlement checks endorsed and deposited into Attorney's trust account, pending a decision on Inquiry #2?

Opinion #1:

No.

Inquiry #2:

Is Attorney required to disclose Client's death to the tortfeasor's insurance company?

Opinion #2:

Yes. Rule 7.2(a)(4) prohibits a lawyer from making a false statement of law or fact in the representation of a client. In the personal injury practice area, all lawyer communications with insurance company officials are directed toward the contractual resolution of a client's claim, with the client being a party to a contract, a Release. If the client dies, the lawyer no longer has a client. Only when the lawyer is subsequently retained by the deceased client's personal representative does the lawyer have a client. The identity of the client must be disclosed to the insurance company officials. The lawyer may not negotiate with insurance company officials when the lawyer has no client. To fail to disclose the identity of the client or to negotiate without a client would be to communicate a false statement of fact.

Inquiry #3:

If the answer to Inquiry #2 is "yes," when must the disclosure be made?

Opinion #3:

The lawyer must disclose the death of the client to the insurance company before continuing negotiations.

Inquiry #4:

Do the same ethical issues apply to each check, in light of the fact that Client's death from AIDS could never impact settlement of the medical payments claim?

Opinion #4:

Yes. See Opinion #2 above.

Inquiry #5:

Would it make any difference if the tortfeasor or the tortfeasor's insurance company was represented by legal counsel?

Opinion #5:

No.

Inquiry #6:

Would it make any difference if Client was a minor?

Opinion #6:

No.

RPC 183

October 21, 1994

Role of Legal Assistant in Deposition

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not permit a legal assistant to examine or represent a witness at a deposition.

Inquiry #1:

Is it ethical for a lawyer to permit a legal assistant to examine a witness at a deposition?

Opinion #1:

No. Pursuant to Rule 3.3(b) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, a lawyer having direct supervisory authority over a nonlawyer employed by a law firm must make reasonable efforts to ensure that the nonlawyer's conduct is "compatible with the professional obligations of the lawyer." Although several ethics opinions have indicated that a legal assistant or paralegal may undertake to handle certain matters such as negotiating with a claims adjuster, the opinions have all required that the legal assistant be directly supervised by the lawyer. See RPC 70, RPC 139, and RPC 152. In RPC 70, it is noted that "[u]nder no circumstances should the legal assistant be permitted to exercise independent legal judgment...." In a deposition, a lawyer is required to exercise her independent legal judgment, experience, and skill from moment to moment as she formulates questions in response to the statements made by the witness, considers objections to be made to questions, and analyzes any privilege the witness may assert. Allowing a legal assistant to examine a witness at a deposition is aiding the unauthorized practice of law in violation of Rule 3.1(a), may cause substantial harm to the client's case, and is improper.

Inquiry #2:

Is it ethical for a lawyer to permit a legal assistant to represent a witness at a deposition who is being deposed by the opposing counsel?

Opinion #2:

No. See Opinion #1.

Inquiry #3:

Is it ethical for a lawyer to permit a legal assistant to represent a client who is being deposed by an opposing counsel if the legal assistant is carefully instructed in advance that his or her sole role is to ensure that the opposing counsel's examination does not go beyond specific subject matters agreed upon in advance by the lawyer and the opposing counsel?

Opinion #3:

No. See Opinion #1.

RPC 184

October 21, 1994

Communications with Physician Performing Autopsy

Opinion rules that a lawyer for an opposing party may communicate directly with the pathologist who performed an autopsy on the plaintiff's decedent without the consent of the personal representative for the decedent's estate.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A represents Decedent's Estate in a wrongful death case arising out of medical malpractice. An autopsy was performed on the decedent by a pathologist immediately following the decedent's death upon the authorization of the decedent's next of kin. The autopsy was performed prior to the retention of Attorney A to represent the Decedent's Estate and prior to the filing of the lawsuit.

Attorney C represents the defendant doctor and his practice group. Attorney C would like to contact the pathologist who performed the autopsy without informing or obtaining the permission of Attorney A or the personal representative of Decedent's Estate in order to discuss the pathologist's findings and conclusions regarding the decedent's death. May a lawyer contact the pathologist who performed an autopsy on a decedent whose medical treatment while living is the subject matter of a wrongful death case without the consent of the lawyer for the decedent's estate or the personal representative of the estate?

Opinion #1:

Yes, unless otherwise prohibited by statute or case law. The public policy of protecting a patient's right to privacy regarding his or her medical treatment is furthered by the prohibition on communications with a plaintiff's nonparty treating physician if the communications are by means other than the recognized methods of discovery in a civil lawsuit. See Crist v. Moffatt, 326 N.C. 326, 389 S.E. 2d 41 (1990) and RPC 162. However, the public policy interest in protecting a patient's right to privacy about his or her medical treatment is not relevant to an autopsy performed after the patient's death by a physician who is not providing the decedent with medical treatment. See Prince v. Duke University, 326 N.C. 787 (1990).

Inquiry #2:

Does the answer to this question change if the decedent's autopsy was ordered by the medical examiner rather than her next of kin?

Opinion #2:

No. See Opinion #1 above.

RPC 185

October 21, 1994

Ownership of Stock in Title Insurance Agency

Opinion rules that a lawyer who owns any stock in a title insurance agency may not give title opinions to the title insurance company for which the title insurance agency issues policies.

Inquiry:

Attorney A has been invited to purchase shares of stock in a new North Carolina corporation to be called "Title Agency." Pursuant to a written contract, Title Agency will be an agent of Title Insurer for the purpose of issuing title policies and title commitments. Title Agency will do business in conformity with G.S. §58-27-5 and will comply with the prohibition on the unauthorized practice of law set forth in Chapter 84 of the General Statutes. Attorney A will give Title Insurer title opinions regarding transactions for which Attorney A acts as the closing lawyer. Attorney A is not an agent of Title Insurer and will not be an employee of Title Agency or a person holding a license pursuant to Chapter 58 of the General Statutes. Attorney A would like to acquire stock in Title Agency without violating the requirements of CPR 101 or engaging in any other unethical conduct. What percentage of the shares of stock of Title Agency may Attorney A acquire without violating the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion:

CPR 101 held that it is unethical for a lawyer who owns a substantial interest, directly or indirectly, in a title insurance company, agency, or agent, who acts as a lawyer in a real estate transaction insured by such title insurance company or through such agency or agent, to receive any commission, fee, salary, dividend, or other compensation or benefit from the title insurance company, agency, or agent, regardless of whether the ownership interest is disclosed to the client for whom the services are performed.

CPR 101 was based on the Code of Professional Responsibility which has been supplanted by the Rules of Professional Conduct. Rule 5.1(b) now governs potential conflicts of interest between a lawyer's own interests and the representation of a client. The rule disqualifies a lawyer from representing a client if the representation of the client may be materially limited by the lawyer's own interests unless: 1) the lawyer reasonably believes that the representation will not be adversely affected; and 2) the client consents after full disclosure.

CPR 101 authorized a lawyer who owns an insubstantial interest in a title insurance agency to render title opinions to the title insurer and to receive compensation from the title insurance agency in the form of dividends or otherwise. Even an insubstantial interest in a title insurance agency, however, could materially impair the judgment of a closing lawyer. RPC 49 addresses a closing lawyer's duty to his or her client when the lawyer owns shares in a realty firm that will realize a commission upon the closing of the transaction. RPC 49 states that the conflict of interest is too great to be allowed even if the client wishes to consent. This conflict is also present when a title agency, and, therefore, indirectly the closing lawyer who owns an interest in the title agency, will receive compensation from the client as a result of the closing of the transaction. The lawyer's personal interest in having the title insurance agency receive its compensation could conflict with the lawyer's duty to close the transaction only if it is in the client's best interest.

This opinion does not prohibit a lawyer from owning stock in a publicly traded title insurance company.

RPC 186

April 14, 1995

Security Interest in Real Property Which is Subject of Domestic Litigation

Opinion rules that a lawyer who represents a client in a pending domestic action may take a promissory note secured by a deed of trust as payment for the lawyer's fee even though the deed of trust is on real property that is or may be the subject of the domestic action.

Inquiry #1:

Client in a domestic case is without financial means to pay the entire fee owed to her lawyer. Client offers to execute a deed of trust and promissory note in favor of the lawyer as payment for the lawyer's services. Generally speaking, in a domestic case may a lawyer take a note secured by a deed of trust against real property which is not the subject of the litigation for which the client is being represented?

Opinion #1:

Yes, a lawyer may take a promissory note secured by a deed of trust on real property as payment for services rendered provided that the lawyer does not acquire a proprietary interest in the subject matter of the litigation the lawyer is conducting for the client in violation of Rule of Professional Conduct 5.3(a) and further provided that the transaction is fair to the client. In evaluating the fairness of such a transaction, the client's sophistication, financial ability, and the ability of the client to pay the fee by other methods must be taken into consideration.

Inquiry #2:

Generally speaking, may a lawyer handling a domestic case obtain a note secured by a deed of trust on real property which is the subject of the litigation for which the client is being represented?

Opinion #2:

Yes, provided the transaction is fair to the client. Although Rule 5.3(a) prohibits a lawyer from acquiring a proprietary interest in the subject matter of the litigation the lawyer is conducting for the client, the acquisition of a deed of trust on real property is not a proprietary interest prohibited by the rule.

Inquiry #3:

If the answer to either Inquiry #1 or Inquiry #2 above is affirmative, under which of the following circumstances would a lawyer be allowed to accept a promissory note secured by a deed of trust for services rendered in a domestic action for divorce and equitable distribution?

Inquiry #3(a):

If the real property is marital property, may the attorney secure his or her fee with a promissory note secured by a deed of trust against the marital property?

Opinion #3(a):

Yes. See Opinion #2 above.

Inquiry #3(b):

Prior to the granting of an absolute divorce and judgment of equitable distribution, may a lawyer accept a promissory note secured by a deed of trust on property held by the client, and his or her spouse in a tenancy by the entirety?

Opinion #3(b):

Yes. See Opinion #2 above.

Inquiry #3(c):

After the granting of an absolute divorce but prior to the entry of a judgment of equitable distribution, may a lawyer accept a promissory note secured by a deed of trust on marital property as payment of the legal fee?

Opinion #3(c):

Yes. See Opinion #2 above.

Inquiry #3(d):

After the granting of an absolute divorce and the entry of a judgment of equitable distribution whereunder the real property was distributed to the client, may a lawyer accept a promissory note secured by a deed of trust on property that was formerly marital property as payment of the legal fee?

Opinion #3(d):
Yes. See Opinion #2 above.

Inquiry #3(e):
Would there be a different response to any of the inquiries posed above if the real property were not the marital property but was merely a parcel of real property owned by the litigants?

Opinion #3(e):
No.

Inquiry #4:
If the real property is titled solely in the name of the client and was acquired during the marriage, may the lawyer accept a promissory note secured by a deed of trust on the property as payment for the legal fees under any of the following circumstances:

Inquiry #4(a):
Prior to the granting of an absolute divorce and judgment of equitable distribution?

Opinion #4(a):
Yes. See Opinion #2 above.

Inquiry #4(b):
After the granting of an absolute divorce but prior to the entry of a judgment of equitable distribution?

Opinion #4(b):
Yes. See Opinion #2 above.

Inquiry #4(c):
After the granting of an absolute divorce and the entry of a judgment of equitable distribution?

Opinion #4(c):
Yes. See Opinion #2 above.

Inquiry #5:
If the real property is titled solely in the name of the client and was acquired before the marriage or was acquired by bequest, devise, descent, or gift during the course of marriage, may the attorney accept a promissory note secured by a deed of trust on the property as payment of the legal fee under the following circumstances:

Inquiry #5(a):
Prior to the granting of an absolute divorce and judgment of equitable distribution?

Opinion #5(a):
Yes. See Opinion #2 above.

Inquiry #5(b):
After the granting of an absolute divorce but prior to the entry of a judgment of equitable distribution?

Opinion #5(b):
Yes. See Opinion #2 above.

Inquiry #5(c):
After the granting of an absolute divorce and the entry of a judgment of equitable distribution?

Opinion #5(c):
Yes. See Opinion #2 above.

Inquiry #6:
Does the attorney have an ethical obligation to file the client's lis pendens prior to the recordation of his deed of trust?

Opinion #6:
Yes.

Inquiry #7:
What effect does the filing of a notice of lis pendens by either party have on the lawyer's deed of trust?

Opinion #7:
It is outside the authority of the Ethics Committee to respond to a question that seeks an opinion about the law.

RPC 187
October 21, 1994

Proprietary Interest in Domestic Client's Support Payments

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not acquire a proprietary interest in the subject matter of domestic litigation by obtaining a client's authorization to instruct the clerk of superior court to forward the client's support payments to the lawyer to satisfy the client's legal fees.

Inquiry:
Attorney has a fee agreement that he would like to use with his clients. In the agreement, the client promises to pay Attorney a "nonrefundable retainer fee" which "shall become the sole property of Attorney." Pursuant to the agreement, the services of Attorney are to be charged at $125 per hour. The retainer will be applied against accrued legal fees until the retainer is exhausted. The excess amount will then be billed on a monthly basis. The agreement further provides that in the event the legal matter is settled or there is a reconciliation in a domestic action, Attorney shall keep the "retainer fee" unless Attorney withdraws from the representation of the client. In the event Attorney withdraws, the agreement provides that Attorney will be compensated for the actual time spent on the legal matter at Attorney's regular hourly rate and any portion of the "nonrefundable retainer fee" in excess of this amount shall be refunded to the client. The agreement also contains the following provision:

> In matters pertaining to alimony and/or child support, in the event of nonpayment of fees as provided in paragraph 5 herein, I hereby authorize Attorney to direct the clerk of superior court to forward all alimony and/or child support payments for my benefit to the offices of Attorney until such time as my bill is paid in full. I further authorize Attorney, or his agent, to endorse any alimony and/or child support checks so forwarded in my name such that said check(s) may be deposited in the bank trust account of Attorney. Attorney and I agree that he may withdraw and apply up to 50 percent of any such payments deposited in his trust account for application to any past due account balance, with the balance paid to me.

Are the provisions of the agreement in compliance with the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion:
No. The provision of the agreement authorizing the clerk of court to pay the client's alimony and/or child support payments directly to Attorney in the event that the client's legal fees are unpaid violates Rule 5.3(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. This provision essentially gives Attorney a security interest in the client's child support and/or alimony payments which Attorney has been hired to pursue. Rule 5.3(a) prohibits a lawyer from acquiring a proprietary interest in the subject matter of the litigation he is conducting for a client except that he may (1) acquire a lien granted by law to secure his fee, or (2) contract with a client for a reasonable contingent fee in civil cases. The exception allowing a lawyer to secure a fee by asserting a lien granted by law does not apply in this situation because statutory liens do not arise by contractual agreement between a lawyer and a client. See Chapter 44A. The purpose of the prohibition on acquiring an interest in the subject matter of litigation is to prevent a lawyer from having a personal financial stake in the outcome of the case which may adversely affect the lawyer's professional judgment. In the instant case, Attorney's security interest in the future child support and/or alimony payments of his client may cloud his professional judgment with regard to the negotiation and resolution of the domestic dispute including the issue of the client's right to and the amount of child support and alimony.

With regard to the other provisions of the fee contract, lawyer may charge a client an advance fee against which future services will be billed and may pay the money to himself immediately if the client agrees the fee is earned immediately. See RPC 158. The agreement in the present inquiry should fully disclose to the client and the client should explicitly agree that the advance fee (which the agreement incorrectly describes as a "nonrefundable retainer," see RPC 50) will be paid to Attorney immediately and not held in Attorney's trust account for the possible refund of any excess balance at a later date. It should be noted that despite the provision of the agreement stating that the excess balance will be refunded only if Attorney withdraws, if a lawyer's services are terminated, any portion of the fee that is clearly excessive may be refundable to a client whether the fee is deposited in the trust account or the operating account. See RPC 158.

RPC 188

January 13, 1995

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 188 (Revised). See RPC 248 for subsequent opinions on these issues.

Receipt of Commission by Relative of Closing Lawyer

Opinion rules that a lawyer may close a real estate transaction brokered by the lawyer's spouse with the consent of the parties to the transaction.

Inquiry #1:

Lawyer practices law with XYZ Law Firm. His wife, W, is a real estate agent with Real Estate Agency located in a neighboring city. From time to time, members of XYZ Law Firm have been asked to represent one of the parties to a real estate transaction brokered by W or another realtor with Real Estate Agency and from which W or another realtor with Real Estate Agency will receive a commission. If all parties to the closing are made aware of the marital relationship between Lawyer and W, may Lawyer represent any party to a real estate transaction brokered by W?

Opinion #1:

Yes. There is no conflict of interest if a lawyer represents only the seller in a real estate transaction brokered by his wife because the interests of the seller and the real estate broker are the same: both want to ensure that the transaction is consummated promptly. With regard to his representation of the buyer and/or the lender, who are, respectively, interested in assuring that the buyer gets the property he bargained for and the loan to the buyer is properly documented and secured, Lawyer must first consider whether the exercise of his independent, professional judgment on behalf of his client (or clients) will be "materially impaired" by his desire to advance the interests of his spouse who will receive a valuable commission only if the transaction goes forward. Rule 5.1(b); see also RPC 88. If Lawyer reasonably believes his judgment will not be adversely affected by his relationship with his wife and all clients consent to Lawyer's participation after full disclosure of this relationship and the risks involved, Lawyer may proceed with the representation. On the other hand, if Lawyer concludes that his judgment on behalf of the buyer and/or the lender will be adversely affected by his desire to financially benefit his wife, it would be a disqualifying conflict of interest.

Inquiry #2:

Are the other lawyers in XYZ Law Firm disqualified from representing a party to a real estate transaction brokered by W?

Opinion #2:

No, if Lawyer could reasonably conclude that his judgment on behalf of the client would not be adversely affected under the circumstances and the client consents after full disclosure, then no conflict would be imputed to the other lawyers in XYZ Law Firm. See Rule 5.1(b) and Rule 5.11(a).

Inquiry #3:

May Lawyer represent the parties to a real estate closing if the transaction was brokered by a real estate agent affiliated with Real Estate Agency other than W?

Opinion #3:

Yes. See Opinion #1 above. If Lawyer concludes that his independent professional judgment on behalf of the buyer or lender might be affected by the desire to benefit Real Estate Agency, with whom W is affiliated, or her fellow real estate agent at Real Estate Agency, it would be a disqualifying conflict of interest.

Inquiry #4:

Real Estate Developer has been a client of XYZ Law Firm for several years and insists that the deeds for lots in the subdivisions it is developing be prepared by a member of XYZ Law Firm in order to ensure accuracy and uniformity. If W brokers a transaction for a lot in one of Developer's subdivisions, may Lawyer or another lawyer with XYZ Law Firm prepare the deed and sale papers for Developer?

Opinion #4:

Yes. See Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #5:

In a real estate transaction under contract, but not closed, W acted as realtor for the seller. Before closing, legal problems relating to the land arose which required additional legal services beyond those usually required for a standard real estate closing. May Lawyer or another lawyer with XYZ Law Firm represent the seller on this matter?

Opinion #5:

Yes. See Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #6:

W is also a paralegal and she sometimes assists her husband by performing his clerical work at her desk at the offices of Real Estate Agency. Lawyer represents Client on her claim for damages arising out of a traffic collision with another car. Ms. S, the driver/owner of the other automobile involved in the accident, works as a real estate agent with W at Real Estate Agency. Lawyer has not discussed Client's claim with Ms. S and is negotiating only with the insurance carrier. Lawyer advised Client that Ms. S works with W and offered the names of other lawyers in the area if Client chose to get a different lawyer. Does Lawyer need to do anything else to avoid a conflict of interest?

Opinion #6:

Yes. Although Lawyer could reasonably conclude that his representation of Client will not be impaired by the relationship between Ms. S and his wife, he has a duty to ensure that the confidential information of Client is not accidentally revealed to Ms. S. See Rule 4(b)(1). If W is working on any of the documents that relate to Client's claim at her desk in the offices of Real Estate Agency, there is a substantial risk that confidential information of Client may be revealed to Ms. S.

RPC 189

October 21, 1994

Communications by DA's Staff with Unrepresented Traffic Violators

Opinion rules that the members of a district attorney's staff may not give legal advice about pleas to lesser included infractions to an unrepresented person charged with a traffic infraction.

Inquiry:

In County X, when a citizen receives a traffic citation, he or she is often told by the police officer or state trooper making the stop to call the district attorney's office directly in order to get the charge reduced or to get a prayer for judgment continued. If the citizen subsequently calls or goes to the district attorney's office, he or she will speak with an assistant district attorney, a victim/witness coordinator, or a secretary. The member of the district attorney's staff counsels the citizen about pleas to lesser infractions available to the citizen which will reduce insurance points and save the citizen money on his or her insurance premiums. If relevant, the staff member might also give the citizen advice about pleas that would prevent a forfeiture of the citizen's driver's license. Following the discussion, a Form CR-202, from the Administrative Office of the Courts, entering the citizen's guilty plea to a lesser included infraction, is prepared for the citizen. Is the practice of advising citizens as to their plea options allowed under the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion:

No. An assistant district attorney or nonlawyer member of the district attorney's staff who is supervised by the district attorney may not give legal advice to a citizen charged with a traffic infraction who is not represented by a lawyer. The district attorney and his or her legal staff represent the State of North Carolina when they negotiate a traffic citation against a citizen. Where the interests of an unrepresented person and the interests of a lawyer's client are in conflict, Rule 7.4(b) and Rule 7.4(c) prohibit the lawyer from (1) giving advice to the unrepresented person other than the advice to seek counsel and (2) implying that the lawyer is disinterested. If the lawyer knows or should know that the unrepresented person misunderstands the lawyer's role, the lawyer must make reasonable efforts to correct the misunderstanding. Rule 7.4(c). In addition, Rule 7.3(b) imposes upon a prosecutor a special duty to advise unrepresented individuals who are charged in a criminal matter of the individual's right to obtain counsel. The district attorney and the other lawyers in his or her office must make reasonable efforts to ensure that the conduct of nonlawyer members of the staff is compatible with the professional obligations of the lawyers not to give legal advice to an unrepresented citizen charged with an infraction. See Rule 3.3(b). The foregoing opinion does not prohibit a member of a district attorney's staff from responding to questions from an unrepresented citizen regarding the pleas the district attorney's office would be willing to approve.

RPC 190

October 21, 1994

Billing for Reused Work Product

Opinion rules that a lawyer who has agreed to bill a client on the basis of hours expended may not bill the client on the same basis for reused work product.

Inquiry #1:

A lawyer with Law Firm researched a legal issue for Client A. Client A was billed for the work by Law Firm and paid the bill. Client B is also a client of Law Firm. Client B's legal matters are totally unrelated to those of Client A. However, the legal research which was prepared for Client A is relevant to Client B's legal matter and if Law Firm had not previously researched the particular legal issue and preserved the prior research, it would be necessary to research the issue again for Client B. Client B and Law Firm agreed that Client B would be billed at an hourly rate for each hour expended by one of Law Firm's lawyers doing work on Client B's behalf. May the research originally prepared for Client A be reused and Client B billed for the research?

Opinion #1:

No. A lawyer who has agreed to bill a client on the basis of hours expended does not fulfill her ethical duty if she bills the client for more time than was actually expended on the client's behalf.

The comment to Rule 2.6 of the Rule of Professional Conduct, the rule that regulates legal fees, states, "[o]nce a fee contract has been reached between attorney and client, the attorney has an ethical obligation to fulfill the contract and represent the client's best interest regardless of whether he has struck an unfavorable bargain." A lawyer also has a duty to deal honestly with clients. See Rule 1.2(c). Implicit in an agreement with a client to bill at an hourly rate for hours expended on the client's behalf is the understanding that for each hour of work billed to the client, an hour's worth of work was actually performed. If a lawyer who has agreed to accept hourly compensation for her work subsequently bills the client for reused work product, the lawyer would be engaging in dishonest conduct in violation of Rule 1.2(c).

However, the lawyer may bill at an hourly rate for the time expended tailoring old work product to the needs of a new client, and the lawyer is also free, with full disclosure, to suggest to a client that additional compensation would be appropriate because the lawyer was able to reuse prior work product for the client's benefit. Moreover, it is not unethical to charge for the value of reused work product if the original fee agreement with the client or any renegotiated fee agreement includes the express understanding that the client will be charged a reasonable fee, which is not based upon hourly compensation, for the reused work product.

Inquiry #2:

If the answer to Inquiry #1 is affirmative, may Law Firm charge Client B at the same rate that it charged Client A for the service?

Opinion #2:

No. See Opinion #1 above.

RPC 191

October 20, 1995

Revised January 24, 1997

Editor's Note: RPC 191 originally became a formal opinion of the State Bar on October 20, 1995. The opinion sets forth the duty of a closing lawyer to disburse from the trust account only in reliance upon the deposit of specified negotiable instruments which have a low risk of noncollectibility. On June 21, 1996, the North Carolina General Assembly ratified the Good Funds Settlement Act, G.S. Chapter 45A, which became effective October 1, 1996. The act sets forth the duty of a settlement agent for a residential real estate closing to disburse settlement proceeds from a trust or escrow account only in reliance upon the deposit of specified negotiable instruments. There was some inconsistency between the list of negotiable instruments against which disbursement was permitted in the Act and a similar list in RPC 191. To correct this, RPC 191was revised to reference the list of acceptable negotiable instruments found in the Act.

Disbursements Upon Deposit of Funds Provisionally Credited to Trust Account

Opinion rules that a lawyer may make disbursements from his or her trust account in reliance upon the deposit of funds provisionally credited to the account if the funds are deposited in the form of cash, wired funds, or by specified instruments which, although they are not irrevocably credited to the account upon deposit, are generally regarded as reliable.

Introduction:

In the wake of the financial failure of an out-of-state mortgage lender, the State Bar received numerous requests to reexamine prior ethics opinions CPR 358 and RPC 86 which permitted a lawyer to issue trust account checks against funds which, although uncollected, were provisionally credited to the lawyer's trust account by the financial institution with which the trust account was maintained. RPC 86 cautioned that the closing lawyer should disburse against provisionally credited funds only when the lawyer reasonably believed that the underlying deposited instrument was virtually certain to be honored when presented for collection. Nevertheless, lawyers did accept, deposit, and disburse against the residential loan proceeds checks of the out-of-state mortgage lender that failed. Some of these checks were ultimately dishonored and charged back against the trust accounts of the closing lawyers. In the meantime, some trust account checks issued for the closings were presented for collection and paid, resulting in the use of funds deposited by other clients to pay the closing checks presented for payment.

Inquiry:

In the typical residential real estate closing, the lending institution that finances the purchase of the property delivers the loan proceeds to the closing lawyer in the form of a check drawn upon a financial institution which may or may not be located in North Carolina. Loan proceeds are seldom delivered to the closing lawyer in the form of wired funds. Similarly, the real estate agent sometimes delivers the earnest money to the closing lawyer in the form of a check drawn on his or her trust account and the buyer sometimes delivers a personal check to the closing lawyer to cover the difference between the loan amount and the buyer's obligations. May a closing lawyer deposit such checks in his or her trust account and, if the depository bank will provisionally credit the lawyer's trust account, immediately disburse against the items before they have been collected?

Opinion:

Yes, but only upon the conditions set forth in this opinion.

A lawyer (1) may disburse funds from a trust account only in reliance upon the deposit of a financial instrument specified in the Good Funds Settlement Act, G.S. Chap. 45A (the Act), which became effective on October 1, 1996, and the securing of provisional credit for the deposited item, and (2) as an affirmative duty, must immediately act to protect the property of the lawyer's other clients by personally paying the amount of any failed deposit or securing or arranging payment from other sources upon learning that a deposited instrument has been dishonored. It shall be unethical for a lawyer to disburse funds from a trust account in reliance upon the deposit of a financial instrument that is not specified in the Act, regardless of whether the item is ultimately honored or dishonored.

In reliance on CPR 358 and RPC 86, many closing lawyers deposit the checks from the lender, the real estate agent, and the buyer into their trust accounts, receive provisional credit for the items from the depository bank and immediately disburse funds from their trust accounts in accordance with the schedule of receipts and disbursements prepared for the closing. There is typically some delay, generally three to four days but in some instances as much as fifteen days, between the time of the deposit of the checks of the lender, the buyer, and the real estate agent into the lawyer's trust account and the time when the funds are irrevocably credited to the lawyer's trust account by the depository institution. Because of the time lag between the deposit and the collection of the checks, the closing lawyer runs the risk that a check may be ultimately dishonored and charged back against the trust account of the closing lawyer, resulting in the use of the funds of other clients on deposit in the trust account to satisfy the disbursement checks from the closing.

A lawyer who receives funds that belong to a client assumes the responsibilities of a fiduciary to safeguard those funds and to preserve the identity of the funds by depositing the funds into a designated trust account. Rule 10.1 of the Rules of Professional Conduct. It is a lawyer's fiduciary obligation to ensure that the funds of a particular client are used only to satisfy the obligations of that client and are not used to satisfy the claims of the lawyer's creditors. Rule 10.1 and comment. Furthermore, Rule 10.2 of the Rules of Professional Conduct requires a lawyer to maintain complete records of all funds or other property of a client received by the lawyer and to render to the client appropriate accountings of the receipt and disbursement of any of the client's funds or property held by the lawyer. Rule 10.2(e) recognizes a lawyer's obligation to pay promptly or deliver to the client, or to a third person as directed by the client, the funds in the possession of the lawyer to which the client is entitled. Strictly interpreted, these rules would appear to require a lawyer not to disburse upon items deposited in his or her trust account until the depository bank has irrevocably credited the items to the account.

Requiring a closing lawyer to postpone disbursement until all items have been credited to the lawyer's trust account would result in inconvenience, delay, and could have an adverse effect on the economy. Nevertheless, there is some risk that certain instruments, such as ordinary commercial checks, may be uncollectible in any given transaction. Conversely, there are financial instruments that are generally regarded as extremely reliable. In fact, other state bars that have considered the issue have held that there are certain financial instruments for which the risk of noncollectibility is so slight as to make it unnecessary to prohibit a closing lawyer from disbursing immediately against such items before they are collected. See Virginia State Bar Legal Ethics Opinion 183 and Rule 5-1.1(g) of the Rules Regulating the Florida Bar. Similarly, the North Carolina Good Funds Settlement Act permits a "settlement agent," or person responsible for conducting the settlement and disbursement of the proceeds for a residential real estate closing, to disburse against uncollected funds but only if the deposited instrument is in one of the forms specified in the Act.

Notwithstanding the fact that some of the forms of funds designated in the Act are not irrevocably credited to the lawyer's trust account at the time of deposit, the risk of noncollectibility is so slight that a lawyer's disbursement of funds from a trust account in reliance upon the deposit into the account of provisionally credited funds in these forms shall not be considered unethical. However, a closing lawyer should never disburse against any provisionally credited funds unless he or she reasonably believes that the underlying deposited instrument is virtually certain to be honored when presented for collection. A lawyer may immediately disburse against collected funds, such as cash or wired funds, and may immediately make disbursements from his or her trust account in reliance upon provisional credit extended by the depository institution for funds deposited into the trust account in one or more of the forms set forth in G.S. §45A-4.

The disbursement of funds from a trust account by a lawyer in reliance upon provisional credit extended upon the deposit of an item into the trust account which does not take one of the forms prescribed in the Act constitutes professional misconduct, regardless of whether the item is ultimately honored or dishonored. However, a lawyer who disburses in reliance upon provisional credit extended upon the deposit of an item prescribed in the Act shall not be guilty of professional misconduct if that lawyer, upon learning that the item has been dishonored, immediately acts to protect the property of the lawyer's other clients by personally paying the amount of any failed deposit or securing or arranging payment from sources available to the lawyer other than trust account funds of other clients. An attorney should take care not to disburse against uncollected funds in situations where the attorney's assets or credit would be insufficient to fund the trust account checks in the event that a provisionally credited item is dishonored.

To the extent that CPR 358 and RPC 86 are inconsistent with this opinion, they are overruled. However, there are provisions in both opinions that remain operative. Specifically, the provision of CPR 358 that prohibits a lawyer from disbursing against the "float" in the trust account during the time lag between the deposit of the checks of the lender, the buyer, and the real estate agent and the time when these items are irrevocably credited to the account unless provisional credit for the items is extended by the depository institution remains in effect. If provisional credit is not extended by the depository institution, the disbursing lawyer is using the funds of other clients to cover the closing disbursements until the deposited items are collected in violation of Rule 10.1.

It should be emphasized that this opinion shall apply to any disbursements from the trust account against items which are not irrevocably credited to the account upon deposit, whether such disbursements are for the purpose of closing a real estate transaction or for the purpose of concluding some other transaction or matter.

RPC 192

January 13, 1995

Use of Information Obtained from Illegal Tape Recording

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not listen to an illegal tape recording made by his client nor may he use the information on the illegal tape recording to advance his client's case.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney represents Client W in a contested domestic matter involving allegations of adultery. Client W, without the knowledge or consent of Attorney, illegally tape records a conversation between Client W's Spouse and Spouse's paramour. Attorney advises Client W that tape recording the conversation was illegal and should not be repeated. The tape recording is inadmissible in court but may be admitted for purposes of impeaching Spouse and his paramour. May Attorney ethically listen to the illegal tape recording in order to be aware of its content in the event Spouse makes a statement in court that can be impeached with the tape recording?

Opinion #1:

No. The tape recording is the fruit of Client W's illegal conduct. If Attorney listens to the tape recording in order to use it in Client W's representation, he would be enabling Client W to benefit from her illegal conduct. This would be prejudicial to the administration of justice in violation of Rule 1.2(d). See also Rule 7.2(a)(8). Attention is directed to the Federal Wiretap Act, 18 U.S.C. Section 2510, et seq., particularly Sections 2511 and 2520, regarding criminal penalties for endeavoring to use or using the contents of an illegal wire communication.

Inquiry #2:

If Attorney may listen to the tape recording, may he use the information obtained from the tape recording to gather additional evidence?

Opinion #2:

No. See Opinion #1.

Inquiry #3:

If Attorney may listen to the tape recording, may he use the information acquired from the tape recording to form questions to be asked to Spouse and Spouse's paramour at the trial?

Opinion #3:

No. See Opinion #1.

RPC 193

January 13, 1995

Communications with Uninsured Motorist

Opinion rules that the attorney for the plaintiffs in a personal injury action arising out of a motor vehicle accident may interview the unrepresented defendant even though the uninsured motorist insurer, which has elected to defend the claim in the name of the defendant, is represented by an attorney in the matter.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A represents Plaintiffs in a civil action instituted against Defendant for damages arising out of a motor vehicle accident. Defendant has no motor vehicle insurance and is not represented by a lawyer. Attorney B represents the uninsured motorist insurer ("Insurer") which is defending the claim in the name of the defendant without being named as a party pursuant to G.S. §279.21(b)(3)a. May Attorney A speak to Defendant without Attorney B's knowledge or consent?

Opinion #1:

Yes. Rule 7.4(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct only prohibits communication with a person known to be represented by counsel in regard to the matter in question. Although G.S. §20-279.21(b)(3)a. allows an insurer to defend in the name of an uninsured motorist, the attorney for the insurer does not represent that individual. For that reason, Attorney A need not obtain the consent of Attorney B in order to interview Defendant. However, in dealing with Defendant, who is unrepresented in this matter, Attorney A must comply with the requirements of Rule 7.4(b) and (c) which prohibit a lawyer from giving advice to an adverse party who is not represented by a lawyer, other than the advice to secure counsel, and also prohibits such a lawyer from stating or implying that he or she is disinterested.

Inquiry #2:

There is motor vehicle insurance covering the vehicle driven by Defendant in the accident but the limits of liability are inadequate to compensate Plaintiffs. The motor vehicle insurer providing primary liability coverage on the underinsured vehicle driven by Defendant pays the limits of liability and, upon application to the court pursuant to G.S. §20-279.21(b)(4), is released from further liability and the obligation to provide a defense. Defendant is therefore unrepresented. The underinsured motorist insurer (represented by Attorney B) is defending the action in the name of Defendant pursuant to G.S. §20-279.21(b)(4). May Attorney A communicate with Defendant without Attorney B's knowledge or consent if Plaintiffs release Defendant from personal liability?

Opinion #2:

Yes. See Opinion #1.

RPC 194

January 13, 1995

Communications with Unrepresented Prospective Defendant

Opinion rules that in a letter to an unrepresented prospective defendant in a personal injury action, the plaintiff's lawyer may not give legal advice nor may he create the impression that he is concerned about or protecting the interests of the unrepresented prospective defendant.

Inquiry:

Plaintiff and Defendant were involved in an automobile accident. Plaintiff retained Attorney to represent her. Attorney attempted to negotiate a settlement with Defendant's liability insurance carrier without success. Attorney decided to file suit. Prior to filing the complaint and serving the complaint on Defendant, Attorney wants to send Defendant, who is unrepresented, a letter. The letter will inform Defendant that Attorney represents Plaintiff in connection with the accident and that Attorney attempted to settle the case with the carrier. The letter will include the following statement:

> Such a settlement would avoid litigation and would avoid even the possibility that you might have personal exposure for payment of part of a judgment, should you have insufficient liability insurance to cover a judgment.

The letter will also indicate that the insurance carrier either failed to negotiate or was unwilling to pay what Attorney believed to be a fair settlement and that "this means we must sue you on behalf of our client." The letter will advise Defendant to contact his insurance adjuster upon receiving the suit papers. The letter will then state the following:

> Please understand that nothing personal is intended by this action. It has become necessary because we have been unable to settle the case with your insurance carrier.

The letter will recommend that Defendant consult a lawyer of his own choosing if Defendant has only minimum liability insurance coverage. The letter will conclude with the following statement:

> Although the insurance company will hire a lawyer to defend this claim, his or her responsibility will be divided between you and the insurance company. Sometimes, your interests and that of the insurance company are not the same.

Will the content of this letter violate the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion:

Yes. Rule 7.4(b) prohibits a lawyer from giving advice to a prospective opposing party who is not represented by a lawyer, other than the advice to secure counsel. In the letter, the advice to secure counsel is given not in an attempt by Attorney to avoid a conflict of interest on his own part but in the context of giving Defendant legal advice about a possible conflict of interest on the part of any lawyer who may be retained by the insurance carrier to defend Defendant. The letter also gives the unrepresented Defendant advice about the effect of a settlement on his personal liability.

More problematic is the general tenor of the letter which, through numerous statements such as "nothing personal is intended by this action," implies that Attorney is not only disinterested but he is actually concerned about and protecting the interests of Defendant. This is a clear violation of Rule 7.4(c) which states

> ...in dealing on behalf of a client with a person who is not represented by counsel, [a lawyer shall not] state or imply that the lawyer is disinterested. When the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the unrepresented person misunderstands the lawyer's role in the matter, the lawyer shall make reasonable efforts to correct the misunderstanding.

RPC 195

January 13, 1995

Disclosure of Confidential Information of Personal Representative of an Estate

Opinion rules that the attorney who formerly represented an estate may divulge confidential information relating to the representation of the estate to the substitute personal representative of the estate.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A was consulted by Widow after her husband's death in an automobile accident. At the time of the consultation, Widow had not qualified as personal representative of her husband's estate. Attorney A advised Widow about the handling of her husband's estate, the estate's possible liability to another person injured in the automobile accident that killed her husband, and how the liability of the estate might affect her and her children's inheritance. Widow qualified as personal representative of the estate and commenced the administration of the estate without the assistance of Attorney A. Before the time for filing claims against the estate expired and before the person injured in the accident filed a claim against the estate, Widow disbursed most of the assets of the estate to herself and her children. Ultimately, Widow was removed as personal representative and Attorney B was appointed in her place. Attorney B is preparing a suit against Widow and the children in which he will seek to restore the assets of the estate. He would like to interview Attorney A about the substance of any consultations Attorney A had with Widow and any of the heirs regarding her duties as personal representative of her husband's estate. Attorney B would also like to see Attorney A's file for Widow. Does Attorney A have a duty of confidentiality to Widow that prohibits him from opening his file to Attorney B and being questioned by Attorney B about the advice he gave Widow with regard to the administration of the estate?

Opinion #1:

Yes. At the time of her consultation with Attorney A, Widow had not qualified as personal representative. Therefore, Attorney A was not representing the estate or the personal representative in her official capacity. Any disclosure by Attorney A of information gained during his professional relationship with Widow which would result in embarrassment or harm to Widow would be a violation of Attorney A's duty to preserve the information of his client. Rule 4(a).

Inquiry #2:

Would the answer to Inquiry #1 be different if Widow sought the legal advice of Attorney A in her official capacity as personal representative of her husband's estate?

Opinion #2:

Yes. RPC 137 states that "[i]n accepting employment in regard to an estate, an attorney undertakes to represent the personal representative in his or her official capacity and the estate as an entity." If Attorney A was representing Widow in her official capacity as the personal representative of the estate, Attorney B, as the substitute personal representative, may consent to the release of the file by Attorney A and the divulging of confidential communications between Attorney A and Widow. When a lawyer represents a personal representative of an estate in his or her official capacity, the duty of confidentiality is owed to the personal representative acting in his or her official capacity and to the estate itself. Whomever is serving as personal representative of the estate, including a substitute personal representative, may consent to the disclosure of confidential information relating to the representation of the estate and the personal representative.

Inquiry #3:

If Attorney A gave legal advice to Widow both personally, prior to her appointment as personal representative, and, subsequently, as the personal representative of the estate, would Attorney A have a duty of confidentiality prohibiting him from opening the estate file to Attorney B and prohibiting him from divulging his communications with Widow in her capacity as personal representative of the estate?

Opinion #3:

No. Attorney A may open the estate file to Attorney B and may divulge to Attorney B the substance of his communications with Widow when he was representing Widow in her capacity as personal representative. However, information obtained from Widow during the time that Attorney A represented her in her personal capacity would be subject to the duty of confidentiality. See Opinion #2.

RPC 196

January 13, 1995

Recovering Legal Fees from Opposing Party

Opinion rules that a law firm may not charge a clearly excessive fee for legal representation even if the legal fee may be recovered from an opposing party.

Inquiry:

Law Firm has considerable experience in the practice of community association and planned community law. Over time, Law Firm has established certain fees for collection activities provided to its association clients. These collection activities include the prosecution of liens, foreclosures, and bankruptcy proceedings. Law Firm has determined that the fees it charges for these collection activities are reasonable based upon the time and labor required; the difficulty of the questions involved; the skill required to perform the legal service; the experience, reputation, and ability of the lawyers providing the services; and the customary fee for like work in the same locality. Where possible and permitted by law, Law Firm recovers attorney's fees and expenses incurred in connection with these collection activities from the responsible debtor. All fees not recovered are paid by the client association that retained Law Firm to pursue the action.

Manager of Association X has requested that Law Firm agree to substantially increase the legal fees it charges to debtors from whom fees are recovered and to agree not to bill Association X on cases where fees are not recovered from the debtor. Association X would continue to pay expenses incurred by Law Firm in connection with the collection activity. No part of the monies recovered by Law Firm for Association X would be paid to Law Firm as a contingent fee. Is this fee arrangement ethical?

Opinion:

No. Essentially, the fee arrangement requires Law Firm to offset the losses it may realize on cases where legal fees cannot be collected from the debtor by inflating fees in the cases where it is able to recover fees from the debtor. Rule 2.6(a) prohibits a lawyer from charging or collecting a clearly excessive fee. Subsection (b) of Rule 2.6 sets forth certain factors to be taken into consideration in determining the reasonableness of a fee including, but not limited to, the following: (1) the time and labor required and the skill involved; (2) whether the acceptance of particular employment will preclude other employment; (3) fees customarily charged in the same locality; (4) the results obtained; (5) time limitations; and (6) whether the fee is fixed or contingent. If Law Firm collects more than the fee that it has already determined to be reasonable for the services rendered to Association X after taking into account the factors set forth in Rule 2.6(b), Law Firm would be charging and collecting an unethical excessive fee whether the fee is collected from Association X or an opposing party. In addition, if Law Firm inflates its fee in a request to a court and/or a demand to a debtor for recovery of legal fees, Law Firm would be engaging in misrepresentation of the actual fees incurred for that particular collection action in violation of Rule 1.2(c) which prohibits a lawyer from engaging in conduct involving dishonesty, deceit, or misrepresentation.

RPC 197

January 13, 1995

Prosecutor's Duty to Notify Appropriate Persons of Dismissal of Criminal Charges

Opinion rules that a prosecutor must notify defense counsel, jail officials, or other appropriate persons to avoid the unnecessary detention of a criminal defendant after the charges against the defendant have been dismissed by the prosecutor.

Inquiry #1:

Defendant is being held in pretrial detention because he is unable to make bond. He is represented by Defense Lawyer. Prosecutor files a notice of voluntary dismissal of all charges pending against Defendant, pursuant to G.S. §15A-931, without placing the case on a published trial calendar. Prosecutor has access to a list of persons held in jail and the charges under which they are being held. This list includes an entry for Defendant. Is Prosecutor required by the Rules of Professional Conduct to serve Defense Lawyer with a copy of the written dismissal?

Opinion #1:

Yes, the prosecutor is required to either serve Defense Lawyer with a copy of the written dismissal or take other steps to notify Defense Lawyer, jail officials, or other appropriate persons in order to avoid the unnecessary detention of Defendant.

A lawyer has a duty to avoid conduct that is prejudicial to the administration of justice pursuant to Rule 1.2(d) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Prosecutors have a special duty "to seek justice, not merely to convict." See comment to Rule 7.3. In particular, Rule 7.3(d) requires a prosecutor to make timely disclosure to the defense of all evidence or information that tends to negate the guilt of the accused or mitigate the offense. The spirit, if not the letter of these rules, when considered in pari materia, calls for a prosecutor to take reasonable steps to ensure that a criminal defendant is not held in jail without charge.

Inquiry #2:

Is Prosecutor required by the Rules of Professional Conduct to provide the jail with a certified copy of the dismissal?

Opinion #2:

See Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #3:

Would the response to Inquiry #2 be different if Defendant was unrepresented?

Opinion #3:

No. See Opinion #1 above.

RPC 198

January 13, 1995

Responsibilities of Stand-by Counsel Upon the Assumption of the Defense in a Capital Case

Opinion explores the ethical responsibilities of stand-by defense counsel who are instructed to take over the defense in a capital murder case without an opportunity to prepare.

Inquiry #1:

Defendant chose to defend himself in the trial of a capital murder charge. Several months prior to the trial, the court appointed Attorney A and Attorney B as stand-by defense counsel. The stand-by counsel were present at all pretrial hearings. At the time of the appointment and at other points during the trial, Attorney A and Attorney B were advised that if Defendant decided at any point that he did not want to proceed pro se, they would take over his defense. When Attorney A and Attorney B were advised that they could be elevated from stand-by counsel to trial counsel for Defendant at any time, they objected unless they would be given adequate time to prepare.

At numerous hearings prior to the trial, Defendant was offered the opportunity to have stand-by counsel take over his defense. Defendant refused each time and proceeded to represent himself throughout the "guilt/innocence phase" of the trial. A guilty verdict was returned by the jury. After the State completed the presentation of its evidence during the sentencing phase and after Defendant had called several witnesses, Defendant advised the court that he wanted stand-by counsel to handle the presentation of the remainder of his case. The court advised Attorney A and Attorney B to proceed with the presentation of Defendant's evidence in the sentencing phase of the trial. Attorney B advised the court that he and Attorney A were unprepared to proceed at that time because, in their role as stand-by counsel, they had not interviewed the witnesses subpoenaed by Defendant nor had they had any discussions with Defendant regarding the substantive aspects of his case. Attorney B also advised the court that there were other aspects of the case, including appropriate motions which might be made during the sentencing phase, which required investigation and research. Attorney A and Attorney B filed a motion for a three-week continuance to prepare the presentation of Defendant's case in the sentencing hearing, and they also filed a motion for a new sentencing hearing.

The court denied both motions. Attorney A and Attorney B made motions to withdraw on the grounds that they could not effectively represent Defendant without preparation. The motions to withdraw were denied. Attorney A and Attorney B filed petitions for writs of supersedeas and mandamus and an application for stay of proceedings with the North Carolina Supreme Court but the Supreme Court had not ruled at the time the trial court ordered Attorney A and Attorney B to proceed with the defense. Is it unethical for Attorney A and Attorney B to fail to present a defense in the sentencing hearing?

Opinion #1:

No, provided Attorney A and Attorney B made every effort to be adequately prepared, but reasonably and in good faith, concluded that under the circumstances they could not present a competent defense.

Rule 6(a)(2) of the Rules of Professional Conduct provides that a lawyer shall not handle a legal matter "without adequate preparation under the circumstances." The comment to Rule 6 notes "[t]he required attention and preparation [for the competent handling of a particular matter] are determined in part by what is at stake; major litigation and complex transactions ordinarily require more elaborate treatment than matters of lesser consequence." Certainly the sentencing phase of a capital murder trial requires the utmost preparation. A lawyer who is serving as stand-by counsel to a criminal defendant has a duty competently to represent the defendant at the juncture in the trial at which he is instructed to take over the defense. If that lawyer reasonably and in good faith concludes that he has not had an adequate opportunity to prepare under the circumstances, at a minimum he should advise the court and request a continuance in order to have the opportunity to prepare. Additionally, he may make a motion to withdraw from the representation. See Rule 2.8(b)(2). If the court determines that the lawyer should proceed without a continuance and does not allow the lawyer to withdraw, the lawyer should exhaust all reasonably available legal procedures by which he might seek additional time to prepare. However, having exhausted such avenues, if the lawyer continues, reasonably and in good faith, to believe that his lack of preparation makes him incompetent to present a defense, it is not unethical for the lawyer to decide not to present a defense. By declining to present a defense the lawyer must not be irresponsibly abandoning his client but must believe that under the circumstances and given the limited time available, even if he made heroic efforts to prepare himself, he would be unable to present a competent defense.

Inquiry #2:

After the motion for a continuance was denied, would it have been unethical for Attorney A and Attorney B to present a defense?

Opinion #2:

No. If after being put on notice that a lawyer believes himself to be incompetent to proceed without additional time to prepare, the court determines that the lawyer is adequately prepared and denies a motion to continue, it is not unethical for the lawyer to proceed with the representation on this basis.

Inquiry #3:

May a lawyer refuse to present a defense for a criminal defendant for the purpose of creating grounds for a post-trial ineffective assistance of counsel motion?

Opinion #3:

No. A lawyer may not pursue a course of conduct that would intentionally prejudice or damage his client nor may he engage in conduct that is prejudicial to the administration of justice. Rule 7.1(a)(3) and Rule 1.2(d). A lawyer may not intentionally present an inadequate or ineffective defense of a criminal defendant for the primary purpose of creating error and assuring his client a new trial.

RPC 199

January 13, 1995

Ethical Responsibilities of Court-Appointed Lawyer

Opinion addresses the ethical responsibilities of a lawyer appointed to represent a criminal defendant in a capital case who, in good faith, believes he lacks the experience and ability to represent the defendant competently.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A was appointed by a district court judge to serve as lead counsel in defending an indigent defendant ("Defendant") against a charge of first-degree murder. Attorney A is licensed to practice in North Carolina but has limited experience in representing criminal defendants. He practices law in a rural area without a sufficient library and other resources appropriate for the ongoing legal research necessary for a capital case. Attorney A believes he is not competent to represent a client in a capital murder case. He has never been on any court list for appointment to represent indigent defendants.

Attorney A filed a motion to withdraw with the district court which advised the court that he did not believe he was competent to provide legal representation in such a matter. After a hearing, the district court concluded that Attorney A is competent and denied the motion to withdraw. Attorney A in good faith still believes that he is not competent to represent Defendant. Is it ethical for Attorney A to take additional steps to legally challenge the appointment?

Opinion #1:

Yes. Rule 6 of the Rules of Professional Conduct provides that a lawyer shall not handle a legal matter that he knows he is not competent to handle unless he can associate an experienced lawyer to assist him. If a lawyer who is appointed to represent an indigent criminal defendant honestly and reasonably concludes that he is not competent to represent the client, at a minimum, he has a duty to advise the court of his perceived lack of competency, as Attorney A did in the preceding inquiry. If the court determines that the lawyer is competent but the lawyer in good faith continues to believe that he is not competent and his representation would be harmful to the client's interests, it is not unethical for the lawyer to challenge the appointment by appropriate legal procedures, including but not limited to, making a motion to have the appointment set aside in superior court, filing a petition for certiorari with the appellate courts or appealing a contempt ruling for refusal to serve. If the lawyer controverts his appointment through such legal proceedings, he must be acting in good faith and not merely to avoid the inconvenience or expense of the appointment. See Rule 7.2(a)(1).

Although the lawyer has an initial duty to advise the court that he believes he is not competent to handle a matter, if the court nevertheless determines that the lawyer is competent and refuses to release the lawyer from the appointment, it is not unethical for the lawyer to proceed with the representation on this basis without further challenge to the appointment.

Inquiry #2:

Is it ethical for Attorney A to refuse to serve as appointed counsel for Defendant and accept the court's sanction?

Opinion #2:

Yes, if Attorney A has unsuccessfully challenged the appointment through reasonably available legal procedures and he continues, as a matter of professional responsibility, to believe that he is not competent to serve as legal counsel to Defendant, it is not unethical for Attorney A to refuse to serve and to accept the court's sanction. See Rule 6(a)(1).

Inquiry #3:

Would the responses to Inquiry #1 or Inquiry #2 be different if Attorney A is appointed to assist another experienced lawyer who will serve as lead counsel?

Opinion #3:

Yes. Whether Attorney A is appointed lead counsel or appointed to assist an experienced lawyer would be relevant to the assessment of Attorney A's competency to represent Defendant. As noted in Rule 6, a lawyer may consider himself competent to handle a legal matter he would otherwise not be competent to handle if he associates an experienced lawyer to assist him with the matter. If Attorney A is serving as "second chair" to an experienced lawyer, it would not be reasonable for him to conclude that he is not competent to handle the matter.

Inquiry #4:

Attorney A's malpractice insurer has expressed concern that Attorney A's representation of Defendant in the capital case may present an unreasonable risk of exposure to a malpractice claim, particularly since it would require Attorney A to practice in an area outside his chosen areas of concentration. If Attorney A represents Defendant, he believes he should make a record that will document his own lack of competence in order to preserve a due process or other constitutional challenge to the state system of appointing attorneys for indigent defendants charged with capital crimes. By so doing, Attorney A fears he may be building a civil case against himself for malpractice if Defendant is convicted of first-degree murder or some lesser charge. Does Attorney A have a conflict of interest?

Opinion #4:

No. The fact that Attorney A's malpractice insurer has expressed concern regarding Attorney A's representation of Defendant does not create a disqualifying conflict of interest because Attorney A's responsibility to his client should not be limited or affected by his malpractice carrier's concern. See Rule 5.1(b). If Attorney A accepts the appointment of the court and proceeds with the representation, Attorney A has a duty to zealously represent his client to the best of his ability. See Canon VII. This includes taking whatever steps are necessary to make himself competent to handle the case including, but not limited to, attempting to associate an experienced lawyer or seeking the court appointment of an experienced lawyer to assist him, educating himself about the relevant law, utilizing available resources such as the resource center in the office of the appellate defender (which provides assistance to counsel for those accused of capital crimes), traveling to an adequate law library, etc. Attorney A may not pursue a course of conduct that will intentionally prejudice or damage Defendant during the course of the professional relationship. See Rule 7.1(A)(3). This would include approaching the representation from the perspective that his job is to document his own incompetence.

If Attorney A represents Defendant to the best of his ability, but concludes that he may have committed an error or errors that were prejudicial to Defendant's case, he must advise Defendant that mistakes were made that may have been harmful to Defendant's case and that it is in Defendant's best interest to consult independent counsel regarding his legal rights. See Rule 6(b)(2)(1) and (2).

Note: Whether a lawyer can be required, over his objection, to represent a criminal defendant if he has not voluntarily placed his name on a list for court appointments is a legal issue which the Ethics Committee has no authority to address. Moreover, no opinion is expressed herein as to the constitutional propriety of appointing inexperienced lawyers to represent indigent criminal defendants in capital cases.

RPC 200

January 13, 1995

Contacts with Clients after a Lawyer Leaves a Firm

Opinion rules that the lawyers remaining with a firm may contact by phone or in person clients whose legal matters were handled exclusively by a lawyer who has left the firm.

Inquiry #1:

ABC Law Firm has several offices across the state. For many years, Attorney D was the sole attorney present in ABC Law Firm's satellite office in Little City. While he worked for ABC Law Firm, the clients for whose matters Attorney D was responsible were almost exclusively residents of Little City. These clients were not referred to Attorney D by other members of ABC Law Firm nor did the other members of ABC Law Firm assist with the representation of these clients.

Attorney D recently resigned from ABC Law Firm in order to set up his own law practice. He would like to telephone or go to see the clients that he was representing at the time of his departure from ABC Law Firm in order to inform these clients that he is no longer with the firm and to advise each client of the client's options with regard to the continuation of the client's representation. May Attorney D contact these clients for this purpose?

Opinion #1:

Yes, Attorney D may personally contact, telephone or write to the clients for whose work he was responsible at the time of his departure from the firm. Together with the lawyers remaining with ABC Law Firm, Attorney D has an obligation to ensure that the representation of these clients continues despite his departure from the firm. RPC 48. Notice, either written or in-person, should be given to each such client informing the client of Attorney D's departure from the firm and advising the client of the right freely to choose counsel. Rule 6(b) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Specifically, the client should be advised that he or she has the option of retaining Attorney D as his or her lawyer, requesting that another lawyer with ABC Law Firm take over the representation, or engaging a lawyer from another firm. The notice should also advise the client that he or she will need to instruct ABC Law Firm with regard to the disposition of the client's file if the client chooses to move his or her representation to another law firm. Rule 2.8(a)(2).

The preferred method of advising clients of the departure of a lawyer or lawyers from a law firm is by the sending of a notice upon which the remaining and departing lawyers agree and which clearly informs the clients of their right freely to choose counsel. See RPC 48.

Inquiry #2:

May Attorney D call or personally visit clients for whose work he was responsible while he was a lawyer with ABC Law Firm but whose representation was complete at the time of his departure from the firm if the primary purpose of his contact with these former clients is to solicit employment?

Opinion #2:

Yes. Rule 2.4(a) only prohibits in-person or live telephone contact to solicit professional employment from a prospective client if the lawyer has no family or prior professional relationship with the prospective client. A "prior professional relationship" means "that the subject attorney actually was involved in a personal attorney-client relationship with the prospective client." RPC 98. Such communication should be in compliance with Rule 2.4(b) which prohibits solicitation by written, recorded or in-person communications even when not otherwise prohibited by Rule 2.4(a) if the client has made known to the lawyer a desire not to be solicited by the lawyer or the solicitation involves coercion, duress, harassment, etc.

Inquiry #3:

May the other lawyers in ABC Law Firm telephone or visit the clients whose legal matters were being handled by Attorney D at the time of his departure in order to advise the clients of Attorney D's departure and to discuss their representation?

Opinion #3:

Yes, the firm may designate a member of the firm who will be responsible for notifying the clients of the departure of Attorney D and advising them of the right freely to choose counsel as described in Opinion #1 above.

Such verbal or written contact with these clients is not improper solicitation of prospective clients in violation of Rule 2.4(a) or (c) because the clients are not prospective clients of the firm. With regard to such clients, the remaining lawyers with ABC Law Firm have an obligation to ensure that the representation of each client continues or is responsibly transferred to an outside lawyer chosen by the client. To the extent that RPC 48 or RPC 98 imply that a member of ABC Law Firm would be prohibited under these circumstances from contacting any of the clients whose matters were being handled by Attorney D at the time of his departure from the firm unless such a lawyer had a personal professional relationship with the client, RPC 48 and RPC 98 are overruled.

Inquiry #4:

If their purpose is to solicit professional employment, may the lawyers remaining with ABC Law Firm telephone or visit clients for whose work Attorney D was responsible prior to his departure from ABC Law Firm but whose representation had ended prior to the time that Attorney D left the firm?

Opinion #4:

Yes, provided such communication does not violate Rule 2.4(b). See Opinion #3.

Inquiry #5:

May the lawyers remaining with ABC Law Firm use written, telephone or in-person communications to solicit professional employment from a client whose active file was being handled by Attorney D at the time of his departure if the client has notified the firm that he or she has obtained other legal counsel and no longer needs the services of the firm?

Opinion #5:

Yes, provided such communication does not violate Rule 2.4(b). See Opinion #3.

RPC 201

January 13, 1995

Combining Law Practice and Work as Realtor

Opinion explores the circumstances under which a lawyer who is also a real estate salesperson may close real estate transactions brokered by the real estate company with which he is affiliated.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A has an active real estate license and is a real estate salesman for Real Estate Company. Attorney A's office is located inside the offices of Real Estate Company. From his office, Attorney A operates his law practice and sells real estate. There is no signage on the office door for Real Estate Company or on the exterior of the building that indicates that Attorney A operates a separate law practice from within the offices of Real Estate Company. The same telephone number is used for Real Estate Company and Attorney A's law practice.

Attorney A does not separately advertise his services as a lawyer. He does advertise and hold himself out as a lawyer in Real Estate Company's television and print advertisements. Real Estate Company advertises itself as providing "full service" which includes real estate closing services. Most of Attorney A's legal business comes from referrals from Real Estate Company, and Real Estate Company recommends that its customers use Attorney A to close their real estate transactions.

May Attorney A receive a real estate sales commission on a real estate transaction for which he provided legal services to any party involved in the transaction other than Real Estate Company?

Opinion #1:

No. Rule 5.1(b) requires a lawyer to decline to represent a client if the representation of the client may be materially limited by the lawyer's own interest. If Attorney A would realize a valuable commission from the closing of a real estate transaction, it is likely that Attorney A's judgment on behalf of the buyer, seller, or lender will be materially limited. CPR 307 specifically holds that a lawyer may not certify title to property he has listed or sold. See also RPC 49.

Inquiry #2:

May Attorney A close real estate transactions brokered by Real Estate Company if he did not list or sell the property and he will not earn a commission from the transaction?

Opinion #2:

Yes, provided Attorney A reasonably concludes that the exercise of his independent, professional judgment on behalf of his clients will not be "materially impaired" by his desire to advance the interests of Real Estate Company or his desire to encourage future referrals. Rule 5.1(b). A lawyer is not prohibited by the Rules of Professional Conduct from utilizing the same office for both the practice of law and for conducting another business. See CPR 266. However, in analyzing his ability to exercise his independent, professional judgment on behalf of his clients, Attorney A must consider whether the location of his law practice within the confines of the offices of Real Estate Company will affect his professional judgment because of the close physical proximity of realtors who are referring legal business to him. If the location of his office will affect his professional judgment, Attorney A must either decline to represent the parties to real estate transactions brokered by Real Estate Company or he must relocate his law practice to separate offices. If Attorney A concludes that he can manage the potential conflict of interest, the clients must also consent to the potential conflict after full disclosure of Attorney A's affiliation with Real Estate Company. See Rule 5.1(b).

[Apart from the potential conflict of interest posed by this inquiry, the Ethics Committee has serious concerns about Attorney A's ability to fulfill his duty of confidentiality while he is practicing law within the confines of the offices of the real estate company with which he is affiliated.]

Inquiry #3:

May Attorney A waive his legal fee for services rendered in closing a real estate transaction in exchange for the real estate commission he earned as the agent responsible for the sale of the real property?

Opinion #3:

No. See Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #4:

May Attorney A receive a real estate commission in lieu of a legal fee for closing a real estate transaction if Attorney A shares the commission with other realtors with Real Estate Company or other unrelated real estate companies?

Opinion #4:

No. See Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #5:

May Attorney A perform legal services in connection with real estate closings for clients referred to him by Real Estate Company if Attorney A did not list or sell the property involved in the transaction?

Opinion #5:

Yes. This is the same inquiry as Inquiry #2 above. See Opinion #2 above.

Inquiry #6:

Is Attorney A required to disclose to all clients referred by Real Estate Company that he is a real estate agent for Real Estate Company and paid commissions by Real Estate Company?

Opinion #6:

Yes. See Opinion #2 above.

Inquiry #7:

May Attorney A provide legal services to customers of Real Estate Company if Attorney A fully discloses his relationship to Real Estate Company?

Opinion #7:

Yes, see Opinion #2 above. Attorney A may only provide legal services to customers of Real Estate Company who are referred to him by Real Estate Company, but he may not share his legal fees with Real Estate Company nor may he pay Real Estate Company anything for recommending his services. See Rule 2.3(c), which prohibits a lawyer from giving anything of value to someone for recommending his services, and Rule 3.2, which prohibits the sharing of legal fees with nonlawyers. Moreover, if Attorney A is employed by Real Estate Company as in-house counsel and, as such, is providing legal services to the customers of Real Estate Company, it would be a violation of G.S. §84-5 which forbids corporations to engage in the practice of law.

Inquiry #8:

Is Real Estate Company engaged in the unauthorized practice of law under the foregoing facts?

Opinion #8:

The determination of whether a nonlawyer is engaged in the unauthorized practice of law is outside of the authority of the Ethics Committee.

Inquiry #9:

Is Attorney A assisting Real Estate Company in the unauthorized practice of law under the foregoing facts?

Opinion #9:

If Attorney A is employed by Real Estate Company as in-house counsel and, in this capacity, he is providing legal services to the customers of Real Estate Company, it would be a violation of G.S §84-5, which prohibits a corporation from engaging in the practice of law. Such conduct would constitute aiding the unauthorized practice of law in violation of Rule 3.1(a).

Inquiry #10:

May a lawyer for a title insurance company issue a title insurance policy based upon Attorney A's certification of title if Attorney A is providing legal services to customers of Real Estate Company as an employee or in-house counsel for Real Estate Company?

Opinion #10:

If an attorney for a title insurance company knows that Attorney A is providing legal services to customers of Real Estate Company in violation of G.S. §84-5, which prohibits a corporation from engaging in the practice of law, the attorney for the title insurance company may not aid in this practice. Rule 3.1(a).

Inquiry #11:

May Attorney A practice law from his office in Real Estate Company's office and use the same telephone number as Real Estate Company?

Opinion #11:

Yes, if the office receptionist and the office signage clearly indicate that Attorney A's legal practice is separate and distinct from the real estate business operated by Real Estate Company. Rule 2.1(a) and CPR 266.

Inquiry #12:

May Attorney A or Attorney A's name appear in Real Estate Company's television and print ads, including brochures identifying Attorney A as a lawyer as well as a real estate salesman?

Opinion #12:

Yes, if the advertisements do not include false or misleading communications about Lawyer A or Lawyer A's services in violation of Rule 2.1 and do not imply that legal services will be provided by a corporation in violation of G.S. §84-5. See CPR 307.

Inquiry #13:

May Attorney A include business cards identifying him as a lawyer in sales promotion packets sent by Real Estate Company to customers whether the packets are solicited or unsolicited by the customers?

Opinion #13:

Yes, see Opinion #12 above.

Inquiry #14:

May Attorney A be employed as in-house counsel for Real Estate Company and also close real estate transactions referred to him by Real Estate Company?

Opinion #14:

No. See Opinion #7 above.

RPC 202

July 21, 1995

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 202 (Revised).

Communications with Elected Officials

Opinion rules that an attorney may communicate in writing with the members of an elected body that is represented by a lawyer in a matter if the purpose of the communication is to request that the matter be placed on the public meeting agenda of the elected body and a copy of the written communication is given to the attorney for the elected body.

Inquiry:

Attorney A and Attorney B represented Clients X and Y before the town board of adjustment where they were successful in getting a sign variance. The town's attorney, acting on behalf of the town, filed an appeal in superior court of the variance granted by the board of adjustment. The appeal has been pending since 1991.

Attorneys A and B believe that the town lacks standing to file an appeal against its own board of adjustment. Also, Attorneys A and B believe that the case has become moot by the town's issuance of permit for the sign and the construction of the sign in 1991.

An intervening election changed the composition of the town council. The present council may not want to continue to pursue the appeal, given the expense and the questionable merits of the appeal. Attorney A and Attorney B wrote to the town attorney seeking his permission to petition the town council to drop the appeal. The town attorney refused to permit Attorney A and Attorney B to communicate with the members of the town council. Attorney A and Attorney B believe that their clients, as citizens and taxpayers, should have the right to petition their elected officials through their chosen legal representative. May Attorneys A and B petition the elected members of the town council, on behalf of their clients, without the consent of the town attorney?

Opinion:

Yes, Attorneys A and B may communicate in writing with the members of the town council for the purpose of petitioning to have a matter placed on the agenda for the next public meeting of the town council. A copy of the written communication should be provided to the town attorney.

Rule 7.4(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits communications about the subject of representation with a party the lawyer knows to be represented by another lawyer in the matter unless the other lawyer consents or unless the lawyer is authorized by law to communicate with the party. The First Amendment of the United States Constitution, however, prohibits the enactment of laws that abridge the right of the people "to petition the government for a redress of grievance." The Comment to Rule 7.4 recognizes this constitutional right where it notes that "[c]ommunications authorized by law include...the right of a party to a controversy with a government agency to speak with government officials about the matter."

If the town is represented in a matter by legal counsel, the appropriate forum in which a lawyer should address the elected officials of the town on behalf of a client is a public meeting of the town council. A written request to be heard, including a discussion of the merits of the client's position and why it should be heard by the town council may, therefore, be sent directly to the members of the town council without interference from the legal counsel for the town. The decision as to whether a particular item will be placed on the agenda for a public meeting of the town council must be made, however, by the elected officials, presumably with the advice of their attorney.

This opinion does not restrict a client's right to communicate directly with his or her elected representatives without the consent of the lawyer for the town.

RPC 203

April 14, 1995

Editor's Note: See Rule 3.3(a)(4) for additional guidance.

Client Perjury

Opinion rules that dismissal of an action alone is not sufficient to rectify the perjury of a client in a deposition and the lawyer must demand that the client inform the opposing party of the falsity of the deposition testimony or, if the client refuses, withdraw from the representation.

Inquiry:

Lawyer A represents Client H in a domestic dispute with his wife, W. Client H told Lawyer A that there was physical violence and verbal abuse in the marriage because of the actions of W and that any acts on his part were provoked. Client H wanted to move out of his house because of the abuse, and Lawyer A advised him concerning the requirements for filing a complaint for divorce from bed and board. Lawyer A recommended that a complaint alleging indignities, constructive abandonment, and cruel and unusual treatment by W should be filed shortly after separation. Lawyer A questioned Client H as to whether he had committed adultery during the marriage and advised Client H that a complaint for divorce from bed and board must contain an affirmative allegation that the actions alleged to have been perpetrated by W occurred without just cause or provocation. Client H informed Lawyer A that he had not committed adultery and that none of his acts were unprovoked.

Lawyer A filed a complaint for Client H seeking a divorce from bed and board against W based upon constructive abandonment and alleged indignities and cruel and unusual acts by W toward Client H. The complaint was verified by Client H and contained an affirmative allegation that he had been a dutiful and faithful husband.

W filed an answer denying the allegations in the complaint and seeking temporary and permanent alimony from Client H based upon allegations of physical abuse, other indignities, and failure to provide requisite support. There was no allegation in the answer that Client H had engaged in adulterous conduct.

The depositions of Client H and W were taken. At his deposition, Client H was asked whether he committed adultery during the marriage. Lawyer A objected to the question but did not instruct his client not to answer. Client answered by denying that he had committed adultery during the marriage. In conference with Lawyer A after the deposition, Client H advised Lawyer A that he had lied in his deposition and in the complaint and that he had, in fact, engaged in adultery during the marriage.

Lawyer A advised Client H that the action for divorce from bed and board must be dismissed because Client H did not have grounds for such an action. Client H consented and the action for divorce from bed and board was voluntarily dismissed without prejudice. There are no affirmative allegations currently pending seeking temporary or permanent alimony based upon the adultery of Client H. Must Lawyer A take any further action with regard to the false allegation in the verified complaint and the false testimony of Client H in his deposition?

Opinion:

Yes. Rule 7.2(b)(1) requires a lawyer who receives information clearly establishing that a client has perpetrated a fraud upon a person or upon a tribunal to call upon the client to rectify the fraud, and, if the client refuses or is unable to do so, the lawyer must discontinue his representation of the client in the matter. The dismissal of the divorce from bed and board action by Client H is not sufficient to rectify the fraud upon W because, in future proceedings, W and her attorney may rely upon his false testimony. Lawyer A must insist that his client rectify the fraud by allowing Lawyer A to advise W's lawyer of Client H's untruthful response in the deposition and the untruthful allegation in the verified complaint. If Client H refuses to rectify the fraud, Lawyer A must withdraw from his representation.

RPC 204

July 21, 1995

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 204 (Revised).

Prosecutor's Offer of Special Treatment to Defendants Who Make Charitable Contributions

Opinion rules that it is prejudicial to the administration of justice for a prosecutor to offer special treatment to individuals charged with traffic offenses or minor crimes in exchange for a direct charitable contribution to the local school system.

Inquiry:

District Attorney X would like to offer more favorable plea bargains to persons charged with traffic violations and minor criminal offenses upon condition that the individual charged make a direct charitable contribution to the local school board. In exchange for such contributions, the District Attorney would also like to offer to agree to the granting of continuances and PJC's (prayers for judgment continued) in traffic citation and minor criminal cases. The charitable contributions would not be court fines and would not be channeled through the court system. The District Attorney contends that by making a direct contribution to the school system, defendants are paying more money than they would be required to pay if they were fined by the court and the school system receives more money than it would receive from court fines alone. Would this practice be ethical?

Opinion:

No. The offer of special treatment from a prosecutor to individuals charged with traffic violations or minor criminal offenses in exchange for direct donations to even the most worthy charity implies that justice can be purchased. Such conduct is clearly prejudicial to the administration of justice in violation of Rule 1.2(d) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. See also Rule 7.2(a)(9). This practice would also be contrary to a prosecutor's special responsibility "to seek justice, not merely to convict." Comment to Rule 7.3.

This opinion does not limit or prohibit the exercise of the authority granted to a prosecutor to recommend a particular plea arrangement which includes restitution or reparation pursuant to G.S. §15A-1021.

RPC 205

April 14, 1995

Referral Fees

Opinion rules that a lawyer may receive a fee for referring a case to another lawyer provided that, by written agreement with the client, both lawyers assume responsibility for the representation and the total fee is reasonable.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A would like to refer cases to Attorney B in exchange for a referral fee in the amount of ten percent of the fee earned by Attorney B on each case referred. May Attorney A charge and receive a fee from Attorney B for referring cases?

Opinion #1:

Yes, provided that Attorney A complies with the requirements of Rule 2.6(d) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. As the comment to that rule notes, "[a] division of a fee facilitates association of more than one lawyer in a matter in which neither alone could serve the client as well." Rule 2.6(d)(1) allows lawyers who are not in the same firm to divide a fee in one of two ways: (a) in proportion to the services performed by each lawyer, or (b) if the fee division is not in proportion to the services performed by each lawyer, by a written agreement with the client whereby each lawyer assumes joint responsibility for the representation. A referral fee would typically fall within the latter category. Thus, whenever a lawyer accepts a fee for referring a case to another lawyer, the lawyer remains responsible for the competent and ethical handling of the matter. Regardless of whether the fee is in proportion to the services rendered, the client must be advised of and not object to the participation of all lawyers involved and the total fee paid by the client must be reasonable. Rule 2.6(d)(2) and (3).

Inquiry #2:

May a referral fee be based upon a percentage of the fee charged to the client by the lawyer to whom the case is referred?

Opinion #2:

Yes, provided the requirements of Rule 2.6(d) are satisfied.

Inquiry #3:

If a referral fee may be based upon a percentage of the fee charged to the client by the lawyer accepting a referral, is there a maximum percentage for such a referral fee?

Opinion #3:

No. See Opinion #2 above.

Inquiry #4:

May a flat fee be charged for the referral of a case to another lawyer?

Opinion #4:

Yes, provided the total fee is reasonable, the client does not object, and, by written agreement with the client, each lawyer assumes joint responsibility for the representation. Rule 2.6(d).

Inquiry #5:

If a flat fee for a referral is permissible, is there a limit on the amount of the flat fee that may be charged for the referral?

Opinion #5:

No. See Opinion #4 above.

Inquiry #6:

Does the client have to be informed that a referral fee is being paid to the referring lawyer?

Opinion #6:

Yes. Rule 2.6(d)(1) and (2).

Inquiry #7:

Must the client be told and consent to the amount of the referral fee paid to the referring lawyer?

Opinion #7:

No. As noted in the comment to Rule 2.6, "[p]aragraph (d) does not require disclosure to the client of the share that each lawyer is to receive."

RPC 206

April 14, 1995

Editor's Note: See 2002 FEO 7 for additional guidance.

Disclosure of Confidential Information of a Deceased Client

Opinion rules that a lawyer may disclose the confidential information of a deceased client to the personal representative of the client's estate but not to the heirs of the estate.

Inquiry:

Decedent dies with a will that was written four months before his death and which does not provide for his brothers or sisters. The will was filed with the clerk of court in order that it might be probated. Attorney A is still in possession of earlier wills of Decedent. The brothers and sisters have asked Attorney A for copies of these earlier wills. What is Attorney A's ethical obligation in responding to this request?

Opinion:

Attorney A may only disclose confidential information of Decedent to the personal representative of Decedent's estate.

The duty of confidentiality continues after the death of a client. CPR 268 and Comment to Rule 4 of the Rules of Professional Conduct. A lawyer may only reveal confidential information of a deceased client if disclosure is permitted by the exceptions to the duty of confidentiality set forth in Rule 4(c). Specifically, a lawyer may reveal confidential information of a deceased client if the disclosure was impliedly authorized by the client during the client's lifetime as necessary to carry out the goals of the representation. Rule 4(c)(1). It is assumed that a client impliedly authorizes the release of confidential information to the person designated as the personal representative of his estate after his death in order that the estate might be properly and thoroughly administered. Unless the disclosure of confidential information to the personal representative, or a third party at the personal representative's instruction, would be clearly contrary to the goals of the original representation or would be contrary to express instructions given by the client to his lawyer prior to the client's death, the lawyer may reveal a client's confidential information to the personal representative of the client's estate and he may also reveal the deceased client's confidential information to third parties at the direction of the personal representative. To the extent that CPR 268 implies that a lawyer may reveal confidential information of a deceased client to the heirs of a decedent, in addition to the personal representative, CPR 268 is hereby specifically overruled.

RPC 207

October 20, 1995

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 207 (Second Revision).

Simultaneous Representation of Claimant and Insured Against Insurer in Bad Faith Action

Opinion rules that a lawyer may represent an insured in a bad faith action against his insurer for failure to pay a liability claim brought by a claimant who is represented by the same lawyer.

Inquiry #1:

Pedestrian Y was killed when he was struck by a vehicle operated by X. Administratrix, the personal representative of the estate of Y, retained Attorney A to represent the estate in a wrongful death action against X. Attorney A made a settlement demand on X's automobile liability insurance carrier, Insurer, for the limits of X's policy. Insurer declined to pay the limits. Attorney A filed suit against X for the wrongful death of Y. Insurer later offered to settle the claim against X for the policy limits. Administratrix refused this offer and the case was tried. The jury verdict against X was well in excess of X's liability insurance coverage limits.

Attorney A is now representing the Estate of Y and X in a bad faith action against Insurer. X has signed an assignment of all of his rights and privileges against Insurer to the Estate of Y. The assignment states that X acknowledges that he is liable to the estate as a judgment debtor and that all actions taken by X in the bad faith action must be done in accordance with the directions of Administratrix. May Attorney A represent X in the bad faith action against Insurer?

Opinion #1:

Yes, with the consent of both Administratrix and X after full disclosure.

Rule 5.1(b) permits a lawyer to represent a client even though the representation of the client might be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client if (1) the lawyer reasonably believes the representation will not be adversely affected, and (2) the client consents after full disclosure which includes an explanation of the implications of the common representation and the advantages and risks involved.

In the present situation, the interest of X and the Estate of Y appear to be allied with regard to the pursuit of the bad faith action against Insurer. Attorney A could reasonably conclude that the joint representation of the two clients will not adversely affect the representation of either client individually. Full disclosure to both clients, in order to obtain the consent to the joint representation, should include the disclosure by Attorney A of the fact that if X and Administratrix are in conflict with regard to a particular matter relating to the representation, Attorney A may not advocate for one client as against the other despite the agreement between X and Administratrix. In the event of such a dispute or conflict between the interests of the two clients, Attorney A must withdraw from the representation of both unless one of the clients consents to his continued representation of the other client.

No opinion is expressed as to the validity or enforceability of an assignment of a bad faith claim against an insurance carrier.

Inquiry #2:

Attorney B represents Insurer in the bad faith action. Attorney B believes that a factual dispute concerning the negotiations in the underlying wrongful death action exists and intends to take Attorney A's deposition and possibly call Attorney A as a witness at trial. May Attorney A continue to represent X in the bad faith action?

Opinion #2:

Yes. Rule 5.2(c) provides that if, after undertaking employment in contemplated or pending litigation, a lawyer learns that he may be called as a witness by the opposing party, he may continue the representation until it is apparent that his testimony is or may be prejudicial to his client.

Inquiry #3:

May Attorney B depose Attorney A while Attorney A remains attorney of record for X?

Opinion #3:

Yes. See Opinion #2 above. No opinion is expressed as to the propriety of such a deposition. Moreover, it may be appropriate for Attorney A to refuse to answer deposition questions on the grounds of client confidentiality.

Inquiry #4:

May Attorney A continue to represent X and also be called as a witness by Attorney B in the trial?

Opinion #4:

Yes. See Opinion #2 above.

RPC 208

July 21, 1995,

Avoiding Offensive Trial Tactics

Opinion rules that a lawyer should avoid offensive trial tactics and treat others with courtesy by attempting to ascertain the reason for the opposing party's failure to respond to a notice of hearing where there has been no prior lack of diligence or responsiveness on the part of opposing counsel.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A, who represents the defendant in a civil matter, did not receive the notice of hearing from opposing counsel, Attorney X, because Attorney A's address had changed. At the civil district court calendar call for the first day of the session, when hearing dates are set, Attorney A did not appear nor did his client. Attorney X asked the court to set the matter for trial at the earliest possible date. The case was set for trial two days later. Neither the judge nor Attorney X inquired as to whether Attorney A had received the notice of hearing nor did they attempt to ascertain whether Attorney A was prevented from appearing at the calendar call by an emergency or otherwise. Attorney L, who was at the calendar call on an unrelated matter and who is not associated with either Attorney A or Attorney X, subsequently advised Attorney A of the trial date. Under these circumstances, before asking the court to set the case for trial, must Attorney X verify that the notice of hearing was actually received and that there was no emergency or other problem preventing the appearance of Attorney A or his client at the calendar call?

Opinion #1:

No, Attorney X is not required to verify that the notice of hearing was actually received by the opposing lawyer. However, Rule 7.1(a)(1) of the Rules of Professional Conduct provides that a lawyer does not violate the duty to zealously represent a client

> ...by acceding to reasonable requests by opposing counsel which do not prejudice the rights of his client, by being punctual in fulfilling all professional commitments, by avoiding offensive tactics, or by treating with courtesy and consideration all persons involved in the legal process.

Avoiding offensive tactics and treating others with courtesy includes not taking advantage of the opposing party or the opposing counsel's failure to respond to a notice of hearing when there has been no prior lack of diligence or responsiveness on the part of the opposing counsel. Under these circumstances, as a matter of professionalism, Attorney X should make a reasonable effort to ascertain Attorney A's whereabouts or the reason for his absence before asking the judge to schedule the hearing at the earliest possible date.

Inquiry #2:

Does the court have a duty to verify that Attorney A has received notice of the hearing?

Opinion #2:

Judges are subject to the Code of Judicial Conduct and the regulation of the Judicial Standards Commission. Therefore, no opinion is expressed to the ethical duty of a judge in this situation.

Inquiry #3:

Do the other lawyers at the calendar call have a responsibility to verify that Attorney A has received notice of the hearing or that there was no emergency or other problem preventing Attorney A's appearance at the hearing?

Opinion #3:

No. However, as a matter of professionalism, lawyers are encouraged to treat other practitioners with courtesy and to assist other practitioners in meeting the duty of competent representation.

RPC 209

January 12, 1996

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 209 (Revised).

Disposing of Closed Client Files

Opinion provides guidelines for the disposal of closed client files.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A has been in practice for 20 years. Whenever he completes a matter for a client, he closes the client's file and retains it in his office. Attorney A has run out of space to store files in his office. The expense of renting storage space to store files is prohibitive. May Attorney A dispose of the closed client files?

Opinion #1:

Yes, subject to certain requirements.

The original file belongs to the client and, because of the general fiduciary duty to safeguard the property of a client, a lawyer should store a client's file in a secure location where client confidentiality can be maintained. See Rule 4 and Rule 10.1 of the Rules of Professional Conduct, and RPC 79.

With the consent of the client, a closed file may be destroyed at any time. Absent the client's consent to disposal of a file, a closed file must be retained for a minimum of six years after the conclusion of the representation. Six years is the required minimum period for retaining a closed client file because this retention period is consistent with retention period for records of client property set forth in Rule 10.2(b). Of course, the statute of limitations may require the retention of a closed file for more than six years.

If six years have not passed since a client's file became inactive, the file may only be destroyed with the consent of the client or, after notice to the client, the client fails to retrieve the file. The client should be contacted and advised that the lawyer intends to destroy the file unless the client retrieves the file or, within a reasonable period of time, directs that the file be transferred to another lawyer. See RPC 16. If the client indicates that he or she does not wish to retrieve the file, the lawyer may dispose of the file. On the other hand, if the client indicates that he or she would like to retrieve the file, the client must be given a reasonable opportunity to do so. If the client fails to retrieve the file within a reasonable period of time, the file may be destroyed. RPC 16. If the client fails to retrieve the file after notice, the lawyer should review the file and retain any items in the file that belong to the client or contain information useful in the assertion or defense of the client's position in a matter for which the statute of limitations has not expired. See RPC 16. These items should be retained until the client consents to their destruction or retention is no longer required by law or necessary to protect the client's rights.

After the passage of six years, the lawyer is not required to notify the client that the file will be destroyed. However, if not previously reviewed and purged of the client's possessions, the lawyer should review the file and retain any items that belong to the client. These items should be returned to the client or retained in a secure place until retrieved by the client or until the items are deemed abandoned and escheat to the state under Chap. 116B of the North Carolina General Statutes. The remaining records in the file may be destroyed.

A record should be maintained of all destroyed client files. RPC 16.

Inquiry #2:

Do closed client files have to be destroyed or disposed of in a particular manner?

Opinion #2:

No particular method of destroying files is prescribed by the Rules of Professional Conduct. However, if closed files are destroyed, the method chosen must preserve client confidentiality. See Rule 4. RPC 133 ruled that a law firm may recycle its waste paper if the responsible attorney can "ascertain that those persons or entities responsible for the disposal of waste paper employ procedures which effectively minimize the risk that confidential information might be disclosed." When client files are destroyed, similar precautions should be taken.

Inquiry #3:

Attorney A has in storage not only the files of his own clients but also the client files of lawyers who were formerly his law partners. What should Attorney A do with these client files?

Opinion #3:

Although the files belong to clients of lawyers other than Attorney A, because Attorney A has retained possession of these files, he has a fiduciary obligation to see that the files are properly handled. A former client is most likely to look for the attorney who previously handled his or her matter when trying to locate a legal file. Therefore, Attorney A may return these files to the original lawyers. Alternatively, Attorney A may dispose of the files in a manner that is consistent with the guidelines set forth in this opinion.

RPC 210

April 4, 1997

Editor's Note: RPC 210 and RPC 211, companion opinions on representation in residential real estate closings, were adopted by the council of the State Bar on January 12, 1996. On April 12, 1996, the council withdrew the opinions following substantial negative comment from real estate practitioners who indicated that the opinions might eliminate the economic efficiencies inherent in one-lawyer residential real estate closings. A substitute opinion for RPC 210 was proposed and subsequently adopted on April 4, 1997.

Representation of Multiple Parties to the Closing of a Residential Real Estate Transaction

Opinion examines the circumstances in which it is acceptable for a lawyer to represent the buyer, the seller, and the lender in the closing of a residential real estate transaction.

Introduction:

This opinion clarifies the conditions under which a closing lawyer may engage in common representation of the multiple parties to the closing of a residential real estate transaction. To the extent that a prior ethics opinion is inconsistent with this opinion, the prior opinion is withdrawn.

Inquiry #1:

In the usual residential real estate transaction, the contract to purchase is entered into by the buyer and seller prior to the engagement of a lawyer to close the transaction. May the closing lawyer represent both the buyer and the seller to close the transaction?

Opinion #1:

Rule 5.1(a) prohibits the representation of a client if the representation is directly adverse to the representation of another client unless there will be no adverse effect on the interests of both clients and the clients consent. At first blush, it may appear that the interests of the buyer and the seller of residential real estate are adverse. Nevertheless, after the terms of the sale are resolved, the buyer and the seller of residential real estate have a common objective: the transfer of the ownership of the property in conformity with the terms of the contract or agreement. In paragraph [10] of the comment to Rule 5.1, "Conflicts of Interest," it is observed that "a lawyer may not represent multiple parties to a negotiation whose interests are fundamentally antagonistic to each other, but common representation is permissible where the clients are generally aligned in interests even though there is some difference of interests among them." If the interests of the buyer and seller of residential property are generally aligned and the lawyer determines that he or she can manage the potential conflict of interest between the parties, a lawyer may represent both the buyer and the seller in closing a residential real estate transaction with the consent of the parties. Rule 5.1(a).

A lawyer may reasonably believe that the common representation of multiple parties to a residential real estate closing will not be adverse to the interests of any one client if the parties have already agreed to the basic terms of the transaction and the lawyer's role is limited to rendering an opinion on title, memorializing the transaction, and disbursing the proceeds. Before reaching this conclusion, however, the lawyer must determine whether there is any obstacle to the loyal representation of both parties. The lawyer should proceed with the common representation only if the lawyer is able to reach the following conclusions: he or she will be able to act impartially; there is little likelihood that an actual conflict will arise out of the common representation; and, should a conflict arise, the potential prejudice to the parties will be minimal. See, e.g., ABA Model Rule of Professional Conduct 2.2, "Intermediary."

If the closing lawyer reasonably believes that the common representation can be managed in the best interests of both the buyer and the seller, he must obtain the consent of each of the parties after full disclosure of the risks of common representation. Rule 5.1(a). Full disclosure should include an explanation of the scope of the lawyer's representation. The lawyer should advise each party of the right to separate counsel. The disclosure should also include an explanation that if a conflict develops, the lawyer must withdraw from the representation of all parties and may not continue to represent any of the clients in the transaction. Rule 2.8(b). Although it is a better practice to put such disclosures in writing, the Rules of Professional Conduct do not require written disclosures.

If common representation is appropriate, the representation of the seller may include preparing the deed, collecting the purchase price, and drafting the documents necessary to complete the transaction in accordance with the agreement between the buyer and the seller. The lawyer may charge the seller for this representation. CPR 100.

Inquiry #2:

The buyer and the lender usually agree to the basic terms of the mortgage loan (amount, security, interest rate, installment, and maturity) prior to the engagement of the closing lawyer. In this situation, may the closing lawyer represent both the lender and the buyer?

Opinion #2:

Yes, if the interests of the buyer and lender are generally aligned and the lawyer determines that the potential conflict of interest can be managed. Rule 5.1(a). As stated above, before concluding that the common representation will not be adverse to the interests of any one client, the lawyer must determine three things: he or she will be able to act impartially; there is little likelihood that an actual conflict will arise out of the common representation; and, should a conflict arise, the potential prejudice to the parties will be minimal.

Although full disclosure to the lender of the risks of common representation is recommended, if the lawyer reasonably believes that the lender understands the closing lawyer's role because the lender is a knowledgeable and experienced participant in residential real estate transactions, the lawyer does not have to make a full disclosure to the lender regarding the common representation as required in Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #3:

If the closing lawyer does not intend to represent all of the parties to the transaction, does the lawyer have any responsibility to the party or parties he or she does not intend to represent?

Opinion #3:

Yes. By custom, the lender and the buyer are usually represented by the same lawyer. Therefore, if the lawyer does not intend to represent both the buyer and the lender, the lawyer must give timely notice to the party that the lawyer does not intend to represent, so that this party may secure separate representation. CPR 100. If the lawyer does not give such notice, the lawyer will be deemed to represent both the buyer and the lender. CPR 100. If the lawyer represents only the buyer, the lawyer may nevertheless ethically provide title and lien priority assurances required by the lender as a condition of the loan. CPR 100. If the party that the lawyer is not representing obtains separate counsel, both lawyers should fully cooperate with each other in serving the interests of their respective clients and in closing the transaction promptly.

It is not generally assumed that the buyer's lawyer will represent the seller. Therefore, if the closing lawyer does not intend to prepare the deed or perform other legal services for the seller, the lawyer does not have to give notice to the seller. But see Cornelius v. Helms, 120 N.C. App. 172,461 S.E.2d 338 (1995), disc. rev. denied, 342 N.C. 653,467 S.E.2d 709 (1996), for related negligence issues.

Inquiry #4:

May a lawyer who is representing the buyer, the lender, and the seller (or any one or more of them) provide the title insurer with an opinion on title sufficient to issue a mortgagee title insurance policy, the premium for which is normally paid by the buyer?

Opinion #4:

Yes. CPR 100.

Inquiry #5:

If a lawyer is representing more than one party to a residential real estate closing, what should the lawyer do if a conflict develops between the clients before, during, or after the closing?

Opinion#5:

If a conflict or controversy relating to the transaction arises between any of the parties being represented by the closing lawyer, the lawyer must withdraw from the representation of all of the clients and is ethically barred from representing any of the clients in the transaction or any dispute arising out of the transaction. Rule 5.1(a).

RPC 211—Withdrawn

January 12, 1996

Withdrawn April 12, 1996

Editor's Note: RPC 211 was adopted on January 12, 1996, and withdrawn on April 12, 1996, by the State Bar Council. A substitute opinion was proposed and subsequently adopted on January 16, 1998, as 97 Formal Ethics Opinion 8.

RPC 212

July 21, 1995

Notifying Opposing Counsel Prior to Seeking Default

Opinion rules that a lawyer may contact an opposing lawyer who failed to file an answer on time in order to remind the other lawyer of the error and to give the other lawyer a last opportunity to file the pleading.

Inquiry:

Attorney A represents the plaintiff in a civil action. Attorney A believes that the defendant is represented by Attorney X who she knows to be prompt, courteous, and professional. Thirty days have expired since the complaint in the action was filed and no answer has been filed for the defendant. May Attorney A call Attorney X to remind him to file the answer or must Attorney A proceed with obtaining an entry of default against the defendant?

Opinion:

A lawyer may contact an opposing lawyer who failed to file a pleading on time in order to remind the other lawyer of his error and to give the other lawyer a last opportunity to file the pleading. Such conduct is not unethical but rather illustrates the level of professional courtesy and consideration that should be encouraged among the members of the bar. Rule 7.1(a)(1) of the Rules of Professional Conduct provides that a lawyer does not violate the duty to represent a client zealously "by avoiding offensive tactics or by treating with courtesy and consideration all persons involved in the legal process." Furthermore, Rule 7.1(b)(1) authorizes a lawyer "where permissible, [to] exercise his or her professional judgment to waive or assert a right or position of the client." It is also observed in the Comment to Rule 7.1 that "...a lawyer is not required to pursue objectives or employ means simply because a client may wish that the lawyer do so...." Thus, the rule does not require the client's consent prior to notifying the opposing lawyer.

In many situations, professional courtesy urges notification to the other lawyer of the failure to file a pleading. However, a lawyer is not ethically required to do so. In some situations, for example where opposing counsel is known to procrastinate or delay or the interests of the client will be materially prejudiced by notifying opposing counsel, a lawyer may determine that the appropriate tactic is to proceed with obtaining an entry of default or other appropriate remedy.

RPC 213

October 20, 1995

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 213 (Revised).

Lawyer's Employee as Witness

Opinion rules that a lawyer may represent a defendant in an action to abate the nuisance of a fence even though his para-legal may be called as a witness.

Inquiry:

May a lawyer who is representing a defendant in an action to abate the nuisance of a fence have his real estate paralegal sign an affidavit, prepare exhibits, and testify in opposition to the plaintiff's motion for preliminary injunction?

Opinion:

Yes. RPC 19 holds that a lawyer may represent a client even though an employee may be called as a witness on behalf of a client.

RPC 214

July 21, 1995

Sending Questionnaire to Prospective Members of Jury

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not send a jury questionnaire directly to prospective members of the jury but, if the questionnaire is sent out by the court, such communications are not prohibited.

Inquiry:

Attorney A, who is the plaintiff's counsel in a personal injury case, would like to submit a jury questionnaire, prior to trial, to the people who are on the potential jury list. The questions on the questionnaire are neutral. Receiving answers to the questionnaire would save a significant amount of time in jury selection because both defense counsel and plaintiff's counsel could limit jury voir dire to questions about areas of concern disclosed by the questionnaire and matters involving particular facts of the case. The counsel for the defendant has reviewed the questionnaire and does not object to the questionnaire being sent to prospective members of the jury. Does Rule 7.8(a) prohibit Attorney A from submitting the written questionnaire to prospective members of the jury?

Opinion:

Rule 7.8(a) contains a blanket prohibition on communications by a lawyer connected with the trial of a case with "anyone he knows to be a member of the venire from which the jury will be selected for the trial of the case." As noted in the Comment to the rule, "venire men and jurors should be protected against extraneous influences" in order to "safeguard the impartiality that is essential to the judicial process." It would appear that Rule 7.8(a) prohibits Attorney A from sending the questionnaire himself to prospective members of the jury even if it is done in a way that avoids identifying who is sending the questionnaire. However, the ban of Rule 7.8(a) does not apply to communications with prospective members of the jury by the court since the prohibition is only directed towards extrajudicial communications. Therefore, if the court approves of the questionnaire and agrees that the questionnaire will be sent out under the court's direction and letterhead, it would not be a violation of Rule 7.8(a) even if the lawyer pays for the cost of distribution.

RPC 215

July 21, 1995

Modern Communications Technology and the Duty of Confidentiality

Opinion rules that when using a cellular or cordless telephone or any other unsecure method of communication, a lawyer must take steps to minimize the risk that confidential information may be disclosed.

Inquiry #1:

Communications by means of cellular and cordless telephones are broadcast over the public airwaves rather than telephone lines. For this reason, a conversation over a cordless or cellular phone may be easily intercepted.

A cordless telephone uses AM or FM radio signals to transmit a communication from the handset to the base unit. This signal can be easily intercepted by a standard AM radio.[1] Cordless telephones are, therefore, particularly susceptible to both intentional and unintentional interception. Although less susceptible to unintentional interception, a communication by a cellular telephone can be intentionally intercepted by means of a sophisticated scanner specifically designed for the purpose or by a regular radio scanner, which is available at most electronics stores, that has been modified.[2]

What is a lawyer's ethical responsibility when using a cellular or cordless telephone to communicate client information that is intended to be confidential?

Opinion #1:

A lawyer has a professional obligation, pursuant to Rule 4 of the Rules of Professional Conduct, to protect and preserve the confidences of a client. This professional obligation extends to the use of communications technology. However, this obligation does not require that a lawyer use only infallibly secure methods of communication. Lawyers are not required to use paper shredders to dispose of waste paper so long as the responsible lawyer ascertains that procedures are in place which "effectively minimize the risks that confidential information might be disclosed." RPC 133. Similarly, a lawyer must take steps to minimize the risks that confidential information may be disclosed in a communication via a cellular or cordless telephone. First, the lawyer must use reasonable care to select a mode of communication that, in light of the exigencies of the existing circumstances, will best maintain any confidential information that might be conveyed in the communication. Second, if the lawyer knows or has reason to believe that the communication is over a telecommunication device that is susceptible to interception, the lawyer must advise the other parties to the communication of the risks of interception and the potential for confidentiality to be lost.

Inquiry #2:

What is a lawyer's ethical obligation when using electronic mail to communicate confidential client information?

Opinion #2:

Although electronic mail or "e-mail," is not conveyed over the public airwaves like communications by cordless or cellular telephones, many of the same concerns for client confidences apply to communications by e-mail. E-mail is susceptible to interception by anyone who has access to the computer network to which a lawyer "logs-on" and such communications are rarely protected from interception by anything more than a simple password. In using e-mail, or any other technological means of communication that is not secure, the same precautions must be taken to protect client confidentiality as are set forth in Opinion #1 above.

Endnotes

1. Colorado State Bar Ethics Opinion 92-90.

2. Id.

RPC 216

July 18, 1997

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 216 (Third Revision).

Using the Services of an Independent Title Abstractor

Opinion rules that a lawyer may use the services of a nonlawyer independent contractor to search a title provided the nonlawyer is properly supervised by the lawyer.

Inquiry #1:

Paralegal is not a lawyer. She proposes to perform real estate title searches for lawyers working as an independent contractor. May Attorney A, who is a real estate lawyer, engage Paralegal as an independent contractor to perform title searches for real estate closings?

Opinion #1:

Yes, subject to certain limitations. A lawyer may use nonlawyers to assist him or her in the rendition of the lawyer's professional services. Comment to Rule 3.3 of the Rules of Professional Conduct. There is no requirement in the Rules of Professional Conduct that such nonlawyer assistants must be employees of the lawyer's firm. However, the lawyer must be able to meet his or her ethical responsibilities with regard to the supervision of a nonlawyer assistant regardless of whether the nonlawyer assistant is employed within the firm or as an independent contractor. The lawyer is responsible for the competent representation of clients, and therefore, the lawyer is also responsible for the work product of nonlawyer assistants. Rule 6(a)(1).

Before hiring or contracting with a nonlawyer assistant to perform title searches, Attorney A should take reasonable steps to ascertain that the nonlawyer is competent. Attorney A must also give the nonlawyer appropriate instruction and supervision. Comment to Rule 3.3 and RPC 29.

Inquiry #2:

Attorney Green has limited experience searching titles to real property and has limited knowledge of real property law. He would, however, like to expand his legal services to include the preparation of title opinions and real estate closings. He plans to expand into this area of practice by contracting with Paralegal to perform title searches and then relying upon her research to prepare an opinion on title. Is Attorney Green's proposal ethical?

Opinion #2:

No. It is impossible for a lawyer to supervise adequately the work of a nonlawyer, pursuant to the requirements of Rule 3.3, if the lawyer is not himself or herself competent in the area of practice. Moreover, it is incompetent representation of a client, in violation of Rule 6, for a lawyer to adopt as his or her own an opinion on title prepared by a nonlawyer or to render a legal opinion on title if the lawyer's opinion is not based upon knowledge of the relevant records and documentation and the lawyer's own independent professional judgment, knowledge, and competence in real property law. See RPC 29.

Inquiry #3:

If Attorney A uses the services of a nonlawyer to search a title, either as an employee of his firm or as an independent contractor, must Attorney A disclose this to the client?

Opinion #3:

Yes, if the client inquires, Attorney A should advise the client that he uses the services of a nonlawyer title searcher.

Inquiry #4:

Does Attorney A have a duty to tell the client the name of the nonlawyer title searcher?

Opinion #4:

No, unless the client requests this information.

Inquiry #5:

Should Attorney A explain to the client how the services provided by Paralegal will be charged to the client?

Opinion #5:

No, unless the client requests this information.

Inquiry #6:

If Attorney A hires Paralegal to perform title searches as an independent contractor, is Attorney A required to check for conflicts of interest?

Opinion #6:

Yes, a lawyer is always required to check for conflicts of interest. See Rule 3.3(b) and Rule 5.1.

Inquiry #7:

May Attorney A disclose to Paralegal the nature of the title search to be performed and the name of the client? Is client consent necessary prior to this disclosure?

Opinion #7:

If Attorney A has determined that Paralegal understands and will comply with Attorney A's duty to safeguard the confidences of his clients, he may disclose confidential information to Paralegal without the prior consent of the client. See Rule 4(c)(1).

RPC 217

October 20, 1995

Advertising a Local Telephone Number in a Community Where a Law Firm Has No Office

Opinion rules that a local or remote call forwarding telephone number may not be included in an advertisement for legal services disseminated in a community where the law firm has neither an office nor a lawyer present in the community unless an explanation is included in the advertisement.

Inquiry:

ABC Law Firm has a central office in Spartanburg, South Carolina, but has a Charlotte regional office where there is a full-time secretary and a North Carolina attorney assigned to do case work. ABC Law Firm also has offices in Asheville, Hendersonville, and Hickory which are manned daily by a North Carolina attorney. ABC Law Firm regularly has North Carolina attorneys try cases and attend hearings throughout North Carolina. Some of the attorneys with ABC Law Firm are only licensed in South Carolina, some of the attorneys are only licensed in North Carolina, and some of the attorneys with the firm are licensed in both jurisdictions.

ABC Law Firm would like to publish an advertisement in the phone directories for three North Carolina communities that are within commuting distance of ABC Law Firm's four North Carolina satellite offices. However, ABC Law Firm has no office nor is there an ABC attorney located in any of these communities. The advertisement will include the telephone numbers for each of the four North Carolina satellite offices as well as a toll free number for the firm. The advertisement will also list remote call forwarding telephone numbers under the names of the towns in which it has neither an office nor an attorney. A remote call forwarding telephone number appears to be a local telephone number because no area code must be dialed from the local community; if the phone number is called in the local community, the call is forwarded to a remote location.

The advertisement will also state that the firm has law offices in four North Carolina locations and three South Carolina locations and that both North Carolina and South Carolina attorneys are available through the firm. The names of individual attorneys in the firm will not be included in the advertisement, and there would also be no listing of jurisdictions in which the individual attorneys are licensed to practice. ABC Law Firm intends to only assign North Carolina licensed attorneys to North Carolina cases. Does the advertisement comply with the North Carolina Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion:

No. Rule 2.1 of the Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits false and misleading communications about a lawyer or the lawyer's services. Rule 2.1(a) describes a misleading communication as a communication that "contains a material misrepresentation of fact or law, or omits a fact necessary to make the statement considered as a whole not materially misleading." It is misleading communication for a law firm to infer that it has an office or a lawyer located in a community when, in fact, there is no law office or lawyer for the firm present in the community. Listing what appears to be a local telephone number in an advertisement circulated in such a community, without including an explanation in the advertisement that the number is not a local telephone number and that there is no law office in that community, will mislead readers as to the actual location of the offices of ABC Law Firm.

It is not a violation of Rule 2.1 for ABC Law Firm to advertise in North Carolina communities even though some ABC lawyers are not licensed in North Carolina provided ABC Law Firm is registered with the North Carolina State Bar as an interstate law firm, the advertisement notes that the firm has locations in both North Carolina and South Carolina, and only North Carolina licensed lawyers handle North Carolina cases.

RPC 218

January 11, 1996

Withdrawn October 24, 1997

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 218 (Revised) and adopted on January 11, 1996. Following the amendment of G.S. §84-5, permitting in-house legal counsel to represent an employee of a corporation in an action against the corporation and the employee, the State Bar Council withdrew RPC 218 which prohibited such representation pursuant to the requirements of the statute prior to amendment. No substitute opinion was adopted.

RPC 219

October 20, 1995

Communication with Adverse Party to Request Public Records

Opinion rules that a lawyer may communicate with a custodian of public records, pursuant to the North Carolina Public Records Act, for the purpose of making a request to examine public records related to the representation although the custodian is an adverse party whose lawyer does not consent to the communication.

Inquiry:

E, a former employee of R County, brought suit against R County and the county manager, the county personnel officer, and the county building inspector in both their personal and official capacities. The defendants are represented by Attorney A, the county attorney, and by outside legal counsel, Attorney L. E is represented by Attorney X. The county manager is the custodian of the public records of R County pursuant to the North Carolina Public Records Act, Chapter 132 of the General Statutes. Attorney X made a public records request, pursuant to G.S. §132-6, to the county manager to inspect and examine all mobile telephone records for the county building inspector. Attorney X copied Attorney A on the written request for the public records but he did not obtain the consent of Attorney A or Attorney L to the direct communication with their client, the county manager. Subsequently, a public records request for files from the building inspections department of R County was made by a person believed to be a part-time employee in Attorney X's law firm. This request was directed to the building inspector as the custodian of these public records. A courtesy copy of this request was sent by Attorney X to Attorney A. May a lawyer make a direct written request to inspect public records related to the representation of a client if the custodian of the public records is an adverse party represented by legal counsel and the custodian's attorney does not consent to the communication?

Opinion:

Yes, a lawyer may communicate directly with the custodian of public records for the purpose of making a public records request regardless of whether the custodian's lawyer consents to the communication. Rule 7.4(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct permits a lawyer to "communicate or cause another to communicate about the subject of the representation with a party the lawyer knows to be represented by another lawyer in the matter" in only two situations: (1) the lawyer has the consent of the opposing party's lawyer; or (2) the communication is "authorized by law." G.S. §132-6 provides > [e]very person having custody of public records shall permit them to be inspected and examined at reasonable times and under his supervision by any person, and he shall furnish certified copies thereof on payment of fees as prescribed by law.

Confidential communications between a government body and its attorney are specifically exempted from the definition of "public records" by G.S. §132-1.1(a). By this exemption, it appears that the General Assembly contemplated the extent to which the representation of a government body by a lawyer should limit the right to request public records. Further, in News and Observer Publishing Company v. Poole, 330 N.C. 465, 412 S.E. 2d 7 (1992), the North Carolina Supreme Court held that a clear statutory exemption must exist in order to limit the liberal access to public records allowed by the Act. Id. at 474-475, 412 S.E. 2d at ___. No exemption exists in the Act for requests for public records when the custodian is represented by legal counsel in a particular matter.

Although not required by the Rules of Professional Conduct, it is professionally courteous to provide a copy of a written request to inspect public records to the lawyer for the custodian of the records when the public records relate to a particular matter in which the custodian is represented by legal counsel.

RPC 220

October 20, 1995

Use of Tape Recording Made by Someone Other Than the Lawyer's Client

Opinion rules that a lawyer should seek the court's permission to listen to a tape recording of a telephone conversation of his or her client made by a third party if listening to the tape recording would otherwise be a violation of the law.

Inquiry #1:

Client X was indicted on two counts of taking indecent liberties with a 14 year old boy. The boy's parents secretly tape recorded telephone conversations between the boy and Client X. Attorney A, who represents Client X, obtained discovery from the district attorney from which he learned of the existence of the tape and demanded copies. RPC 192 rules that a lawyer may not listen to an illegal tape recording made by his or her client nor may the lawyer use the information on the illegal tape recording to advance the client's case. Does the ethical responsibility of a lawyer change if a tape recording, which contains information relevant to the defense of the client, was made by someone other than the lawyer's client?

Opinion #1:

Under Title III of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968, 18 U.S.C. §2510 et seq. (the "Act"), it is illegal to intentionally intercept any telephone conversation without the consent of one of the parties to the conversation. However, whether it is illegal for Client X or Attorney A to listen to or use information contained in a tape recording of Client X made under the circumstances described in the inquiry is a question of statutory interpretation which cannot be answered by the Ethics Committee. See generally 18 U.S.C. §2511(1)(d) and (2)(d). If listening to or using the information from the tape recording under these circumstances is not a violation of the Act, Attorney A may listen to the tape recording and may use the information obtained from the tape recording in trial. If Attorney A is unsure of the legality of listening to the tape recording and he believes that it is in the best interest of his client's defense to do so, he should take the appropriate procedural steps to obtain the court's determination regarding the issue. See Rule 7.1(a)(1) of the Rules of Professional Conduct.

This situation is distinguishable from RPC 192. RPC 192 prohibits a lawyer from listening to and using the information from a clearly illegal tape recording of a conversation of the opposing party made by a client because a lawyer should not enable a client to benefit from illegal conduct. Attorney A's client, on the other hand, is not seeking to benefit from her own illegal activity. Provided it is not a violation of the Act, listening to and using the contents of the tape recording to represent Client X is not prejudicial to the administration of justice. See Rule 1.2(d).

Inquiry #2:

If the district attorney advises Attorney A that the district attorney intends to offer the tape in evidence, does Attorney A have an obligation to listen to the tape recording in order to be prepared to address its contents in the trial?

Opinion #2:

Whether Attorney A may listen to the tape recording is a question of law which cannot be answered by the Ethics Committee. See Opinion #1 above. However, if listening to the tape recording is illegal or Attorney A is unsure of the legality of listening to the tape recording, he should take the appropriate steps to seek the court's permission to listen to the tape recording in order to prepare for motions regarding the admissibility of the tape recording. See Rule 7.1(a)(1).

Inquiry #3:

In the fact situation set forth in RPC 192, the client made a tape recording of a conversation to which he was not a party. In this situation, may the lawyer file a motion to test the admissibility of the tape recording and, if the court determines that the tape is admissible, listen to the tape and use the information obtained on the tape and the tape itself at trial?

Opinion #3:

Yes. See opinions #2 above.

RPC 221

October 20, 1995

Receipt of Evidence of Crime

Opinion rules that absent a court order or law requiring delivery of physical evidence of a crime to the authorities, a lawyer for a criminal defendant may take possession of evidence that is not contraband in order to examine, test, or inspect the evidence. The lawyer must return inculpatory physical evidence that is not contraband to the source and advise the source of the legal consequences pertaining to the possession or destruction of the evidence.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A and Attorney B work for different law firms. They have been appointed to represent Defendant who is charged with first degree murder. Defendant's wife, W, was apparently present during the altercation that led to the victim's death. During Attorney A and Attorney B's investigation, Defendant implicated W in the matter and told the attorneys that he had knowledge of relevant physical evidence. The police detectives who investigated the death are in possession of a stick they believe Defendant used to commit the murder but neither the police detectives nor the prosecutors are aware of the existence of other physical evidence.

Defendant brought the physical evidence to Attorney B's office. Attorney B took possession of the physical evidence for purposes of examination and consultation with Attorney A concerning the extent to which the physical evidence might incriminate or exculpate Defendant.

Attorney A and Attorney B interviewed W who incriminated herself. The story W told Attorney A and Attorney B is different from the statement that she gave to the police officers during the initial investigation.

Must Attorney A or Attorney B notify the district attorney's office or the investigating law enforcement agency of the existence of the physical evidence?

Opinion #1:

No. On the one hand, a lawyer has a duty to preserve the confidences of the client and to zealously represent the client within the bounds of the law. Rule 4 and Canon VII of the Rules of Professional Conduct. On the other hand, a lawyer is an officer of the court and should not engage in conduct that is prejudicial to the administration of justice. Rule 1.2(d). In the absence of a court order or a common law or statutory obligation to disclose the location or deliver an item of inculpatory physical evidence that is not contraband (the possession of which is in and of itself a crime, such as narcotics) to law enforcement authorities, a defense lawyer may take such evidence into his or her possession for the purpose of testing, examination, or inspection. The defense lawyer should return the evidence to the source from whom the lawyer received it. In returning the item to the source, the lawyer must advise the source of the legal consequences pertaining to the possession or destruction of the evidence by that person or others. This advice should include the advice to retain the evidence intact and not engage in conduct that might be a violation of criminal statutes relating to evidence. See generally ABA Standards for Criminal Justice Prosecution Function and Defense Function (3rd ed.), Standard 4-4.6(a)-(c), "Physical Evidence," and Commentary. If a defense lawyer receives a subpoena for inculpatory physical evidence in his or her possession, the lawyer may take appropriate steps to contest the subpoena in order to protect the interests of the client. However, the lawyer must comply with a court order to produce the evidence.

Similarly, pursuant to G.S. §15A-905, a defense lawyer must comply with any order entered by the court to produce evidence the defendant intends to introduce at trial.

Inquiry #2:

What specific information, if any, is Attorney A or Attorney B allowed to disclose to the district attorney or the law enforcement agency regarding the weapon or how it was obtained?

Opinion #2:

See Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #3:

W provided information to Attorney A and Attorney B which would assist Defendant in his defense. Since Attorney A and Attorney B might be witnesses for Defendant, do they have to withdraw from the representation of Defendant?

Opinion #3:

No. Rule 5.2(b) requires a lawyer to withdraw from the representation of a client if, "after undertaking employment in contemplated or pending litigation, a lawyer learns or it is obvious that he or a lawyer in his firm ought to be called as a witness on behalf of his client." However, he may continue the representation and he or a lawyer in his firm may testify under the circumstances enumerated in Rule 5.2(a). It is not "obvious" that Attorney A or Attorney B "ought" to be called as a witness for their client. Any information gained by Attorney A and Attorney B during the professional relationship with Defendant, including information obtained from third parties such as W, is confidential information. Rule 4(a); see also G.S. §15A-906. Unless Defendant consents to disclosure of the information gained from W, the lawyers may not testify about what W told them. Even if Defendant consents to the use of this information, W may be called as a witness herself, thus avoiding the need for Attorney A or Attorney B to testify. A problem of this nature can be avoided by having a nonlawyer present at all interviews with prospective trial witnesses.

Inquiry #4:

Defendant has consented to the disclosure by Attorney A and Attorney B of the substance of W's statements to them. At trial, W is called as a witness and testifies contrary to her earlier statements to Attorney A and Attorney B. If the testimony of Attorney A or Attorney B is necessary to rebut the testimony of W, must one or both of them withdraw from the representation?

Opinion #4:

Withdrawal may not be required. It is possible that by aggressive cross-examination of W, the need for one of the lawyers to testify will be avoided. If Lawyer A or Lawyer B must testify in order to rebut the testimony of W, moreover, the lawyers might conclude that an exception in Rule 5.2(a)(4) applies which would allow the lawyer to testify without withdrawing from the representation. Rule 5.2(b). Rule 5.2(a)(4) allows a lawyer to continue the representation despite acting as a witness in the trial if withdrawal "would work a substantial hardship on the client because of the distinctive value of the lawyer...as counsel in the particular case."

If it is necessary for one of the lawyers to testify, the lawyer who testifies may have to withdraw from the representation but the other lawyer may remain in the case. Rule 5.2(b) only requires the lawyer who testifies for his client and the other members of his firm to withdraw from the representation.

RPC 222

October 20, 1995

Obtaining a Confession of Judgment to Secure a Fee

Opinion rules that prior to rendering legal services to a client, a lawyer may not obtain a confession of judgment from a client to secure a fee.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A charges a flat fee for representation in certain criminal and domestic matters. Prior to rendering legal services, he requires the client to sign a confession of judgment, pursuant to G.S. §1A-1, Rule 68. On occasion, the confession of judgment recites the amount of the flat rate fee Attorney A has quoted to the client and, on occasion the confession of judgment is blank as to the amount. Regardless of the extent of the services actually rendered to the client, if the client fails to pay the fee, Attorney A files the confession of judgment with the clerk of court. If the confession is blank, he fills in the amount of the flat fee quoted to the client.

Attorney A agrees to represent Client X on the defense of a felony. He tells Client X he will represent him for a flat fee of $2000 which Client X must pay by the conclusion of the representation. Prior to rendering services to Client X, Attorney A obtains Client X's signature on a confession of judgment for $2000. Attorney A makes one minor court appearance on behalf of Client X but, before rendering any other services to Client X, the district attorney dismisses the charges on her own initiative due to insufficient evidence. Client X has made no payments to Attorney A. Attorney A files the confession of judgment with clerk of court and proceeds to enforce the judgment. Client X disputes the amount of the fee. Is Attorney A's fee arrangement with Client X ethical?

Opinion #1:

No, a lawyer may not obtain a confession of judgment from a client prior to the rendering of legal services to the client. CPR 250, which was adopted under the superseded Code of Professional Responsibility, allowed a lawyer to obtain a confession of judgment from a client to secure a fee for services. However, the practice of obtaining a confession of judgment prior to the rendering of legal services to a client violates Rule 2.6 of the current Rules of Professional Conduct. To the extent CPR 250 is inconsistent with this opinion, it is overruled.

The State Bar's fee dispute arbitration program was established in 1993 in order to provide an appropriate and effective vehicle for resolving fee disputes between a client and a lawyer. See "Professionalism Report," NCSB Newsletter, Volume 17, No. 4, pages 8-14. Prior to initiating legal proceedings to collect a disputed fee, a lawyer is required by Rule 2.6(e) of the Rules of Professional Conduct to notify the client of the existence of the State Bar's fee arbitration program and to participate in good faith in nonbinding arbitration of the fee dispute if the client submits a proper request for fee arbitration. Although a client who signed a confession of judgment at the beginning of the representation may subsequently contest the actual amount of the fee, a lawyer holding the confession of judgment appears to have no duty to advise the client of the existence of the fee arbitration program because the filing of a confession of judgment abrogates the need to initiate legal proceedings to collect the fee. Moreover, with a confession of judgment in hand, the lawyer has no motivation to resolve a fee dispute with the client through arbitration because he or she already has a judgment. Attorney A's fee arrangement frustrates the purpose of the State Bar's mandatory fee arbitration program and is, therefore, in violation of Rule 2.6(e).

Attorney A's fee arrangement also violates Rule 2.6(a) which prohibits a lawyer from entering into an agreement for, charging, or collecting an excessive fee. Rule 2.6(b) lists the factors to be taken into consideration in determining whether a fee is reasonable. These factors include the time and labor required to perform the legal services. In the present inquiry, Attorney A performed minimal services and the favorable outcome did not result from the work of Attorney A. Therefore, the $2000 fee for the services is unreasonable. In RPC 158, it is held that Rule 2.6(a) requires a lawyer to refund to the client at the conclusion of the representation any portion of the fee which is clearly excessive. If a confession of judgment is attained prior to the rendering of legal services, it may be used unethically to collect an excessive fee.

Inquiry #2:

Would Opinion #1 be different if the confession of judgment was signed by Client X in blank?

Opinion #2:

No.

Inquiry #3:

Attorney B has rendered legal services to Client Y. Client Y indicates that he does not dispute the fee for the services rendered but he is unable to pay the fee at this time. May Attorney B obtain a confession of judgment from Client Y for the amount of the fee?

Opinion #3:

Yes, provided Attorney Y explains the confession of judgment to the client. Since Client Y does not dispute the known fee, this arrangement does not undermine the purpose of the fee arbitration program. See Rule 2.6(e).

RPC 223

January 12, 1996

Responsibility to Client Who Has Disappeared

Opinion rules that when a lawyer's reasonable attempts to locate a client are unsuccessful, the client's disappearance constitutes a constructive discharge of the lawyer requiring the lawyer's withdrawal from the representation.

Inquiry:

On July 7, 1993, Attorney A entered into an agreement to represent Client A in regard to minor injuries she sustained in an automobile accident. Attorney A met with Client A on that date and subsequently spoke with her by telephone on a couple of occasions. In these phone conversations, Client A informed Attorney A that she planned to see other health care providers.

Attorney A has not heard from Client A since 1993 although she has tried on numerous occasions and by a variety of methods to contact Client A. Initially, Attorney A called Client A but Client A did not return her phone calls. Last year, Attorney A wrote to Client A but the letters were returned without a forwarding address. Client A's telephone number was disconnected and there is no new listing for her. She no longer works for the company that employed her in July 1993. Attorney A asked Client A's former employer to forward a letter to Client A at the last address the employer had on file for Client A. She received no response to this letter. Attorney A tried to get Client A's new address from one of the doctors Client A was seeing in 1993. The doctor's office had her old address. The insurance company for the prospective defendant in the automobile accident has not heard from Client A and has closed its file. Client A's own automobile insurance policy was canceled in April 1994. The company does not have a new address for Client A. Finally, Attorney A checked the county property listings. The last listing for Client A was in 1993.

The statute of limitations on Client A's claim will expire in ten months. A complaint has not been filed. A representative of Attorney A's malpractice insurance carrier recommended that she file a complaint on behalf of Client A and then immediately make a motion to withdraw. What is Attorney A's ethical responsibility to Client A?

Opinion:

When a client stops communicating with his or her lawyer, the lawyer must take reasonable steps to locate and communicate with the client. In the present inquiry, Attorney A's efforts to locate Client A were more than reasonable. However, if the lawyer is still unable to locate the client and the client has made no effort to contact the lawyer, the client's failure to contact the lawyer within a reasonable period of time after the lawyer's last contact with the client must be considered a constructive discharge of the lawyer. Rule 2.8(b)(4) of the Rules of Professional Conduct requires a lawyer to withdraw from the representation of a client if the lawyer is discharged by the client. Therefore, Attorney A must withdraw from the representation.

Attorney A may not file a complaint on behalf of Client A although filing suit might stop the running of the statute of limitations. The determination of the objective of legal representation is the client's prerogative. As the comment to Rule 7.1 observes, "[t]he client has ultimate authority to determine the purposes to be served by legal representation within the limits imposed by law and the lawyer's professional obligation." If a client disappears, the lawyer cannot know whether the client wanted to proceed with the lawsuit, who the client was prepared to sue, and whether the allegations in the complaint are accurate. Therefore, if a client disappears and the lawyer is unable to locate the client after reasonable efforts to do so, the lawyer should withdraw from the representation without taking further action on behalf of the client.

RPC 224

October 24, 1997

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 224 (Third Revision). This opinion is overruled by N.C. Gen. Stat. §97-25.6 (2012) (Reasonable access to medical information).

Communication with Treating Physician

Opinion prohibits the employer's lawyer from engaging in direct communications with the treating physician for an employee with a workers' compensation claim.

Inquiry #1:

Employee was injured in a work-related accident. Attorney A represents Employee in his workers' compensation claim. Attorney X represents the employer. Employee's treating physician is Dr. Care. May Attorney X contact Dr. Care privately, without the consent of Employee or Attorney A, to discuss Employee's medical treatment?

Opinion #1:

No. See Salaam v. N.C. Department of Transportation, 122 N.C. 83, 468 S.E.2d 536 (1996), disc. rev. improvidently granted, 345 N.C. 494, 480 S.E.2d 51 (1997) (applying the holding in Crist v. Moffat, 326 N.C. 326, 389 S.E.2d 41 (1990), to adversarial proceedings before the Industrial Commission and recognizing the public policy interest in protecting patient privacy in light of the adequacy of formal discovery procedures).

RPC 225

January 12, 1996

Seeking Cooperation on Plea Agreement from Crime Victim with Pending Civil Action

Opinion holds that the lawyer for a defendant in criminal and civil actions arising out of the same event may seek the cooperation of a crime victim on a plea agreement provided the settlement of the victim's civil claim against the defendant is not contingent upon the content of the testimony of the victim or the outcome of the case.

Inquiry:

Attorney A represents Client A who is charged with the crime of discharging a weapon into an occupied automobile. Attorney X represents the occupants of the automobile, Family X, which includes a father, a mother, and two children. Attorney X has advised Attorney A that Family X is seeking compensation from Client A for damages caused by the discharge of the weapon into the automobile. Attorney X did not represent the family at the time of the indictment of Client A and he is not involved in the criminal proceeding.

Attorney A would like to meet with Attorney X to discuss settlement of the claims of Family X in conjunction with a discussion of the cooperation of the family in obtaining a plea agreement or a dismissal of the charges against Client A. May Attorney A and Attorney X discuss cooperation on Client A's criminal charge in conjunction with a discussion of the settlement of the civil claim?

Opinion:

Yes, provided the lawyers do not discuss making the settlement of the family's civil claims contingent upon the content of the testimony of the members of the family or upon the outcome of the case. Rule 7.9(b) states "[a] lawyer shall not pay, offer to pay, or acquiesce in the payment of compensation to a witness contingent upon the content of his or her testimony or the outcome of the case...." The Comment to Rule 7.9 recognizes that "[w]itnesses should always testify truthfully and should be free from any financial inducements that might tempt them to do otherwise."

If no financial inducement is offered to the members of Family X, Attorney A may seek their cooperation on a plea agreement or dismissal of the charges. However, under no circumstances should a resolution of the civil matter result in a witness's refusal to testify or the withholding of factual information from the court. Moreover, the district attorney responsible for the case should be advised of the discussions between Attorney A and Attorney X.

RPC 226

April 12, 1996

Disposition of Unidentified Funds

Opinion rules that when a law firm receives funds that are not identified as client funds, the firm must investigate the ownership of the funds and, if it is reasonable to conclude the funds do not belong to a client or a third party, the firm may conclude that the funds belong to the firm.

Inquiry:

Law Firm received a check for $3,700 made out to Attorney A, a member of the firm, and Fire Insurance Company. The check is a payment from the liquidation of National Insurance Company which filed for bankruptcy approximately eight to ten years ago. Attorney A and the other lawyers in Law Firm are unable to determine whether the funds represented by the check belong to a client, to a third party, or to the firm. They have inquired of the chief deputy liquidator's office, the office of the court where National's bankruptcy action was filed, and Fire Insurance Company, but to no avail. The lawyers believe that the most logical explanation for the payment is as follows: when National went bankrupt, Law Firm made an uninsured motorist claim for a client under the client's insurance policy with Fire Insurance Company. The claim was settled and Fire Insurance Company required the client to sign a subrogation agreement for the amount of the settlement. Using that agreement, Fire Insurance Company filed a proof of claim with the bankruptcy court. If the check is being paid in satisfaction of this claim in the bankruptcy proceeding, the proceeds of the check would belong to Fire Insurance Company and not to the client or third party.

Fire Insurance Company would like to split the check with Law Firm. May Law Firm conclude that the funds do not belong to a client and share the check with Fire Insurance Company?

Opinion:

Yes, if Law Firm has made a reasonable effort to investigate the background of the check to determine whether the check belongs to a client or a third party and, having undertaken that investigation, now has a good faith belief that the check does not belong to a client or a third party. See Rule 10.1(c).

RPC 227

July 18, 1997

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 227 (Revised).

Release of Title Notes to Former Client

Opinion rules that a former residential real estate client is not entitled to the lawyer's title notes or abstracts regardless of whether such information is stored in the client's file. However, a lawyer formerly associated with a firm may be entitled to examine the title notes made by the lawyer to provide further representation to the same client.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A is a real estate lawyer with Law Firm X. Two years ago, Attorney A represented Client 1 in the closing of the purchase of a house and lot. Client 1 recently requested her real estate file from the firm. What documents does Law Firm X have to give to Client 1?

Opinion #1:

Rule 2.8(a)(2) requires a lawyer who has withdrawn from the representation of a client to deliver to the client "all papers and property to which the client is entitled." RPC 178 cites CPR 3 for the proposition that > a lawyer must provide a former client with originals or copies of anything in the file which would be helpful to the new lawyer except "the discharged lawyer's notes made for his own future reference and study and similar things not representing a completed work product."

See also CPR 3, CPR 315, CPR 322, CPR 328 and Rule 2.8(a)(2).

After a residential real estate transaction is completed, the client is entitled to originals or copies of the documents which were generated solely in connection with the client's closing, including the following: the deed to the property, plats, title opinion, title insurance policy, all closing documents, all documents prepared for the lender and other third parties, correspondence, memoranda regarding the client's transaction only, and documents referenced in the client's deed or title opinion. The client is not entitled to the lawyer's title notes, abstracts, or copies of documents not prepared solely for the client's transaction regardless of whether such information is stored in the client's file.

Inquiry #2:

Are the title notes, the title opinion, copies of deeds, and other similar documents in the file considered "work product" which Law Firm X can refuse to return to Client 1 or her designated attorney?

Opinion #2:

See Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #3:

While a shareholder in Law Firm X, Attorney B was retained by Client 2 to represent her in the refinancing of her home. Attorney B supervised his paralegal in performing a title search, prepared a title opinion, obtained title insurance, prepared closing documents, and otherwise represented Client 2 in refinancing her home. Attorney B subsequently resigned from Law Firm X and opened his own practice. Client 2 has retained Attorney B to assist her in another refinancing of her home. In accordance with Attorney B's advice, Client 2 requested her original refinance file from Law Firm X. Law Firm X refused to release the file to Client 2, contending that all of the title notes and other information contained in the file, other than the actual title policy, are the "work product" of Law Firm X and Client 2 is not entitled to receive the originals or copies of this material. Attorney B's representation of Client 2 on the new refinancing would be facilitated by the receipt of the title notes from the prior refinancing. May Law Firm X refuse to provide Client 2's file, or a copy of the materials contained therein, to Client 2 or her attorney?

Opinion #3:

No. See Opinion #1 above. If a lawyer who was formerly associated with a law firm asks the law firm for the file of a client the lawyer represented while he was a member of the firm and the use of the lawyer's title notes will assist the lawyer in providing further representation to the same client, in addition to giving the lawyer the originals or copies of the documents noted in Opinion #1 above, the law firm must give the lawyer access to the title notes made by the lawyer (or by a paralegal of the firm acting at the lawyer's direction) during the previous representation of the client while the lawyer was still a member of the law firm. This opinion is subject to the file maintenance and destruction guidelines in RPC 209.

Inquiry #4:

Is the response to Inquiry #3 affected by the fact that a paralegal employed by Law Firm X performed the actual title search?

Opinion #4:

No.

Inquiry #5:

Other clients of Attorney B when he was a member of Law Firm X have asked Law Firm X to forward their files, or copies thereof, to Attorney B. May Law Firm X refuse to send the files, or copies of the files, to Attorney B?

Opinion #5:

No. See Opinion #3 above.

RPC 228

July 26, 1996

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 228 (Revised).

Indemnifying the Tortfeasor's Liability Insurance Carrier for Unpaid Liens of Medical Providers as a Condition of Settlement

Opinion rules that a lawyer for a personal injury victim may not execute an agreement to indemnify the tortfeasor's liability insurance carrier against the unpaid liens of medical providers.

Inquiry:

Attorney A represents Client A who was injured in an automobile collision caused by the negligence of Mr. X. Mr. X has liability insurance with Insurance Carrier. Attorney A negotiated a settlement of Client A's claim with Insurance Carrier for a sum certain. However, Insurance Carrier's settlement offer is conditioned upon the execution by Attorney A and Client A of an indemnity agreement in addition to the traditional general release. In the indemnity agreement, Attorney A would agree to indemnify Insurance Carrier against all claims Insurance Carrier might sustain as a result of any outstanding medical lien incurred by Client A as a result of the accident. The agreement requires Insurance Carrier to notify Attorney A of all medical provider claims or liens of which Insurance Carrier has actual or constructive knowledge. Is it ethical for Attorney A to sign the indemnity agreement as a part of the settlement of Client A's claim?

Opinion:

No. Rule 5.1(b) of the Rules of Professional Conduct.

RPC 229

July 26, 1996

Joint Representation of Husband and Wife in Estate Planning

Opinion rules that a lawyer who jointly represented a husband and wife in the preparation and execution of estate planning documents may not prepare a codicil to the will of one spouse without the knowledge of the other spouse if the codicil will affect adversely the interests of the other spouse or each spouse agreed not to change the estate plan without informing the other spouse.

Inquiry #1:

Husband and Wife asked Attorney to represent them in planning the disposition of their estates and in the preparation of their wills. Both spouses agreed that all of the property of the first to die would be left to the surviving spouse with the exception of a small trust that would be established at Husband's death for the benefit of the couple's minor children. The trust would be funded prior to the distribution of the residuary estate to Wife. Husband has a terminal illness and the couple anticipate that Husband will be the first to die. The wills were drafted and signed. Husband subsequently called Attorney and expressed concern about Wife's ability to manage her funds. Husband asked Attorney to draft a codicil to his will increasing the amount put in trust for the minor children, thereby reducing the residuary bequest to Wife. May Attorney A draft the codicil without the knowledge and consent of Wife?

Opinion #1:

Attorney may only prepare the codicil without informing Wife if there was no clearly expressed intent by Husband and Wife, at the time of the preparation of the original estate planning documents, that neither spouse would change the estate plan without informing the other spouse and the provisions of the codicil are consistent with the best interests of Wife. See Rule 5.1(a). There are insufficient facts presented in this inquiry to determine whether there was an agreement not to change the estate plan or to determine whether the codicil is consistent with Wife's interests.

Inquiry #2:

In an entirely unrelated matter, Husband X meets with Attorney regarding his personal estate plan. Husband X wants to minimize Wife X's share of his estate because he believes she suffers from dementia. Also, it is his second marriage, of which there are no children, and Wife X has her own assets. May Attorney advise Husband on how to structure his estate plan to preclude Wife from dissenting from his will?

Opinion #2:

Yes, Rule 7.1(a)(1) permits a lawyer to seek the lawful objectives of a client through reasonably available means permitted by law and the Rules of Professional Conduct.

RPC 230

July 26, 1996

Editor's Note: Compare Rule 3.3(d). See also 98 Formal Ethics Opinion 1 for additional guidance.

Disclosure of Adverse Medical Reports in a Social Security Disability Case

Opinion rules that a lawyer representing a client on a good faith claim for social security disability benefits may withhold evidence of an adverse medical report in a hearing before an administrative law judge if not required by law or court order to produce such evidence.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney represents Client L, a claimant for social security disability benefits. Attorney files a request for an administrative hearing before a Social Security Administration administrative law judge ("ALJ"). In administrative hearings before an ALJ, no one advocates or presents evidence in opposition to the claimant's case.

Attorney previously represented Client L on his claim for workers' compensation benefits. During the workers' compensation case, the workers' compensation carrier required Client L to submit to an independent medical examination. The report of the physician performing the examination states that there is little wrong with Client L and he is a malingerer. Attorney considers this report biased and unfair. At the administrative hearing, Attorney submits other medical records for Client L, and withholds the adverse report from the workers' compensation case. Is this ethical?

Opinion #1:

Yes, provided there is no law or court order mandating disclosure and further provided Attorney is advancing Client L's claim in good faith.

The Social Security Independence and Program Improvements Act of 1994, Pub.L.No. 103-296, Sect. 206, 108 Stat. 1464, 1509-16 (1994) provides, in pertinent part:

> (a)(1) Any person...who makes, or causes to be made, a statement or representation of a material fact for use in determining any initial or continuing right to or the amount of (A) monthly insurance benefits under title II, or (B) benefits or payments under title XVI, that the person knows or should know is false or misleading or knows or should know omits a material fact or makes such a statement with knowing disregard for the truth shall be subject to, in addition to any other penalties that may be prescribed by law, a civil money penalty of not more than $5,000 for each such statement or representation....
>
> The statute defines "a material fact" as follows:
>
> (2) For purposes of this section, a material fact is one which the secretary may consider in evaluating whether an applicant is entitled to benefits under title II or eligible for benefits or payments under title XVI.

Whether the law requires disclosure of adverse medical opinions or medical reports generated in an unrelated adversarial proceeding is the subject of controversy. See Robert E. Raines, "The Advocate's Conflicting Obligations Vis-a-Vis Adverse Medical Evidence in Social Security Proceedings," 1995 B.Y.U.L. Rev. 99, 133-134. However, if a lawyer reasonably believes that this law or a court order requires the production of such evidence, the lawyer should comply with the law or court order. In so doing, the lawyer is not violating the duty of confidentiality. See Rule 4(c)(3) of the Rules of Professional Conduct.

If the lawyer reasonably believes that there is no law or court order requiring production of the evidence, Rule 4 of the Rules of Professional Conduct requires the lawyer to protect the confidential information of a client. Canon VII also requires the lawyer to represent the client zealously within the bounds of the law. In litigation, a conflict may arise between these duties and a lawyer's duty of candor to the court. See comment to Rule 7.2. In general, there is no ethical duty to volunteer adverse evidence to a tribunal absent a law or court order requiring disclosure. The lawyer must present the evidence that best advances the client's case and should not reveal confidential information if to do so would be detrimental to the client's interest. Rule 4(c)(2). Nevertheless, a lawyer may not knowingly advance a claim, make a false statement of fact, use false evidence, or assist the client in illegal or fraudulent conduct. Rule 7.2(a)(2), (4), (5), and (8).

In light of these conflicting obligations, the following position taken by the Committee on Professional Ethics of the New York County Lawyers Association in its decision of September 9, 1993, is sound:

> If a lawyer is able to advance a good faith claim for benefits despite knowledge of contrary medical reports, and if none of the evidence or statements made in support of that claim is known to be false in light of such knowledge, then nothing in the Code [of Professional Conduct] precludes assertion of the claim. If, however, the lawyer's knowledge of the adverse medical information constitutes knowledge that the claim itself is false, then the lawyer is not free to advance the claim and must withdraw from the representation.

Id. at 115 (quoting Comm. On Prof. Ethics of the N.Y. County Lawyers' Ass'n, New York County Lawyers Ethics Opinion, N.Y.L.J., September 9, 1993, at 2).

Thus, if Attorney is not knowingly advancing a false claim on behalf of Client L and Attorney reasonably believes that disclosure is not required by law or court order, he may represent Client L in the social security disability hearing without disclosing the adverse medical evidence.

Inquiry #2:

Attorney A represents a claimant for social security disability benefits. Attorney requests an administrative hearing. In the course of the representation, Attorney writes the claimant's treating physician and asks for a letter stating the physician's opinion about whether the claimant is disabled. In the responsive letter from the physician, the physician indicates that she believes the claimant is not disabled and should not be granted social security disability benefits. Attorney does not submit the adverse letter from the physician to the ALJ at the hearing. Is this unethical?

Opinion #2:

See Opinion #1.

Inquiry #3:

In the same situation as Inquiry #2, Attorney requests from the treating physician a letter plus the treating physician's office notes. The treating physician sends the office notes which merely describe the course of the claimant's treatment. However, the physician also sends a letter stating her opinion that the claimant is not disabled. Attorney submits only the office notes to the ALJ and withholds the adverse letter. Is this conduct ethical?

Opinion #3:

See Opinion #1.

Inquiry #4:

Attorney has concluded that it would be a good litigation strategy to produce all relevant medical evidence at the administrative hearing on the claim for disability benefits of Client X. Attorney believes that if the adverse medical evidence is introduced, it can be explained and will not defeat Client X's claim. If Attorney introduces and explains the evidence, it will avoid any perception that Attorney is hiding relevant evidence and will, thereby, increase the ALJ's confidence in Attorney. It will also avoid the potential harm that might result if the ALJ learns of the evidence from another source. Is Attorney prohibited from introducing the adverse medical evidence?

Opinion #4:

No. The Rules of Professional Conduct do not prohibit a lawyer from presenting to the client the strategic advantage of disclosing adverse evidence and obtaining the client's consent to disclose. Rule 4(c)(1).

RPC 231

October 18, 1996

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally adopted as RPC 231 (Revised).

Collecting a Contingent Fee on the Gross Recovery and on the Medical Insurance Provider's Claim Opinion rules that a lawyer may not collect a contingent fee on the reimbursement paid to the client's medical insurance provider in addition to a contingent fee on the gross recovery if the total fee received by the lawyer is clearly excessive.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A's contingent fee agreement with Client for representation in a personal injury case will pay Attorney A a fee of one-third of the gross recovery from the defendant plus whatever contingent legal fee may be provided by law for recovering and paying the claim for reimbursement of an insurance carrier or medical insurance program that paid some or all of the client's medical expenses. Is it ethical for a lawyer to collect a contingent fee on the gross recovery and an additional contingent fee for recovering and paying the claim of the medical insurance carrier or program?

Opinion #1:

No opinion is expressed as to whether a legal fee for collecting a medical insurance provider's claim for reimbursement is permitted by law. If such a fee is permitted by law, the collection of this fee in addition to the collection of a contingent fee on the gross recovery may render the lawyer's total fee for the representation of the client "clearly excessive" in violation of Rule 2.6(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Whether the total fee is "clearly excessive" depends upon the facts and circumstances of the particular representation. "Contingent fees, like all legal fees, must be reasonable." RPC 35. Further, a lawyer may not charge a clearly excessive fee even though the fee may be recovered from an opposing party. RPC 196

Rule 2.6(b) provides that "[a] fee is clearly excessive when, after a review of the facts, a lawyer of ordinary prudence experienced in the area of law involved would be left with a definite and firm conviction that the fee is in excess of a reasonable fee." The rule then lists a number of factors to be taken into consideration in determining the reasonableness of a fee including the following:

(1) the time and labor required, the novelty and difficulty of the questions involved, and the skill requisite to perform the legal service properly;

…

(4) the amount involved and the results obtained;

(5) the time limitations imposed by the client or by the circumstances;

…

(7) the experience, reputation, and ability of the lawyer or lawyers performing the services; and

(8) whether the fee is fixed or contingent.

A lawyer may not know at the beginning of the representation whether collecting the additional fee will render the lawyer's total fee clearly excessive in violation of the rule. However, at the conclusion of the representation, the lawyer should examine the factors listed in Rule 2.6(b) to determine the reasonableness of the total fee. If the collection of the additional fee renders the total fee paid to the lawyer clearly excessive in light of these factors, the lawyer should reduce the fee paid by the client in an amount equivalent to the fee permitted by law for collecting and paying the claim of the medical insurance provider.

Inquiry #2:

At the beginning of the representation, should the lawyer disclose to the client the lawyer's intention to seek the fee from the medical insurance provider in addition to the contingent fee payable by the client on the gross amount of the recovery?

Opinion #2:

Yes, the fee arrangement should be fully explained to the client and the client should agree to the fee arrangement. See Rule 2.6 and comment.

RPC 232

October 17, 1996

Editor's Note: Opinion was originally adopted as RPC 232 (Revised). See RPC 191, as amended, for additional guidance.

Disbursement Upon Deposit of Mortgage Company Check Pursuant to an Agreement Purporting to Make Check Certified Opinion concerns disbursements from a trust account in reliance upon the deposit of a mortgage company's check issued pursuant to an agreement with a mortgage company and the company's institutional lender purporting to render the check "certified" as that term is defined in the UCC.

Inquiry:

On October 20, 1995, RPC 191 was adopted by the Council of the North Carolina State Bar. The opinion allows a lawyer to make disbursements from his or her trust account in reliance upon the deposit of funds provisionally credited to the account provided the funds are deposited in the trust account in certain specified forms including certified checks.

Several mortgage companies and financial institutions making mortgage loans, (the "mortgage companies") have prepared a form agreement called the "Immediately Available Funds Procedure Agreement" (the "Agreement") which contains a procedure that mortgage companies believe will render certain mortgage loan proceeds checks "certified checks" as defined in the Uniform Commercial Code ("UCC"). If so, the mortgage companies contend that a lawyer closing a residential real estate transaction may make disbursements from his or her trust account immediately upon the deposit of such a mortgage loan proceeds check provisionally credited to the trust account.

The Agreement will be executed by the closing lawyer ("Attorney"), the mortgage company ("Financial Institution") for a particular borrower ("Borrower"), and an institutional lender legally authorized to make loans and receive deposits ("Federally-Insured Lender"). (All defined terms used herein are from the Agreement.) The procedure called for by the Agreement and some (but not all) of the terms of the Agreement are described below.

The Financial Institution shall transmit mortgage documents (promissory note, deed of trust, etc.) and closing instructions to Attorney to close the loan to Borrower. Prior to the scheduled closing of the loan, Financial Institution shall deliver a check ("Net Proceeds Check") drawn by Financial Institution on Federally-Insured Lender and payable jointly to Attorney and Borrower. After the mortgage documents are executed, but before closing the loan, Attorney will contact a duly authorized employee of Federally-Insured Lender ("Employee Contact"). Attorney will provide certain information to Employee Contact including the amount of the mortgage loan, that the mortgage documents have been executed by Borrower, and the amount of the Net Proceeds Check and any account number thereon. Upon providing this information to Employee contact, Attorney "shall be deemed to have made the same warranties to Federally-Insured Lender as if Attorney had obtained an acceptance as to the Net Proceeds Check from Federally-Insured Lender pursuant to Section 3-417 of the UCC." Federally-Insured Lender, through its Employee Contact, then issues Attorney a transaction code for manual notation by Attorney on the face of the Net Proceeds Check. The agreement provides that the issuance of the transaction code constitutes

(a) notice from Federally-Insured Lender to Attorney pursuant to Section 9-305 of the Uniform Commercial Code as in effect in the state that Federally-Insured Lender has a security interest in the mortgage documents; and

(b) the warranty by and unconditional agreement of Federally-Insured Lender with Attorney that

i) Federally-Insured Lender shall pay the Net Proceeds Check upon presentment without reference to amounts on deposit in any account.

ii) such notation, when made on the face of the Net Proceeds Check, constitutes an acceptance or certification of the Net Proceeds Check by Federally-Insured Lender pursuant to Sections 3-409, 3-410, and/or 3-411 of the Uniform Commercial Code as in effect in the state.

iii) Federally-Insured Lender undertakes the same obligations with respect to Net Proceeds Check as if certified or accepted in writing by Federally-Insured Lender.

iv) funds represented by the Net Proceeds Check are not subject to offset by Federally-Insured Lender.

The Agreement also states that no provision in this Agreement...shall be construed to expand the rights of Federally-Insured Lender to dishonor the Net Proceeds Check beyond those rights which Federally-Insured Lender has, by law, to dishonor any ordinary certified check which is not subject to this or any other special agreement. Likewise, no such provision shall limit Attorney's rights to collect on the Net Proceeds Check to less than that provided by law to a holder of an ordinary certified check which is not subject to this or any other special agreement.

The Federally-Insured Lender agrees that the transaction code will have the same effect as the Federally-Insured Lender's signature pursuant to Section 3-401 of the Uniform Commercial Code as in effect in the state, and the issuance of the transaction code shall evidence Federally-Insured Lender's "then-present acceptance or certification of a particular Net Proceeds Check."

The Agreement also contains representations of Financial Institution "to induce Attorney and Federally-Insured Lender to enter into this agreement." These include an agreement by Financial Institution not to issue a stop payment order or other direction with respect to the Net Proceeds Check after the transaction code is issued for the check; an agreement that Financial Institution shall remain liable on the Net Proceeds Check as drawer for payment to Attorney or any other holder of the Net Proceeds Check, even though a transaction code is issued on the check by Federally-Insured Lender; a recognition of an absolute and unconditional obligation by Financial Institution to repay Federally-Insured Lender on any check for which Federally-Insured Lender has issued a transaction code; and an indemnification agreement with Federally-Insured Lender.

May a lawyer follow the procedure in the Agreement, deposit in his or her trust account a Net Proceeds Check, with the transaction code issued by the Federally-Insured Lender noted on the face of the check, and upon receiving provisional credit for the check from the lawyer's depository institution, immediately disburse against the provisionally credited funds?

Opinion:

See Good Funds Settlement Act, G.S. §45A-1 et seq. (effective October 1, 1996).

RPC 233

January 24, 1997

Editor's Note: This opinion was originally published as RPC 233 (Revised).

Receipt of Letter from Represented Criminal Defendant

Opinion rules that a deputy attorney general who is representing the state on the appeal of a death sentence should send a copy to the defense lawyer of a letter he received from the defendant.

Inquiry #1:

Client is on death row. Attorney A is representing Client on the automatic appeal of his conviction and sentence of death to the North Carolina Supreme Court pursuant to G.S. §15A-2000(d). Client sent letters to Attorney X, the deputy attorney general who is representing the state on the appeal. In the letters, Client states that he wants to expedite his execution. For this reason, he does not want an appellate brief filed on his behalf nor does he want his case argued. Client asks Attorney X to advise him on how to have Attorney A removed from his representation. What should Attorney X do?

Opinion #1:

Copies of the letters should be sent to Attorney A without communicating directly with Client. However, a copy of the transmittal letter to Attorney A may be sent to Client.

RPC 234

October 18, 1996,

Electronic Storage of Client's File

Opinion rules that an inactive client file may be stored in an electronic format provided original documents with legal significance are preserved and the documents in the electronic file can be reproduced on paper.

Inquiry:

RPC 209 requires a lawyer to retain a client's file for six years after the file becomes inactive. During the six years, the file may only be destroyed with the consent of the client or, after notice to the client, the client fails to retrieve the file. Prior to the expiration of the six-year period, may a law firm convert the paper documents in a client's file into an electronic format, such as magnetic or optical disks readable by computer, store the disks, and destroy the original paper file?

Opinion:

Yes, provided: (1) original documents with legal significance, such as wills, contracts, stock certificates, etc., are culled from the paper file and stored in a safe place or returned to the client; and (2) the documents stored in an electronic format can be reproduced in a paper format. Rule 2.8(a)(1) and RPC 209

RPC 235

October 18, 1996

Fee Agreement for Hourly Rate Plus Contingent Fee

Opinion rules that a lawyer may charge a client an hourly rate, or a flat rate, for his or her services plus a contingent fee on the client's recovery provided the ultimate fee paid by the client is not clearly excessive and the client is given an honest assessment of the potential for recovery.

Inquiry:

Attorney A would like to enter into a fee agreement with a client that requires the client to pay a minimum fee calculated on an hourly charge or a flat fee basis plus a contingent fee on any amount recovered for the client. Is this fee arrangement ethical?

Opinion:

Yes, provided the fee that is ultimately charged and collected from the client is not clearly excessive in violation of Rule 2.6(a). Prior to entering into such a fee agreement with a client, a lawyer should fully explain to the client how the fee will be calculated and should give the client an honest assessment of the potential for recovery. Comment [2] to Rule 2.6. As events occur during the representation that may affect an earlier estimate of the ultimate fee, the lawyer should provide the client with a revised estimate of the fee and a revised assessment of the potential for recovery.

RPC 236

January 24, 1997

Editor's Note: See 99 Formal Ethics Opinion 2 for additional guidance. Rule 45 of the N.C. Rules of Civil Procedure was revised following adoption of this opinion. Rule 45 should be consulted as to the legal requirements for issuing a subpoena.

Misuse of Subpoena Process

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not issue a subpoena containing misrepresentations as to the pendency of an action, the date or location of a hearing, or a lawyer's authority to obtain documentary evidence.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A represents John Doe who was injured in an automobile accident. Witnesses are listed on the accident report. Attorney A issues subpoenas to the witnesses directing them to appear at his office at a designated time "to give testimony." The subpoenas are served on the witnesses who later appear at Attorney A's office at the appointed times. The only persons in attendance are Attorney A, a secretary/notary, and the witnesses. No notice was given to any adverse parties. Is Attorney A's conduct ethical?

Opinion #1:

No. Rule 45(a) of the Rules of Civil Procedure permits the issuance of a subpoena "for the purpose of attaining the testimony of a witness in a pending cause." Where no action is pending, it is false and deceptive, in violation of Rule 1.2(c) and Rule 7.2(a)(4), to issue a subpoena to a prospective witness that misleads the prospective witness as to the existence of a filed lawsuit and as to the prospective witness's legal obligation to appear.

Inquiry #2:

After the commencement of a child custody and support action, Mother's attorney issues and signs a subpoena to Father's employer directing the employer to appear in district court at a designated time and to produce Father's employment records. The case is not scheduled for trial or hearing. Mother's attorney attaches a letter to the subpoena that informs the employer that a court appearance may be avoided by sending copies of the employment records directly to the attorney. No notice is given to Father's attorney. Are the actions of Mother's attorney ethical?

Opinion #2:

No. Stating in the subpoena and in the letter to the employer that there is a scheduled court hearing at which the employment records must be produced is a misrepresentation of fact in violation of Rule 1.2(c) and Rule 7.2(a).

Inquiry #3:

Attorney A filed a caveat on behalf of two sons of Testator. Attorney A issues and serves a subpoena on Dr. John Smith, Testator's physician, directing Dr. Smith to appear at Attorney A's office at a designated time to produce all of the medical records pertaining to Testator. Attorney A also issues and serves a subpoena on the custodian of the records of ABC Bank directing the custodian to appear at Attorney A's office at a designated time to produce all of Testator's and Testator's executor's bank records for the preceding five years. No trial, hearing, or deposition is scheduled in the pending action. Attorney A writes letters to the witnesses advising them that they may avoid appearing at his office by providing him with copies of the documents he has subpoenaed. Attorney A did not give notice to any other party interested in the caveat proceeding. Is Attorney A's conduct ethical?

Opinion #3:

No. It is deceptive and a violation of Rule 1.2(c) and Rule 7.2(a)(4) for a lawyer to use the subpoena process (except in compliance with the Rules of Civil Procedure of the court where the action is pending) to mislead the custodian of documentary evidence as to the lawyer's authority to require the production of such documents. However, a subpoena issued in compliance with the applicable Rules of Civil Procedure may be used by the lawyer.

Inquiry #4:

Is notice to opposing counsel required when a lawyer issues a subpoena pursuant to Rule 45(c) of the Rules of Civil Procedure commanding a person to appear and produce records?

Opinion #4:

This is a question of civil procedure which is outside the purview of the Ethics Committee.

RPC 237

October 18, 1996

Ex Parte Communications with Judge

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not communicate with the judge before whom a proceeding is pending to request an ex parte order unless opposing counsel is given adequate notice or unless authorized by law.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A represented Wife in negotiations on a separation agreement from Husband. Husband was represented by a lawyer in Attorney B's law firm. A separation agreement, giving Wife custody of the minor child of the marriage, was executed and incorporated by reference in the divorce decree. The case was heard by Judge J.

Several years later, Attorney B filed a motion on behalf of Husband for a change of custody. Attorney B would like to contact Judge J in chambers to ask Judge J to sign an ex parte order changing the custody of the child to Husband. Without sending Attorney A a copy of the motion or notifying Attorney A of his intentions, may Attorney B communicate with Judge J outside the course of the official proceedings for the purpose of asking Judge J to sign the ex parte order?

Opinion #1:

No. Rule 7.10(b) prohibits a lawyer representing a client in an adversary proceeding from communicating as to the merits of the cause with a judge before whom the proceeding is pending if the communications will occur outside official proceedings. Rule 7.10(b)(3) does permit oral communications with a judge provided the opposing party is given adequate notice. Although Rule 7.10(b)(4) also permits ex parte communications with a judge about the merits of a cause if authorized by law, such communications must be specifically authorized by statute, court rule, or other law. See, e.g., G.S. §50B-2(c) (authorizing ex parte orders in domestic violence actions); G.S. §50-13.5(d)(3) (authorizing ex parte custody orders when a child is exposed to substantial risk of injury, abuse or abduction); and Rule 65 of the Rules of Civil Procedure (ex parte temporary restraining orders permitted).

Inquiry #2:

Does Attorney B have a duty to give Attorney A notice of oral or written communications with Judge J outside the course of official proceedings if Attorney A is the attorney of record?

Opinion #2:

Yes. See Opinion #1. If the communications are in writing, Attorney B must promptly deliver a copy of the written communication to Attorney A. Rule 7.10(b)(2).

Inquiry #3:

If Attorney B asks the judge in chambers to issue a show cause order directing Husband to appear and show cause at some later date, may Attorney B communicate with Judge J, outside the course of official proceedings in the cause, without notifying Attorney A?

Opinion #3:

No, if Attorney B will communicate with Judge J as to the merits of the cause. However, if Attorney B submits only the written pleadings necessary for the issuance of a show cause order and does not communicate with the judge as to the merits of the cause, he may communicate with the judge in this manner provided he promptly delivers a copy of the pleadings and order to Attorney A. See Rule 7.10(b)(2).

Inquiry #4:

Does a lawyer have a duty to examine the court record to determine whether there is an attorney of record for the opposing party before seeking an order from a judge outside the course of official proceedings?

Opinion #4:

A lawyer should make reasonable inquiry, including an examination of the court record, to determine if there is an attorney for the opposing party. Although there may be no attorney of record, Rule 7.10(b) requires notification to an unrepresented opposing party prior to communicating orally with the judge as to the merits of the cause.

RPC 238

October 18, 1996

Offering Law Related Services to a Legal Client

Opinion rules that a lawyer is subject to the Rules of Professional Conduct with respect to the provision of a law related service, such as financial planning, if the law related service is provided in circumstances that are not distinct from the lawyer's provision of legal services to clients.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A's law practice is limited to estate planning. To accomplish the objectives of an estate plan, a client frequently needs financial planning and advice about financial products such as annuities, life insurance policies, securities, etc. Often, the client's current financial and insurance advisors are unfamiliar with the legal rationale of an estate plan and are, therefore, unable to meet the client's needs. Frequently, a client does not have a financial advisor. It is often difficult to identify a competent financial advisor who will not undermine the advice of Attorney A.

Attorney A believes that the employment of a financial planner by her law firm will resolve these problems. The financial planner will provide competent advice to clients who have questions about their retirement plans, charitable giving, asset allocation, and asset preservation. Providing this service at the law firm will assure achievement of the client's estate planning goals. May an estate planning law firm employ a financial advisor to provide financial planning to clients of the firm?

Opinion #1:

Yes, however, a lawyer is subject to the Rules of Professional Conduct with respect to the provision of a law related service, such as financial planning, if the law related service is provided by the lawyer in circumstances that are not distinct from the lawyer's provision of legal services to clients.

If the financial advisor is a nonlawyer, he or she may be an employee of the law firm but may not become a partner, shareholder, or otherwise own an interest in the law firm. See Rule 2.3 and comment. Moreover, legal fees may not be shared with a nonlawyer employee. Rule 3.2.

In addition, the law firm must have in effect measures giving reasonable assurance that the conduct of a nonlawyer financial advisor will be compatible with the lawyer's professional obligations. Rule 3.3. In particular, the financial advisor may not be held out as offering legal services. Rule 3.1(a). Also, reasonable measures must be taken to explain to the client that the financial advisor is a nonlawyer who cannot provide legal advice.

Inquiry #2:

May an estate planning law firm provide financial products to clients as an extension of the services available to clients?

Opinion #2:

Yes, subject to the requirements of the Rules of Professional Conduct. To avoid conflicts of interest, no commission or fee may be earned (by the law firm, any lawyer with the law firm, or the financial advisor) on any financial product purchased by a client upon the recommendation of a lawyer in the firm or the financial advisor. Rule 5.4(c).

RPC 239

October 18, 1996

Advertising on the Internet

Opinion rules that a lawyer may display truthful information about the lawyer's legal services on a World Wide Web site on the Internet.

Inquiry:

May a lawyer display information about his or her legal services on a site on the World Wide Web which can be accessed via the Internet, a global network of interconnected computers?

Opinion:

Yes, provided the lawyer complies with the applicable Rules of Professional Conduct.

Rule 2.2(a) permits advertising in public media or through written communications not involving solicitation as defined in Rule 2.4. A site on the World Wide Web is a public media advertisement.

All communications by a lawyer concerning the lawyer or the lawyer's services, including communications via computer, are subject to the prohibition in Rule 2.1 on false or misleading communications. To avoid misleading a user of the Internet from another jurisdiction, a Web site should list all jurisdictions in which the lawyers in a firm are licensed to practice law. Rule 3.1(b). Similarly, the Web site must disclose the geographic location of the lawyer's or law firm's principal office. Rule 2.5 prohibits communications implying or stating that a lawyer is a certified specialist unless the lawyer is certified as a specialist by the State Bar or a certifying organization approved by the State Bar. However, a lawyer who is not a certified specialist may indicate areas of concentration or interest on a Web site.

Rule 2.2(b) requires a lawyer to retain a copy or recording of an advertisement or written communication for two years after its last dissemination along with a record of when and where it was used. Because Web sites are updated frequently, compliance with Rule 2.2(c) may be achieved by printing a hard copy of all screens on the Web site as launched and subsequently printing hard copies of any material changes in the format or content of the Web site. These hard copies should be retained for two years together with a record of when the screens were used on the Internet.

RPC 240

January 24, 1997

Limiting Representation to Personal Injury Claim

Opinion rules that a lawyer may decline to represent a client on the property damage claim while agreeing to represent the client on the personal injury claim arising out of a motor vehicle accident provided that the limited representation will not adversely affect the client's representation on the personal injury claim and the client consents after full disclosure.

Inquiry #1:

Motorist A and Motorist B were involved in a motor vehicle collision. Motorist A sustained bodily injuries and damage to her automobile. Motorist A asked Attorney A to represent her. Attorney A agreed to represent her only on her personal injury claim. Attorney A sent a letter of representation to Motorist B's automobile liability insurance carrier indicating that Attorney A represents Motorist A with respect to Motorist A's personal injury claim only. The letter states that a claims representative for the insurance carrier may continue to "deal with" Motorist A with respect to Motorist A's property damage claim but representatives of the insurance carrier should have no further contact with Motorist A with regard to her personal injury claim. May Attorney A ethically limit his representation of Motorist A to her personal injury claim?

Opinion #1:

Yes, provided Attorney A determines that the representation of Motorist A on her personal injury claim will not be adversely affected by allowing Motorist A to represent herself on the property damage claim and Motorist A consents to the limited representation after full disclosure by Attorney A of the risks involved. See Rule 7.1(b)(3).

Inquiry #2:

May a claims representative for Motorist B's insurance carrier contact Motorist A concerning the motor vehicle collision after receiving a letter of representation of the type described in Inquiry #1?

Opinion #2:

The Rules of Professional Conduct do not apply to the conduct of a claims representative for an insurance carrier. However, a lawyer who represents the insurance carrier is subject to the Rules. Rule 7.4(1) permits communications about the subject matter of a representation with a party the lawyer knows to be represented by another lawyer in the matter if the party's lawyer consents to the communication. Attorney A's letter of representation not only indicates that he does not represent Motorist A with regard to her property damage claim but that he also consents to communications with Motorist A about the property damage claim. Therefore, a lawyer for the insurance carrier may communicate with Motorist A provided the communications are limited to the property damage claim.

RPC 241

January 24, 1997

Participating in a Directory of Lawyers on the Internet

Opinion rules that a lawyer may participate in a directory of lawyers on the Internet if the information about the lawyer in the directory is truthful.

Inquiry:

A private company is developing an Internet site to be known as the National Attorney Locator. The site will contain an electronic directory of lawyers. The directory will include listings for lawyers from across the United States. These listings can be searched by lawyers' geographic location and areas of legal practice. Each listing will include the name of the lawyer or law firm, the name of a contact person at the firm, firm address, phone number, fax number, e-mail address, and areas of practice. Lawyers must apply and pay a fee to be listed on the directory. The Internet site will have a hypertext section on "Choosing an Attorney" which includes a statement that the National Attorney Locator is not a referral service but an electronic directory.

May a lawyer participate in a directory of lawyers on the Internet?

Opinion:

Yes, provided the information contained in the lawyer's listing is truthful and not misleading. Rule 2.1. To avoid misleading a user of the directory from another jurisdiction, the listing should indicate the jurisdictions in which the lawyer is licensed to practice law and the geographic location of the lawyer's or law firm's principal office. See RPC 239. Rule 2.5 prohibits communications implying that a lawyer is a specialist in an area of practice unless the lawyer is certified as a specialist by the North Carolina State Bar or a certifying organization approved by the State Bar. However, a lawyer who is not a certified specialist may indicate areas of concentration or interest in a listing on the directory.

RPC 242

January 24, 1997

Written Communication Soliciting Professional Employment from Newly Formed Corporation

Opinion rules that a lawyer may send a letter describing his services to the incorporators of a new business provided the words "This is an advertisement for legal services" are included in the communication.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A regularly obtains a list of newly formed corporations from the secretary of state's office. Attorney A then sends a letter of introduction to the incorporators of the new corporations in his community. The letter provides a general explanation of the legal services offered by Attorney A's law firm. These services include the preparation of legal documentation, drafting contracts, pursuing trade receivables, closing commercial loans, etc. The words "This is an advertisement for legal services" do not appear on the envelope or at the beginning of the body of the letter. Is this a violation of Rule 2.4(c)?

Opinion #1:

Yes. See Rule 2.4(c) which requires the statement "This is an advertisement for legal services" on targeted direct mail letters.

Inquiry #2:

Attorney A provides business consulting services as well as legal services to clients of his law firm. These business consulting services include resolving financial issues and preparing business, marketing, and financial plans. May Attorney A provide business consulting services to clients as a service of his law firm?

Opinion #2:

Yes. However, a lawyer is subject to the Rules of Professional Conduct with respect to the provision of a law related service, such as business consulting, if the law related service is provided by the lawyer in circumstances that are not distinct from the lawyer's provision of legal services to clients. See RPC 238.

RPC 243

January 24, 1997

Restraint in Exercising Prosecutor's Discretion to Calendar Cases

Opinion rules that it is prejudicial to the administration of justice for a prosecutor to threaten to use his discretion to schedule a criminal trial to coerce a plea agreement from a criminal defendant.

Inquiry #1:

Defense Attorney represents Client on a pending criminal charge. Prosecutor offered Client a plea bargain. Defense Attorney informs Prosecutor that Client will not accept the offered plea bargain. Prosecutor tells Defense Attorney that if Client does not accept the offered plea bargain, "Client's going to be sitting in the courtroom all week and he's going to be on the calendar every Monday morning for weeks to come." Is it unethical for Prosecutor to imply that he will use the statutory calendaring power of the district attorney's office to delay Client's trial if Client will not accept the plea bargain?

Opinion #1:

Yes, threatening to use the discretion to schedule a criminal trial to coerce a plea agreement from a criminal defendant is prejudicial to the administration of justice in violation of Rule 1.2(d) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. A prosecutor should use restraint in the discretionary exercise of the authority to calendar criminal cases. See comment [1] to Rule 7.3, "Special Responsibilities of a Prosecutor," ("... the prosecutor represents the sovereign and therefore should use restraint in the discretionary use of government powers....").

Inquiry #2:

If a lawyer overhears the conversation between Prosecutor and Defense Attorney, does the lawyer have a duty to report Prosecutor's conduct to the State Bar or other appropriate authority?

Opinion #2:

Rule 1.3(a) requires a lawyer who has knowledge that another lawyer has committed a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct "that raises a substantial question as to that lawyer's honesty, trustworthiness, or fitness as a lawyer in other respects" to report the conduct to the North Carolina State Bar or other appropriate authority. Comment [3] to Rule 1.3 states that > [t]his rule limits the reporting obligation to those offenses that a self-regulating profession must vigorously endeavor to prevent. A measure of judgment is, therefore, required in complying with the provisions of this rule. The term "substantial" refers to the seriousness of the alleged offense and not the quantum of evidence of which the lawyer is aware.

Prosecutor's conduct may be an isolated incident resulting from a momentary lapse in judgment. If so, such conduct does not raise a "substantial" question as to Prosecutor's fitness as a lawyer. The lawyer who overhears the conversation may want to counsel Prosecutor with regard to his conduct, but the lawyer is not required to report the conduct to the State Bar. However, if the lawyer knows that Prosecutor routinely abuses the discretionary power to schedule criminal cases or, after being advised that this conduct is a violation of the Rules, Prosecutor continues the conduct, the lawyer should report the matter to the State Bar or other appropriate authority.

RPC 244

January 24, 1997

Advance Disclaimer of Client-Lawyer Relationship

Opinion rules that although a lawyer asks a prospective client to sign a form stating that no client-lawyer relationship will be created by reason of a free consultation with the lawyer, the lawyer may not subsequently disclaim the creation of a client-lawyer relationship and represent the opposing party.

Inquiry:

Contemplating separation from his wife, Mr. A. scheduled a free initial consultation with Attorney X, an associate in XYZ Law Firm. Prior to the consultation, Mr. A completed an intake sheet that included the following disclosure in bold, capitalized print:

> It is acknowledged that my appointment is for a free office consultation. No legal advice will be given. I will be provided only general information concerning North Carolina laws. Upon a request, a fee will be quoted for legal representation. I understand that no attorney-client privilege will exist unless and until I pay this firm to represent me and that this free consultation will not preclude my spouse from employing Attorney X or any other attorney with XYZ Law Firm.

Mr. A's signature was required on the form.

Attorney X provided Mr. A with a general explanation of the law of domestic relations. During the consultation, Mr. A told Attorney X he was specifically interested in the consequences of separation and the effect of separation and divorce on his military retirement benefits. Mr. A divulged personal information pertinent to his potential separation from his wife. Attorney X addressed these areas as requested by Mr. A.

Three weeks later, Mr. A separated from his wife and set up a follow-up appointment with Attorney X. Four days before the scheduled appointment, Mr. A was served with a complaint for a divorce from bed and board. Another lawyer in XYZ Law Firm was identified in the complaint as the attorney of record for Mr. A's wife. Abandonment was alleged in the complaint and Mr. A's retirement benefits were included in the prayer for relief.

Is it permissible for a lawyer to disclaim the existence of a client-lawyer relationship in this manner and subsequently represent the opposing party?

Opinion:

No. See Rule 5.1 (d) of the Rules of Professional Conduct.

It is also unethical for a lawyer to encourage his or her client to seek to disqualify other lawyers from representing the client's adversary by arranging a series of initial consultations with the client in which confidential information is revealed. This is true whether it is the client or the lawyer who first suggests this course of action. RPC 181.

RPC 245

April 4, 1997

Release of File to Former Co-party

Opinion rules that a lawyer in possession of the legal file relating to the prior representation of co-parties in an action must provide the co-party the lawyer does not represent with access to the file and a reasonable opportunity to copy the contents of the file.

Inquiry:

Husband and Wife were represented jointly by Attorney A on a personal injury claim. During the settlement negotiations, Husband and Wife separated and subsequently divorced. The personal injury claim was settled. An equitable distribution claim is pending in which the proceeds of the personal injury settlement are in dispute.

After the personal injury claim was settled, the legal file for the matter was released by Attorney A to Husband's new lawyer, Attorney Z. Wife is represented in the domestic action by Attorney L. Wife and Attorney L asked Attorney Z to make the personal injury file available to Wife for copying, but Attorney Z refuses to release any of the contents of the file to either Wife or Attorney L. Should Attorney Z allow access to the personal injury file?

Opinion:

Yes. When there is joint representation of parties in a particular matter, each party is entitled to access to the legal file after the representation ends. See RPC 178. Although Attorney Z is not required to incur the expense of making a copy of the personal injury file for Wife, he must give Wife a reasonable opportunity to copy the materials in the file at her own expense. Id. Attorney Z should not release any confidential information of Husband that was received by Attorney A or Attorney Z after the joint representation in the personal injury matter ceased. Rule 4(b).

RPC 246

April 4, 1997

Duty of Confidentiality Owed to Prospective Client

Opinion rules that, under certain circumstances, a lawyer may not represent a party whose interests are opposed to the interests of a prospective client if confidential information of the prospective client must be used in the representation.

Inquiry:

In 1993, Attorney A represented Mr. and Ms. X on personal injury claims arising out of an automobile accident. In September 1996, Mr. X was seriously injured, as were three passengers in his automobile, in a single car accident. Mr. X contends that the accident was caused by the driver of another automobile who forced him off the road and then left the scene of the accident. While Mr. X was in the hospital, Ms. X went to Attorney A to retain him to represent Mr. X on his claim for injuries arising out of the accident. Attorney A interviewed Ms. X, discussed the facts of the case with her, and obtained confidential information from her concerning the cause of the accident. Attorney A kept a photocopy of the accident report Ms. X brought to him. At the end of the interview, Attorney stated that he believed Mr. X would be considered the party at fault and he did not want to represent Mr. X.

Attorney A now represents the three passengers in Mr. X's automobile on their liability claims against Mr. X for injuries arising out of the accident. Neither Mr. X nor Ms. X consents to the representation of the passengers on their claims against Mr. X. May Attorney A proceed with the representation of the passengers without the consent of Mr. X or Ms. X?

Opinion:

No, Attorney A may not continue his representation of the passengers if he obtained confidential information from Ms. X that he intends to use to the advantage of the passengers in their action against Mr. X.

Although the duties of professional responsibility flowing from the attorney-client relationship do not generally attach until after a lawyer has agreed to represent a client, "there are some duties, such as that of confidentiality under Rule 4, that may attach when the lawyer agrees to consider whether a client-lawyer relationship may be established." Rules of Professional Conduct, Section .02, Scope, comment [3]. When Ms. X met with Attorney A to retain him in the new matter, she did so in the context of her prior professional relationship with Attorney A. In this situation, it is reasonable to conclude that Ms. X believed that her communications with Attorney A would be treated as confidential. Therefore, the duty of confidentiality attached to her communications although Attorney A did not ultimately agree to the representation. Rule 4(b)(3) prohibits the use of confidential information of a client for the advantage of a third person unless the client consents. If Ms. X does not consent to the use of the information obtained from her, Attorney A has a conflict of interest and is disqualified from the representation of the passengers. Rule 5.1(c).

RPC 247

April 4, 1997

Payment of Fees by Electronic Transfer

Opinion provides guidelines for receipt of payment of earned and unearned fees by electronic transfers.

Inquiry #1:

Under Rule 10.1(c) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, mixed funds, unearned fees, and money advanced for costs must be deposited directly into a lawyer's trust account. Earned fees, nonrefundable retainers, and reimbursements for expenses advanced by the lawyer on behalf of a client must be deposited into the lawyer's general or operating account to avoid the commingling of the lawyer's funds with the clients' funds.

Lawyers may accept payment of fees by credit card. CPR 129. However, when a bank processes any payments by electronic transfer, the bank will only deposit funds into one bank account maintained by the bank's customer. There is no method whereby funds representing an earned fee can be deposited into the operating account and funds representing an advance payment for legal services yet to be rendered, or an unearned fee, may be deposited into the trust account. May a lawyer establish a third account to handle all payments by electronic transfer—including payments of earned and unearned fees? Or should the bank be instructed to send all payments by electronic transfer to the lawyer's trust account although a particular transfer may be for a fee that has already been earned?

Opinion #1:

An interim account should not be established. If a payment by electronic transfer of an earned fee cannot be distinguished by the bank from a payment by electronic transfer of an unearned fee, all payments by electronic transfer should be deposited into the lawyer's trust account and the earned fees should be withdrawn from the trust account promptly. See Rule 10.1(c). A lawyer may also deposit into the trust account funds sufficient to pay the bank's service charges for electronic transfers. Rule 10.1(c)(1). A ledger should be maintained for the service charges posted against such funds. Rule 10.2(c)(3).

Inquiry #2:

May a client charge legal expenses as well as legal fees to his credit card?

Opinion #2:

Yes. These funds should be deposited directly to the trust account and held there until used to pay expenses on behalf of the client.

Inquiry #3:

May a lawyer offset the discount rate charged by the bank for electronic transfers? For example, may the lawyer surcharge the client? If so, may the lawyer levy a surcharge on the whole amount or just that portion of the payment that constitutes the attorney's fee?

Opinion #3:

With full disclosure to the client, the lawyer may charge the client the expense associated with payment by electronic transfer.

Inquiry #4:

What procedure should a lawyer follow to return an unearned fee to a client if the fee was originally paid by electronic transfer?

Opinion #4:

A trust account check should be sent to the client in the amount of the unearned fee. Rule 10.2(c) and (e).

Inquiry #5:

May lawyers in different law firms share the use of electronic transfer equipment if the funds of the clients of different law firms will be temporarily commingled in one deposit account?

Opinion #5:

No, this procedure will jeopardize the integrity of the record keeping required for trust accounts. Rule 10.2.

RPC 248

April 4, 1997

Mortgage Brokerage Owned by Lawyers

Opinion rules that a lawyer who owns stock in a mortgage brokerage corporation may not act as the settlement agent for a loan brokered by the corporation. Nor may the other lawyers in the firm certify title or act as settlement agent for the closing.

Inquiry #1:

Attorneys A and B are shareholders in Corporation X, a mortgage brokerage. May Attorney C, a member of Attorney A and Attorney B's law firm but not a shareholder in Corporation X, certify title and/or act as settlement agent for a closing in which the mortgage was brokered by Corporation X?

Opinion#1:

No. Attorney A and Attorney B may not certify title or act as settlement agent because Attorney A and Attorney B's personal interest in seeing that Corporation X receives its fee or commission for placing the loan could conflict with the client-borrower's desire to close only when it is in his or her best interest to do so. See RPC 49 and RPC 188. The conflict of interest of Attorney A and Attorney B is imputed to Attorney C, and he is also disqualified from certifying the title and/or acting as a settlement agent for the closing. See Rule 5.11(a).

Inquiry #2:

May Attorney A and Attorney B act as "mere settlement agents" of a loan brokered by Corporation X if another lawyer, who is not a shareholder in Corporation X, certifies title and there is full disclosure as well as a waiver of any conflict of interests by the borrower?

Opinion #2:

No. The conflict between Attorney A and Attorney B's personal interests and the interests of the borrower may materially impair the judgment of Attorneys A and B. The risk to the client-borrower is so great that no lawyer should proceed, regardless of whether the client desires to consent. See RPC 49, Rule 5.1(b), and Rule 5.11(a).

RPC 249

April 4, 1997

Communication with a Child Represented by GAL and Attorney Advocate

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not communicate with a child who is represented by a GAL and an attorney advocate unless the lawyer obtains the consent of the attorney advocate.

Inquiry #1:

Joey is ten years old. He lives with his mother and her boyfriend. The Department of Social Services (DSS) substantiated numerous abuse allegations against the mother for improper discipline and beatings. After no improvement in the mother's behavior, DSS filed a neglect and abuse petition and received a nonsecure custody order. Pursuant to G.S. §7A-586(a) of the Juvenile Code, the court appointed a guardian ad litem and an attorney advocate to represent the interests of Joey. G.S. §7A-586(a) provides for the appointment of a guardian ad litem (GAL) for every child alleged to be abused or neglected. The statute states that a GAL who is not an attorney shall be appointed an attorney to assure the protection of the child's legal rights through the dispositional phase of the proceedings and after disposition when necessary to further the best interests of the child. The GAL and the attorney advocate have standing to represent the juvenile in all actions under the subchapter.

The attorney for Joey's mother, Attorney M, would like to interview Joey without informing the GAL or the attorney advocate. May he do so?

Opinion #1:

Rule 7.4(1) provides that, during the course of his or her representation of a client, a lawyer is prohibited from communicating or causing another to communicate about the subject of the representation with a party the lawyer knows to be represented by another lawyer in the matter unless the lawyer has the consent of the other lawyer or is authorized by law to do so. Joey is represented by an attorney, and the attorney advocate's consent must be obtained prior to any communication by Attorney M with Joey.

Inquiry #2:

Is the permission of the attorney for DSS sufficient to allow Attorney M to interview Joey without the consent of the attorney advocate?

Opinion #2:

No, the attorney for DSS does not represent Joey.

Inquiry #3:

The district attorney intends to prosecute the mother for child abuse. The district attorney would like to interview Joey without informing or obtaining the consent of the GAL or the attorney advocate. May the district attorney interview Joey under these circumstances?

Opinion #3:

No. The comment to Rule 7.4 states, "This rule also covers any person, whether or not a party to a formal proceeding, who is represented by counsel concerning the matter in question." See also RPC 87.

Inquiry #4:

May the district attorney instruct a sheriff's deputy to interview Joey without informing or obtaining the consent of the GAL or the attorney advocate?

Opinion #4:

No, an attorney may not instruct an agent to do that which the attorney cannot do. See Rule 3.3.

Inquiry #5:

May the attorney for DSS interview Joey without informing or obtaining consent of the GAL or the attorney advocate?

Opinion #5:

No. See Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #6:

If the GAL is also an attorney, would any of the above opinions be different?

Opinion #6:

No. If an attorney advocate was appointed, the GAL is not acting in the capacity of an attorney for the juvenile. Rule 7.4(d) requires the consent of the attorney representing the client prior to direct communication with the client.

Inquiry #7:

If the court appoints a GAL for Joey but does not appoint an attorney advocate, may the attorney for Joey's mother, the district attorney, or the attorney for DSS interview Joey without the consent of the GAL?

Opinion #7:

No, the consent of the GAL must be obtained before communicating with Joey. This is consistent with the policy and purpose behind G.S. §71-586. See also RPC 61.

Inquiry #8:

Would the preceding opinions be different if a guardian ad litem were appointed pursuant to G.S. §1A-1, Rule 17, which provides for the appointment of a guardian ad litem for infants or incompetent persons who are parties in civil actions?

Opinion #8:

No, if the GAL has an attorney for the matter, opposing counsel may not communicate with the GAL or the minor without the consent of the attorney. Rule 7.4(1). Moreover, if the guardian ad litem is not represented by an attorney in the matter, RPC 61 still prohibits communications with the minor unless the consent of the guardian ad litem is obtained.

RPC 250—Withdrawn

July 18, 1997

Withdrawn October 24, 1997

Editor's Note: RPC 250 was adopted on July 18, 1997. The opinion was withdrawn by the State Bar Council on October 24, 1997. A substitute opinion was proposed and subsequently adopted in January 1998 as 97 Formal Ethics Opinion 10.

RPC 251

July 18, 1997

Representation of Multiple Claimants

Opinion rules that a lawyer may represent multiple claimants in a personal injury case, even though the available insurance proceeds are insufficient to compensate all claimants fully, provided each claimant, or his or her legal representative gives informed consent to the representation, and the lawyer does not advocate against the interests of any client in the division of the insurance proceeds.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A represents four unrelated adults on their individual claims for personal injuries arising out of an accident which occurred when the bus on which they were riding collided with an automobile. As passengers, none of the claimants is liable for the accident and there are no crossclaims between the claimants. Inadequate settlement offers were received and it is now apparent that the available insurance coverage is not sufficient to compensate all of the claimants fully. May Attorney A continue to represent the multiple claimants?

Opinion #1:

Yes, provided the claimants give informed consent to the multiple representation.

The representation of multiple claimants in a common accident can lead to two different conflicts of interest. On the one hand, there may be questions of liability and, therefore, potential crossclaims among the claimants. Representing clients with potential claims against each other places the lawyer in the position of being an advocate against his or her own client or clients and, ordinarily, is impermissible. See Rule 5.1(a). On the other hand, although there may be no crossclaims between the claimants, as in this inquiry, when there are limited insurance funds from which multiple claimants may be compensated, there is a potential for competition between the claimants for their share of the insurance proceeds. A lawyer who represents multiple claimants in this situation risks becoming an advocate for the increased recovery of one claimant at the expense of the other claimants. Nevertheless, this potential conflict does not involve directly antagonistic interests and can be more readily managed than the former conflict.

Rule 5.1(b) permits a lawyer to represent a client, even though the representation of the client may be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client, if the lawyer reasonably believes that the representation of the client will not be adversely affected and the client consents after full disclosure including an explanation of the risks and advantages of common representation. In the current inquiry, a lawyer may determine that he or she will be able to facilitate an acceptable division of the insurance proceeds among the multiple claimants without advocating against the interests of any of the claimants. Moreover, to require each claimant to have a separate lawyer to prove liability may result in a duplication of effort and additional expense for the claimants. Therefore, a lawyer may represent multiple claimants provided there are no conflicts with regard to the liability issue and the lawyer obtains informed consent from all of the claimants at the beginning of the representation. The disclosure to the claimants must include an explanation of the consequences of limited insurance funds and the possibility that there may be a dispute among the claimants as to the division of the insurance proceeds.

If the case is tried, the lawyer must zealously represent the damage claims of each of the claimants and let the jury decide the amount that each will recover. If an offer of settlement is made, the lawyer may facilitate mediation among the claimants to determine how the offer will be divided. See RPC 123. Alternatively, the claimants may agree to accept the recommendation of the lawyer with regard to an equitable division of the settlement offer. The lawyer may make such a recommendation only if the lawyer can do so impartially. See RPC 123. The lawyer must withdraw from the representation of all of the claimants if the lawyer is placed in the role of advocate for one or more of the claimants against the other claimants. The lawyer must also withdraw from the representation if one or more of the claimants do not agree to accept the settlement offer. Rule 5.7. If the lawyer must withdraw, the lawyer may continue to represent one or more of the claimants only with the consent of the claimants whose cases the lawyer relinquishes. Rule 5.1(d) and RPC 123.

Inquiry #2:

Attorney A represents six minor children and two adults on their claims for personal injuries which occurred when the school bus in which they were riding was involved in an accident. It is assumed Attorney A also represents the parents of the minor claimants on their separate claims for the medical expenses incurred by their children. After receiving inadequate settlement offers, Attorney A filed suit. It then became apparent that the available insurance proceeds are insufficient to compensate all claimants fully.

May attorney A represent the eight injured claimants?

Opinion #2:

Yes, provided there are no crossclaims between the claimants and, at the beginning of the representation, each claimant, or claimant's legal guardian, gives informed consent to the multiple representation. See Opinion #1 above. Before a lawsuit is filed, the parents or legal guardian of each minor may give such consent. RPC 123. After litigation is commenced, even if it is for the sole purpose of obtaining court approval of the settlements of the minors' claims, independent guardians ad litem must be appointed for the minors and the guardians ad litem must give informed consent to the multiple representation. To be independent, a guardian ad litem should have no separate claim of his or her own to pursue, including a claim for medical expenses for a dependent child. See RPC 109 and RPC 123. The disclosure at the beginning of the representation, and to the guardians ad litem, must include an explanation of the consequences of limited insurance funds and the possibility of a dispute among the claimants as to the division of the insurance proceeds. Rule 5.1 (b).

See Opinion #1 with regard to the lawyer's role upon receipt of an offer to settle the multiple claims.

Inquiry #3:

In the situation described in Inquiry #2, may Attorney A represent more than one child from the same family?

Opinion #3:

Yes, subject to the requirements set forth in opinions #1 and #2 above.

Inquiry #4:

May Attorney A represent the parents of one of the minor claimants on the parents' claim for medical expenses and also represent the minor child through an independent guardian ad litem?

Opinion #4:

Yes. See Opinion #2 and RPC 123.

RPC 252

July 18, 1997

Editor's Note: To the extent that this opinion is contrary to Rule 4.4, Respect for Rights of Third Persons, paragraph (b) and comments [2] and [3], as revised in 2003 and thereafter, the rule and comment are controlling.

Receipt of Inadvertently Disclosed Materials from Opposing Party

Opinion rules that a lawyer in receipt of materials that appear on their face to be subject to the attorney-client privilege or otherwise confidential, which were inadvertently sent to the lawyer by the opposing party or opposing counsel, should refrain from examining the materials and return them to the sender.

Inquiry #1:

Insurance Company is the liability carrier for Defendant Motorist. Plaintiff is represented by Attorney C. After settlement discussions failed, Attorney C filed suit on behalf of Plaintiff. Insurance Company hired Attorney X to defend the suit. Before responsive pleadings were filed, adjuster for Insurance Company erroneously sent the company's claim file to Attorney C. The claim file was sent by certified mail, return receipt requested, addressed to Attorney C. The cover letter was also addressed to Attorney C. However, the letter's salutation read "Dear Attorney X." A copy of the letter to the defendant from the adjuster was also enclosed with the file. This letter incorrectly informed the defendant that he would be defended by Attorney C. In addition to a photo of Plaintiff's vehicle, Plaintiff's medical records, and Attorney C's demand letter, the file included a "claim diary" that Attorney C read and believes contains prima facie evidence of an unfair and deceptive trade practice by Insurance Company.

Attorney C sent a copy of the file to the adjuster and to Attorney X. Attorney X demands the return of the original file. Is Attorney C required to return the original file to Insurance Company?

Opinion #1:

Yes. Attorney C has a duty of honesty and a duty of courtesy to all persons involved in the legal process. See Rule 1.2(c) and Rule 7.1(a). The original file does not belong to Attorney C or to his client. From the cover letter, it could be readily ascertained that the accompanying materials were subject to the attorney-client privilege or otherwise confidential and were sent to Attorney C inadvertently. Upon realizing that the materials were not intended for his eyes, Attorney C should have (1) refrained from reviewing the file materials, (2) notified the opposing counsel of their receipt, and (3) followed opposing counsel's instructions as to the disposition of such materials. Under these circumstances, the receiving attorney may not use the substance of the materials inadvertently sent to him to the advantage of his client.

Inquiry #2:

Was it acceptable for Attorney C to read the cover letter and examine the claim file although Attorney C realized from the salutation on the cover letter that the letter and the attached materials were sent to him erroneously?

Opinion #2:

No. A lawyer who is the recipient of an inadvertent disclosure of written materials by an opposing party or opposing counsel is required to discontinue reading the materials as soon as the lawyer realizes that the materials may be subject to the attorney-client privilege of others, or are otherwise confidential communications involving an attorney, and the materials were not intended for his or her eyes. This requirement is consistent with a lawyer's duty of honesty as well as a lawyer's duty to avoid offensive tactics and treat with courtesy and consideration all persons involved in the legal process. Rule 1.2(c) and Rule 7.1(a)(1). It also respects the opposing party's confidentiality. See Rule 4.

Inquiry #3:

Would the response to Inquiry #2 be different if the inadvertently disclosed materials were sent by opposing counsel instead of a representative of the opposing party?

Opinion #3:

No.

---

97 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

October 24, 1997

Editor's Note: Opinion was originally published as RPC 253. Before adoption, it was revised to reference the appropriate sections of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct under which it was finally decided.

Appearance Before Judge Who Is Lawyer's Client

Opinion rules that a lawyer may appear in court before a judge the lawyer represents in a personal matter provided there is disclosure of the representation and all parties and lawyers agree that the relationship between the lawyer and the judge is immaterial to the trial of the matter.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A regularly appears before Judge Z in domestic court. Judge Z asked Attorney A to represent him in his own domestic case. Attorney A sought the guidance of the chief district court judge. The chief district court judge instructed Attorney A to disclose his representation of Judge Z to the opposing lawyer in any case scheduled to be heard by Judge Z. The opposing lawyer may agree that Judge Z will hear the case or the lawyer may ask Judge Z to recuse himself. If the opposing lawyer asks Judge Z to recuse himself, the chief district court judge will find another judge to hear the matter. May Attorney A appear before Judge Z after disclosure of his representation of Judge Z to the opposing counsel and party and their consent to the hearing of the matter by Judge Z?

Opinion #1:

Yes. It appears that the chief district court judge's opinion is based upon Canon III D of the Code of Judicial Conduct which provides:

> A judge disqualified [in a proceeding in which his impartiality might reasonably be questioned by reason of financial interests or involvement] may, instead of withdrawing from the proceeding, disclose on the record the basis of his disqualification. If, based on such disclosure, the parties and lawyers, independently of the judge's participation, all agree in writing that the judge's relationship is immaterial or that his financial interest is insubstantial, the judge is no longer disqualified and may participate in the proceeding. The agreement, signed by all parties and lawyers, shall be incorporated in the record of the proceeding.

Compliance with the procedure set forth in the Code of Judicial Conduct protects the interest of the opposing party and satisfies any concern regarding Attorney A's conduct. To the extent it is inconsistent with this opinion, CPR 183 is withdrawn.

Inquiry #2:

Must Attorney A disclose his representation of Judge Z to his client?

Opinion #2:

Yes, this would appear to be necessary to obtain the consent to proceed from the opposing party and lawyer. Judge Z's consent to this disclosure is implied. Rule 1.6 (d)(1) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct.

Inquiry #3:

May Attorney A rely upon the opinion of the chief district court judge or should Attorney A request that Judge Z not be assigned to any of his cases?

Opinion #3:

The courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the State Bar over the conduct of the lawyers who appear before them. G.S. §84-36. A lawyer's compliance with the opinion of the local chief district court judge with regard to a matter involving potential bias on the part of a judge is not a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct.

Inquiry #4:

After Judge Z's legal representation is concluded, does Attorney A have any further duty to inform opposing counsel of his prior representation of Judge Z?

Opinion #4:

No.

---

97 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

January 16, 1998

Editor's Note: Opinion was originally published as RPC 254. Before adoption, it was revised to reference the appropriate sections of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct under which it was finally decided.

Communications with Unrepresented Former Employees of Represented Organizations

Opinion rules that a lawyer may interview an unrepresented former employee of an adverse represented organization about the subject of the representation unless the former employee participated substantially in the legal representation of the organization in the matter.

Inquiry #1:

Y Insurance Company carries the workers' compensation coverage for Employer. Adjuster, an employee of Y Insurance Company, was assigned to investigate and manage Employee's workers' compensation claim against Employer. During the three years that she handled Employee's claim, Adjuster played a major role in the decision making relative to the defense of the claim.

Last year, Attorney A was assigned to represent Y Insurance Company and Employer in Employee's workers' compensation action. Adjuster and Attorney A have worked closely together on the defense of the case. Adjuster's input, her knowledge of the claims file, and the records Adjuster has maintained in the claims file are integral to Attorney A's defense of the case.

May the lawyers for Employee communicate directly with Adjuster about Employee's claim without the consent of Attorney A?

Opinion #1:

No. Rule 4.2(a) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct provides: "[d]uring the representation of a client, a lawyer shall not communicate about the subject of the representation with a person the lawyer knows to be represented by another lawyer in the matter unless the lawyer has the consent of the other lawyer or is authorized by law to do so." The ABA Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility states, in Formal Opinion 95-396 (1995), that such "anticontact rules provide protection of the represented person against overreaching by adverse counsel, safeguard the client-lawyer relationship from interference by adverse counsel, and reduce the likelihood that clients will disclose privileged or other information that might harm their interests."

An organization that is represented by legal counsel in a matter also falls within the protection of Rule 4.2. Communications by adverse counsel with certain personnel of a represented organization are prohibited. Comment [5] to Rule 4.2 states that "…this rule will prohibit communications by the lawyer concerning the matter with persons having managerial responsibility on behalf of the organization…." Compare RPC 67 (permitting ex parte communications with a "rank and file" employee of an adverse corporate party). Although an adjuster for an insurance company may not be considered a "manager" or "management personnel" for the company, the adjuster does have managerial responsibility for the claims that she investigates. The adjuster is also privy to privileged communications with the legal counsel for the company and is generally involved in substantive conversations with the organization's lawyer regarding the representation of the organization. To safeguard the client-lawyer relationship from interference by adverse counsel and to reduce the likelihood that privileged information will be disclosed, Rule 4.2(a) protects from direct communications by opposing counsel not only employees who are clearly high-level management officials but also any employee who, like the adjuster in this inquiry, has participated substantially in the legal representation of the organization in a particular matter. Such participation includes substantive and/or privileged communications with the organization's lawyer as to the strategy and objectives of the representation, the management of the case, and other matters pertinent to the representation.

Inquiry #2:

About three months before an important Industrial Commission hearing in Employee's case, Adjuster left the employment of Y Insurance Company to become an adjuster for Z Insurance Company. Attorney B represents Employee in the workers' compensation action. Not long before the Industrial Commission hearing, Adjuster was in Attorney B's offices on an unrelated matter. Attorney A was not present. Attorney B approached Adjuster to discuss Employee's case. Should Attorney B have obtained the consent of Attorney A prior to speaking directly with Adjuster with regard to Employee's workers' compensation case?

Opinion #2:

Yes. The protection afforded by Rule 4.2(a) to "safeguard the client-lawyer relationship from interference by adverse counsel" can be assured to a represented organization only if there is an exception to the general rule that permits ex parte contact with former employees of an organization without the consent of the organization's lawyer. See RPC 81 (permitting a lawyer to interview an unrepresented former employee of an adverse corporate party without the permission of the corporation's lawyer). The exception must be made for contacts with a former employee who, while with the organization, participated substantially in the legal representation of the organization, including participation in and knowledge of privileged communications with legal counsel. Permitting direct communications with such a person, although no longer employed by the organization, would interfere with the effective representation of the organization and the organization's relationship with its legal counsel. Such communications are permitted only with the consent of the organization's lawyer or in formal discovery proceedings. The general rule, set forth in RPC 81, permitting a lawyer to interview an unrepresented former employee of an adverse organizational party without the consent of the organization's lawyer, remains in effect with the limited exception explained above.

Inquiry #3:

[The facts of this inquiry are unrelated to the preceding inquiries.]

Employee X is no longer employed by Corporation. While an employee of Corporation, however, Employee X may have engaged in activities that would constitute the sexual harassment of other employees of Corporation. An action alleging sexual harassment based on Employee X's conduct was brought against Corporation. Although he is not a named defendant in the action, Employee X's acts, while an employee, may be imputed to the organization. When he was employed, Employee X did not discuss the corporation's representation in this matter with Corporation's lawyer. Employee X is unrepresented. May the lawyer for the plaintiffs in the sexual harassment action interview Employee X without the consent of the lawyer for Corporation?

Opinion #3:

Yes. Unlike the adjuster in the two prior inquiries, Employee X was not an active participant in the legal representation of his former employer in the sexual harassment action. It does not appear that he was involved in any decision making relative to the representation of Corporation nor was he privy to privileged client-lawyer communications relative to the representation. Rather, Employee X is a fact witness and a potential defendant in his own right. Permitting ex parte contact with Employee X by the plaintiff's counsel will not interfere with Corporation's relationship with its lawyer nor will it result in the disclosure of privileged client-lawyer communications regarding the representation. Comment [5] to Rule 4.2, which indicates that the rule prohibits communications with any employee "… whose act or omission in connection with the matter may be imputed to the organization for purposes of civil or criminal liability or whose statement may constitute an admission on the part of the organization," should be applicable only to current employees. The purpose of Rule 4.2 is not enhanced by extending the prohibition to former employees who, during the time of their employment, did not participate substantively in the representation of the organization.

Although the plaintiff's lawyer may communicate directly with the Employee X, the lawyer's communications are subject to the protections for unrepresented persons set fourth in Rule 4.3. Rule 4.3(a) prohibits a lawyer from giving advice to an unrepresented person, other than the advice to secure legal counsel, if the interests of the person are in conflict with the interests of the lawyer's client. Similarly, Rule 4.3(b) requires the lawyer to make known to the unrepresented person that the lawyer is not disinterested.

---

97 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

October 24, 1997

Editor's Note: Opinion was originally published as RPC 255. Before adoption, it was revised to reference the appropriate sections of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct under which it was finally decided.

Ex Parte Communication with a Judge Regarding a Scheduling or Administrative Matter

Opinion rules that a lawyer may engage in an ex parte communication with a judge regarding a scheduling or administrative matter only if necessitated by the administration of justice or exigent circumstances and diligent efforts to notify opposing counsel have failed.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A represents Defendant X who is charged with driving while impaired. The case is scheduled for trial in district court the following day. Criminal district court is in session daily, and a motion to continue could be heard in open court. Attorney A, outside the course of official proceedings, contacts the local district court judge to request a continuance of the trial of Defendant X. Attorney A does not discuss the merits of the case with the local judge. Is a communication with the local district court judge to request a continuance, made without the prosecutor's knowledge or presence, an ethical violation?

Opinion #1:

Yes, unless the ex parte communication is necessitated by the administration of justice or exigent circumstances and diligent efforts to contact the opposing lawyer (in this case, the prosecutor) have failed.

Rule 3.5(a) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits communications with the judge except in the following situations: (1) in the course of official proceedings; (2) in writing, if the lawyer promptly delivers a copy of the writing to opposing counsel; (3) orally, upon adequate notice to the opposing counsel; or (4) as otherwise authorized by law. If an ex parte oral communication with a judge may influence the outcome of a case, the lawyer should avoid the communication unless the opposing party receives adequate notice or the communication is allowed by law. See RPC 237 (citing statutes permitting ex parte communications in certain emergencies). Nevertheless, the administration of justice or exigent circumstances may necessitate an ex parte oral communication with a judge to resolve a scheduling or administrative matter. If so, the lawyer may engage in the ex parte communication with the judge only after a diligent effort has been made to notify the opposing lawyer.

Inquiry #2:

A retired judge from outside the district is scheduled to preside over the next day's session of district court. Attorney A is seeking the continuance from the local district court judge because he wants to avoid the trial of Defendant X's case by the visiting judge. Does this affect the opinion set forth above?

Opinion #2:

No.

Inquiry #3:

Defendant Z is charged with driving while impaired. He is the grandson of a retired deputy sheriff who has been very active in local politics for many years. The deputy sheriff supported and campaigned for at least two of the three local district court judges. At least two of the judges have visited in the retired deputy's home.

One of the three judges voluntarily recused himself from the trial of Defendant Z. The day before the case was scheduled for trial, the prosecutor separately approached each of the other two judges. Without the knowledge of Defendant Z's lawyer, the prosecutor informed each judge of Defendant Z's relationship to the retired deputy sheriff and inquired whether the judge would hear the case. Each judge indicated that he would recuse himself from the case. As a consequence, the trial was postponed in order that it might be heard by a judge from another county. Is a communication with a local judge to inquire as to whether the judge will recuse himself from a particular case, made without the opposing lawyer's knowledge or presence, an ethical violation?

Opinion #3:

Yes. See Opinion #1 above.

97 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

April 17, 1998

Nonrefundable Fees

Opinion provides that flat fees may be collected at the beginning of a representation, treated as presently owed to the lawyer, and deposited into the lawyer's general operating account or paid to the lawyer but that if a collected fee is clearly excessive under the circumstances of the representation, a refund to the client of some or all of the fee is required.

Inquiry #1:

May a lawyer enter into a fee agreement with a client that characterizes a fee collected at the beginning of the representation as "nonrefundable" regardless of circumstances of the termination of the representation?

Opinion #1:

The better approach to the setting of fees is not to characterize any fee as "nonrefundable." This is because a lawyer may not enter into an agreement for, charge or collect a fee that is clearly excessive. Revised Rule 1.5(a) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct. Reasonable fees can be charged but what is reasonable depends upon the circumstances of a particular case. See Revised Rule 1.5(b) for the factors considered in determining whether a fee is clearly excessive. Whether a fee is described to a client as "nonrefundable" or no mention is made as to whether the fee is refundable, if a particular collected fee is clearly excessive under the circumstances, the portion of the fee that is excessive must be refunded.

The client has a right to terminate the representation at any time with or without cause. Covington v. Rhodes, 38 N.C. App. 61, 65, 247 S.E. 2d 305, 308 (1978), cert. denied, 296 N.C. 410, 251 S.E.2d 468 (1979). However, if a matter is in litigation, this right is subject to any rule of the tribunal requiring permission for withdrawal from representation. See Rule 1.16(c).

Inquiry #2:

May a lawyer charge and collect a set fee to perform specified legal services regardless of the time that will be required to complete the services?

Opinion #2:

Yes, such a fee is permissible provided the fee is not clearly excessive under the circumstances of the representation. Traditionally called a "flat fee," this type of fee provides economic value to the client and the lawyer alike because it enables the client to know, in advance, the expense of the representation and it rewards the lawyer for efficiently handling the matter.

A flat fee is usually collected at the beginning of the representation, treated by the lawyer as money to which the lawyer is immediately entitled, and deposited into the lawyer's general operating account or paid to the lawyer. See RPC 158 and Revised Rule 1.5(c).

Inquiry #3:

May a lawyer collect a fee at the beginning of a client's representation and deposit the fee in the lawyer's general operating account?

Opinion #3:

There are two types of fees that are charged and collected at the beginning of a representation which are considered "presently owed" to the lawyer and, therefore, may be deposited directly into the lawyer's general operating account (see Revised Rule 1.15-1(d)):

1. A "true" general retainer. A true general retainer is a payment "for the reservation of the exclusive services of the lawyer which is not used to pay for the legal services provided by the lawyer." Revised Rule 1.15-1, Comment [4]. The lawyer commits himself to represent the client for a time certain or on specified matters. The true general retainer finds general application in those instances where corporate clients, merchants or businessmen have a specific need to consult the lawyer on a regular or recurring basis. The retainer reserves the lawyer's services. The true general retainer must not be clearly excessive. What is customarily charged in similar situations may determine whether a specific true general retainer is clearly excessive. See Revised Rule 1.5(b)(3).

2. A flat fee for specified legal services to be completed within a reasonable period of time. The client and the lawyer both contemplate what the client needs and what the lawyer expects to perform, and they agree that the client will pay a flat fee for those services. A flat fee arrangement is customarily identified with isolated transactions such as representations on traffic citations, domestic actions, criminal charges, and commercial transactions. A client must make a decision as to whether he or she can afford counsel and may prefer to know, at the beginning of the representation, how much he or she will have to pay for the representation.

If a client gives a lawyer a check that includes payment for the legal fee and for court or other costs associated with the representation, the lawyer must deposit the check into the trust account and withdraw from the trust account that portion of the deposit that represents earned legal fees. See RPC 158.

Inquiry #4:

At the beginning of the representation, a lawyer may ask a client to make a payment which is in part a true general retainer or a flat fee and in part an advance to secure the payment of fees yet to be earned. Into which of the lawyer's bank accounts should the payment be deposited?

Opinion #4:

There should be a clear agreement between the lawyer and the client as to which portion of the payment is a true general retainer, or a flat fee, and which portion of the payment is an advance. Absent such an agreement, the entire payment must be deposited into the trust account and will be considered client funds until earned. If there is a clear agreement that a portion of the fee paid by the client is either a true general retainer or a flat fee and the client gives the lawyer a check for the entire amount, the entire amount should be deposited into the trust account and that portion of the payment that is the general retainer or the flat fee should be withdrawn and deposited into the general operating account or paid to the lawyer. Revised Rule 1.15-1(e)(2).

The funds advanced by the client and deposited in the trust account may be withdrawn by the lawyer when earned by the performance of legal services on behalf of the client pursuant to the representation agreement with the client. Revised Rule 1.15-1(d). Should the client terminate the relationship, that portion of the advance fee deposited in the lawyer's trust account which is unearned must be refunded to the client.

Written fee agreements are not required by the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct. Nevertheless, a prudent lawyer will insist upon a written fee agreement prior to the representation of every client. The written agreement makes certain what too often rests in uncertainty when differences occur.

97 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

January 16, 1998

Ex Parte Submission of Proposed Order to Judge

Opinion rules that a lawyer must give the opposing counsel a copy of a proposed order simultaneously with the lawyer's submission of the proposed order to a judge in an ex parte communication.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A represents a prisoner condemned to death. He files a motion for appropriate relief ("MAR") seeking a new trial, pursuant to G.S. §15A-1415 et seq., by mailing the motion to the clerk of Superior Court with a letter requesting that the MAR be brought to the court's attention. Attorney A also serves a copy of the motion on Attorney B who is the district attorney and represents the state of North Carolina in this matter. Attorney C, an assistant attorney general, also represents the state in the matter.

After receiving the MAR, Attorney C prepares an answer and proposed order. The proposed order decides numerous contested factual and legal issues in the state's favor, dismisses the MAR, and includes space for the judge's signature. Attorney B delivers the MAR, the unfiled answer, the proposed order, and documents from the court file to Superior Court Judge D in chambers. Judge D has had no previous involvement in the case. Attorney B offers to make any modifications to the proposed order requested by Judge D.

Subsequently, Judge D signs the proposed order and returns it to Attorney B. Attorney B then files the answer and the signed order with the clerk of court and mails copies of the documents to Attorney A. This occurs five days after Attorney B delivered the answer and proposed order to Judge D. When Attorney A receives the answer and order from Attorney B, it is the first notice that Attorney A has received that the case was under consideration by Judge D. May lawyers make a written presentation to a judge without timely notice to the opposing lawyer?

Opinion #1:

No. Rule 3.5 of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct addresses a lawyer's duty to maintain the impartiality of a tribunal. Comment [7] to Rule 3.5 includes the following observations:

> All litigants and lawyers should have access to tribunals on an equal basis. Generally, in adversary proceedings, a lawyer should not communicate with a judge relative to a matter pending before, or which is to be brought before, a tribunal over which the judge presides in circumstances which might have the effect or give the appearance of granting undue advantage to one party.

This advice should be heeded in all ex parte communications with a judge.

Rule 3.5(a)(3)(ii) permits a lawyer to communicate ex parte with a judge in writing only "if a copy of the writing is furnished simultaneously to the opposing party." The repealed rule on the same topic, repealed Rule 7.10(b)(2), allowed a written communication with a judge "if the lawyer promptly deliver[ed] a copy of the writing to opposing counsel..." The rule was changed to emphasize the importance of notifying the opposing counsel of an ex parte written communication with a judge. Delivery of a document to opposing counsel five days after its submission to a judge would not be "prompt" under the standard of the repealed rule and it utterly fails to meet the requirement of "simultaneous" delivery under Rule 3.5(a)(3)(ii). To comply with Rule 3.5, a lawyer must hand deliver a copy of the written communication to the opposing lawyer at the same time or prior to the time that the written communication is hand delivered to the judge or, if the written communication is mailed to the judge, the lawyer must put the written communication in the mail for delivery to opposing counsel at the same time or before it is placed in the mail for delivery to the judge.

Inquiry #2:

It is the practice of the bar in this judicial district to give the opposing lawyer prior or contemporaneous notice of the submission to the court of a proposed order and the opportunity to comment upon or object to the proposed order. May a lawyer fail to comply with this practice by submitting a proposed order to a judge in an ex parte communication prior to providing the proposed order to the opposing counsel?

Opinion #2:

No. See Opinion #1 above. Such conduct also violates Rule 3.5(a)(4)(i) which prohibits conduct intended to disrupt a tribunal, including "failing to comply with known local customs of courtesy or practice of the bar or a particular tribunal without giving opposing counsel timely notice of the intent not to comply." Moreover, failure to give the opposing lawyer an opportunity to comment upon or object to a proposed order before it is submitted to the judge is unprofessional and may be prejudicial to the administration of justice. It is the more professional practice for a lawyer to provide the opposing counsel with a copy of a proposed order in advance of delivering the proposed order to the judge and thereby give the opposing counsel an adequate opportunity to comment upon or object to the proposed order.

At a minimum, Rule 3.5(a)(3)(ii) requires a lawyer to furnish the opposing lawyer with a copy of the proposed order simultaneously with its delivery to the judge and, if the proposed order is furnished to the opposing counsel simultaneously, Rule 3.3(d) requires the lawyer to disclose to the judge in the ex parte communication that the opposing lawyer has received a copy of the proposed order but has not had an opportunity to present any comments or objections to the judge. Rule 3.3(d) provides that "in an ex parte proceeding, a lawyer shall inform the tribunal of all material facts known to the lawyer which will enable the tribunal to make an informed decision, whether or not the facts are adverse."

97 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

January 16, 1998

Failure to Include Address on Direct Mail

Opinion rules that the omission of the lawyer's address from a targeted direct mail letter is a material misrepresentation.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney sends targeted direct mail letters to individuals he knows to be in need of legal representation in particular matters. The letterhead on the stationery for the direct mail letters does not include an address for Attorney's law firm although it lists an 800 telephone number. May a lawyer send a targeted direct mail letter to a prospective client on stationery that includes no address for the lawyer or the lawyer's firm?

Opinion #1:

No. Rule 7.1 of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits false or misleading communications by a lawyer. Paragraph (a) of that rule defines a false or misleading communication as a communication that "contains a material misrepresentation of fact or law, or omits a fact necessary to make a statement considered as whole not materially misleading." The omission of a lawyer's address from the stationery used for targeted direct mail letters is a material misrepresentation because a recipient of the letter will not be able to determine whether the lawyer practices in the recipient's community, in another community in North Carolina, or out of state. Cf., RPC 217.

Inquiry #2:

Attorney's targeted direct mail letters include the disclosure statement, "This is an advertisement for legal services," which is required by Rule 7.3(c). The print used for the disclosure statement appears to be the same size as the print used for the name of Attorney's law firm. However, the name of Attorney's law firm appears in bold print while the disclosure statement appears in light print that provides little contrast with the color of the stationery. Therefore, the disclosure statement is very difficult to see. Does this stationery comply with the requirements of Revised Rule 7.3(c) regulating targeted direct mail letters?

Opinion #2:

No. The disclosure statement must be in a shade of print that contrasts sufficiently with the stationery to be easily read by a recipient. Revised Rule 7.3(c) requires the advertising disclosure statement "at the beginning of the body of the written communication in print as large or larger than the lawyer's or law firm's name..." The font size and location of the disclosure are dictated by the rule to insure that the recipients of direct mail letters have notice that the letters are advertisements and may be discarded. This purpose is defeated if the shade of the print is so light that the disclaimer cannot be read.

97 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

January 16, 1998

Representation of Corporation After Filing Bankruptcy

Opinion rules that, after a corporation files a Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition and at the request of the bankruptcy trustee, a lawyer who previously represented the corporation may continue to represent the corporation's bankruptcy estate and the bankruptcy trustee in a civil action provided the lawyer understands that the trustee is responsible for making decisions about the representation and the representation is not adverse to a former client of the lawyer.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A was employed by Corporation B to represent the corporation in a civil suit against Attorney X for breach of contract, breach of fiduciary duty, and double damages. Shareholder D is the sole shareholder and president of Corporation B. Attorney A received his directions regarding the representation of Corporation B from Shareholder D.

While the civil suit was pending, Corporation B filed a Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition. The filing of a bankruptcy petition by Corporation B created a bankruptcy estate to be administered for the benefit of creditors. Under §541 of the United States Bankruptcy Code (11 USC. §541), the bankruptcy estate includes all legal and equitable interests of the debtor in property including the cause of action against Attorney C. Pursuant to §§541 and 704 of the Bankruptcy Code, the trustee is vested with all property of the bankruptcy estate and it is the trustee's duty to collect and reduce the property to money. The trustee has full control over the pending civil action since it is an asset of the estate to be administered.

Initially, Shareholder D advised Attorney A that he wanted the action against Attorney X to be pursued by the trustee in bankruptcy (the "Trustee") and that Shareholder D would disclose confidential information about the civil suit to the Trustee. Subsequently, Shareholder D informed Attorney A that he wanted the Trustee to dismiss the civil action.

The Trustee has asked Attorney A to pursue the civil action against Attorney X as an asset of Corporation B's bankruptcy estate. The Trustee must obtain an order from the bankruptcy court allowing Attorney A to proceed with the representation and authorizing the payment of Attorney A's legal fees. It will be necessary for Attorney A to explain to the bankruptcy court any possible conflict of interest he may have in representing the bankruptcy estate in the action. The Trustee believes that Attorney A will not have a conflict of interest because the interests of Attorney A's former client, the pre-petition corporation, are not in conflict with the interests of the bankruptcy estate. Moreover, shareholders of a bankrupt corporation have no authority over an asset of the corporation's bankruptcy estate.

Counsel for Attorney X has filed a notice to take the deposition of Shareholder D in the civil action. Attorney A wants to clarify his role in the deposition. Attorney A has been unable to contact Shareholder D to discuss the matter.

Upon the filing of a Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition and the appointment of a trustee by the bankruptcy court, is the client of Attorney A the pre-petition corporation or the trustee?

Opinion #1:

Technically, Attorney A has no client until he is appointed by the Bankruptcy Court to represent Corporation B's bankruptcy estate and the Trustee in the civil action against Attorney X. However, the Trustee, as the fiduciary of the assets of the post-petition corporation, has the authority to make decisions about the assets of the bankrupt corporation including the civil action against Attorney X. If Attorney A's representation in the civil action continues, Attorney A's clients will be the bankruptcy estate and the Trustee acting in his official capacity. All decisions about the representation will be made by the Trustee. Compare Rule 1.13(a) ("A lawyer employed or retained by an organization represents the organization acting through its duly authorized constituents.") and RPC 137 ("[i]n accepting employment in regard to a [decedent's] estate, an attorney undertakes to represent the personal representative in his or her official capacity and the estate as an entity").

Inquiry #2:

During the period of time between the appointment of the Trustee and a court order appointing an attorney for the bankruptcy estate and the Trustee in the pending civil action against Attorney X, what information is the Trustee entitled to receive concerning the representation of Corporation B in the civil action?

Opinion #2:

Trustee is the fiduciary of the assets of the corporation, including its civil claims, and is entitled to receive all information concerning Corporation B's pending civil claim. Attorney A may disclose to the Trustee all confidential information relating to the representation of the corporation in the civil action. See Rule 1.5(d)(1) and (2); compare RPC 195 (holding that in the representation of a decedent's estate and the personal representative, the lawyer owes the duty of confidentiality to the personal representative acting in his official capacity and to the estate itself).

Inquiry #3:

Shareholder D notified Attorney A that he does not want the Trustee to pursue the lawsuit against Attorney X. May Attorney A represent the bankruptcy estate and the Trustee in the civil action if Shareholder D objects to the pursuit of the lawsuit?

Opinion #3:

The decision to pursue the action against Attorney X is within the discretion of the Trustee in the discharge of his fiduciary duties under the Bankruptcy Code. Shareholder D has no authority over the Trustee. If Attorney A represented only Corporation B and never represented Shareholder D individually, Attorney A does not owe Shareholder D a duty of loyalty. He may, therefore, follow the directions of the Trustee and pursue the claim against Attorney X pursuant to the directions of the Trustee.

If, however, Attorney A represented Shareholder D individually with regard to Shareholder D's interests in the civil action against Attorney X or Attorney A made representations to Shareholder D that led Shareholder D reasonably to assume that Attorney A represented Shareholder D individually in the matter, Attorney A may have a conflict of interest in pursuing the civil action over the objection of Shareholder D. Rule 1.9(a) prohibits a lawyer who has formerly represented a client in a matter from thereafter representing another person in the same matter if the interests of the new client are materially adverse to the interests of the former client unless the former client consents. Although there is nothing in the facts that supports this conclusion, if Shareholder D was himself a client of Attorney A with regard to the action against Attorney X and the pursuit of the lawsuit against Attorney X is now materially adverse to the interests of Shareholder D, Attorney A may not represent the corporation's bankruptcy estate and the Trustee in the civil action unless Shareholder D consents.

Inquiry #4:

If Shareholder D is deposed in the lawsuit, does Attorney A have any obligations to Shareholder D during the deposition?

Opinion #4:

Attorney A has an obligation to Shareholder D only if Attorney A represented Shareholder D in his individual capacity and his representation of Corporation B's bankruptcy estate will be adverse to Shareholder D's interests. If so, he may not represent the bankruptcy estate and the Trustee in the deposition or the lawsuit unless Shareholder D consents to the representation. See Opinion #3 above. If, on the other hand, Attorney A never represented Shareholder D in his individual capacity, there is no conflict and Attorney A may appear on behalf of the bankruptcy estate and the Trustee at the deposition.

Inquiry #5:

What obligation does Attorney A have to report his knowledge of misconduct by Attorney X which knowledge was gained during discovery in the civil suit?

Opinion #5:

Rule 8.3(a) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct provides:

> [a] lawyer having knowledge that another lawyer has committed a violation of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct that raises a substantial question as to that lawyer's honesty, trustworthiness, or fitness as a lawyer in other respects shall inform the North Carolina State Bar or the court having jurisdiction over the matter.

Subparagraph (c) of the rule states that the rule does not require disclosure of confidential client information.

If Attorney A has reportable knowledge of lawyer misconduct that is not confidential, or, if the knowledge is confidential, the Trustee does not object to its disclosure to the State Bar or the appropriate court, Attorney A should disclose the information to the appropriate body.

---

97 Formal Ethics Opinion 8

January 16, 1998

Representation of Developer and Buyer in Closing of a Residential Real Estate Transaction

Opinion examines the circumstances in which it is acceptable for the lawyer who regularly represents a real estate developer to represent the buyer and the developer in the closing of a residential real estate transaction.

Introduction:

This opinion supplements RPC 210 (April 4, 1997), an opinion on common representation in a typical residential real estate closing. This opinion addresses the issues that arise in common representation when the closing lawyer regularly represents a seller who is in the business of real estate development. The lawyer's financial interest in retaining the seller's business may present special problems. This opinion explains the conditions that must be met before a closing lawyer may proceed with common representation.

Inquiry #1:

Seller is in the business of buying residential lots and tracts of land, improving the lots and/or subdividing the land for residential or condominium development, and selling the improved lots and land. Seller frequently uses the services of Attorney to provide legal representation on various aspects of Seller's real estate transactions including, but not limited to, performing the base title work, preparing restrictive covenants, and drafting construction contracts.

Buyer entered into a contract with Seller to purchase a residential lot and house built by Seller. The contract was negotiated and executed without the involvement of Attorney. Seller wants Attorney to close the transaction. If Attorney closes the transaction, Attorney will provide legal services to Buyer including providing an opinion as to title and preparing the loan documents. May Attorney close the transaction and represent both Seller and Buyer?

Opinion #1:

Yes, provided Attorney reasonably believes that the common representation will not be adverse to the interests of either client, there is full disclosure of Attorney's prior representation of Seller, and Buyer consents to the common representation. See RPC 210 and Rule 2.2 of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct.

In RPC 210, it is observed that:

> [i]f the interests of the buyer and seller of residential property are generally aligned and the lawyer determines that he or she can manage the potential conflict of interest between the parties, the lawyer may represent both the buyer and the seller in closing a residential real estate transaction with the consent of the parties.

Before concluding that common representation is permitted, the lawyer must consider "whether there is any obstacle to the loyal representation of both parties." RPC 210. Where a lawyer has a long-standing professional relationship with a seller and a financial interest in continuing to represent the seller, the lawyer must carefully and thoughtfully evaluate whether he or she will be able to act impartially in closing the transaction. The lawyer may proceed with the common representation only if the lawyer reasonably believes that his or her loyalty to the seller will not interfere with the lawyer's responsibilities to the buyer. Rule 2.2(a)(3). Also, the lawyer may not proceed with the common representation unless he or she reasonably believes that there is little likelihood that an actual conflict will arise out of the common representation and, should a conflict arise, the potential prejudice to the parties will be minimal. RPC 210 and Rule 2.2(a)(2).

If the lawyer reasonably believes the common representation can be managed, the lawyer must make full disclosure of the advantages and risks of common representation and obtain the consent of both parties before proceeding with the representation. Revised Rule 2.2(a)(1). This disclosure should include informing the seller that, in closing the transaction, the lawyer has equal responsibility to the buyer and, regardless of the prior representation of the seller, the lawyer cannot prefer the interests of the seller over the interests of the buyer. With regard to the buyer, the lawyer must fully disclose the lawyer's prior and existing professional relationship with the seller. This disclosure should include a general explanation of the extent of the lawyer's prior and current representation of the seller and a specific explanation of the lawyer's legal work, if any, on the property that is the subject of the transaction. The latter should include the disclosure of all legal work relating to the development of a subdivision if relevant.

Full disclosure to the seller and to the buyer must also include an explanation of the scope of the lawyer's representation. See RPC 210. In addition, the lawyer should explain that if a conflict develops between the seller and the buyer, the lawyer must withdraw from the representation of all parties and may not continue to represent any of the clients in the transaction. RPC 210 and Rule 2.2(c). For example, the lawyer may not take a position of advocacy for one party or the other with regard to the completion of the construction of the house, the escrow of funds for the completion of the construction, problems with title to the property, and enforcement of the warranty on new construction. Areas of potential conflict should be outlined for both parties prior to obtaining their separate consents to the common representation.

The disclosure required must be made prior to the closing of the transaction. The Revised Rules of Professional Conduct do not require the consents to be in writing. However, obtaining written consents is the better practice.

If common representation is permitted under the conditions outlined above, Attorney may perform legal services for both parties as necessary to close the transaction including offering an opinion as to title to the buyer. Either party may be charged for the lawyer's services as appropriate. See Rule 1.5.

Inquiry #2:

Would the answer to Inquiry #1 be different if Attorney drafted the model purchase contract that Seller uses to market the lots and houses in the subdivision but Attorney did not participate in the final negotiation of any of the specific provisions of the purchase contract between Seller and Buyer?

Opinion #2:

No, Attorney may still close the transaction and represent both Buyer and Seller provided he can satisfy the conditions on common representation set forth in Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #3:

May Attorney engage in common representation of Buyer and Seller if Attorney memorialized the purchase agreement between Buyer and Seller by completing the written purchase contract without participating in the negotiation of any of its specific terms?

Opinion #3:

Yes, Attorney may represent both Buyer and Seller if he can satisfy the conditions on common representation set forth in Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #4:

The house and lot that Buyer has contracted to purchase from Seller are located in a subdivision that is being developed by Seller. As a result of his representation of Seller on matters relating to the development of the subdivision, Attorney is aware that Seller is having financial difficulties and may be unable to complete the promised amenities in the subdivision, including a swimming pool and tennis courts. Seller has instructed Attorney not to disclose this information. May Attorney represent both Seller and Buyer to close the transaction?

Opinion #4:

No. Rule 1.7(c) provides that:

> [a] lawyer shall have a continuing obligation to evaluate all situations involving potentially conflicting interests and shall withdraw from representation of any party he or she cannot adequately represent or represent without using the confidential information or secrets of another client or former client except as Rule 1.6 allows.

Rule 1.6(a) defines confidential client information as information learned during the course of representation of a client the disclosure of which would be detrimental to the interests of the client. The information regarding Seller's potential inability to complete the amenities in the subdivision is confidential information of Seller that Attorney may not disclose unless Seller consents. See Rule 1.6(c). However, to represent Buyer adequately, Attorney should disclose this information. In this situation, Attorney cannot reasonably conclude that his responsibilities to Seller will not interfere with his responsibilities to Buyer. See Opinion #1 above. Attorney may not, therefore, accept the common representation.

Inquiry #5:

Completion of the amenities for the subdivision are not in question. However, Attorney prepared the base title for the subdivision and he is aware that there are some close questions on title to the lot under contract to Buyer. Although these matters may be insignificant, Attorney would normally disclose this information to Buyer. Seller has instructed Attorney not to disclose the information to Buyer. May Attorney represent Buyer and Seller to close the transaction?

Opinion #5:

No, unless Seller consents to the disclosure of the information. See Opinion #2 above and Rule 1.6(c).

Inquiry #6:

Attorney analyzed his relationship with Seller and determined that he can impartially represent both Seller and Buyer in closing the sale of the house and lot to Buyer. Buyer and the lender chosen by Buyer have agreed to the basic terms of the mortgage loan (amount, security, interest rate, installment, and maturity) prior to the engagement of Attorney to close the transaction. May Attorney represent both the lender and Buyer, as well as Seller?

Opinion #6:

Yes. See RPC 210.

Inquiry #7:

Seller believes that it will result in savings of time and money if Attorney closes all of the sales in the subdivision. Seller would like to offer financial incentives to potential buyers to encourage them to use the closing services of Attorney. In particular, Seller would like to offer to pay all legal fees to close the transaction if the buyer agrees that Attorney will handle the closing. Seller asks Attorney if Attorney will close all sales for a pre-agreed fee. Seller also asks Attorney if Seller may include a provision in the contract to purchase in which Seller agrees to pay the legal fees if the buyer agrees that Attorney will close the transaction. May Attorney agree to participate in this arrangement?

Opinion #7:

Yes, if Attorney reasonably believes that the common representation can be handled impartially and the proper disclosure of the professional relationship between Seller and Attorney is made prior to the execution of the contract by the buyer. See Opinion #1 above.

---

97 Formal Ethics Opinion 9

January 16, 1998

Credit Card Chargebacks Against a Trust Account

Opinion rules that, provided steps are taken to safeguard the client funds on deposit in a trust account, a lawyer may accept fees paid by credit card although the bank's agreement to process such charges authorizes the bank to debit the lawyer's trust account in the event a credit card charge is disputed by a client.

Inquiry #1:

To accept charges paid by MasterCard and Visa credit cards, as well as other national credit cards, a lawyer must enter into a standard form "Merchant Agreement" with a bank in which the bank agrees to deposit credit card payments from cardholders electronically into the merchant's account with the bank subject to certain conditions. Among other conditions, such agreements typically permit the bank to debit a merchant's account for the discount fee, or the bank's charge to the merchant for advancing the credit card payments. In addition, such agreements typically permit the bank to "charge back" the merchant's bank account, without prior notice, in the amount of a prior payment by credit card which is subsequently disputed by the cardholder.[1] The dispute process is commenced when the cardholder notifies the credit card issuer that he disputes a charge shown on his statement. The merchant is notified of the dispute. Documentation of the charge is requested from the merchant. If the documentation is not deemed satisfactory or the merchant fails to respond, the bank may debit the disputed amount from the merchant's account with the bank without prior notice to the merchant.

Lawyers may accept payment of legal fees by electronic transfer and credit card. CPR 129 and RPC 247. However, RPC 247 requires a lawyer to arrange to have all credit card payments electronically deposited into the trust account if the lawyer's bank cannot or will not distinguish between the operating account, into which earned fees should be deposited, and the trust account, into which unearned fees should be deposited. To avoid the problem of commingling the funds of clients and the lawyer's funds, the opinion provides:

> [i]f a payment by electronic transfer of an earned fee cannot be distinguished by the bank from a payment by electronic transfer of an unearned fee, all payments by electronic transfer should be deposited into a lawyer's trust account and earned fees should be withdrawn from the trust account promptly. [Citing now repealed Rule 10.1(c).] The lawyer may also deposit into the trust account funds sufficient to pay the bank's service charges for electronic transfers. [Citing now repealed Rule 10.1(c)(1).] A ledger should be maintained for the service charges posted against such funds. [Citing now repealed Rule 10.2(c)(3).]

According to RPC 247, all payments of unearned fees and expenses must be deposited into a lawyer's trust account even if the payment is made by credit card. May a lawyer participate in a merchant agreement with a bank to honor credit card charges if the agreement gives the bank the authority to debit the lawyer's trust account for a chargeback without prior notice to the lawyer?

Opinion #1:

Yes, provided the lawyer takes appropriate steps to protect the funds of other clients on deposit in the trust account.

A lawyer who receives funds that belong to a client assumes the responsibilities of a fiduciary to safeguard those funds and to preserve the identity of the funds by depositing them into a designated trust account. Rule 1.15-1 of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct and RPC 191. The responsibilities of a fiduciary include the duty to ensure that the funds of a particular client are used only to satisfy the obligations of that client and are not used to satisfy the claims of the lawyer's creditors or of other clients of the lawyer. RPC 191. Therefore, a lawyer may participate in a merchant agreement with a bank to honor the credit card payments of clients only if the funds of other clients on deposit in the lawyer's trust account will be protected against a chargeback.

To avoid the potential jeopardy to the funds of other clients on deposit in a trust account, the lawyer must first attempt to negotiate an agreement with the bank that requires the bank to debit an account other than the trust account in the event of a chargeback. Some banks will route chargeback debits (and the discount fee for credit card charges) against a firm's operating account. Some banks may require a merchant to maintain a separate demand deposit account in an amount sufficient to cover chargebacks. If a bank cannot or is unwilling to debit a separate account, (i.e., the bank requires all chargebacks to be debited from the account into which credit card payments are deposited), the lawyer must request that the bank arrange an inter-account transfer such that the lawyer's operating account, or other non-trust account, will be immediately debited in the event of a chargeback against the trust account and the money promptly deposited into the trust account to cover the chargeback. If the bank will not agree to debit another account or arrange for inter-account transfers, the lawyer must establish a trust account for the sole purpose of receiving advance payments by credit card. The lawyer must withdraw all payments to this trust account immediately and deposit them in the lawyer's "primary" trust account. In this way, the risk that a chargeback will impact the funds of other clients will be minimized.

Under all circumstances, a lawyer is ethically compelled to arrange for a payment (from his or her own funds or from some other source) to the trust account sufficient to cover the chargeback in the event that a chargeback jeopardizes the funds of other clients on deposit in the account.

Inquiry #2:

May a lawyer participate in a merchant agreement that grants the bank a security interest in the accounts that the lawyer maintains with the bank?

Opinion #2:

No, Rule 1.15-1(g) prohibits the use or pledge of funds in a trust account to obtain credit. If one or more of the accounts is a trust account, the lawyer may not participate in the agreement unless the trust account or accounts are specifically exempted from the grant of a security interest.

Inquiry #3:

If the nature of a lawyer's practice is such that all fees that the lawyer collects are earned at the time of collection, may the lawyer arrange for payments by credit card to be made directly to the lawyer's operating account?

Opinion #3:

Yes. Rule 1.15-1.

Endnotes

1. The Truth in Lending Act (§170, 15 USC §1666i) and Regulation Z (12 CFR §226.12(c)) contain provisions which preserve a cardholder's claim and defenses against a card issuer in certain circumstances. A cardholder is given a right to assert against the card issuer all claims (other than tort claims) and defenses arising out of the credit transaction that it would otherwise have against the merchant. Regulation Z does not provide any guidance as to the nature of the claims and defenses that may be asserted. Since it does give the cardholder the right to assert against the card issuer any claims and defenses available that would be available against the merchant, however, most merchant agreements provided for a "pass through" of the problem.

The power of a cardholder to reverse a credit card transaction is very broad. The following is the mandatory disclosure that must appear in the credit card agreement with a prospective cardholder:

> If you have a problem with the quality of property or services that you purchased with a credit card, and you have tried in good faith to correct the problem with the merchant, you may have the right not to pay the remaining amount due on the property or services. There are two limitations on this right:
> (A) You must have made the purchase in your home state, if not within your home state, within 100 miles of your current mailing address; and
> (B) The purchase price must have been more than $50.00.
> These limitations do not apply if the card issuer owns or operates the merchant or if we mailed you the advertisement for the property or services (Regulation Z, App. G-3).

97 Formal Ethics Opinion 10

January 16, 1998

Undercover Officer Planted by Prosecutor in Cell of Represented Defendant

Opinion rules that a prosecutor may instruct a law enforcement officer to send an undercover officer into the prison cell of a represented criminal defendant to observe the defendant's communications with other inmates in the cell.

Inquiry:

Two or more criminal defendants are charged with criminal offenses and are in custody. The prosecutor would like to advise the investigating law enforcement officers to "plant" an undercover officer, posing as an inmate, in the cell with the defendants. The undercover officer would be instructed to listen to the defendants' discussions of their cases. However, the undercover officer would also be instructed not to enter into these discussions, not to ask the defendants any questions about their cases, and not to give the defendants any advice about their cases.

May the prosecutor instruct the investigating officers to plant an undercover officer in the prison cell?

Opinion:

Yes, provided the prosecutor also instructs the officers to conduct their listening activities within all applicable constitutional and statutory limitations and, where necessary, to explain those limitations to the officers. This opinion is limited to the conduct of prosecutors. See Rule 4.2(a) ("During the representation of a client, a lawyer shall not communicate about the subject of the representation with a person the lawyer knows to be represented by another lawyer in the matter unless the lawyer...is authorized by law to do so.")

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

January 15, 1999

Disclosure of Adverse Evidence in a Social Security Disability Hearing

Opinion rules that a lawyer representing a client in a social security disability hearing is not required to inform the administrative law judge of material adverse facts known to the lawyer.

Inquiry:

Attorney represents Client, a claimant for social security disability benefits. Attorney files a request for an administrative hearing before a Social Security administrative law judge (ALJ). Social Security hearings before an ALJ are considered non-adversarial because no one represents the Social Security Administration at the hearing. However, prior to the hearing, the Social Security Administration develops a written record which is before the ALJ at the time of the hearing. In addition, the ALJ has the authority to perform an independent investigation of the client's claim.

Prior to the hearing, Attorney writes to the claimant's treating physician and asks for a letter stating the physician's opinion about the claimant's disability. In a responsive letter, the physician indicates that she believes that the claimant is not disabled. Does Attorney have to submit the adverse letter from the physician to the ALJ at the hearing?

Opinion:

No. Although it is a hallmark of good lawyering for an advocate to disclose adverse evidence and explain to the court why it should not be given weight, generally an advocate is not required to present facts adverse to his or her client.

Rule 3.3(d) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct provides, "[i]n an ex parte proceeding, a lawyer shall inform the tribunal of all material facts known to the lawyer which will enable the tribunal to make an informed decision, whether or not the facts are adverse." As one scholar notes, the disclosure "is required to correct the deficiencies of the adversary system." Wolfram, Modern Legal Ethics §12.7, at 678-679 (1986). Comment [14] to Revised Rule 3.3 also elucidates that full disclosure requirement in an ex parte proceeding is to assist the judge in making an impartial decision:

> Ordinarily, an advocate has the limited responsibility of presenting one side of the matter that a tribunal should consider in reaching a decision; the conflicting position is expected to be presented by the opposing party. However, in an ex parte proceeding, such as an application for a temporary restraining order, there is no balance of presentation by opposing advocates. The object of an ex parte proceeding is nevertheless to yield a substantially just result. The judge has an affirmative responsibility to accord the absent party just consideration. The lawyer for the represented party has the correlative duty to make disclosures of material facts known to the lawyer and that the lawyer reasonably believes are necessary to an informed decision.

Nevertheless, a Social Security disability hearing should be distinguished from an ex parte proceeding such as an application for a temporary restraining order in which the judge must rely entirely upon the advocate for one party to present the facts. In a disability hearing, there is a "balance of presentation" because the Social Security Administration has an opportunity to develop the written record that is before the ALJ at the time of hearing. Moreover, the ALJ has the authority to make his or her own investigation of the facts. When there are no "deficiencies of the adversary system," the burden of presenting the case against a finding of disability should not be put on the lawyer for the claimant. See RPC 230.

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

January 15, 1998

Advising a Client to Evade Service of Process

Opinion rules that a lawyer may explain the effect of service of process to a client but may not advise a client to evade service of process.

Inquiry #1:

Husband is aware that Wife has retained a lawyer and intends to proceed with a domestic action. Husband retains Attorney X to represent him. At his initial conference with Attorney X, Husband tells Attorney X that he believes that Wife has filed an action against him. Attorney X asks if Husband has been served with a complaint. Husband tells him that he has not received a complaint and asks Attorney X to explain the effect of service of the complaint. Attorney X explains the different forms of service, speculates that Wife will attempt service through the sheriff's department, and informs Husband that he must be properly served with the complaint in order for Wife to prosecute her case. Husband asks whether Wife's case can go forward if the sheriff's department is unable to find him because he "disappears for awhile." Attorney X tells him that the case cannot proceed unless he is served.

Is it ethical for Attorney X to explain to Husband the legal effect of service of process?

Opinion #1:

Yes, a lawyer "shall explain a matter to the extent reasonably necessary to permit the client to make informed decisions regarding the representation." Rule 1.4(b) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct. For example, Attorney X may explain to Husband that he has no legal obligation to volunteer to accept the complaint or to pick up the papers from the sheriff's department should the sheriff's office call to request his cooperation. Moreover, if Husband asks about evading service, Attorney X may discuss the consequences of this proposed course of conduct. See, e.g., Rule 1.2(d) which permits a lawyer to discuss the legal consequences of any proposed course of conduct while prohibiting the lawyer from advising or assisting a client to engage in fraudulent conduct.

Inquiry #2:

May Attorney X explain ways to evade service of process to Husband? Such advice might include instructing Husband to tell the receptionist at his place of work to lie to deputy sheriffs about his whereabouts; to go out the back door if a deputy comes to Husband's work place or home; or to stay away from his residence.

Opinion #2:

No, such conduct is unethical for a number of reasons. First, service of process is a necessary component of the judicial system and a lawyer is an officer of that system. Counseling a client in ways to evade service interferes with the judicial system and is, therefore, prejudicial to the administration of justice in violation of Rule 8.4(d). Second, a lawyer should not counsel a client to engage, or assist a client in conduct that the lawyer knows is fraudulent, in violation of Rule 1.2(d). Finally, advising a client to take evasive action solely for the purpose of delay is disrespectful of the rights of Wife in violation of Rule 4.4 which provides in part, "[i]n representing a client, a lawyer shall not use means that have no substantial purpose other than to…delay…a third person…."

Inquiry #3:

May Attorney X advise his client to evade service of process provided he does not tell the client how to evade service?

Opinion #3:

No. See Opinion #2 above.

Inquiry #4:

Is the prohibition on instructing a client to evade service applicable to the service of other court documents such as subpoenas?

Opinion #4:

Yes.

---

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

January 15, 1998

Adding Finance Charges to Past Due Client Accounts

Opinion rules that, subject to the requirements of law, a lawyer may add a finance charge to a client's account if the client fails to pay the balance when due as agreed with the client.

Inquiry #1:

Law Firm does not have a written fee agreement with its clients; however, all bills for services rendered to clients state that payment is due in full upon receipt. To date, Law Firm has not added a finance charge to any past due client accounts. Law Firm would like to begin assessing finance charges on the outstanding past-due accounts of selected clients. Law Firm plans to send each of these clients a notice stating that the client's past due account balance will be charged a finance charge of 1.5% per month effective 60 days from the date of notice if the account balance is not paid in full by that time.

There are two groups of clients who will be affected by the decision to add finance charges. The first group consists of clients who have outstanding account balances because they have never paid anything on their accounts and clients who, without obtaining the consent of Law Firm, send partial payments to Law Firm each month. The second group consists of clients who have made arrangements with Law Firm to make monthly partial payments on their accounts. Law Firm agreed to represent these clients knowing that the clients would not be able to pay their accounts in full each month.

May Law Firm add finance charges to the accounts of clients with past due balances who have not made partial payment arrangements with the firm?

Opinion #1:

Yes, provided Law Firm complies with Revised Rule 1.5(a) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct which prohibits a lawyer from entering into an agreement for, charging, or collecting an illegal fee. This means that finance charges on legal fees must comply with usury laws and any other applicable consumer credit laws.

N.C. Gen. Stat. §24-5(a) permits a creditor to charge simple interest at the legal rate on the principal owed after an account is contractually due. If a lawyer and a client did not agree in the oral or written fee contract at the beginning of the representation that interest on past due legal fees would be charged at a contract rate upon default, then interest may only be charged at the legal rate. Id. Similarly, if the lawyer and the client did not agree at the beginning of the representation when the account balance would be due and payable, the law provides that the account becomes due and payable in a reasonable time under the circumstances. No prior notice of the election to charge interest appears to be required under N.C. Gen. Stat. §24-5(a).

If a lawyer wants to charge up to 1.5% per month on the unpaid portion of the balance of the previous month, the lawyer must have an agreement to this effect with the client (whether the agreement is express, implied, or through course of dealing with the client), must comply with N.C. Gen. Stat. §24-11 which governs open-ended revolving credit charges, and must conform his or her conduct as a creditor to the requirements of any other applicable consumer credit laws.

Although not required by the Rules of Professional Conduct, it is preferable to put fee agreements with clients in writing at the beginning of the representation to resolve any misunderstanding about when the fees may be owed and to specify to a contractual certainty any finance charges that may be charged in the event that the client is delinquent in payments.

Inquiry #2:

Are there formal notice requirements before a law firm may add a finance charge to a past due client account?

Opinion #2:

The lawyer should comply with all legal requirements regarding notice of finance charges. In situations where the lawyer seeks only the interest permitted under N.C. Gen. Stat. §24-5(a), the answer is "no." In situations where there is an express agreement, implied agreement, or agreement by course of dealing between the lawyer and the client which gives the lawyer the right to charge a contract rate of interest, the answer is "no" unless the agreement otherwise provides for a notice requirement. See Opinion #1. The State Bar has no formal requirements for notice in this situation.

Inquiry #3:

May Law Firm assess a finance charge on the account balance of a client who made prior arrangements with the firm to pay less than the full amount due each month?

Opinion #3:

If the agreement (express, implied, or through course of dealing) with the client is interpreted as a comprehensive resolution of all outstanding amounts owed by the client (e.g., the law firm has elected to waive interest or finance charges to obtain payments on account), the answer is "no." Otherwise, finance charges may be assessed on the amount that is past due pursuant to (a) the legal rate under N.C. Gen. Stat. §24-5(a), or (b) any agreement between the client and Law Firm that has not been waived by prior conduct. Furthermore, subject to the laws on consumer credit and usury, Law Firm may seek to renegotiate the fee agreement and obtain the client's consent to add finance charges provided

> "the attorney may not abandon or threaten to abandon the client to cut the attorney's losses or to coerce an additional or higher fee. Any fee contract made or remade during the existence of the attorney-client relationship must be reasonable and freely and fairly made by the client having full knowledge of all material circumstances incident to the agreement."
>
> Comment [3], Revised Rule 1.5.

Inquiry #4:

May Law Firm selectively assess late payment fees to some clients and not to others?

Opinion #4:

Yes, if such selectivity is not motivated by unlawful intent (e.g., racial or gender-based discrimination).

Inquiry #5:

Do clients with long-standing relationships with Law Firm, without past due account balances at present, require notice before Law Firm may begin assessing finance charges on their account balances when past due?

Opinion #5:

Unless there has been a course of dealing that creates an agreement between Law Firm and its long-standing clients that waives finance charges on the clients' past-due balances, Law Firm may seek interest as permitted by N.C. Gen. Stat. §24-5. See Opinion #1.

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

January 15, 1998

Publicity in Civil Trial

Opinion examines the restrictions on a lawyer's public comments about a pending civil proceeding in which the lawyer is participating.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A represents a public school board of education (hereinafter "the Board"). Attorney B represents a minor and her parents who sued the Board in 1992 alleging negligent supervision by the Board's employees, resulting in the sexual assault of the minor at her school by another student. Plaintiffs also allege that when the minor reported the incident to a teacher's assistant, the minor was "chastised by the assistant." No one employed by the Board gave the minor medical attention, nor did any employee ever report the incident to the parents.

Four years after suit was filed, the trial court denied the Board's motion for summary judgment and motion to dismiss based upon sovereign immunity. The Board appealed denial of its sovereign immunity defense to the court of appeals. The court of appeals ruled that some but not all of the plaintiffs' claims were governed by sovereign immunity and remanded for trial. The decision of the court of appeals, including numerous factual allegations from the plaintiffs' complaint, was picked up by a news wire service. Thereafter, several news media ran the story from the wire service and printed or announced portions of the decision.

When local news media personnel began calling local school officials, the superintendent of the school system called Attorney A and asked how to respond to the inquiries. The superintendent and Attorney A decided a press release was the best way to respond to the news media. The school administration sent the release to those members of the news media who made inquiry about the case. The superintendent was concerned the public might conclude the schools in his system were unsafe and that school employees had ignored or hidden the alleged facts. The pertinent portions of the press release are as follows:

1) nothing in the court of appeals' decision means that any school employee has done anything wrong nor that the school system is liable to anyone. The questions before the court and the court's decision involve only technical legal issues related to insurance and sovereign immunity from suit.

2) the Board of Education and the employees of the school system are dedicated to the safety of all students, including the student involved in this case. From the time that the allegations in this case came to school employees' attention, every effort has been made to determine as fully as possible what happened and to attend to the student's needs in the most appropriate way.

3) after a very thorough investigation of the matter by the principal, the superintendent, and others, no credible evidence was discovered that the alleged assault had ever taken place. The Board of Education and all school employees have consistently and confidently affirmed that no assault took place.

4) if it is finally necessary to try this case before a jury, school officials are confident that the jury will determine that all employees involved in this matter acted properly and that there is no liability in this case for them or the school system.

Was this press release a violation of Revised Rule 3.6?

Opinion #1:

Revised Rule 3.6 provides, "[a] lawyer who is participating or has participated in the investigation or litigation of a matter shall not make an extrajudicial statement that a reasonable person would expect to be disseminated by means of public communication if there is a reasonable likelihood that the statement will materially prejudice an adjudicative proceeding in the matter." This rule was designed to preserve a right to a fair trial by avoiding trial by media, but at the same time it attempts to balance the legal right to free speech. Revised Rule 3.6, Comment [1]. There is no bright-line rule for determining when an extrajudicial statement is proper. In fact, this is a case of first impression.

Keeping in mind the purpose behind the rule, the question is whether there is a reasonable likelihood the above press release will materially prejudice an adjudicative proceeding. Several factors may assist in evaluating the potential for prejudice of an attorney's extrajudicial statements. First, Revised Rule 3.6(b) prohibits certain specified extrajudicial statements. This list is not exhaustive but does provide guidance as to the types of disclosures which would be prohibited. Second, any publicity involving information already available to the public, such as that contained in filed pleadings, discovery responses, affidavits, and previous witness testimony, is less likely to have a prejudicial effect on a subsequent court proceeding. Annotated Model Rules of Professional Conduct Rule 3.6 cmt., p. 352 (3rd ed. 1996). Third, extrajudicial statements concerning civil proceedings are generally not as strictly scrutinized as those regarding criminal proceedings. Id. Fourth, an attorney should be permitted some leeway in making a necessary response to protect a client from undue prejudicial effect of recent publicity not initiated by the attorney or his client. Model Rules, Rule 3.6(c). Fifth, whether the attorney intended a trial by media is also a significant factor. Model Rules, Rule 3.6 cmt. at 353.

In this case, the press release by the Board involved extrajudicial statements about a civil proceeding but none of the statements are specifically prohibited by Revised Rule 3.6(b). Moreover, because of the proceedings at the trial court level, much of the information contained in the press release was already in the public domain. For example, the denial of evidence to support the claim was present in the Board's answer to the complaint. Finally, the release was intended not to prejudice a court proceeding, but to counter adverse publicity about the Board. In light of these factors, the press release would not "materially prejudice an adjudicative proceeding" pursuant to Revised Rule 3.6.

Inquiry #2:

Does it matter that the release came from the Board rather than the attorney?

Opinion #2:

Revised Rule 3.6 does not impinge upon the constitutional right of clients to make extrajudicial statements concerning their case. The rule, however, does place restrictions on attorneys' extrajudicial speech and that of their agents. If the above press release had a reasonable likelihood of materially prejudicing an adjudicative proceeding, and the Board was merely used as conduit by the attorney to make prejudicial statements the attorney could not, then the attorney violated Revised Rule 3.6.

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

April 16, 1998

Disclosure of Client's Prior Driving Record

Opinion rules that a defense lawyer may remain silent while the prosecutor presents an inaccurate driving record to the court provided the lawyer and client did not criminally or fraudulently misrepresent the driving record to the prosecutor or the court and, further provided, that on application for a limited driving privilege, there is no misrepresentation to the court about the prior driving record.

Inquiry #1:

Client was charged with driving while impaired (DWI). Attorney A represented him at trial where Client was convicted. At the sentencing hearing, the prosecutor informed the court that Client had no record of prior convictions for DWI. Attorney A and Client were aware, however, that Client was convicted of DWI in federal court but the federal court failed to forward information regarding the conviction to the North Carolina Department of Motor Vehicles for inclusion in Client's driving record. Therefore, when the prosecutor checked the driving record, he found no record of the prior conviction. At the sentencing hearing, Attorney A and Client remained silent when the prosecutor informed the court that Client had no prior convictions for DWI. Neither Attorney A nor Client made any affirmative misrepresentations to the court about Client's driving record. The judge sentenced Client to punishment level three which can only be imposed if the court determines that the defendant has not been convicted of a prior DWI within the previous seven years.

Was it unethical for Attorney A to remain silent when he heard the prosecutor give erroneous information to the court?

Opinion #1:

No, it was not unethical for Attorney A to remain silent. The burden of proof was on the State to show that the defendant's driving record justified a more restrictive sentencing level. A defense lawyer is not required to volunteer adverse facts when the prosecutor fails to bring them forward. The duty of confidentiality to the client is paramount provided the defense lawyer does not affirmatively misrepresent the facts to the court. See Rule 1.6(c) and Rule 3.3(a)(1) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct; CPR 313 (lawyer may not volunteer to the court confidential information about a client's prior convictions); and RPC 33 (lawyer may not reveal confidential information about a client's prior criminal record to the court but may not misrepresent the client's criminal record). Although Rule 3.3(a)(2) prohibits a lawyer from failing to disclose a material fact to a tribunal "when disclosure is necessary to avoid assisting a criminal or fraudulent act by the client," this rule was not violated because Client's driving record was inaccurate through no fault of Client and Client did not criminally or fraudulently conceal the prior conviction from the prosecutor or the court.

Inquiry #2:

Client wants a limited driving privilege. To obtain the privilege, Client must petition the court by filing a form prepared by the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC). To be eligible for a limited driving privilege under G.S. §20-179.3, the court must find that the defendant, within the preceding seven years, was not convicted of an offense involving impaired driving. Although the AOC form does not require the defendant to represent to the court that the defendant has no prior DWI convictions, the court must find, and so acknowledge on the form, that there is evidence that satisfies the statutory requirements for the issuance of a limited driving privilege.

Assuming that at no point in the process Attorney A or Client will be required to misrepresent Client's prior driving record to the court, may Attorney A petition the court for a limited driving privilege for Client?

Opinion #2:

No. Unlike the prior inquiry, in this situation the burden of showing eligibility for a limited driving privilege is on the defendant. By petitioning the court for the privilege, the defendant is making an implicit representation to the court that he has no prior convictions and is eligible for the privilege. Attorney A is aware that this is a false representation of a material fact and he may not participate in its presentation to a tribunal by filing the petition. Rule 3.3(a)(1).

---

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

April 16, 1998

Sale of a Law Firm to Lawyers Employed by the Firm

Opinion rules that the requirements set forth in Rule 1.17 relative to the sale of a law practice to a lawyer who is a stranger to the firm do not apply to the sale of a law practice to lawyers who are current employees of the firm.

Inquiry #1:

Founding Lawyers have practiced law together for many years. Each Founding Lawyer is a shareholder in A, B, & C Law Firm, P.A., a professional association (the "firm"). The firm employs Younger Attorneys who have expressed an interest in taking over the practice from Founding Lawyers. Younger Attorneys are not currently shareholders in the firm. Founding Lawyers anticipate retiring from the practice of law at different times over the ensuing years. They are interested in transferring the practice to Younger Attorneys and continuing to practice law as employees of the firm.

Founding Lawyers are considering two different ways of transferring the firm to Younger Attorneys. By the first method, Younger Attorneys would make sizable capital contributions to the firm in exchange for shares in the firm and the firm would, in turn, redeem the shares of Founding Lawyers. Under Rule 1.17(a) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct, a lawyer who sells a law practice is required to "[cease] to engage in the private practice of law in North Carolina." If the firm is transferred to Younger Attorneys by this method, will Founding Lawyers be required to cease to engage in the private practice of law in North Carolina?

Opinion #1:

No. Rule 1.17 applies to the sale of an entire law firm to a purchasing lawyer or law firm. The rule does not apply to the transfer of shares of a professional corporation to existing employees of the firm in exchange for capital contributions to the firm. As noted in Comment [15] to Rule 1.17, "[a]dmission to, or retirement from, a law partnership or professional association, retirement plans and similar arrangements…do not constitute a sale or purchase governed by the rule." The rule is intended to protect clients from breaches of confidentiality, conflicts of interests, and other abuses that may occur when a lawyer who is not a current member of a law firm purchases the good will of the law firm. Therefore, the sale of all of the shares of a professional association of lawyers to a lawyer who is not a member of the firm or a law firm that includes principals who are not members of the firm is subject to the requirements of the rule.

Inquiry #2:

In the second method of transferring the firm to Younger Attorneys under consideration, the Younger Attorneys will form a new professional association and own 100% of the stock of the new professional association. The new professional association will purchase substantially all of the assets of A,B &C Law Firm including the good will and the right to use the name of the firm. If the firm is transferred to Younger Attorneys by this method, will Founding Lawyers be required to cease to engage in the private practice of law in North Carolina?

Opinion #2:

No, see Opinion #1 above. Although structured like a purchase of assets by a third party, the second method of transfer is essentially a retirement plan or "similar arrangement." As noted above, these are not governed by Rule 1.17. When the assets of a firm are purchased by a professional association of lawyers who are all current employees of the firm, there is no potential for harm to the interests of the clients of the firm due to conflicts of interests, breaches of confidentiality, or abuse of fee agreements.

Inquiry #3:

Is there any prohibition against the continued use of the firm's present name, regardless of the method of transfer used, as long as Founding Lawyers continue as employees of the professional association or, when they leave the firm, they retire from the practice of law in North Carolina?

Opinion #3:

Regardless of the method of transfer employed, there is no prohibition on the continued use of the firm's present name because "...there [is] a continuing succession in the firm's identity…." Rule 7.5, Comment [1]. See also "Regulations for Professional Corporations and Professional Limited Liability Companies Practicing Law," 7 NCAC 1E, Section .0100, Rule .0102(a)("The name of every professional corporation shall contain the surname of one or more of its shareholders or of one or more persons who were associated with its immediate corporate, individual, partnership, or professional limited liability company predecessor in the practice of law….") As noted in RPC 13, "[a] law firm may continue to include in the firm name that [sic] of a retired attorney who practiced with the firm up to the time of his retirement." However, the name of a retired principal in a firm "may be used in the name of a law firm only if the [principal] has ceased the practice of law."

Inquiry #4:

Founding Lawyers may finance the purchase of the firm by Younger Attorneys. Regardless of how the purchase is financed, after their retirement, Founding Lawyers want to provide advice and input to Younger Attorneys as to the conduct of the law practice. Will Founding Lawyers assistance to Younger Attorneys violate Rule 1.17(g)'s provision that "[t]he seller…shall have no say regarding the purchaser's conduct of the law practice"?

Opinion #4:

No. As noted in Opinion #1 above, Rule 1.17 does not apply to the purchase of a law firm by lawyers who are currently members of the firm. Therefore, the prohibition in paragraph (g) of Rule 1.17 is also inapplicable.

---

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

April 16, 1998

Employment of Disbarred Lawyer

Opinion rules that a law firm may employ a disbarred lawyer as a paralegal provided the firm accepts no new clients who were clients of the disbarred lawyer's former firm during the period of misconduct; however, a disbarred lawyer may not work as a paralegal at a firm where he was employed as a lawyer during the period of misconduct.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A, a lawyer with ABC Law Firm, reported his professional misconduct to the North Carolina State Bar and voluntarily ceased the practice of law. The professional misconduct occurred while Attorney A was a member of ABC Law Firm. Approximately eighteen months later, after a complaint was filed with the Disciplinary Hearing Commission (DHC), Attorney A submitted to disbarment and surrendered his license. The DHC entered an order of disbarment effective as of the date Attorney A ceased the practice of law eighteen months earlier. Since the time that Attorney A discontinued the practice of law eighteen months ago, some of the people who were clients of ABC Law Firm when Attorney A practiced with the firm and engaged in professional misconduct ("former ABC clients") have sought legal representation from other law firms in the community. XYZ Law Firm has provided legal services to some former ABC clients and continues to be called upon to perform legal services for some former ABC clients. XYZ Law Firm proposed to employ Former Attorney A as a paralegal. May XYZ employ Former Attorney A as a paralegal, and continue to perform occasional legal services for former ABC clients if the clients first came to XYZ Law Firm for legal services prior to the employment of Former Attorney A as a paralegal?

Opinion #1:

Rule 5.5 (d) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct provides:

> A lawyer or law firm employing a disbarred or suspended lawyer as a law clerk or legal assistant shall not represent any client represented by the disbarred or suspended lawyer or by any lawyer with whom the disbarred or suspended lawyer practiced during the period on or after the date of the acts which resulted in disbarment or suspension through and including the effective date of disbarment or suspension.

When a disbarred lawyer is employed by another law firm, the disbarred lawyer may attract clients from his former practice to the hiring law firm. As a consequence, it may be difficult for the disbarred lawyer to avoid the unauthorized practice of law with respect to these former clients. More problematic, however, is the possibility that the hiring law firm may be in collusion with the disbarred lawyer to employ the disbarred lawyer in exchange for the disbarred lawyer's delivery of his former clients to the hiring firm. If so, the firm is showing disrespect for the decision of the DHC and is encouraging unauthorized practice by the disbarred lawyer.

In the present situation, however, it is merely fortuitous that former clients of ABC Law Firm sought the legal services of XYZ Law Firm during the period prior to the employment of Former Attorney A as a paralegal. Therefore, provided all clients of XYZ Law Firm fully understand that the disbarred lawyer is not acting as an attorney but merely as a paralegal, and, provided further, that, after the employment of Former Attorney A, XYZ Law Firm accepts no new clients who were clients of ABC Law Firm during the period of Former Attorney A's misconduct, XYZ Law Firm may employ him as a paralegal. Care should also be taken to follow the recommendations in Comment [2] to Rule 5.5 relative to the supervision of a disbarred lawyer and related matters.

Inquiry #2:

May XYZ Law Firm employ Former Attorney A as a paralegal and perform legal services for former ABC clients if the clients come to XYZ Law Firm subsequent to the employment of Former Attorney A?

Opinion #2:

No. See Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #3:

If the answer to Inquiry #1 or Inquiry #2 is "no", would the answer change if XYZ Law Firm agrees to screen Former Attorney A from participation as a paralegal in the legal services provided to the former ABC clients?

Opinion #3:

No.

Inquiry #4:

Former Attorney B was disbarred following a hearing before the DHC. In its order of disbarment, the DHC found, among other things, that Former Attorney B engaged in unethical conduct by failing to supervise an employee for a period of approximately three months during a time when he was a partner in a law firm with his father, Attorney C. As a result of his failure to supervise, the employee misappropriated funds from the firm trust account.

May Attorney C employ Former Attorney B as a paralegal, law clerk, or some capacity other than a lawyer?

Opinion #4:

No. Rule 5.5(c) provides:

> A lawyer or law firm shall not employ a disbarred or suspended lawyer as a law clerk or legal assistant if that individual was associated with such lawyer or law firm at any time on or after the date of the acts which resulted in disbarment or suspension through and including the effective date of disbarment or suspension.

The rule was adopted to prevent a disbarred lawyer from continuing to practice law as if no order of disbarment was entered. In Comment [3] to the rule, it is observed that it would be "practically impossible for the disciplined lawyer to confine himself or herself to activities not involving the actual practice of law if he or she were employed in his or her former office setting and obliged to deal with the same staff and clientele."

This inquiry is different from the preceding inquiries because the disbarred lawyer is proposing to work as a nonlawyer at a firm where he formerly worked as a lawyer. Under these circumstances, the existing relationships with staff and clients are more likely to undermine the prohibition on the unauthorized practice of law by the disbarred lawyer. Therefore, Attorney C may not employ Former Attorney B.

---

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 8

April 16, 1998

Participation in a Witness Closing

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not participate in a closing or sign a preliminary title opinion if, after reasonable inquiry, the lawyer believes that the title abstract or opinion was prepared by a nonlawyer without supervision by a licensed North Carolina lawyer.

Inquiry #1:

Lender is located in another state but provides home loans to North Carolina residents. Lender asks Attorney, a licensed North Carolina lawyer, to close a loan for certain borrowers. Lender indicates that the following services will be required from Attorney: (1) oversight of the execution of the loan documents; (2) acknowledgment by an appropriate witness of the signatures of the borrowers on the documents; (3) recordation of Lender's deed of trust; (4) copying the loan documents without review; and (5) disbursement of the loan proceeds. Lender procures title insurance from an out-of-state title insurance company which issues title insurance binders in reliance upon the notes of a title abstractor. Attorney suspects that the title search was done by a nonlawyer who was not supervised by a North Carolina lawyer.

This type of closing is sometimes called a "witness closing." May Attorney participate in the closing?

Opinion #1:

No. Rule 5.5(b) provides, "[a] lawyer shall not assist a person who is not a member of the bar in the performance of activity that constitutes the unauthorized practice of law." N.C. Gen. Stat. §84-2.1 defines "practice [of] law" as, among other things, "abstracting or passing upon titles." Attorney must make a reasonable inquiry concerning the preparation of the title search and/or the title opinion. If Attorney believes, after making this reasonable inquiry, that a nonlawyer abstracted the title and/or gave a title opinion on the property without the proper supervision of a licensed North Carolina attorney and this unauthorized practice will be furthered by Attorney's participation in the closing under the conditions prescribed by Lender, she may not participate in the closing. However, Attorney may participate in the closing if Attorney's reasonable inquiry indicates that the statute was not violated.

Inquiry #2:

What duty does Attorney have to the borrowers?

Opinion #2:

If Attorney's representation is not prohibited by Rule 5.5(b), Attorney's duty to the borrowers is to ensure that her limited role in the closing is well understood and the borrowers agree to this limited role. See Rule 1.2(c). If she represents the borrowers, as well as Lender, she must competently represent their interests even if the objectives of her representation are limited. See Rule 1.1. Competent representation may include disclosure of any concerns that she may have about the preparation of the title opinion and the risks of relying upon the opinion. If Attorney does not represent the borrowers, they must be so advised and told that they should obtain separate legal counsel. See RPC 210. Attorney may represent the borrowers and Lender if she can do so impartially and without compromising the interests of any client. Id.

Inquiry #3:

What duty does Attorney have to Lender?

Opinion #3:

If Attorney's representation is not prohibited by Rule 5.5(b), Attorney must competently represent the interests of Lender. See Rule 1.1. Competent representation may include disclosure of any concerns that she may have about the preparation of the title opinion and the risks of relying upon the opinion.

Inquiry #4:

Title Insurance Company is located in another state but wants to write policies in North Carolina. Title Insurance Company contracts with a paralegal who is an independent contractor to search titles in North Carolina. Title Insurance Company asks Attorney to sign a preliminary opinion based upon the paralegal's abstract of title and/or preliminary opinion. Attorney has not reviewed the paralegal's title notes and did not supervise the paralegal's title research. May Attorney sign the preliminary opinion?

Opinion #4:

No, a lawyer has a duty to supervise any nonlawyer who assists her regardless of whether the nonlawyer is an employee of the lawyer, an independent contractor, or employed by another. Rule 5.3 and RPC 216. Execution of a preliminary title opinion that was prepared by an unsupervised nonlawyer is assisting the unauthorized practice of law in violation of Rule 5.5(b).

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 9

July 16, 1998

Charging for the Cost of Retrieving a Closed Client File

Opinion rules that a lawyer may charge a client the actual cost of retrieving a closed client file from storage, subject to certain conditions, provided the lawyer does not withhold the file to extract payment.

Inquiry:

May a lawyer charge a client for retrieving a closed file from storage?

Opinion:

A lawyer may charge a client the actual cost of retrieving a closed client file from storage subject to certain conditions.

RPC 209 requires a lawyer to keep a closed client file, on which no further representation is required, a minimum of six years unless the lawyer obtains the consent of the client to destroy the file or, after notice to the client, the client fails to retrieve the file. After six years pass, the lawyer may destroy the file without notifying the client provided the lawyer does not destroy any personal possessions or documents of the client.

To charge a client the actual cost of retrieving a closed file from storage, a lawyer must send a notice to the client at the client's last known address within a reasonable period of time after the matter is concluded and the file is closed. The notice should ask the client what the client wants the lawyer to do with the closed file. The options that may be given to the client are as follows: consent to the destruction of the file; agree that the lawyer will store the file with the understanding that the client will be charged the actual cost of retrieving the file from storage; or retrieve the file free of charge from the lawyer's office within a reasonable time after receipt of the notice. If the client directs the lawyer to mail the file, the lawyer may charge the shipping cost to client. If the client fails to respond to the notice, the lawyer must store the file for six years as required by RPC 209 and may recoup from the client the actual expense of retrieving the file at any time during the six year mandatory storage period.

The lawyer may not charge the client for photocopying the closed file (or any portion thereof) unless the client requests more than one copy of the file or a document in the file. The client may be charged for duplicate copies of the same document unless the lawyer retained the original document. RPC 178. Regardless of whether a notice was received by the client at the time that the representation was concluded, after a closed file is stored for six years and the lawyer is allowed to destroy the file without the client's consent, the lawyer may charge the client the actual cost of retrieving the file and making copies of the file or any document therein. At no time may a lawyer withhold originals or copies of documents or a file to extract payment of legal fees, retrieval costs, or copying costs; the lawyer has a claim for payment but he may not assert an interest in or lien against the file to secure payment.

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 10

July 16, 1998

Submission of Legal Bills to Audit Company at Request of Insurance Carrier

Opinion rules that an insurance defense lawyer may not disclose confidential information about an insured's representation in bills submitted to an independent audit company at the insurance carrier's request unless the insured consents.

Inquiry #1:

Law Firm is hired by Insurance Company to defend its insureds under its liability policies. Insurance Company requires great detail in Law Firm's bills for legal services and requires Law Firm to submit its bills directly to an outside audit company that is not affiliated with Insurance Company. The audit company makes all decisions about payment, nonpayment, or adjustment of Law Firm's bills. Bills are submitted on an interim basis during the pendency of the litigation and must contain detailed information about the legal services provided to the insured. May Law Firm submit its bills directly to the audit company rather than to Insurance Company?

Opinion #1:

Rules 1.6 and 1.7 provide in part:

Rule 1.6, Confidentiality of Information

(a)….

(b)….

(c) Except when permitted under paragraph (d), a lawyer shall not knowingly:

(1) reveal confidential information of a client;

(2)....

(3) use confidential information of a client for the advantage of the lawyer or a third person, unless the client consents after consultation.

(d) A lawyer may reveal:

(1) confidential information, the disclosure of which is impliedly authorized by the client as necessary to carry out the goals of the representation;

(2) confidential information with the consent of the client or clients affected, but only after consultation with them; ….

Rule 1.7, Conflict Of Interest: General Rule

(a)....

(b) A lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation of that client may be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client or to a third person, or by the lawyer's own interests, unless:

(1) the lawyer reasonably believes the representation will not be adversely affected; and

(2) the client consents after consultation which shall include explanation of the implications of the common representation and the advantages and risks involved.

(c) A lawyer shall have a continuing obligation to evaluate all situations involving potentially conflicting interests, and shall withdraw from the representation of any party the lawyer cannot adequately represent without using the confidential information of another client or a former client except as Rule 1.6 allows.

Bills for legal services are confidential and can, therefore, only be revealed with the consent of the client or clients affected, but only after consultation with them. Generally, there is no prohibition on submitting a client's legal bills to a third party for review at the client's request after consultation with the client. However, a tripartite relationship exists when a liability insurance carrier employs and pays the lawyer to represent and defend its insured. While the lawyer owes some duty of loyalty to the insurance carrier, the insured, rather than the insurance carrier, is the lawyer's primary client. See RPC 56 and CPR 255. "The attorney's responsibility is to the court and client which he serves before the court," and an insurance company may not exercise such control over the lawyer that would unduly dilute the lawyer's responsibility to the court and the insured-client. CPR 326. The opinions cited here, while decided pursuant to the Code of Professional Responsibility and the Rules of Professional Conduct that were replaced by the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct now in effect, are consistent with current Rule 5.4(c) which provides that: "[a] lawyer shall not permit a person who recommends, engages, or pays the lawyer to render legal services for another to direct or regulate the lawyer's professional judgment in rendering such legal services."

When the lawyer represents two clients, there is a delicate balance of the rights and duties owed by the lawyer to each client. With respect to the payment of legal fees, the interest of the insurance company and the insured are usually not the same. The insurance company usually has a paramount interest in controlling or reducing its defense costs, while the interest of the insured is generally to receive the best possible defense particularly if the claim may exceed the policy limits available for the insured's protection. Even when policy limits are adequate, the insured will not generally benefit from the release of any confidential information and the release of such information to a third party may constitute a waiver of the insured's attorney-client or work product privileges. Therefore, in general, by consenting, the insured agrees to release confidential information that could possibly (even if remotely) be prejudicial to her or invade her privacy without any return benefit.

While a client may consent in some instances, notwithstanding a conflict, as provided by Rule 1.7(b), the official comment to the rule states that the test of whether the client's consent is sufficient to waive a material limitation of the lawyer's responsibility, and whether the lawyer may properly ask a client to consent, is whether a "disinterested lawyer would conclude that the client should not agree." Rule 1.7, cmt.[5]. When the insured could be prejudiced by agreeing and gains nothing, a disinterested lawyer would not conclude that the insured should agree in the absence of some special circumstance. Therefore, the lawyer must reasonably conclude that there is some benefit to insured to outweigh any reasonable expectation of prejudice, or that the insured cannot be prejudiced by a release of the confidential information, before the lawyer may seek the informed consent of the insured after adequate consultation.

Some of the things that may be necessary for the lawyer to obtain, consider, and review in making this decision and consulting with the insured are:

(a) a copy of the agreement between the audit company and the insurance company;

(b) whether the audit company or the auditor may use or share the information with any other third party, including another insurance company;

(c) how the audit company controls access to the information;

(d) the level of security provided by the audit company;

(e) how the confidentiality of the information is maintained;

(f) the assurances given that the confidentiality of the information will be maintained; and

(g) the consequences for the client, if the release of confidential information waives the attorney-client or the work product privileges.

Inquiry #2:

Before divulging detailed information about the representation to the audit company, should Law Firm have the prior written consent of the insured?

Opinion #2:

While the client's written consent, when proper to seek such consent, is recommended, it is not required by the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct.

Inquiry #3:

May Insurance Company release the information in Law Firm's bills to the audit company without the consent of Law Firm or Insured?

Opinion #3:

The State Bar does not regulate insurance companies and, therefore, cannot prohibit an insurance company's release of information to third parties. However, if the lawyer is aware of this practice by the insurance company, the lawyer must inform the insurance company that she cannot represent an insured of the company if the company releases confidential information that the lawyer could not release in accordance with Opinion #1.

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 11

July 16, 1998

Editor's Note: See 99 Formal Ethics Opinion 8 for additional guidance.

The Lawyer as Escrow Agent

Opinion rules that the fiduciary relationship that arises when a lawyer serves as an escrow agent demands that the lawyer be impartial to both the obligor and the obligee and, therefore, the lawyer may not act as advocate for either party against the other. Once the fiduciary duties of the escrow agent terminate, the lawyer may take a position adverse to the obligor or the obligee provided the lawyer is not otherwise disqualified.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A closed the sale of residential property by Seller to Buyer. Before closing, Attorney A notified Seller that he represented only the interests of Buyer. At the time of closing, it became apparent that there were certain repairs that still needed to be done to the house. Seller and Buyer agreed to place $2,000 of the purchase price in escrow until the repairs were completed by Seller at which time the money would be released to Seller. Attorney A agreed to act as escrow agent. The escrow agreement was not memorialized in writing. Seller made some repairs to the house and has demanded that Attorney A release the money to him. Buyer contends that the repairs were shoddy and incomplete and has instructed Attorney A not to release the money. What can Attorney A do?

Opinion #1:

Like the role of a lawyer serving as a trustee under a deed of trust, the responsibilities of and limitations on a lawyer acting as an escrow agent arise primarily from the lawyer's fiduciary relationship in serving as an escrow agent as opposed to any client-lawyer relationship. See, e.g., RPC 82 and Rule 1.15-1(b)(3) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct. The fiduciary relationship demands that the escrow agent be impartial to both the obligor and the obligee under the escrow agreement. Therefore, the lawyer/escrow agent may not act as an advocate for either party against the other in any dispute regarding the release of the escrowed funds. The lawyer must carry out the terms of the escrow agreement with regard to the release the escrowed funds upon the happening of the agreed contingency or the performance of the agreed condition. If the lawyer/escrow agent cannot determine whether the contingency has occurred or there has been performance—either because the terms of the escrow agreement are too vague or the parties have a factual dispute—he may not release the funds until both parties consent or there is a court order directing that the funds be released. RPC 66.

In the present situation, Attorney A must be impartial in carrying out the terms of the escrow agreement. If he is unable to determine that the condition for release of the funds has been met, he may not release the funds to either Buyer or Seller until they have reached an agreement between themselves or until there is a court order instructing Attorney A to release the funds to one party or the other. As long as he serves as escrow agent, Attorney A must be impartial and he may not be an advocate for Buyer even though Buyer was formerly his client.

Inquiry #2:

May Attorney A resign as escrow agent, turn the funds over to a third party, and represent Buyer in his dispute with Seller over the release of the escrowed funds?

Opinion #2:

Yes. Former service as an escrow agent does not disqualify a lawyer from assuming the role of advocate for one party in a dispute over escrowed funds. Cf. RPC 82 (former service as trustee under deed of trust does not disqualify a lawyer from assuming partisan role in foreclosure proceeding). Of course, in the present inquiry, because of his prior representation of Buyer at closing, Attorney A may only assume the role of advocate for Buyer. See Rule 1.7.

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 12

July 16, 1998

Ex Parte Communication with a Judge

Opinion sets forth the disclosures a lawyer must make to the judge prior to engaging in an ex parte communication.

Inquiry #1:

When may a lawyer communicate ex parte with a judge to request a continuance or discuss other administrative matters?

Opinion #1:

As noted in 97 Formal Ethics Opinion 3, the administration of justice or exigent circumstances may necessitate an ex parte oral communication with a judge to resolve a scheduling or administrative matter. If so, the lawyer may initiate an ex parte communication with the judge only after a good faith effort is made to notify the opposing lawyer. 97 Formal Ethics Opinion 3. Unlike the prohibition on ex parte communications "as to the merits of a matter" in Rule 7.10(b) of the superseded (1985) Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 3.5(a) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits all ex parte communications with a judge except in the following situations: (1) in the course of official proceedings; (2) in writing, if the lawyer simultaneously delivers a copy of the writing to opposing counsel; (3) orally, upon adequate notice to the opposing counsel; or (4) as otherwise authorized by law. Because an ex parte communication may influence the outcome of a case, a lawyer should avoid such communications unless the opposing party receives adequate notice or the communication is allowed by law. See RPC 237 (citing statutes permitting ex parte communications in certain emergencies) and 97 Formal Ethics Opinion 3.

Inquiry #2:

Lawyer A has two different matters scheduled simultaneously in courts in different judicial districts. She has made several unsuccessful attempts to notify the opposing counsel in one matter that she needs to request a continuance from the judge. May Lawyer A request a continuance in an ex parte communication with the judge?

Opinion #2:

Yes, provided she fully informs the judge of the reason for her ex parte communication and she gives the judge an opportunity to determine whether he will hear the matter ex parte. The disclosures to the court should include the following: (1) that the lawyer is about to engage in an ex parte communication; (2) why it is necessary to speak to the judge ex parte; (3) the authority (statute, caselaw or ethics rule or opinion) that permits the ex parte communication; and (4) the status of attempts to notify the opposing counsel or the opposing party if unrepresented. If these disclosures are made, the judge can decide whether an ex parte discussion with the lawyer is appropriate.

Inquiry #3:

Do the limitations on ex parte communications with a judge apply equally to criminal defense counsel and to the lawyers in the district attorney's staff?

Opinion #3:

Yes.

---

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 13

July 23, 1999

Written Communications with a Judge or Judicial Official

Opinion restricts informal written communications with a judge or judicial official relative to a pending matter.

Inquiry:

Attorney A represents the employee in a workers' compensation case. Attorney X represents the employer and the insurance carrier. After the case was assigned to a deputy commissioner for hearing, Attorney A wrote to Attorney X regarding discovery disputes, medical treatment and examination of the employee, and alternative employment for the employee. The letter implied that Attorney X had engaged in improper conduct by communicating with an examining physician and failing to respond to discovery. The letter was copied to the deputy commissioner scheduled to hear the case.

Apart from the submission or filing of formal pleadings, motions, petitions, or notices, may a lawyer communicate in writing with a judge or other judicial official about a proceeding that is pending before the judge or judicial official?

Opinion:

A lawyer may communicate in writing with a judge or judicial official under the limited circumstances set forth below.

Rule 3.5(a)(3) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct regulates ex parte communications by a lawyer with a judge or other judicial official. The phrase "other judicial official," as used in the rule, includes, but is not limited to, the commissioners and deputy commissioners of the Industrial Commission.

On its face, Rule 3.5(a)(3) appears to permit unlimited written communications with a judge or other judicial official relative to a proceeding pending before the judge or judicial official provided a copy of the written communication is furnished simultaneously to the opposing party. The rule must be read, however, in conjunction with Rule 8.4(d) which prohibits conduct that is prejudicial to the administration of justice, and with comment [7] to Rule 3.5 which states:

> All litigants and lawyers should have access to tribunals on an equal basis. Generally, in adversary proceedings, a lawyer should not communicate with a judge relative to a matter pending before, or which is to be brought before, a tribunal over which the judge presides in circumstances which might have the effect or give the appearance of granting undue advantage to one party.

The submission to a tribunal of formal written communications, such as pleadings and motions, pursuant to the tribunal's rules of procedure, does not create the appearance of granting undue advantage to one party. Unfortunately, informal ex parte written communications, whether addressed directly to the judge or copied to the judge as in this inquiry, may be used as an opportunity to introduce new evidence, to argue the merits of the case, or to cast the opposing party or counsel in a bad light. To avoid the appearance of improper influence upon a tribunal, informal written communications with a judge or other judicial official should be limited to the following:

1) Written communications, such as a proposed order or legal memorandum, prepared pursuant to the court's instructions;

2) Written communications relative to emergencies, changed circumstances, or scheduling matters that may affect the procedural status of a case such as a request for a continuance due to the health of a litigant or an attorney;

3) Written communications sent to the tribunal with the consent of the opposing lawyer or opposing party if unrepresented; and

4) Any other communication permitted by law or the rules or written procedures of the particular tribunal.

---

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 14

January 15, 1999

Solicitation of Funds to Pay Client's Legal Fees

Opinion rules that a lawyer may participate in the solicitation of funds from third parties to pay the legal fees of a client provided there is disclosure to contributors and the funds are administered honestly.

Inquiry #1:

Client P was terminated from his position as an employee of the county. He filed an administrative appeal with the county as well as a lawsuit in federal court. In both proceedings, Client P seeks to recover attorneys' fees and costs in addition to damages. Client P is represented by Attorney A1 and Attorney A2 who practice with different law firms.

Attorney A1 and Attorney A2 helped Client P to establish a fund to defray Client P's legal expenses. To solicit donations to the fund, the following press release was submitted to the local paper for publication:

> Supporters of Client P have announced the establishment of a legal fund to assist Client P in his litigation against the county for wrongful dismissal from his job as an employee of the county.
>
> Sources close to the case indicate that to date, county officials have spent $250,000 of taxpayers' money for legal expenses against Client P. Sources also state that officials may end up spending as much as $800,000 if the county does not settle the case. A high ranking county official has threatened to appeal the case for years.
>
> Client P's attorney, unlike the county attorneys, has not been paid. Meanwhile, out-of-pocket costs for depositions, travel, court reporters, and the like continue to rise.

In order that the playing field may be leveled and "trial by ambush" may be avoided, Client P supporters are requesting that anyone who wishes to aid the legal efforts of Client P make a donation to the Client P Legal Defense Trust at ABC Bank.

The identity of those contributing to the trust will be protected and funds from the blind trust will be used solely to defray the legal defense of Client P in his efforts to oppose and redress the alleged illegal actions of a small group of county officials.

Donations may be mailed to or taken by any ABC Bank. Checks should be made to: Client P Legal Defense Fund Trust.

May a lawyer participate in the solicitation of funds from third parties to pay the legal expenses of a client?

Opinion #1:

The Revised Rules of Professional Conduct do not prohibit a lawyer from participating in a solicitation of third parties for funds to defray the legal expenses of a client provided the lawyer complies with Rule 1.8(f) which states:

[a] lawyer shall not accept compensation for representing a client from one other than the client unless:

(1) the client consents after consultation;

(2) there is no interference with the lawyer's independence of professional judgment or with the client-lawyer relationship; and

(3) information relating to representation of a client is protected as required by Rule 1.6.

Inquiry #2:

Does it matter that the lawyer agreed to solicit funds for a client in connection with or in lieu of a written fee agreement with the client?

Opinion #2:

No, provided the lawyer does not enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or clearly excessive fee in violation of Rule 1.5(a).

Inquiry #3:

Would the answer to Inquiry #1 be different if an award of attorneys' fees is sought as a part of the recovery in the pending litigation?

Opinion #3:

No, provided there is no misrepresentation or fraud in the lawyer's representations to prospective contributors to the fund or to the court at the time of the hearing on the request for attorneys' fees. See Opinion #9 below.

Inquiry #4:

Is the lawyer responsible for ensuring that the funds collected from donors are used to defray the client's legal expenses?

Opinion #4:

Yes, if a lawyer participates in the solicitation of funds for a client's legal representation, the lawyer is responsible for the honest administration of those funds. Rule 8.4(c). If the lawyer personally receives any of the funds, the lawyer must deposit the funds into the lawyer's trust account and safekeep those funds in accordance with the requirements of Rule 1.15-1 and Rule 1.15-2.

Inquiry #5:

Is the lawyer liable to contributors if the funds are improperly administered or disbursed?

Opinion #5:

The question of the lawyer's liability to contributors is a legal question outside the purview of the Ethics Committee. However, to the extent that a lawyer engages in dishonest or fraudulent conduct in the management of the funds, or fails to comply with the trust account requirements set forth in Rule 1.15-1 and Rule 1.15-2, the lawyer may be subject to professional discipline.

Inquiry #6:

Is the lawyer responsible for ensuring the accuracy of the information contained in a press release relative to the solicitation of funds for a client's representation?

Opinion #6:

Yes, if a lawyer participates in the solicitation of funds for a client in this manner, the lawyer must ensure that the press release does not contain false or misleading communications. Rule 8.4(c); see also Rule 7.1.

Inquiry #7:

If the information contained in the press release is not accurate, is the lawyer potentially liable to the contributors for misrepresentation?

Opinion #7:

This is a legal question outside the purview of the Ethics Committee. However, to the extent that a lawyer engages in unethical conduct in the solicitation of funds to defray the legal expenses of a client, the lawyer may be subject to professional discipline.

Inquiry #8:

May a contributor to the fund remain anonymous if the contributor may be called as a witness in the case?

Opinion #8:

Yes, if the disclosure of the identity of a contributor is not otherwise required by law.

Inquiry #9:

If Client P prevails and attorneys' fees are awarded to Client P by the court, are Attorney A1 and Attorney A2 required to return the donations to the contributors to Client P's legal representation?

Opinion #9:

If necessary to avoid the collection of a clearly excessive fee in violation of Rule 1.5(a), the funds must be returned to the donors or otherwise disposed of in accordance with the representations made to prospective donors. To avoid misrepresentation at the time that donations are solicited, prospective donors must be informed of the intended disposition of any excess funds in the event that the client is successful on the claim for attorneys' fees. Rule 8.4(c). To avoid misrepresentation to the court at the time of the hearing on the request for attorneys' fees, there must be full disclosure to the court as to the existence of the legal representation fund and the disposition of any excess funds if the court awards attorneys' fees. See Rule 3.3(a).

Inquiry #10:

If Attorney A1 and Attorney A2 have a contingent fee agreement with Client P that provides that, in the event damages are collected as a result of the federal court action, Attorney A1 and Attorney A2 will receive a percentage of those damages as their fee. If Client P is successful at trial and receives both an award of damages as well as an award of attorneys' fees, are the lawyers obligated to reimburse the donors to Client P's legal fund?

Opinion #10:

See Opinion #9.

---

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 15

January 15, 1999

The Year 2000 Problem and Lawyer Trust Accounts

Opinion rules that whether the year 2000 computer problem is being adequately addressed by a depository bank should be considered when selecting a depository bank for a trust account.

Inquiry:

Many older computer software and hardware systems record data and make calculations using only the last two digits of a year. Because computers with this limitation will interpret "00" as "1900,"[1] there may be serious system failures in numerous industries, including the banking industry, when the clock strikes midnight on December 31, 1999. The computer problems associated with the approach of the next millennium are commonly referred to collectively as "the year 2000 problem."[2]

A lawyer has a fiduciary obligation to segregate and protect client funds by depositing them in a trust account with a North Carolina bank. Rule 1.15-1(d). What steps should a lawyer take to safeguard client funds in a trust account from potential loss due to a year 2000 problem at the depository bank for the lawyer's trust account?

Opinion:

A lawyer must exercise due care in selecting a depository bank including consideration of how the year 2000 problem is addressed by the bank.

Endnotes:

1. Most computer operating systems do not recognize "1900." Therefore, they will report the earliest possible date they support. This is usually January 1, 1980. Dollars & Cents at 4, American Society of Association Executives, (August 1998).
2. This is not intended to be a thorough explanation of the year 2000 problem. Lawyers are advised to research the problem thoroughly and to address in advance any potential malfunctions that may interrupt their practices.

---

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 16

January 15, 1999

Representation of Client Resisting an Incompetency Petition

Opinion rules that a lawyer may represent a person who is resisting an incompetency petition although the person may suffer from a mental disability, provided the lawyer determines that resisting the incompetency petition is not frivolous.

Inquiry #1:

Wife, who is elderly, was removed from the marital home. Husband, who is also elderly, contacted Attorney A because Husband did not understand why his wife was removed from the home. He asked Attorney A to investigate. Attorney A discovered that Wife was the subject of an involuntary incompetency proceeding. When Attorney A gained access to Wife, she indicated that she wanted Attorney A to represent her in resisting the involuntary incompetency petition. She repeatedly said that she wanted to go home to live with her husband.

Attorney A also learned that Husband was investigated by police relative to allegations of abuse and neglect of Wife. Attorney A met with Husband and told him that he could not represent Wife in resisting the incompetency petition and represent Husband in defending against an action in connection with Wife's care or treatment. Husband agreed that Attorney A's representation would be limited to representing Wife in resisting the incompetency petition and that Husband would be responsible for paying the legal fees for that representation. A written fee agreement memorializing this arrangement was executed. Although Wife was held in a hospital at this time, she continued to express unequivocally that she desired Attorney A to represent her.

When Attorney A visited Wife, he noticed abnormalities in her behavior but he also witnessed extended periods of apparent lucidity. She repeatedly told Attorney A she wanted to go home, that she did not want an appointed guardian, and that she did not want to be declared incompetent. Attorney A filed several motions in the incompetency proceeding, including a motion to remove the guardian and for a jury trial. At the incompetency hearing before the clerk, the attorney for the Department of Social Services (DSS) and the guardian ad litem who had been appointed for Wife by the clerk, contended that Attorney A had no "standing or authority" to pursue motions on behalf of Wife. They argued that Attorney A had a conflict of interest due to his initial representation of Husband and Husband's continued payment for the representation. The clerk found that Attorney A was without "standing or authority" to represent Wife and summarily denied all motions filed on Wife's behalf by Attorney A. Attorney A's motion to stay the incompetency proceeding was also denied.

During the incompetency hearing, Attorney A was not allowed to participate as counsel for Wife. Attorney A was called as a witness, however. Wife, when she testified, could not identify Attorney A as her lawyer. However, she expressed a desire to return home with her husband to avoid becoming a ward of the state. At the close of the evidence, the clerk declared Wife incompetent and appointed the director of DSS to be her legal guardian.

Thereafter Attorney A filed a notice of appeal seeking a trial de novo in superior court on the issues of right to counsel, incompetency, and right to a jury trial. The attorney for DSS now contends that Attorney A has no authority to represent Wife because she has been adjudicated incompetent and only her legal guardian may make decisions about her legal representation. The DSS lawyer now demands that Attorney A provide the guardian with a copy of every document in Wife's legal file.

Does Attorney A have a conflict of interest because he initially represented Husband?

Opinion #1:

No. The representation of Wife in the incompetency proceeding is not a representation that is adverse to the interest of Husband. Furthermore, Attorney A obtained the consent of Husband to represent only Wife in the incompetency proceeding. The exercise of Attorney A's independent professional judgment on behalf of Wife is not impaired by the prior representation of Husband. See Rule 1.7 and Rule 1.9.

Inquiry #2:

Does it matter that Husband pays for the representation of Wife?

Opinion #2:

No. Rule 1.8(f) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct permits a lawyer to accept compensation for representing a client from someone other than the client if the client consents after consultation; there is no interference with the lawyer's independent professional judgment or the attorney-client relationship; and the confidentiality of client information is protected.

Inquiry #3:

Wife has been declared incompetent by the state and a guardian appointed to represent her interests. Does Attorney A have to treat Wife as incompetent and defer to the decision of the guardian relative to the representation of Wife?

Opinion #3:

No. Wife is entitled to counsel of her own choosing particularly with regard to a proceeding that so clearly and directly affects her freedom to continue to make decisions for herself. Rule 1.14(a) provides as follows: "[w]hen a client's ability to make adequately considered decisions in connection with the representation is impaired, whether because of minority, mental disability, or for some other reason, the lawyer shall, as far as reasonably possible, maintain a normal client-lawyer relationship with the client." If Attorney A is able to maintain a relatively normal client-lawyer relationship with Wife and Attorney A reasonably believes that Wife is able to make adequately considered decisions in connection with her representation, Attorney A may continue to represent her alone without including the guardian in the representation. However, if Attorney A has reason to believe that Wife is incapable of making decisions about her representation and is indeed incompetent, the appeal of the finding of incompetency may be frivolous. If so, Attorney A may not represent her on the appeal. See Rule 3.1 (prohibiting frivolous claims and defenses).

Inquiry #4:

Once the guardian was appointed for Wife, did the guardian become Attorney A's client, or otherwise step into the shoes of Wife, such that Attorney A may only take directions from the guardian and not from Wife?

Opinion #4:

No. Rule 1.14(a) quoted above indicates that a lawyer may represent a client under a mental disability. The lawyer owes the duty of loyalty to the client and not to the guardian or legal representative of the client, particularly if the lawyer concludes that the legal guardian is not acting in the best interest of the client.

Inquiry #5:

Does Attorney A have to turn over Wife's legal file to Wife's appointed guardian?

Opinion #5:

No. When a guardian is appointed for a client, a lawyer may turn over materials in the client's file and disclose other confidential information to the guardian if the release of such confidential information is consistent with the purpose of the original representation of the client or consistent with the express instructions of the client. See, e.g., RPC 206 (attorney for deceased client may release confidential information to the personal representative of the estate). However, where, as here, the release of confidential information to a guardian is contrary to the purpose of the representation, the lawyer must protect the confidentiality of the client's information and may not release the legal file to the guardian absent a court order. See Rule 1.6(d)(3).

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 17

January 15, 1999

Compliance with Insurance Carrier's Billing Requirements and Guidelines

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not comply with an insurance carrier's billing requirements and guidelines if they interfere with the lawyer's ability to exercise his or her independent professional judgment in the representation of the insured.

Inquiry:

Law Firm represents Insurance Company and defends its insureds under its liability insurance policies. Insurance Company implemented a compliance review program that includes billing requirements and guidelines. The billing requirements and guidelines provide, among other things, that Insurance Company will not pay for the following: summer associate and law clerk time; research exceeding three hours per case (except with prior written approval); making deposition arrangements or arrangements for meetings or conference calls; intra-office conferencing and memoranda; trial preparation (i.e., preparation of jury instructions, motions in limine, trial notebooks, page/line deposition summaries, etc.) prior to the time a trial date is set; and working on any given day in excess of ten hours, regardless of the number of Insurance Company files on which the timekeeper is working, in the absence of identifiable extraordinary circumstances such as trial, lengthy depositions, and travel.

May the lawyers with Law Firm comply with the billing requirements and guidelines?

Opinion:

No, unless the insured consents after disclosure.

The insured, rather than the insurance carrier, is the lawyer's primary client. See RPC 56. Therefore, the lawyer must be free to exercise his or her independent professional judgment on behalf of the insured. Rule 1.8(f) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct provides as follows:

> [A] lawyer shall not accept compensation for representing a client from one other than the client unless:
>
> (1) the client consents after consultation;
>
> (2) there is no interference with the lawyer's independence of professional judgment or with the client-lawyer relationship; and
>
> (3) information relating to representation of the client is protected as required by Rule 1.6.

Similarly, Rule 5.4(c) states: "A lawyer shall not permit a person who recommends, engages, or pays the lawyer to render legal services for another to direct or regulate the lawyer's professional judgment in rendering such legal services."

The billing requirements and guidelines described in the inquiry are designed to regulate the allocation of time and resources to the representation of the insured and thereby reduce the cost of representation. However, such cost saving measures may restrain a lawyer's exercise of independent professional judgment when determining the tasks and services necessary to represent the insured competently. If the requirements and guidelines will restrain a lawyer's professional judgment in representing a particular insured, the lawyer is ethically prohibited from complying with the guidelines and restrictions. See Informal Opinion of the Office of General Counsel of the Alabama State Bar (June 16, 1998). However, a lawyer may comply with billing restrictions and guidelines if the insured consents to the cost saving measures after full disclosure of the benefits and risks involved. See Rule 1.2(c) (permitting a lawyer to limit the objectives of representation with client consent) and Rule 1.7(b) (permitting multiple representation with client consent).

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 18

January 15, 1999

Revealing Confidential Information to Parents of Minor Client

Opinion rules that a lawyer representing a minor owes the duty of confidentiality to the minor and may only disclose confidential information to the minor's parent, without the minor's consent, if the parent is the legal guardian of the minor and the disclosure of the information is necessary to make a binding legal decision about the subject matter of the representation.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A is defending Minor, who is 15 years old, against criminal charges. Minor is being tried as an adult. The State has offered Minor a plea to a reduced charge. Minor does not consent to the disclosure to his parents of any of the evidence against him or the plea offer. Is Attorney A required to disclose the information to Minor's parents?

Opinion #1:

Rule 1.14(a) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct requires a lawyer to "maintain a normal client-lawyer relationship with the client" although "[the] client's ability to make adequately considered decisions in connection with the representation is impaired...because of minority ...." Therefore, a lawyer owes the duty of confidentiality to a minor client and may not disclose confidential information to minor's parents unless there is an applicable exception in Rule 1.6(d) permitting disclosure. Rule 1.6(d)(3) permits a lawyer to reveal confidential client information when permitted by law or court order. A lawyer representing a minor may disclose confidential information to the minor's legal guardian, over the minor's objection, if the disclosure is necessary for the guardian to make a legally binding decision about the subject matter of the representation. See Rule 1.14, cmt. [3]. However, the lawyer may withhold confidential information from the legal guardian if the lawyer believes that the guardian is acting adversely to the interests of the child or the information is not necessary to make a decision about the representation.

In the present inquiry, Minor is being tried as an adult and the consent of Minor's parents is not necessary for Minor to make a legally binding decision about the plea agreement. Therefore, Attorney A must honor Minor's request and not disclose the information to Minor's parents.

Inquiry #2:

If Minor's parents are not his legal guardians but Minor instructs Attorney A to disclose the plea offer to his parent or parents, may Attorney A do so?

Opinion #2:

Yes, Rule 1.6(d)(2) permits a lawyer to disclose confidential information with the consent of the client.

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 19

April 23, 1999

Threats Involving the Criminal Justice System

Opinion provides guidelines for a lawyer representing a client with a civil claim that also constitutes a crime.

Inquiry:

Attorney A represents Client who is charged with criminal conspiracy to defraud Victim. Client was indicted on several counts and, because of his prior record, will likely receive active jail time. Attorney is negotiating a plea with the district attorney office. In the interim, Attorney Z, who represents the prosecuting witness, Victim, has conveyed to Attorney A the following proposal: Victim will not object to the plea arrangement and will stand mute at sentencing if Client will give Victim a confession of judgment in the corresponding civil action thereby agreeing to repay Victim pursuant to a payment schedule and Client's spouse will also execute an agreement to make payments to Victim. Victim and the district attorney's office acknowledge that spouse was not a part of the effort to defraud Victim and is not liable in any criminal prosecution or civil action.

Client is willing to enter into a confession of judgment for the full amount owing and agrees to a payment schedule that increases substantially once Client's spouse begins working. Client's spouse, however, does not want to enter into the contractual arrangement. If Client's spouse does not consent to this arrangement, Attorney Z has indicated that he will contact the district attorney's office to withdraw Victim's support for the plea. The district attorney's office is willing to enter into a plea only with the approval of Victim.

Does the conduct of Victim's attorney violate the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion:

Rule 7.5 of the superseded (1985) Rules of Professional Conduct, prohibited a lawyer from "present[ing], participat[ing] in presenting, or threaten[ing] to present criminal charges primarily to obtain an advantage in a civil matter."

Rule 7.5 was deliberately omitted from the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct adopted on July 24, 1997. See Executive Summary of the Report of the Committee to Review the Rules of Professional Conduct in Materials for the North Carolina Supreme Court on the Proposed Revised Rules of Professional Conduct, N.C. State Bar, Raleigh, N.C., April 4, 1997. The absence of the rule from the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct does not mean, however, that all threats involving the criminal justice system are permitted nor does it mean that abuse of the legal system or extortion are condoned. See Rule 8.4 of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct. A lawyer may present, participate in presenting, or threaten to present criminal charges to obtain an advantage in a civil matter if the criminal charges are related to the civil matter and the lawyer reasonably believes that the charges are well grounded in fact and warranted by law and, further provided, the lawyer's conduct does not constitute a crime under North Carolina law. See ABA Comm. on Ethics and Professional Responsibility, Formal Op. 363 (1992) and Rule 8.4(b).

Victim's civil claim for fraud against Client is related to the criminal charges against Client. If Attorney Z has a well-founded belief that both the civil claim and the criminal charges are warranted by the law and the facts, and Attorney Z has not attempted to exert or suggest improper influence over the criminal justice system, Attorney Z has not violated the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct by proposing that Victim will acquiesce to the plea agreement in exchange for a confession of judgment from Client. Moreover, it is not improper for Attorney Z to seek adequate security for Client's confession of judgment in the form of a promissory note from Client's spouse even though no civil or criminal claims are being made against Client's spouse.

Although the rule prohibiting threats of criminal prosecution to gain an advantage in a civil matter was omitted from the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct, a lawyer representing a client with a civil claim that also constitutes a crime should adhere to the following guidelines: (1) a threat to present criminal charges or the presentation of criminal charges may only be made if the lawyer reasonably believes that both the civil claim and the criminal charges are well-grounded in fact and warranted by law and the client's objective is not wrongful; (2) the proposed settlement of the civil claim may not exceed the amount to which the victim may be entitled under applicable law; (3) the lawyer may not imply an ability to influence the district attorney, the judge, or the criminal justice system improperly; and (4) the lawyer may not imply that the lawyer has the ability to interfere with the due administration of justice and the criminal proceedings or that the client will enter into any agreement to falsify evidence.

---

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 20

April 23, 1999

Disclosing Confidential Information about Debtor's Property after Discharge in Bankruptcy

Opinion rules that, subject to a statute prohibiting the withholding of the information, a lawyer's duty to disclose confidential client information to a bankruptcy court ends when the case is closed although the debtor's duty to report new property continues for 180 days after the date of filing the petition.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A represented Client in a Chapter 7 Bankruptcy proceeding. The discharge has been entered and the case closed. Subsequently, Attorney A learned from Attorney B, Client's attorney in a domestic matter, that Client recently inherited a substantial sum of money. According to 11 U.S.C. § 541, property of the bankruptcy estate includes any property that the debtor acquires or becomes entitled to within 180 days of the date of filing the petition. 11 U.S.C. § 521 and Bankruptcy Rule 1007(h) require a debtor to report income or assets acquired through bequest, devise, or inheritance within the 180 days. Client's inheritance would be considered property of the estate, thus, triggering the reporting requirement. Client has not yet reported this income and the applicable time period has not lapsed. Although the case is closed, the trustee has one year to reopen the case and distribute assets. Attorney A has informed Client he has a duty to report his inheritance.

Is the information received from Attorney B confidential information under Rule 1.6?

Opinion #1:

Yes. Rule 1.6 defines confidential information as "information gained in the professional relationship that the client has requested be held inviolate or the disclosure of which would be embarrassing or would be likely to be detrimental to the client." Although this definition may appear on its face to limit confidential information to information either received from the client or received during the course of the representation, the comment to the rule clarifies that "[t]he confidentiality rule applies not merely to matters communicated in confidence by the client but also to all information relating to the representation, whatever its source." Rule 1.6, cmt. 5. In this case, the information, although received from another attorney, relates to Attorney A's representation of Client and was acquired at a time when Attorney A had undertaken to keep Client informed of his responsibilities regarding bankruptcy estate property.

Inquiry #2:

If Client refuses to report his inheritance, does Rule 3.3(a) require that Attorney A reveal this information to the court or bankruptcy administrator so that the case may be reopened?

Opinion #2:

No. Rule 3.3(a) imposes a duty of candor on an attorney appearing before a tribunal in a court of law or adjudicative proceeding. The rule, however, places a time limitation on an attorney's duty to disclose. Once a proceeding has concluded, Rule 3.3(a) ceases to govern attorney conduct; that is, the duty to disclose arises only during the proceedings and not thereafter. Rule 3.3(b). See Annotated Model Rules of Professional Conduct Rule 3.3 cmt. (3rd ed. 1996); Charles W. Wolfram, Modern Legal Ethics § 12.5.3, at 660 (1986). Here, the bankruptcy proceeding was closed. Notwithstanding a trustee's ability to reopen the case, in the Chapter 7 context, there currently is no case or proceeding triggering a duty to disclose under Rule 3.3.

Inquiry #3:

May Attorney A reveal information about Client's inheritance under Rule 1.6(d)?

Opinion #3:

Ordinarily, an attorney may not disclose confidential information of a client. Rule 1.6(c). Rule 1.6(d)(3) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct permits, but does not require, Attorney A to reveal the information to the appropriate authority when required by law.

A Chapter 7 estate is created upon the filing of the case and terminates upon closure of the case. Under a federal criminal statute relating to bankruptcy, 18 U.S.C. § 152, a person who > knowingly and fraudulently conceals from a custodian, trustee, marshal, or other officer of the court charged with control or custody of property, or, in connection with a case under title 11, from creditors or the United States Trustee, any property belonging to the estate of a debtor . . . shall be fined under this title, imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both. [emphasis added]

Because property of the estate includes property acquired by the debtor within 180 days of commencement of the case, Attorney A may determine that, under 18 U.S.C. § 152, he has a legal duty to reveal information regarding the Client's estate, and that there may be criminal consequences for his failure to do so. Other federal statutes including Title 11, Title 18, the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure (e.g. Rules 1007(h) and 1008), or local rules of Court should be consulted in this regard. This opinion is limited to the facts stated, in a Chapter 7 case, and may not apply in other bankruptcy contexts.

A lawyer should comply with a statute compelling disclosure of confidential information unless disclosure will substantially damage the interests of the client and there is a compelling legal interest of the client that may entitle the lawyer not to reveal the information. See RPC 175 ("a lawyer may be unwilling to comply with the child abuse reporting statute because he or she believes that compliance would deprive a client charged with a crime of the constitutional right to effective assistance of counsel"). Of course, before disclosing any confidential information to the authorities, Attorney A should give Client the opportunity to comply with the disclosure requirement by informing Client of his ongoing duty to amend his schedules to reflect the inheritance, that he is subject to the penalties of perjury if he does not do so, and that Attorney A may reveal the information to the authorities if Client fails to do so.

99 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

April 23, 1999

Accepting a Referral Fee from an Investment Advisor

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not accept a referral fee or solicitor's fee for referring a client to an investment advisor.

Inquiry:

An investment advisory firm (the "investment advisor"), registered under the Investment Advisor's Act of 1940 (the "Advisor's Act") and qualified to provide investment advisory services in North Carolina under the North Carolina Securities Act, is contemplating a program in which the investment advisor will pay a referral or solicitor's fee to attorneys in North Carolina for referring clients to the investment advisor. The fee paid will be a percentage of the fee paid by the client to the investment advisor for investment advisory services. The investment advisor contemplates that the attorney's involvement will be limited to (1) providing clients with material describing the investment program, (2) introducing the client to the investment advisor's registered personnel and attending meetings at which the investment advisor's personnel explain the investment program to the client and assist the client in choosing the investment advisory services that best fit the client's needs, and (3) receiving copies of the client's periodic investment advisory statements.

The Securities and Exchange Commission has taken the position that persons providing solicitation services for a fee will not be required to register as an investment advisor under the Advisor's Act if the investment advisor who provides the services is in compliance with Rule 206(4)-3 (the "rule") of the Advisor's Act. The rule provides that a cash payment may be paid by the registered investment advisor to a solicitor if (1) the solicitor is not subject to a "statutory disqualification" under the Advisor Act and (2) the referral or solicitation fee is paid pursuant to a written agreement which describes the solicitor's activities and the compensation for those activities, contains a solicitor's understanding to perform those duties under the agreement consistent with the investment advisor's instructions and the Advisor's Act, and requires the solicitor, at the time of any solicitation, to provide the client with a copy of the investment advisor's brochure (a disclosure document containing background information about the investment advisor and the compensation to be paid) and a separate written disclosure document that sets out certain information about the investment advisor, the solicitor, and the arrangement. The investment advisor must receive from the client a signed and dated acknowledgment showing that the client received the separate written disclosure document and the investment advisor must make a bona fide effort to ascertain that the solicitor complied with the terms of the agreement between the parties.

The investment advisor and attorneys participating in the program will comply with the Advisor's Act and the North Carolina Securities Act. May a North Carolina attorney accept a referral fee or "solicitor's fee" from the investment advisor for referring clients to the investment advisor?

Opinion:

No. Although the law may permit such payments under certain circumstances, the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct impose a higher standard of conduct. A lawyer must exercise independent professional judgment on behalf of a client when referring a client to a third party for services related to the subject matter of the legal representation. See Rule 1.7(b). If a lawyer will receive a referral fee from the third party, the lawyer's professional judgment in making the referral is or may be impaired. Written disclosure to the client will not neutralize the potential for the lawyer's self-interest to impair his or her judgment. Other ethics opinions are consistent with this holding. CPR 241 rules that a lawyer who sells insurance should not sell insurance to clients for whom he has done estate planning. Similarly, RPC 238 permits a law firm to provide financial planning services provided no commission is earned by anyone affiliated with the firm.

99 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

April 23, 1999

Obtaining Medical Records

Opinion rules that a defense lawyer may suggest that the records custodian of plaintiff's medical record deliver the medical record to the lawyer's office in lieu of an appearance at a noticed deposition provided the plaintiff's lawyer consents.

Inquiry:

Plaintiff sustained severe facial injuries as a result of a single-vehicle automobile accident which occurred while Plaintiff was riding as a guest passenger in Defendant's automobile. The claim was not settled and suit was filed by Plaintiff's counsel, Attorney P.

Attorney D, counsel for Defendant, served the medical records custodians at the offices of Plaintiff's various treating physicians with notices of deposition. Attached to each deposition notice was a subpoena duces tecum requiring each records custodian to produce at the scheduled deposition a complete copy of Plaintiff's medical record. With each notice of deposition and subpoena was a letter from Attorney D advising the recipient that "in lieu of attendance at the deposition, a complete copy of the entire file on Plaintiff may be mailed to Attorney D's offices." The letter contained a list of documents to be mailed to Attorney D. Attorney P was unaware that the depositions were scheduled until he was served with copies of the notices. Plaintiff had not executed an authorization for Attorney D or Defendant to obtain her medical records.

Several of the medical records custodians mailed Attorney D copies of Plaintiff's medical records. Attorney D mailed copies of these medical records to Attorney P.

Is it appropriate for a lawyer to obtain medical records in this manner?

Opinion:

RPC 236 provides that it is unethical for a lawyer to mislead the custodian of documentary evidence as to the lawyer's authority to require the production of documents. See Rule 8.4(c) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct. A lawyer may obtain medical records in the manner described in this inquiry only if there is an agreement between the lawyers to waive the deposition and allow the medical records custodian to deliver the medical records directly to the opposing lawyer. See generally RPC 180 (after case is called for trial and physician is subpoenaed as witness, defense counsel may accept medical records in mail from physician) and Rule 45(c) of the North Carolina Rules of Civil Procedure.

99 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

April 23, 1999

Representation of Adverse Interests by Legal Services Lawyers

Opinion rules that lawyers in different field offices of Legal Services of North Carolina may represent clients with materially adverse interests provided confidential client information is not shared by the lawyers with the different field offices.

Inquiry:

Currently, Legal Services of North Carolina (LSNC) is a confederation of 12 individual nonprofit corporations serving 12 different geographic areas in North Carolina. There is also a separate corporation called Legal Services of North Carolina that distributes funding to the 12 nonprofit corporations and oversees the use of the funding in accordance with federal and state law. The mission of LSNC is to provide free legal representation to poor people in civil matters and thereby ensure access to justice and contribute to the stability of society. The types of cases handled by legal service programs include family (most involve domestic violence), housing, income maintenance, consumer, and employment law. Despite funding by a variety of sources and an attorney pay scale much lower than other government attorney pay scales, the ratio of staff attorneys to poor people throughout the state of North Carolina in 1996 was 1:15,000. Many clients with meritorious cases go unserved simply due to lack of resources.

The 12 individual nonprofit corporations will consolidate into one corporation effective January 1, 1999. Following consolidation, the central administrative office of the corporation will control general administrative, accounting, and purchasing functions, as well as oversee the use of federal and state funds by the local programs or field offices. The local programs will continue to serve their separate geographic areas. They will retain substantial autonomy particularly in the area of determining what cases to accept, representation of clients, and the employment of staff attorneys and other local employees. Each local field program will have its own board of trustees composed of local attorneys and client representatives. Each board will oversee the operation of its own local field program and determine the types of cases the local program may accept for representation. Each local program will continue to maintain its own individual client files. Confidential information contained in these client files is accessible to other local legal service programs only in rare cases such as co-representation or during peer review evaluations. Safeguards will be put in place to ensure that no conflict of interest exists in any case prior to the disclosure of confidential client information to an employee of another local program. Safeguards will also be put into place to ensure that the central administrative staff does not have access to confidential client information in cases in which different local programs represent clients with adverse interests.

Consolidation of the 12 individual nonprofit corporations raises the issue of whether lawyers employed in the separate local field programs constitute one law firm for the purpose of representing clients with materially adverse interests. Legal service clients do not have funds to pay for representation. Only a few lawyers are willing to take cases on a pro bono basis. If low income opponents in litigation live in different geographic service areas, one party will be forced in many cases to appear without representation if different legal service programs are allowed to represent only one party. Moreover, checking the client records of each of the 12 local programs for potential conflicts of interest among individual local programs will be costly and burdensome.

Given the physically different locations of the local field programs, the inaccessibility of confidential client information among the local field programs, and the potential lack of representation to some low income clients if representation of opposing parties is not permitted, may different local legal service programs represent clients with materially adverse interests after consolidation on January 1, 1999?

Opinion:

Yes, provided there is no sharing of confidential information of clients with adverse interests who are represented by different local programs.

Rule 1.10 of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct imputes disqualifications to lawyers who are associated for the practice of law. Subparagraph (a) of the rule provides as follows: [w]hile lawyers are associated in a firm, none of them shall knowingly represent a client when any one of them practicing alone would be prohibited from doing so by Rules 1.7, 1.8(c), 1.9, or 2.2." The rule presumes that lawyers in a law firm, or other types of associations, have access to each others' confidential client information and share that information for the purpose of facilitating the representation of clients. Comment [1] to Rule 1.10 observes that the term "firm" "includes lawyers in a private firm, lawyers in the legal department of a corporation, or other organization, or lawyers in a legal services organization." But, the comment continues, "whether two or more lawyers constitute a firm within this definition can depend on the specific facts . . . . furthermore, it is relevant in doubtful cases to consider the underlying purpose of the rule that is involved." In comment [3], the application of the rule to lawyers in a legal service organization is considered more fully: "… lawyers employed in the same unit of a legal service organization constitute a firm, but not necessarily those employed in separate units. As in the case of independent practitioners, whether the lawyers should be treated as associated with each other can depend on the particular rule that is involved and on the specific facts of the situation."

As a matter of public policy, impediments to the legal representation of people of low income should be eliminated when the purposes of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct-protection of client confidences and maintenance of a lawyer's independent professional judgment-are not adversely affected. As long as the local field programs of LSNC are physically separate and do not act as a single unit, the representation of adverse parties by different field offices will not impair the lawyers' duty of loyalty to their respective clients. Moreover, if client files are maintained separately and confidential client information is not shared, the duty of confidentiality will not be impaired. Legal service lawyers, unlike lawyers in a multiple office private law firm, do not have a common economic interest. Therefore, independent professional judgment will be maintained despite the representation of adverse parties by lawyers in different field offices. For these reasons, lawyers with the different local service programs of LSNC may represent clients with materially adverse interests subsequent to the consolidation provided confidential client information relative to the adverse parties is not shared by the different offices.

99 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

October 22, 1999

Seeking to Remove Co-executor of an Estate

Opinion holds that a lawyer for an estate may not seek to have one co-executor removed if the co-executor was acting within his official capacity.

Inquiry:

Several years before her death, Mother loaned $75,000 to Son A. A few years later, Mother signed a statement indicating that the loan had been settled. Mother died testate, leaving a will devising the bulk of her estate to her five children equally and naming her three sons, A, B, and C, co-executors. Letters testamentary were granted to Sons A, B, and C. Sons B and C hired Attorney X to assist with the administration of the estate. Sons B and C believe that the $75,000 given to Son A by Mother during her lifetime should be collected by the estate as a debt or treated as an advance to Son A. Attorney X filed a motion to have Son A's letters testamentary revoked and wrote a letter to Son A requesting repayment of the debt.

May Attorney X make a motion to remove Son A as a co-executor and pursue a claim against him?

Opinion:

No. RPC 137 states that "in accepting employment in regard to an estate, an attorney undertakes to represent the personal representative in his or her official capacity and the estate as an entity." After undertaking to represent all of the co-executors, a lawyer may not take action to have one co-executor removed.

99 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

July 23, 1999

Obtaining Canceled Deed of Trust Following Residential Real Estate Closing

Opinion rules that whether the lawyer for a residential real estate closing must obtain the cancellation of record of a prior deed of trust depends upon the agreement of the parties.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A engages in a high volume real estate practice. She routinely handles closing transactions in which existing mortgage loans are paid. Attorney A follows a procedure in which the payoff check is directed to the owner and holder of the note with a cover letter that directs the owner and holder to mark the original note and the deed of trust securing the note "paid and satisfied in full" and requests that the original papers be returned to Attorney A's office. Upon receipt of the "paid and satisfied" papers, Attorney A delivers the papers to the appropriate county registry for cancellation. Attorney A includes in the payoff letter a reference to N.C.G.S. 45-36.3(a)(1) which requires that "the holder of the evidence of the indebtedness" shall "within sixty days discharge and release of record such document and forward the document to the grantor, trustor, or mortgagor."

Lenders routinely fail to comply with their duty to return paid loan documents. Although Attorney A sends at least two reminder letters to lenders who fail to cooperate, she does not bring a lawsuit against lenders to enforce the return of the loan documents. Is Attorney A required by the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct to continue diligently to try to obtain the loan documents including bringing a civil action against a lender if necessary?

Opinion #1:

Although Rule 1.3 of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct states that "a lawyer shall act with reasonable diligence and promptness in representing the client," whether there is a duty to obtain paid loan documents from a lender depends upon the lawyer's agreement with the new lender and the borrower. The lawyer's engagement letter, the lender's loan closing instructions, and the lawyer's representations to the clients establish the expectations of the clients. However, Rule 1.2(c) specifically permits a lawyer to limit the objectives of a representation with the client's consent. To avoid any misunderstanding, the lawyer must explain any limitations on her representation. Specifically, if she does not intend to obtain the cancellation of record of the paid deed of trust, she must so advise her clients.

Inquiry #2:

Does the procurement of an owner's title insurance policy relieve the lawyer of a duty to get the deed of trust canceled of record?

Opinion #2:

See Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #3:

If Attorney A collects a $25 "deed of trust cancellation fee," is she required to obtain the cancellation of the deed of trust before closing the file?

Opinion #3:

If a lawyer specifically charges for canceling the existing deed of trust on the property, the lawyer may not close the file until the deed of trust is canceled of record. The cancellation of the deed of trust should be pursued with reasonable diligence and promptness. See Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #4:

If Attorney A charges a "payoff processing fee," must she obtain the cancellation of record of the deed of trust before closing the file?

Opinion #4:

There is no practical distinction between a "deed of trust cancellation fee" and a "payoff processing fee." Regardless of what the fee is called, if a fee is charged, the client will expect the deed of trust to be canceled. See Opinion #3 above.

Inquiry #5:

Is Attorney A required to disclose to the borrower that she will close the client's file after a certain period of time regardless of whether the prior deed of trust is canceled of record and that an uncancelled deed of trust may affect the marketability of title?

Opinion #5:

Attorney A must explain the limits of her representation sufficiently to allow the borrowers to make reasonably informed decisions about the representation. See Opinion #1 above and Rule 1.4(b).

---

99 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

July 23, 1999

Ownership of Title Agency

Opinion examines the ownership of a title insurance agency by lawyers in North and South Carolina as well as the supervision of an independent paralegal.

Inquiry #1:

Certain lawyers, some licensed to practice in only North Carolina and some licensed to practice in both North and South Carolina, own and operate a title insurance agency that issues title policies for properties in both North and South Carolina. The lawyers who are licensed to practice in South Carolina provide title certification to the title agency for the purpose of writing title policies on South Carolina properties.

May a North Carolina lawyer own all or part of a title insurance agency that writes title policies on North Carolina property?

Opinion #1:

Yes, provided the lawyer does not give a title opinion to the title insurance company for which the title agency issues policies. See RPC 185.

Inquiry #2:

May North Carolina lawyers own all or part of a title insurance company that writes title policies in South Carolina?

Opinion #2:

Yes, if allowed by law.

Inquiry #3:

May North Carolina lawyers act as title insurance agents for a title insurance company owned by the same lawyers?

Opinion #3:

Yes, if allowed by law and subject to Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #4:

May lawyers licensed to practice in both North and South Carolina who own a title insurance agency that writes policies in both states provide title certifications to the agency for real estate located in South Carolina?

Opinion #4:

Yes, if allowed by law and the ethical code of South Carolina.

Inquiry #5:

The North Carolina lawyers provide title certification services for North Carolina real estate transactions. To undertake certification of title to real estate located outside of the lawyers' immediate community, the lawyers utilize independent title abstractors who are not licensed lawyers. Prior to utilizing the services of a title abstractor, the lawyers conduct an interview of each abstractor, evaluate his or her procedures and methods, determine his or her level of education and experience, and conduct a reference check to evaluate the abstractor's performance history. Is this level of supervision adequate under the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion #5:

No. RPC 216 requires a lawyer who is using the services of a nonlawyer independent contractor to search a title to take reasonable steps to ascertain that the nonlawyer is competent and, at all times that the nonlawyer is assisting the lawyer, to provide the nonlawyer with appropriate supervision and instruction regardless of the distance between the lawyer and nonlawyer. See Rule 5.3. The opinion also indicates that the lawyer may not issue a title opinion unless the opinion is based upon the lawyer's own independent professional judgment, competence, and personal knowledge of the relevant records and documentation. See also the Guidelines for Use of Non-Lawyers in Rendering Legal Services of the North Carolina State Bar (July 18, 1998, #10). [Note: this opinion assumes that the lawyer is not giving a title certification to the title agency owned by the lawyer. See G.S. §58-26-1(a).]

---

99 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

July 23, 1999

Advertising Jury Verdicts

Opinion rules that a law firm may not state in a direct mail letter that lawyers in the firm have obtained jury verdicts of specified amounts because the statement may create unjustified expectations about the results the lawyers can achieve.

Inquiry:

ABC Law Firm wants to include the following paragraph in its targeted direct letters to traffic accident victims:

> If you need a lawyer to represent you in connection with your recent accident, look no further. Our firm has obtained jury verdicts and settlements for individual clients in excess of $1,000,000.00. Although there is no guarantee of any recovery in your case, we will provide you with aggressive and comprehensive legal services to protect your rights and interests and maximize your chances of recovery.

May the statement regarding jury verdicts be included in the direct mail letters?

Opinion:

No. Rule 7.1 of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits a lawyer from making a false or misleading communication about the lawyer's services. Paragraph (b) of the rule defines a false or misleading communication, in part, as a communication that "is likely to create an unjustified expectation about the results the lawyer can achieve…." Comment [1] to the rule specifies that the prohibition in paragraph (b) "would ordinarily preclude advertisements about the results obtained on behalf of a client, such as the amount of a damage award or the lawyer's record in obtaining favorable verdicts…." A general representation about past results without additional information that puts the past results in context is misleading. In the direct mail letter in this inquiry, the statement that "there is no guarantee of any recovery in your case" is not sufficient to mitigate the unjustified expectations created by the advertisement of jury verdicts proscribed by the comment to Rule 7.1.

---

99 Formal Ethics Opinion 8

October 22, 1999

Escrow Agreement Containing Waiver of Future Conflict

Opinion rules that a lawyer may represent all parties in a residential real estate closing and subsequently represent only one party in an escrow dispute provided the lawyer insures that the conditions for waiver of an objection to a possible future conflict of interest set forth in RPC 168 are satisfied.

Inquiry #1:

The fiduciary relationship that arises when a lawyer serves as an escrow agent is analyzed in 98 Formal Ethics Opinion 11. The opinion rules that a lawyer who represents the buyer in a residential real estate closing may serve as the escrow agent for funds for certain repairs to the house. If a dispute subsequently arises relative to the completion of the repairs and the right to receive the escrow, the lawyer may resign as escrow agent and represent the buyer in the dispute.

Assume that at the time the escrow is established, the buyer and the seller draft an escrow agreement. The agreement provides that in the event of a dispute over the disbursement of the escrow, the funds will be disbursed to another person who will act as escrow agent and the lawyer will represent the buyer in the escrow dispute. Does this arrangement violate the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion #1:

No, provided the funds are given to another individual who will serve as escrow agent. As noted in 98 Formal Ethics Opinion 11, the responsibilities of a lawyer acting as an escrow agent arise primarily from the lawyer's fiduciary relationship to both the obligor and obligee and not from a client-lawyer relationship. An escrow agent must be impartial to both the obligor and the obligee. If a dispute arises, the lawyer may not advocate for one of the parties until he resigns as escrow agent. The agreement contemplated in this inquiry satisfies this condition.

Inquiry #2:

The closing lawyer represents the buyer, the seller, and the lender in the closing after satisfying the conditions for multiple representation set forth in RPC 210. As in the preceding inquiry, the buyer and the seller enter into an agreement that appoints the closing lawyer escrow agent. The escrow agreement also provides that, in the event of a dispute, the funds will be given to another escrow agent and the closing lawyer will represent the buyer in the escrow dispute. May a lawyer participate in an arrangement in which one of the lawyer's clients agrees in advance to waive any objection to a possible future conflict of interest?

Opinion #2:

Yes, provided the conditions on waiver of a future conflict of interest set forth in RPC 168 are satisfied.

---

99 Formal Ethics Opinion 9

October 22, 1999

Lawyer's Obligation to Disburse Closing Funds

Opinion rules that a lawyer who represents the buyer in a real estate closing, and subsequently records the deed, may not withhold the funds for the purchase price from the seller upon the buyer's post-closing instruction.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney represented Small Corporation on the purchase of a lot from Development Company. After the closing, Attorney deposited the check for the purchase price in his trust account and recorded the deed at the register of deeds. When he returned from the courthouse, he received a telephone call from an official with Small Corporation who stated that Small Corporation did not want to purchase the lot anymore because company officials had just learned that a house with a basement could not be built on the lot. The corporate official instructed Attorney not to disburse any of the closing funds although the deed was already recorded and title vested in Small Corporation. Development Company, the seller, demanded the sale proceeds. What should Attorney do?

Opinion #1:

Comment [1] to Rule 1.2 of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct states, "[t]he client has ultimate authority to determine the purposes to be served by legal representation within the limits imposed by law and the lawyer's professional obligations." Normally, a client's decision not to proceed with a transaction must be honored by the lawyer and, if necessary, the lawyer must restore the status quo ante by returning documents, property, or funds to the appropriate parties to the transaction. However, once a closing lawyer records the deed to property, the lawyer must comply with the conditions placed on the delivery of the deed by the seller. If the seller delivered the executed deed to the lawyer upon the condition that the deed would only be recorded if the purchase price was paid, the lawyer has fiduciary responsibilities to the seller even if the seller is not the lawyer's client. See, e.g., RPC 44 (conditional delivery of loan proceeds). If title has passed to the buyer, the lawyer must satisfy the conditions of the transfer of the property by disbursing the sale proceeds. The buyer must take appropriate legal action to have the sale rescinded.

Inquiry #2:

May Attorney represent Small Corporation in the subsequent action for rescission?

Opinion #2:

No. Rule 3.7(a) prohibits a lawyer from serving as a witness and an advocate in a trial proceeding. Moreover, Attorney's testimony may be detrimental to the interests of Small Corporation. If so, Attorney is also be barred from the representation because of the conflict of interest. Rule 3.7(b).

---

99 Formal Ethics Opinion 10

July 21, 2000

Communicating with Employee of Adverse Organization in a Criminal Investigation

Opinion rules that a government lawyer working on a fraud investigation may instruct an investigator to interview employees of the target organization provided the investigator does not interview an employee who participates in the legal representation of the organization or an officer or manager of the organization who has the authority to speak for and bind the organization.

Inquiry:

The Medicaid Investigations Unit of the North Carolina Department of Justice investigates Medicaid fraud by medical providers. Attorney A, an assistant attorney general, is assigned to the unit and provides advice to unit investigators and auditors.

Corporation is a provider of medical services to Medicaid recipients ("patients") who reside in group homes. Corporation owns several group homes. The staff of Corporation consists of a president, several directors of various areas, several coordinators, and billing, clerical, and secretarial staff. Each group home has a manager (called a "house manager") and six direct care aides (called "adaptive behavior trainers"). The house manager supervises the aides in the group home and sees that the policies of the corporation are followed. The aides provide direct care to the Medicaid patients. Neither the house managers nor the aides have the authority to establish policy for Corporation.

The Medicaid Investigations Unit is investigating an allegation that Corporation submitted claims to Medicaid for health care services that were never rendered. A unit investigator has interviewed former employees who state that they completed Medicaid claims for Corporation indicating that services were provided to patients when, in fact, no services were provided. There is no evidence that the employees obtained any direct monetary benefit from this activity other than the retention of their jobs. Former aides say that they were following orders from the house managers. Former house managers state that they were following orders from their superiors. Some former employees state that corporate officers or directors told employees to complete the false documentation or face termination from employment.

Attorney C, the lawyer for Corporation, informed Attorney A that he represents Corporation in all matters relative to the Medicaid fraud investigation.

The fraud investigator wants to interview the current house managers and aides, without notice and outside the presence of Attorney C, to ask them whether they falsified records, whether they saw others falsify records, and whether they or others were ordered by supervisors to falsify records. The investigator will take the following steps before each such interview: (1) identify himself, (2) state that he is investigating possible criminal violations, (3) not interview any employee who participated substantially in the legal representation of Corporation, and (4) not elicit privileged communications between Corporation and Attorney C.

May Attorney A direct the investigator to proceed with informal interviews of the house managers and aides without the consent of Attorney C?

Opinion:

Yes.

Rule 4.2 of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits communication about a client's case with another person who is represented in the matter unless the other lawyer consents or the communication is authorized by law. This prohibition extends to persons acting under the direction and control of a lawyer including investigators. Rule 5.3.

When the opposing party is an organization that is represented by counsel, the prohibition on informal communications applies to some employees and not to others. The Revised Rules encourage efficient, cost-effective informal discovery by prohibiting frivolous claims and defenses as well as the obstruction of another party's access to relevant evidence. Rules 3.1 and 3.4(f).

Comment [5] to the Rule 4.2 provides:

> After a lawyer for another person or entity has been notified that an organization is represented by counsel in a particular matter, this rule would prohibit communications by the lawyer concerning the matter with persons having managerial responsibility on behalf of the organization and with any other person whose act or omission in connection with the matter may be imputed to the organization for purposes of civil or criminal liability or whose statement may constitute an admission on the part of the organization.

Examination of the public policy behind the rule sheds light on the comment. The "anti-contact rule," notes the ABA Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility in Formal Opinion 95-396 (1995), "provide[s] protection of the represented person against overreaching by adverse counsel, safeguard[s] the client-lawyer relationship from interference by adverse counsel, and reduce[s] the likelihood that clients will disclose privileged or other information that might harm their interests." In the context of the represented organization, these goals are furthered if informal communications with a managerial employee are prohibited when the employee's level of authority is such that the employee may participate in the representative relationship with the corporate lawyer or may be privy to privileged attorney-client communications. For example, 97 Formal Ethics Opinion 2 prohibits informal communications with an adjuster for an insurance company because an insurance adjuster is "privy to privileged communications with the legal counsel for the company and is generally involved in substantive conversations with the organization's lawyer regarding the representation of the organization."

Informal communication is also prohibited with an employee whose statement may constitute an admission on the part of the organization. This does not mean that informal communication is prohibited with any employee who may make a damaging statement about the corporation that would be admissible in evidence. Rather, the prohibition is limited to informal communications with employees who have the authority to speak for and bind the corporation. See RPC 67 (interpreting Rule 7.4 of the superseded (1985) Rules of Professional Conduct; opinion prohibits informal communications with corporate employees with managerial responsibility who are authorized to speak for the corporation).

The comment to Rule 4.2 also mentions a prohibition on informal communications with any person "whose act or omission in connection with the matter may be imputed to the organization for purposes of civil or criminal liability…." An acknowledged example of such a person is the employee who is involved in an automobile accident while driving the company truck. It is assumed that the interests of the organization and the tortfeasor-employee are sufficiently aligned to place the tortfeasor-employee within the protection of the anti-contact rule. In the instant inquiry, however, Attorney A may instruct the investigator to ask the house managers and aides whether they saw others falsify records and whether they were asked or instructed by superiors to falsify records.

99 Formal Ethics Opinion 11

January 21, 2000

Consent to Submission of Legal Bills to Audit Company

Opinion rules that an insurance defense lawyer may not submit billing information to an independent audit company at the insurance carrier's request unless the insured's consent to the disclosure, obtained by the insurance carrier, was informed.

Inquiry:

Law Firm ABC has a significant insurance defense practice. The members of the firm believe that in most cases they cannot ethically advise an insured client to consent to submission of the firm's legal bills to a third party auditor for the insurance carrier. The members of Law Firm ABC have advised their insurance company clients that they believe they are prohibited from disclosing this information pursuant to the requirements of 98 Formal Ethics Opinion 10.

98 Formal Ethics Opinion 10 ruled that an insurance defense lawyer may not disclose confidential information about an insured's representation in bills submitted to an independent audit company at the insurance carrier's request unless the insured consents.

Recently, Law Firm ABC began to receive assignments from XYZ Insurance Company. The assignments include a letter addressed to the insured from XYZ which reads as follows:

> Dear [insured]:
>
> ABC Law Firm has been hired by XYZ to represent you in the above referenced matter. XYZ's goal is to retain the best and most cost efficient attorneys to represent its insureds. For this reason we will be closely monitoring the effectiveness of the attorney retained.
>
> We also want to ensure that all legal fees incurred are fair. To that end, we would like to refer all law firm invoices in this matter to an independent review service, Law Audit Services (LAS). LAS reviews legal bills to ensure that they are in compliance with our billing guidelines, which our panel counsel have read and acknowledged. Because bills for legal services are confidential, we will need your written permission before referring them to LAS.
>
> We would appreciate your authorization by signing in the space provided below. You may return the authorization form to us in the postage paid envelope enclosed. Our attorneys have been instructed not to include any privileged information in their billing entries. We have included a very detailed confidentiality commitment in our contract with LAS.
>
> XYZ Insurance Company

When ABC Law Firm receives an assignment from XYZ, the file includes a copy of the consent letter signed by or on behalf of the insured. May the members of ABC Law Firm submit their bills for legal services rendered in defending the insured to XYZ's independent audit company?

Opinion:

No, the members of ABC Law Firm may not rely upon the consent obtained by XYZ from the insured unless the lawyer consults with the insured to confirm that the insured understands the meaning and effect of the consent.

Insurance Company is certainly entitled independently to seek and obtain the consent of its insureds to the disclosure of billing information to an independent audit company. However, Rule 1.6(c)(2) and 98 Formal Ethics Opinion 10 require a lawyer to evaluate the risk to the insured's interests and to consult with the insured if the insured's consent to disclosure is sought.

If a lawyer concludes that the original consent of the client, as obtained by the insurance company, was not informed consent, the lawyer must evaluate the risks to the insured's interests if the billing information is sent to the audit company. The lawyer must discuss any such risks with the insured. If the insured indicates that he or she would like to withdraw the consent, the attorney should refer the insured to the insurance carrier for further discussion. The lawyer may not represent either party to that discussion. Rule 1.7(a). If, after consultation, the client does not want to withdraw the consent, and the lawyer is satisfied that the consent is knowing, the lawyer may send billing information to the audit company as instructed by XYZ.

99 Formal Ethics Opinion 12

January 21, 2000

"Covering" a Bankruptcy Proceeding for Another Lawyer

Opinion rules that when a lawyer appears with a debtor at a meeting of creditors in a bankruptcy proceeding as a favor to the debtor's lawyer, the lawyer is representing the debtor and all of the ethical obligations attendant to legal representation apply.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A represents Debtor, an individual, with respect to the filing of a voluntary petition pursuant to Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. The first meeting of creditors pursuant to Section 341 of the Bankruptcy Code is scheduled by the clerk. Debtor is required to attend and answer questions under oath as presented by the trustee in bankruptcy or any other parties. Shortly before the date of the meeting, Attorney A has a scheduling conflict. This prevents his attendance at the meeting of creditors. Rather than seek a continuance, and being of the opinion that the Section 341 meeting is fairly routine and ministerial in nature, Attorney A contacts Attorney B and asks Attorney B to "cover" for Attorney A at the meeting. Attorney B is neither a member nor an employee of Attorney A's law firm and there is no existing partnership relationship with Attorney A. Attorney B agrees to accommodate Attorney A.

Must Debtor's prior consent to the representation be obtained, and what steps, if any, must be taken to determine whether there are conflicts of interest?

Opinion #1:

Although assisting Attorney A may be euphemistically described as "covering" for Attorney A, if Attorney B appears with Debtor at the proceeding, Attorney B is representing Debtor. Such representation is subject to all of the ethical obligations set forth in the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct. The consent of the client to the representation by Attorney B must be obtained because the choice of legal counsel is the client's decision. See Rule 1.4(b). In addition, prior to representing any client, a lawyer must determine whether there are conflicts of interest. See Rule 1.7. Therefore, Attorney B must determine whether she has a conflict of interest in representing Debtor at the Section 341 meeting of creditors.

Inquiry #2:

To what extent must Attorney B review the file or otherwise become familiar with the assets, liabilities, exemptions, or pre-petition transfers of Debtor?

Opinion #2:

Even if a lawyer makes a limited appearance in a matter with the consent of the client pursuant to Rule 1.2(c), the lawyer must provide competent representation, which includes adequate preparation under the circumstances. See Rule 1.1(b).

Inquiry #3:

Is Attorney B making a general appearance in the proceeding for all purposes with respect to the representation of Debtor, or is Attorney B's involvement limited to a special appearance for the purpose described above?

Opinion #3:

Subject to the rules of the tribunal and with Debtor's consent, Attorney B may limit her appearance to the representation of Debtor in the Section 341 meeting of creditors. See Rule 1.2(c)

99 Formal Ethics Opinion 13

July 21, 2000

Editor's note: This opinion is overruled by 2002 Formal Ethics Opinion 9.

Supervision of Paralegal Closing a Residential Real Estate Transaction

Opinion rules that competent practice requires the presence of the closing lawyer at a residential real estate closing conference to explain the documents being executed, answer questions, and advocate for the client or clients. A nonlawyer may oversee the execution of documents outside the presence of the lawyer provided the closing lawyer provides adequate supervision and is present at the closing conference to complete the transaction.

Inquiry #1:

Paralegal is an in-house employee of Attorney A, a real estate lawyer. May Attorney A allow Paralegal to close a residential real estate purchase if Attorney A is not present at the closing?

Opinion #1:

No. A residential real estate closing, for purposes of this opinion, is defined as the entire series of events through which the ownership of property is transferred from one party to another party. One of the most important events in the typical transaction is the closing conference which occurs at the conclusion of the transaction when the documents are executed in the closing lawyer's office. The closing conference is the primary opportunity that the lawyer has to meet with the parties, to explain the closing documents, to define the client's rights and obligations, and to answer questions. More importantly, the closing conference may be the only opportunity that the lawyer has to intercede when the interests of the clients are threatened. Many, if not all, of these activities involve—and competent representation should require—the giving of advice and opinion upon the legal rights of the clients. The giving of such advice and opinion is the practice of law. See N.C.G.S. §84-2.1.

The duty to provide competent representation and the duty not to assist the unauthorized practice of law must be considered when supervising a nonlawyer. See Rule 1.1, Rule 5.3, Rule 5.5(b), and RPC 183. A nonlawyer does not have the requisite knowledge, skill, or authority to perform the critical advisory and advocacy roles necessary to provide competent representation in a residential real estate closing. Furthermore, a nonlawyer cannot give advice or opinion upon the legal rights of the client. Therefore, a nonlawyer may not close a residential real estate transaction.

Inquiry #2:

May Attorney A allow Paralegal to oversee the execution of the closing documents without Attorney A's presence in the room?

Opinion #2:

Yes, provided Attorney A is present at the closing conference to explain the documents, define the client's rights and obligations, answer questions, and advocate for the clients, and further provided, the clients are informed that Paralegal is not a lawyer. Paralegal must be instructed on the limitations of his or her role prior to the closing conference and Attorney A must maintain responsibility for the conduct and performance of Paralegal.

Rule 5.3(b) states that "a lawyer having direct supervisory authority over a nonlawyer shall make reasonable efforts to ensure that the nonlawyer's conduct is compatible with the professional obligations of the lawyer." Comment [1] to the rule adds the following:

> A lawyer should give such nonlawyers appropriate instruction and supervision concerning the ethical aspects of their employment…and should be responsible for their work product. The measures employed in supervising nonlawyers should take account of the fact that they do not have legal training and are not subject to professional discipline.

99 Formal Ethics Opinion 14

January 21, 2000

Representing Insurance Carrier and Uncooperative Insured

Opinion rules that when an insured fails to cooperate with the defense, as required by the insurance contract, the insurance defense lawyer may follow the instructions of the insurance carrier unless the insured's lack of cooperation interferes with the defense or presenting an effective defense is harmful to the interests of the insured.

Inquiry #1:

Mr. and Ms. Inlaw were passengers in an automobile being driven by their daughter-in-law, Defendant, when an accident occurred. Mr. and Ms. Inlaw were both injured and brought an action against Defendant for their damages. Insurance Company assigned Attorney D to represent Defendant in the action. Defendant is either an insured under Insurance Company's liability insurance policy or is a third-party beneficiary of the policy.

The insurance policy provides that Insurance Company has the right to defend the action and to settle the lawsuit as it deems appropriate. The policy specifically requires Defendant to cooperate with Insurance Company in the defense of the lawsuit.

Insurance Company wants Attorney D to defend the suit to avoid or minimize the damages paid to the Inlaws. Defendant does not want a defense of the lawsuit that will jeopardize the Inlaws' recovery from Insurance Company.

May Attorney D defend the lawsuit effectively, as requested by Insurance Company, against the explicit instructions of Defendant?

Opinion #1:

A lawyer who is hired by an insurance carrier to defend one of its insureds (or a third-party beneficiary) represents both the insurer and the insured (or third-party beneficiary). See RPC 91, RPC 103, and RPC 172. However, when the insured has contractually surrendered control of the defense and of the authority to settle the lawsuit to the insurance carrier, the defense lawyer is generally obliged to accept the instructions of the insurance carrier in these matters. RPC 91.

Attorney D should advise Defendant of the conditions of representation set forth in the insurance policy and should encourage Defendant to consult with independent legal counsel as to the legal consequences of her failure to cooperate with the defense of the lawsuit.

Attorney D should also inform Defendant that he cannot represent her in a coverage dispute with Insurance Company because it would be a conflict of interest. Rule 1.7(a). He must advise her to employ independent legal counsel to provide representation in a coverage dispute. RPC 91.

If Defendant insists that Attorney D limit his defense, Attorney D must determine whether Defendant's lack of cooperation will interfere with his independent professional judgment. If so, he may seek to withdraw from the representation of both parties. Rule 1.7(b).

Inquiry #2:

May Attorney D's defense of the lawsuit include offering evidence and arguments that are contrary to the evidence Defendant would like to provide in support of the Inlaws' claims? For example, may Attorney D examine Defendant about her credibility and sympathies if she takes the witness stand?

Opinion #2:

Attorney D may offer evidence and arguments that are consistent with an effective defense but he may not act in a manner that is harmful to the interests of Defendant. See generally Rule 1.7. This means that he may not treat her as an adverse witness, publicly question her credibility, or humiliate her. Again, if Defendant's lack of cooperation interferes with an effective defense, Attorney D may seek to withdraw.

Inquiry #3:

May Attorney D disclose to Insurance Company information relative to Defendant's desire to offer no defense including statements, actions, and conduct that indicate that Defendant would like the Inlaws to be successful in the lawsuit?

Opinion #3:

No. Disclosure of this information to Insurance Company may be harmful to the interests of Defendant because Insurance Company may use this information to deny coverage to Defendant. Rule 1.6(a). Nevertheless, Attorney D may inform Insurance Company that Defendant has instructed him to take a substantially different approach on the defense than that requested by Insurance Company. He may also inform Insurance Company that he cannot represent Insurance Company in a coverage dispute, and he may advise Insurance Company to obtain independent counsel on this matter.

Inquiry #4:

If Attorney D withdraws from the representation of Defendant, and Insurance Company is allowed to defend in its own name, may Attorney D represent only Insurance Company in the defense of the action?

Opinion #4:

No, unless Attorney D's defense of Insurance Company does not require Attorney D to engage in defense tactics that are materially adverse to the interests of Defendant. Rule 1.9(a) prohibits a lawyer from representing a client whose interests are materially adverse to those of a former client in the same or a substantially related matter without the consent of the former client. A cross examination of Defendant in which Attorney D attempts to cast doubt on Defendant's credibility and to demonstrate bias on her part is prohibited. Attorney D is also prohibited from using confidential information of Defendant in the defense of Insurance Company without Defendant's consent. Rule 1.6(d).

Inquiry #5:

Is this ethics opinion binding as a matter of law?

Opinion #5:

Ethics opinions provide guidance to the members of the State Bar. Compliance with the opinions ensures that a lawyer's conduct complies with the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct. Like the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct, ethics opinions provide a structure for the regulation of the conduct of members of the State Bar but are not designed to be a basis for civil liability, to create a procedural weapon in litigation, or to create a right of enforcement by a party other than an appropriate disciplinary authority such as the North Carolina State Bar or the courts. See Comment [6] of Rule .02, "Scope."

---

99 Formal Ethics Opinion 15

October 20, 2000

Disclosure of Fraud of Former Bankruptcy Client

Opinion rules that a lawyer with knowledge that a former client is defrauding a bankruptcy court may reveal the confidences of the former client to rectify the fraud if required by law or if necessary to rectify the fraud.

Inquiry:

Client seeks advice from Attorney A on filing bankruptcy under either Chapter 7 or 13 of the bankruptcy code. During the course of the initial meeting, it becomes apparent to Attorney A that Client has substantial problems (e.g., preferential payments to friends or relatives, excessive equity in property, co-signed loans) that either preclude the filing of a Chapter 7 bankruptcy or significantly raise Client's anticipated monthly Chapter 13 payment. Attorney A describes in detail the problems Client's case presents. Client thanks Attorney A for his time and leaves his office.

Several weeks later, at the Section 341 First Meeting of Creditors, Attorney A learns that Client retained Attorney B to represent him and has filed a bankruptcy petition. Attorney A recalls that he previously determined that there were a number of obstacles to filing bankruptcy for Client. Attorney A believes that Client intentionally failed to reveal these problems to Attorney B.

What is Attorney A's obligation under these circumstances?

Opinion:

The information that Attorney A learned during his conference with Client is confidential client information that Attorney A may not disclose to third parties, including bankruptcy officials and Client's current lawyer, unless one of the exceptions to the duty of confidentiality found in Rule 1.6 of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct applies. Two exceptions to the duty of confidentiality are relevant.

Rule 1.6(d)(3) permits Attorney A to reveal Client's confidences if required to do so by law. A number of bankruptcy statutes require disclosure of debtor's assets and liabilities and other financial information. 18 U.S.C. §152, a federal criminal statute, imposes criminal penalties on "a person who knowingly and fraudulently conceals…any property belonging to the estate of a debtor…." Rule 1.6(d)(3) merely determines whether a lawyer is permitted to disclose confidential information, not whether the lawyer is compelled to do so by law. Whether a lawyer has a duty to disclose confidential information under the circumstances described above is a matter to be determined under 18 U.S.C. §152 and other relevant law. The determination of that legal issue is beyond the scope of this opinion. See 98 Formal Ethics Opinion 20.

Rule 1.6(d)(5) permits a lawyer to reveal confidential information of a client to the extent that the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to rectify the consequences of a client's criminal or fraudulent act "in the commission of which the lawyer's services were used." Mere suspicion that Client is committing a fraud on the court is not sufficient to trigger this exception to the duty of confidentiality. However, if Attorney A knows that Client is committing a fraud on the court and that his services were used to perpetrate the fraud, he may reveal confidential information of his former client as necessary to rectify the fraud.

If Attorney A knows that the bankruptcy petition is fraudulent and he decides to take action to rectify the fraud, Attorney should reveal confidential information of Client only to the extent necessary. The first step is a letter to his former client requesting that Client take action to rectify the fraud. If this is unsuccessful, disclosure to Client's current lawyer is permitted under Rule 1.6(d)(5). Attorney A should inform Attorney B that he will notify the bankruptcy administrator if no action is taken to rectify the fraud or he does not receive a response from Attorney B. If Attorney B fails to respond or fails to alleviate Attorney A's concerns, Attorney A may notify the bankruptcy administrator.

99 Formal Ethics Opinion 16

April 14, 2000

Presentation of Consent Judgment Containing False Information

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not participate in the presentation of a consent judgment to a court if the lawyer knows that the consent judgment is based upon false information.

Inquiry:

Attorney represents Husband in an action filed by Wife for child support and other relief. The parties entered into a consent order giving Wife custody of the minor child, with Husband paying child support.

Sometime thereafter, Husband moved out of state and changed employment. Husband informed Attorney that his income was substantially reduced and he wanted Attorney to file a motion to modify the child support obligation. Attorney filed a motion seeking to reduce the child support obligation. Opposing counsel offered Attorney an opportunity to resolve the matter by consent, but required documentation of Husband's current wages. Attorney received a copy of Husband's current pay stub, which included income year to date, and forwarded it to Wife's attorney. Wife's attorney sent a proposed consent judgment to Attorney, which Attorney forwarded to Husband for his signature. Husband called Attorney and indicated he had signed the document. During the course of that conversation, Husband stated he had a tax attorney working on his tax returns. Husband further indicated his tax counsel was attempting to conceal other income, which Husband had received, but of which he had neglected to inform Attorney. Husband felt relieved that Wife had been misinformed as to his true income.

Attorney has now received the signed proposed consent judgment from Husband. It has not yet been signed by either attorney. Attorney believes Husband's deliberate misrepresentation of the true nature of his income is an attempt to perpetrate a fraud on the court. Thus far, Husband has not been asked under oath, either in a formal court proceeding or during discovery for this motion, to disclose his complete income.

What should Attorney do?

Opinion:

Attorney may not participate in presenting the consent judgment to the court if it is based upon false income information. See Rules 3.3(a)(1) and (a)(4). In the first instance, Attorney must try to persuade Husband to rectify the situation by disclosing his true income to the opposing party. Rule 3.3, cmt. [5]. If Husband refuses, Attorney must inform Husband he cannot participate in presenting false information to a court and must withdraw from the representation. Rule 3.3, cmt. [10]. Attorney should also inform Husband that if he presents the consent judgment on his own or through other counsel, Attorney has the discretion to make disclosure to the court or opposing counsel as necessary, because Husband used his services to perpetrate a fraud on the court. Rule 1.6(d)(5); see also Rule 3.3, cmt. [10].

2000 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

April 14, 2000

Advertising a Verdict Record

Opinion rules that, in the absence of a full explanation, advertising a lawyer's or a law firm's record in obtaining favorable verdicts is misleading and prohibited.

Inquiry:

Law Firm is setting up a site or "web page" on the world wide web. The web page will provide information about the law firm and the members of the firm. May Law Firm include the following paragraph in its web page?

The attorneys in Law Firm's medical malpractice group have been enormously successful, consistently obtaining verdicts and settlements for their clients that are among the largest reported North Carolina verdicts and settlements each year. Most medical negligence cases involve complex scientific issues and are vigorously defended. Settlements generally only occur after litigation has ensued and all sides have fully explored the issues through discovery. We have collected all of the verdicts we have obtained, although some verdicts have been collected only after we have been successful not only at trial, but also on appeal. Our past successes should not be construed as a representation that we will be successful with any particular case in the future, and not every case in which we have been involved has resulted in a favorable outcome. The medical malpractice group has successfully represented clients in cases of infant mortality and morbidity, eye injury, paralysis, infectious disease, loss of limb, general surgery, physical disability, medication errors, and wrongful death. The medical malpractice group has also successfully defended University Medical Center and its physicians against medical malpractice actions. Finally, the medical malpractice group has successfully represented clients before the North Carolina Supreme Court and Court of Appeals and, in some instances, has been instrumental in shaping North Carolina law.

Opinion:

A web page, like any other communication or advertisement about a lawyer's or a law firm's services, must be truthful and not misleading. Rule 7.1 of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct and RPC 239. Generally, statements about a lawyer's or a law firm's record in obtaining favorable verdicts is considered a prohibited communication in that such statements may create "unjustified expectations about the results the lawyer can achieve" in violation of Rule 7.1(b). However, if the information is provided in context, the potential for this information to mislead a reader may be avoided. 99 Formal Ethics Opinion 7. To put a verdict record in context, information about the lawyer's or the law firm's record must include disclosure of the following: the lawyer's or firm's history of obtaining unfavorable, as well as favorable, verdicts and settlements; the lawyer's or firm's success in actually collecting favorable verdicts; the types of cases handled and their complexity; whether liability and/or damages were contested; and whether the opposing party or parties were represented by legal counsel. In addition, the verdict record must disclose the period of time examined. Finally, the communication must include a statement that the outcome of a particular case cannot be predicated upon a lawyer's or a law firm's past results.

If information to be disclosed is voluminous, the communication may state that a list of all cases handled by the lawyer or law firm during a disclosed time period, including the required background information and explanation, will be mailed free of charge upon request. However, the availability of such a mailing does not relieve the lawyer or the law firm of the obligation to provide a context in an advertisement or communication if it contains any reference to a verdict record.

In the instant inquiry, Law Firm's web page appropriately discloses that most of its cases were defended, that the cases involved complex medical issues, that all verdicts obtained were collected, and that past success is not a predictor of future success in any particular case.

However, subjective statements, such as references to Law Firm as "enormously successful" and "consistently obtaining verdicts and settlements" as well as the statement that Law Firm's verdicts and settlements are "among the largest reported in North Carolina each year," are misleading. Although Law Firm has made an effort to avoid creating unjustified expectations, the web page does not provide enough explanation of Law Firm's record to avoid misleading a visitor to the website. Providing a complete record by mail, disclosing the number of cases handled each year, the number of favorable and unfavorable settlements obtained, and the time frame examined, are necessary to bring the web page into compliance with the requirements of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct.

2000 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

January 19, 2001

Representation of Remaining Spouse After Filing Joint Chapter 13 Bankruptcy Petition

Opinion rules that a lawyer who represented a husband and wife in a joint Chapter 13 bankruptcy case may continue to represent one of the spouses after the other spouse disappears or becomes unresponsive, unless the attorney is aware of any fact or circumstance which would make the continued representation of the remaining spouse an actual conflict of interest with the prior representation of the other spouse.

Inquiry:

Attorney represented Husband and Wife in filing a joint Chapter 13 bankruptcy petition. Husband disappeared, leaving Wife responsible for the entire Chapter 13 payment plan. Wife called Attorney to inform him that Husband had disappeared and Wife did not believe that she could make the payments alone. She asked Attorney for his advice. Attorney believes that it would be best for Wife if she stopped making the payments. The case would be put on for dismissal and notice sent by the court to both spouses. If Husband does not respond to the notice of dismissal, the court will dismiss the plan as to Husband. Attorney can then modify the plan for Wife to include only the debts for which Wife is liable. If Attorney cannot assist Wife in this way, Wife will have to hire another lawyer at an added expense to her. May Attorney continue to represent Wife?

Opinion:

Rule 1.7 (a) prohibits Attorney from representing a client if the representation of that client will be, or is likely to be, directly adverse to another client, unless Attorney reasonably believes the representation will not adversely affect the interest of the other client, and that client consents.

The mere fact that Attorney continues to represent Wife in the absence of Husband does not present an actual conflict. If the Chapter 13 case is dismissed because of the inability of Wife to comply with the current plan, there will not be a discharge and both parties will remain liable for individual and joint debts. If Husband does not get a discharge from the debts, he will remain liable on his debts. However, this outcome will not be changed by the fact that the Wife receives a discharge after a plan modification. In fact, to the extent Wife pays on joint debts in a modified Chapter 13 plan, Husband benefits from the reduction in the amount for which he remains liable.

There are circumstances under which representation of Wife to discharge (while Husband does not receive a discharge) is a conflict, such as instances in which Wife attempts to discharge marital debts, which are the subject of equitable distribution, alimony, or child support claims. In addition, if Husband communicated confidential information to Attorney, Attorney may not use that information to the advantage of Wife or the disadvantage of Husband. Rule 1.9(c). If competent representation of Wife requires the use of the information, Attorney may not continue to represent Wife.

Attorneys who undertake joint representation of a husband and wife in Chapter 13 cases should discuss with potential clients the potential conflicts that might arise in the three to five years of the plan's duration. Given the potential for conflicts, attorneys are encouraged to obtain a waiver of future conflicts from both spouses. See Rule 1.7(a)(2) and RPC 168 (waiver of objection to possible future conflict of interest). Waivers of future conflicts must be in writing. RPC 168. In the absence of such a waiver, the Bankruptcy Court, which has an ongoing supervisory role in the attorney-client relationship (11 U.S.C. §329; Rule 2016(b), F.R.Bkr.P.), may authorize the continued representation of Wife after notice and a hearing.

It should be recognized that if a potential conflict becomes an actual conflict, and the zealous representation of the remaining spouse requires acting contrary to the interest of the disappeared spouse, the Attorney must withdraw from the representation of Wife. Rule 1.7(c).

2000 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

July 21, 2000

Responding to Inquiries Posted on a Message Board on the Web

Opinion rules a lawyer may respond to an inquiry posted on a web page message board provided there are certain disclosures.

Inquiry:

P Law Firm represents Company, a telecommunications switch manufacturing company. Company's website includes a web page that is designed to appeal to emerging service providers including local exchange carriers and Internet service providers. The website is accessible to anyone with Internet access.

The web page includes a link to a message board. Visitors to the message board are invited to post questions. The message board is not interactive. Responses to inquiries are not posted immediately. Company has asked professionals from several disciplines to monitor the message board regularly and to provide responses to the posted inquiries that are within their respective areas of expertise. Company asked P Law Firm to monitor the message board for inquiries concerning the telecommunications regulatory law. Company will pay P Law Firm a fee for monitoring the message board and providing responses to inquiries posted there.

Company's web page will identify P Law Firm as the law firm responding to inquiries relative to regulatory matters. P Law Firm will limit the scope of its responses to federal law. The following disclaimer will appear on the message board:

> Members of the telecommunications practice of P Law Firm provide responses to regulatory questions posted to the Message Board. Responses are limited to matters of federal law and decisions of the Federal Communications Commission. Responses posted should not be considered as legal opinions or as providing conclusive answers to specific legal problems.

May lawyers with P Law Firm respond to inquiries on Company's message board?

Opinion:

Yes, it is not a violation of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct for a lawyer to respond to inquiries posted on an Internet message board provided the lawyer clarifies the nature of the lawyer's relationship with the person or company making the inquiry and the limits of the information that the lawyer is providing.

Participation in a message board is not improper solicitation, prohibited by Rule 7.3(a), because there is no direct communication, by telephone or in-person, with the individuals or companies making the inquiries. Moreover, the lawyers with P Law Firm are not making the initial contact and they do not know that the inquirer is in need of legal services in a particular matter until the lawyers retrieve an inquiry from the message board. Therefore, the message board does not have to include an advertising disclaimer such as the one required by Rule 7.3(c) for targeted direct mail.

Limiting responses to inquiries involving federal law should avoid the unauthorized practice of law in jurisdictions where the P Law Firm lawyers are not licensed to practice law. It is assumed a lawyer with an active law license from any state may practice federal telecommunications law. However, to avoid the possibility of misleading a user of the message board, a lawyer responding to an inquiry should state the jurisdictions where he or she is licensed to practice law. See Rule 7.1(a) and RPC 241.

If, as the result of responding to an inquiry, a client-lawyer relationship is created between an inquirer to the message board and a lawyer with P Law Firm, the lawyers with the firm will be required to comply with the duties to a client set forth in the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct including maintaining client confidences and avoiding conflicts of interest. If the lawyers from P Law Firm do not want to create a client-lawyer relationship with a party using the message board, the message board and any subsequent communications with an inquirer must clearly and specifically state that no client-lawyer relationship is created by virtue of the communication. Even so, substantive law will determine whether a client-lawyer relationship is created. See cmt. [3], 0.2 Scope, Revised Rules. As an example, a disclaimer might state the following:

> Although a response is provided to the specific question, there may be other facts and law relevant to the issue. The questioner should not base any decision on the answer and specifically understands and agrees that no client-lawyer relationship has been established between a lawyer with P Law Firm and the inquirer.

As a precautionary step, visitors to the web page should be warned not to include any confidential or proprietary information in an inquiry posted on the web page.

Finally, if the lawyers responding to the inquiries posted on the message board are influenced or affected by the fact that P Law Firm represents Company and Company is paying P Law Firm to respond to the inquiries on the message board, the relationship between P Law Firm and Company must be disclosed to those using the message board to avoid misrepresentation. See generally Rule 7.1.

2000 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

January 19, 2001

Acknowledging a Finance Company's Interest in a Client's Recovery

Opinion rules that a lawyer may sign a statement acknowledging a finance company's interest in a client's recovery subject to certain conditions.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney represents Plaintiff in a personal injury action. Plaintiff needed money for living expenses. In exchange for a cash advance, Plaintiff entered into an agreement with Finance Company whereby the company received a partial interest in any recovery Plaintiff might obtain in the personal injury action. Repayment of Finance Company is contingent upon Plaintiff's recovery by settlement or judgment. The interest Finance Company holds in the potential recovery is a fixed dollar amount but Attorney is familiar with other agreements in which a finance company is granted a percentage of the recovery. The agreement does not give Finance Company any right to control or direct the lawsuit. Attorney has no contractual relationship with Finance Company.

Plaintiff provided Attorney with a copy of the agreement with Finance Company and requested Attorney sign a statement acknowledging that Attorney received a copy of the assignment and agreeing to remit payment to Finance Company, pursuant to Plaintiff's agreement, from any recovery realized for Plaintiff. May Attorney sign the statement?

Opinion #1:

Although a lawyer may find a client's assignment of the proceeds of a personal injury recovery to a lender to be repugnant, this may be the only way for an indigent client to obtain the funds necessary for living expenses during the pendency of the client's claim and lawsuit. Therefore, a lawyer may cooperate subject to the requirements of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct and the dictates of competent representation.

In Charlotte-Mecklenburg Hosp. v. First Georgia Insurance Co., 340 N.C. 88, __S.E.2d ___ (1995), the North Carolina Supreme Court held that an assignment of the proceeds of a personal injury claim to a medical provider to pay for medical services was valid and could be enforced. The Court found that the statement in the assignment authorizing any one having notice of the assignment to pay the assignee "should alleviate any doubt that the assignment required the defendants [an insurance company and insurance adjusting company] to pay the assigned money to the [assignee]."

Although the Ethics Committee cannot interpret the law, a lawyer who receives notice of an assignment of the proceeds of a personal injury claim should take care to examine the applicable law to determine if the assignment is valid and enforceable. If the assignment appears to be illegal or otherwise unenforceable, the lawyer may not acknowledge or honor the assignment. See, e.g., Rule 1.2(d). Moreover, competent representation dictates that the lawyer provide the client with legal advice about the client's recourses or refer the client to appropriate legal counsel. Rule 1.1.

Rule 1.15-2(h) generally requires a lawyer to disburse settlement proceeds in accordance with the client's instructions.

> The only exception to this rule arises when the medical provider has managed to perfect a valid physician's lien. In such a situation the lawyer is relieved of any obligation to pay the subject funds to his or her client, and may pay the physician directly if the claim is liquidated, or retain in his or her trust account any amounts in dispute pending resolution of the controversy.

RPC 69.

Assuming that Attorney determines that assignment in this inquiry is valid (or, if the law is not clear, Attorney believes that the assignment is probably valid) and the effective equivalent of a contractual lien on the recovery proceeds, Attorney may sign an acknowledgment of the assignment subject to certain conditions.

A lawyer must exercise independent professional judgment on behalf of the client. See Rule 1.7 and comment. If Attorney's ability to represent Plaintiff will be compromised by the extent of Finance Company's interest in the outcome of the case, Attorney should not participate in the arrangement and he should counsel the client on the risks to the representation. Attorney must also preserve the right to re-examine the legality and enforceability of the assignment.

A lawyer may not participate in an agreement that commits the lawyer to act in a way that is adverse to the client's interests. See Rule 1.7. In addition, a lawyer is prohibited from making a false statement of material fact or law to a third person. Rule 4.1. Therefore, Attorney's written acknowledgment must disclose that, if it is subsequently determined that the assignment does not create a valid lien on the recovery proceeds, Attorney must disburse the recovery funds as instructed by Plaintiff. The acknowledgment must also disclose that, even where Finance Company obtains a valid lien on the recovery proceeds, in the event Plaintiff disputes that the debt is owed (or disputes the amount of the debt), Attorney may hold the disputed funds in his or her trust account until the dispute is resolved, a court orders the release of the funds, or Attorney interpleads the funds.

Finally, RPC 228 prohibits a lawyer from executing an agreement to indemnify the tortfeasor's liability insurance carrier against the unpaid liens of medical providers. At the time the claim is resolved, Attorney must refuse to execute an indemnification agreement for any unpaid lien of Finance Company as well as the unpaid liens of medical providers.

Inquiry #2:

May Attorney remit payment to Finance Company if there is a recovery?

Opinion #2:

Ordinarily, Attorney must disburse the recovery proceeds according to the instructions of Plaintiff. If Plaintiff instructs Attorney to pay Finance Company at the time of disbursement, Attorney must comply with this instruction. See Opinion #1 above. If Plaintiff instructs Attorney to pay the money to Plaintiff instead of Finance Company, Attorney may ignore this instruction only if there is a valid lien against the proceeds or other valid legal assignment of the rights in the proceeds. If Attorney determines that the assignment is valid (or arguably valid) and creates a lien against the proceeds, Attorney may remit payment to Finance Company only if Plaintiff concedes that the debt is owed. If Plaintiff contests the debt, or the amount of the debt, Attorney must avoid the conflict between the interest of the client and interest of Finance Company. See Rule 1.7. Attorney should hold the disputed funds in the trust account until the dispute is resolved, a court orders disbursement, or Attorney interpleads the funds to the court.

Inquiry #3:

May Attorney refer a client to Finance Company?

Opinion #3:

Yes, if Attorney is satisfied that the company's financing arrangement is legal, Attorney receives no consideration from Finance Company for making the referral, and, in Attorney's opinion, the referral is in the best interest of the client.

Inquiry #4:

May Attorney disclose confidential client information about Plaintiff's claim to assist Finance Company in evaluating the claim? May Attorney provide Finance Company with an opinion on the value of the claim?

Opinion #4:

A lawyer may disclose confidential client information, such as an opinion as to the value of a claim, with a client's consent. Rule 1.6(d)(2). However, given the potential risk that disclosure to a third party, such as Finance Company, may waive the client-lawyer privilege with regard to the information, Attorney should counsel Plaintiff about the potential risk in order that the client's consent to disclosure will be informed.

2000 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

July 21, 2000

Nonrefundable Advance Fees

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not tell a client that any fee paid prior to the rendition of legal services is "nonrefundable" although, by agreement with the client, a lawyer may collect a flat fee for legal services to be rendered in the future and treat the fee as earned immediately upon receipt subject to certain conditions.

Inquiry:

The North Carolina State Bar frequently receives complaints from clients who have entered into fee agreements that require lump sum payments in advance of the provision of legal services. Such fees are frequently described as "nonrefundable" in the fee agreement. Typically, the lawyer collects the fee from the client for legal work that is to be done in the future and deposits the money in the firm's operating account instead of the trust account. The fee may be paid for a certain number of hours of the lawyer's services or it may be a flat fee for a particular legal service such as obtaining a divorce. The State Bar usually receives a complaint when the client-lawyer relationship is terminated prematurely, before the legal services are rendered in full, and the lawyer declines to refund any of the advance payment to the client.

Although 97 Formal Ethics Opinion 4 clarifies some of the issues relating to advance or "prepaid" fees, this opinion provides additional guidance to lawyers who desire to collect a flat fee for services at the beginning of a representation.

Opinion:

A lawyer may charge and collect a fee prior to providing legal representation to a client. However, the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct require that the lawyer do three things with regard to every fee: (1) refrain from entering into an agreement for, charging, or collecting a fee that is clearly excessive; (2) deal honestly with the client; and (3) put all client funds in a trust account. See Rule 1.5(a), Rule 8.4(c), and Rule 1.15-1.

Given these ethical considerations, a lawyer may treat an advance payment of a fee as the lawyer's money, and deposit the money in the lawyer's own account or the lawyer's firm account, only if the client agrees that payment may be treated as earned by the lawyer when it is paid. See RPC 158. 97 Formal Ethics Opinion 4 states that there are only two types of fees paid at the beginning of the representation that may be deposited directly into the lawyer's or the firm's operating account: a "true" general retainer[1] and a flat fee. A flat fee is a fee paid for specified legal services to be completed for the designated amount of money regardless of the amount of time required of the lawyer to complete the services. See 97 Formal Ethics Opinion 4.

Although a flat fee may be deposited into an operating account at the beginning of the representation, when the client-lawyer relationship ends, if the fee is clearly excessive in light of the services actually rendered, the portion of the fee that makes the total payment clearly excessive must be returned to the client. As stated in 97 Formal Ethics Opinion 4, "[w]hether a fee is described to a client as 'nonrefundable' or no mention is made as to whether the fee is refundable, if a particular collected fee is clearly excessive under the circumstances, the portion of the fee that is excessive must be refunded."

The duty to refund any portion of a fee that is clearly excessive exists regardless of the type of fee that was paid. This means that there is always a possibility that a lawyer will have to refund some or all of any type of advance fee, if the client-lawyer relationship ends before the contemplated services are rendered. At the conclusion of the representation, the lawyer must review the entire representation and determine whether, in light of the circumstances, a refund is necessary to avoid a clearly excessive fee. See Rule 1.5(b).

The possibility that a refund to the client will be required means that no fee is truly "nonrefundable." To call such a payment a "nonrefundable fee" is false and misleading in violation of Rule 7.1. Moreover, the designation of the fee as "nonrefundable" in the fee agreement has a chilling effect on the client's right to terminate the representation at anytime. A lawyer may refer to such a fee as a "prepaid flat fee." The lawyer may also reach an agreement with the client that some or all of the fee may be forfeited under certain conditions but only if the amount so forfeited is not clearly excessive in light of the circumstances and all such conditions are reasonable and fair to the client. See, e.g., Rule 1.8(a).

Since it is difficult for clients to understand when a prepaid flat fee is earned upon receipt, and proof of such understanding may be required in subsequent proceedings, it is recommended that the lawyer obtain the client's consent in a written fee agreement. See, e.g., Rule 1.5(c) and Rule 1.8(a).

Endnotes:

1. An advance payment for legal services must be distinguished from a true "nonrefundable retainer." As explained in RPC 50, a nonrefundable retainer is "consideration for the exclusive use of the lawyer's services in regard to a particular matter…." It is later explained in the opinion that

   [r]etainers and advance payments should be carefully distinguished. In its truest sense, a retainer is money to which an attorney is immediately entitled and should not be placed in the attorney's trust account. A 'retainer' which is actually a deposit by the client of an advance payment of a fee to be billed on an hourly basis is not a payment to which the attorney is immediately entitled. It is really a security deposit and should be placed in the trust account. As the attorney earns the fee, the funds should be withdrawn from the account.

2000 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

October 20, 2000

Implying Early Settlement in Television Advertisement

Opinion rules that a television advertisement for legal services that implies that an insurance company will settle a claim more quickly because the advertised lawyer represents the claimant is misleading.

Inquiry:

Lawyer A desires to air an advertisement on television. In the advertisement, two individuals who appear to be defense counsel for an insurance company, are seated at a table, having the following conversation:

Senior Lawyer: How do you suggest we handle this claim?

(Disclaimer appears on screen: Dramatization by actors. No specific results implied.)

Junior Lawyer: It's a large claim, serious auto accident. We could try to deny it or delay to see if they'll crack.

Senior Lawyer: Who's the lawyer representing the victim?

Junior Lawyer: Lawyer A.

(Metallic sound effect; logo of Lawyer A's firm appears.)

Senior Lawyer: Lawyer A? Let's settle this one.

Voice over by actor: North Carolina insurance companies know the name Lawyer A. If you've been injured in an auto accident…tell them you mean business.

Does the advertisement comply with the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct? Is the advertisement misleading?

Opinion:

Rule 7.1, Communications Concerning a Lawyer's Services, sets forth the essential requirement for all advertising by lawyers. The rule states:

> A lawyer shall not make a false or misleading communication about the lawyer or the lawyer's services. A communication is false or misleading if it:
>
> (a) contains a material misrepresentation of fact or law, or omits a fact necessary to make the statement considered as a whole not materially misleading;
>
> (b) is likely to create an unjustified expectation about results the lawyer can achieve, or states or implies that the lawyer can achieve results by means that violate the Rules of Professional Conduct or other law; or
>
> (c) Compares the lawyer's services with other lawyers' services unless the comparison can be factually substantiated.

The advertisement in this inquiry intentionally creates the impression that the insurance company, and its lawyers, are anxious to settle a claim brought by Lawyer A solely because of his reputation. It implies that the decision to settle the claim is based upon the representation of the claimant by Lawyer A without regard for the strength of the claim or the evidence. Thus, the commercial is likely to create an unjustified expectation about results that the lawyer can achieve. Also, it misrepresents the importance of the myriad of factors that are taken into consideration by an insurance company, or its lawyers, when deciding whether and for how much a claim should be settled. Therefore, the advertisement does not comply with the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct.

2000 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

October 20, 2000

Charging a Legal Fee for Participation in the Fee Dispute Resolution Program

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not charge the client a legal fee for the time required to participate in the State Bar's fee dispute resolution program.

Inquiry:

Rule 1.5(f) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct requires a lawyer with a fee dispute with a client to participate in the North Carolina State Bar's program of fee dispute resolution. The rule provides as follows:

(f) Any lawyer having a dispute with a client regarding any fee for legal services must: (1) make reasonable efforts to advise his or her client of the existence of the North Carolina State Bar's program of fee dispute resolution at least 30 days prior to initiating legal proceedings to collect the disputed fee; and (2) participate in good faith in the fee dispute resolution process if the client submits a proper request.

Client filed a fee dispute petition with the State Bar. Client's lawyer, Attorney A, sent his written response to the State Bar. Attorney A also added $1,150 to Client's bill for the time and expense associated with drafting the response to the fee dispute petition. May Attorney A charge Client for the time expended in preparing a response to a fee dispute petition or otherwise participating in the fee resolution program of the State Bar?

Opinion:

No. Participation in the fee dispute resolution program is not a legal service that the lawyer provides to the client. Rather, Rule 1.5(f) mandates participation in the program if requested by a client. Moreover, the rule mandates that a lawyer participate in good faith. The program minimizes the adverse effects of fee disputes with clients and helps to prevent the filing of grievances against lawyers. Participation is a professional responsibility that advances the interests of the public and the Bar, and it is improper for a lawyer to charge a client for the time expended to participate. See also 27 N.C.A.C 1D, Section .0702 ("The State Bar shall implement a fee dispute resolution program....which shall be offered to clients and their lawyers at no cost").

2000 Formal Ethics Opinion 8

January 19, 2001

Lawyer as Notary Public

Opinion rules that a lawyer acting as a notary must follow the law when acknowledging a signature on a document.

Inquiry #1:

Prior to 1999, Attorney H represented the co-executors of the SL Estate. During the administration of the SL Estate, Attorney H failed to prepare a deed to convey certain real property located in South Carolina to a trust that was created by SL. In October 1999, this oversight was detected and Attorney H agreed to reopen the estate. On October 28, 1999, the co-executors delivered to Attorney H's office the original petition requesting the estate to be reopened. The co-executors had signed the petition but neglected to have their signatures notarized. Thereafter, Attorney H notarized the petition himself, although he had not witnessed either of the co-executors sign the document and neither had acknowledged his signature on the petition to Attorney H. Attorney H was familiar with both co-executors' signatures, however, and the co-executors did in fact sign the petition.

N.C. Gen. Stat. §10A-3(1) provides that "acknowledgment" of a signature on a document is "a notorial act in which a notary certifies that a signer, whose identity is personally known to the notary or proven on the basis of satisfactory evidence, has admitted, in the notary's presence, having signed a document voluntarily." It is believed that this provision of Chapter 10A is widely ignored. Did Attorney H's conduct violate the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion #1:

Yes, compliance with the law is the most basic requirement of professional responsibility. Although convenience and "common practice" might suggest shortcuts are appropriate, a lawyer serving as a notary must comply with the legal requirements for proper acknowledgment of a document. See Rule 8.4(a) and (d).

Inquiry #2:

Would the answer to Inquiry #1 be different if Attorney H merely directed an employee to notarize the document instead of doing it himself?

Opinion #2:

No. See Rule 8.4(a) prohibiting a lawyer from violating the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct through the acts of another.

2000 Formal Ethics Opinion 9

January 19, 2001

Combining an Accounting Practice and a Law Practice

Opinion explores the situations in which a lawyer who is also a CPA may provide legal services and accounting services from the same office.

Introduction:

This opinion does not constitute authorization for the operation of a multi-disciplinary partnership or professional association in which legal fees might be shared with a nonlawyer or legal services might be provided by an employee of a corporation other than a professional corporation or a nonlawyer proprietor.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney is a certified public accountant. He would like to open an office from which he will offer both legal services and accounting services. May he do so and, if he may, may he offer the services through one business entity?

Opinion #1:

Attorney may offer both accounting services and legal services from the same office and he may operate as one business provided he complies with the regulations of the State Board of Certified Public Accountant Examiners (G.S. Chapter 93) and with the North Carolina Revised Rules of Professional Conduct. See RPC 238 and RPC 201.

Inquiry #2:

May the signage for Attorney's office and his letterhead indicate that both accounting and legal services are provided through Attorney's business? May both services have the same telephone number?

Opinion #2:

Yes. See, e.g., RPC 201.

Inquiry #3:

May Attorney offer legal services to his accounting clients and vice versa?

Opinion #3:

Yes, provided Attorney fully discloses his self-interest in making a referral to himself and the referral is in the best interest of the client. See Rule 1.7(b).

Inquiry #4:

May advertisements for Attorney's services (including yellow page listings and business cards) indicate that Attorney offers both legal and accounting services?

Opinion #4:

Yes, subject to any requirements of the State Board of Certified Public Accountant Examiners. Rule 7.1.

Inquiry #5:

Attorney may decide to join an existing accounting practice as a CPA. If so, may Attorney operate a separate legal practice within his office in the accounting firm?

Opinion #5:

Yes, this arrangement is not distinct from the arrangement allowed in RPC 201 in which a lawyer/real estate agent operated a separate law practice within the offices of a real estate brokerage. Nevertheless, such an arrangement presents serious obstacles to the fulfillment of a lawyer's professional responsibility. Preserving the confidentiality of client information and records is virtually impossible in such a setting. Client information must be isolated and concealed from all of the employees of the CPA firm. See Rule 1.6. In addition, Attorney must avoid conflicts of interest between the interests of his legal clients and the interests of the clients of the CPA firm. See Rules 1.7 and 1.9. There may be no sharing of legal fees with the CPA firm in violation of Rule 5.4(a) which prohibits a lawyer from sharing legal fees with a nonlawyer. Finally, Attorney must maintain a separate trust account for the funds of his law clients pursuant to Rule 1.15 et seq.

Inquiry #6:

Under the facts in Inquiry #5, may Attorney offer legal services to his accounting clients and vice versa?

Opinion #6:

Yes, if there is full disclosure of the lawyer's self-interest in making the referral and Attorney reasonably believes that he is exercising independent professional judgment on behalf of his legal clients in making such a referral. However, direct solicitation of legal clients is prohibited under Rule 7.3 although it may be permitted by the regulations for certified public accountants. Rule 7.3(a) does permit a lawyer to engage in in-person or telephone solicitation of professional employment if the lawyer has a "prior professional relationship" with a prospective client. If a prior professional relationship was established with a client of the accounting firm, Attorney may call or visit that person to solicit legal business.

Inquiry #7:

May Attorney share a telephone number with accounting firm?

Opinion #7:

Yes, if the confidences of legal clients can be preserved and clients are not confused about the relationship of Attorney's law practice to the accounting firm. See RPC 201.

Inquiry #8:

May advertisements for Attorney's law practice (including yellow page listings and business cards) indicate that Attorney also offers accounting services? May advertisements for the CPA firm or under the accounting heading of the yellow pages indicate that Attorney is also a lawyer and offers legal services?

Opinion #8:

Advertisements may not imply that legal services are offered by the accounting firm in violation of the statutes prohibiting the unauthorized practice of law and Rule 5.5 which prohibits a lawyer from assisting in the unauthorized practice of law. See G.S. 84-4 and 84-5. Nevertheless, advertisements for Attorney's law practice may include truthful information regarding Attorney's CPA license. Attorney's business cards may truthfully state that he is a lawyer and a CPA. See Rule 7.1. No opinion is expressed on the separate requirements of the State Board of Certified Public Accountant Examiners.

2000 Formal Ethics Opinion 10

July 27, 2001

Appearance of Non-Lawyer Employee at Calendar Call

Opinion rules that a lawyer may have a nonlawyer employee deliver a message to a court holding calendar call, if the lawyer is unable to attend due to a scheduling conflict with another court or other legitimate reason.

Inquiry:

Attorney A is a criminal defense lawyer in a solo practice. He frequently has cases on the calendar simultaneously in juvenile court, district court, superior court, and administrative court. When a client's case is in court for a routine calendar call or an administrative status calendar call, Attorney A would like to send a nonlawyer member of his staff to the hearing to report to the court on his whereabouts and scheduling conflict. May Attorney A do so without violating the prohibition on assisting the unauthorized practice of law?

Opinion:

Yes, provided the nonlawyer employee is merely providing the court with information and does not request or argue for a particular action by the court.

Rule 5.5(b) prohibits a lawyer from assisting a person who is not a member of the bar in the performance of any activity that constitutes the unauthorized practice of law. G.S. § 1-11 provides that, "A party may appear either in person or by attorney in actions or proceedings in which he is interested." G.S. §84-4 permits only licensed North Carolina lawyers "to appear as attorney or counselor at law in any action or proceeding before any judicial body." See also G.S. §§84-2.1, 84-4, and 84-36. Nevertheless, when a lawyer has a conflicting commitment to appear in another court or when another legitimate conflict prohibits a lawyer's appearance in court for a client, the lawyer may send a nonlawyer employee to the court to inform the court of the situation. This is not assisting in the unauthorized practice of law.[1] In response to information about a lawyer's availability, the court may, on its own motion, determine that a continuance or other action is appropriate.

A lawyer should rely on a nonlawyer to notify the court of a scheduling conflict only when necessary. Moreover, Rule 5.3 requires a lawyer who supervises a nonlawyer assistant to make reasonable efforts to ensure that the nonlawyer's conduct is compatible with the professional obligations of the lawyer. If a nonlawyer is present in court to provide information about the lawyer's scheduling conflict, the duty of supervision includes insuring that the assistant complies with court rules on decorum and attire.

Endnote

1. See People v. Alexander, 202 N.E. 2d 841 (Appellate Court of IL. 1964): "We agree with the trial judge that clerks should not be permitted to make motions or participate in other proceedings which can be considered as 'managing' the litigation. However, if apprising the court of an employer's engagement or inability to be present constitutes the making of a motion, we must hold that clerks may make such motions…without being guilty of the unauthorized practice of law."

2000 Formal Ethics Opinion 11

January 19, 2001

Disclosure of Confidential Corporate Information by Former In-house Counsel

Opinion rules that a lawyer who was formerly in-house legal counsel for a corporation must obtain the permission of a court prior to disclosing confidential information of the corporation to support a personal claim for wrongful termination.

Inquiry #1:

Corporation C employed Attorney A who reported to the General Counsel of the corporation. Before Attorney A was hired, Corporation C entered into a settlement with the United States Government whereby Corporation C agreed to pay the federal government $900,000 for failure to rebate money to the government for service contracts. Corporation C also agreed to establish a compliance program.

While employed by Corporation C, Attorney A was assigned to establish and monitor the compliance program. Attorney A discovered that the compliance program was not being honored. The comptroller of the corporation also advised Attorney A that the corporation was involved in another scheme to defraud the government of $38 million through improper billings. Attorney A was informed that the chief financial officer and the chief executive officer of Corporation C were aware of the fraud scheme. Attorney A informed the General Counsel of the fraud scheme and that the compliance program was being violated. Two weeks later, Attorney A was fired. He was offered three months salary as severance pay if he signed a separation agreement containing a confidentiality provision and a covenant not to sue. Attorney A refused to sign the agreement.

Attorney A has documents from Corporation C that reveal the scheme to defraud the federal government. May Attorney A disclose these documents, as well as other information of Corporation C that he gained while he was an employee, to the US Attorney in order that the government might pursue a false claims action against Corporation C?

Opinion #1:

Yes, Attorney A may reveal confidential information of his former employer and client, Corporation C, if such information concerns the intention of Corporation C to commit a crime and the information necessary to prevent the crime. Rule 1.6(d)(4). This is the only exception to the duty of confidentiality that is applicable here. To the extent that the confidential information relates to past conduct, it may not be disclosed to the US Attorney.

Inquiry #2:

May Attorney A reveal information and documents of Corporation C to establish a claim for wrongful termination in his own lawsuit against Corporation C?

Opinion #2:

No, unless an exception to the duty of confidentiality applies and a court permits the disclosure of the confidential information.

Although Rule 1.6(d)(6) permits a lawyer to reveal confidential client information "to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to establish a claim or defense on behalf of the lawyer in a controversy between the lawyer and the client…," Comments [18] and [19] to Rule 1.6 clarify that this exception is generally intended to enable the lawyer to defend his or her representation of a client or to prove legal services were rendered in an action to collect a fee.

Public policy favors a client's right to terminate the client-lawyer relationship for any reason and at any time without adverse consequence to the client. Rule 1.16, Comment [4]. If confidential information may be revealed whenever an in-house corporate lawyer's employment is terminated, a chilling effect on a corporation's right to terminate its legal counsel at will may ensue. Nevertheless, there is also a public policy, recognized by the courts of North Carolina in a number of recent decisions, against the termination of an employee for refusing to cooperate in the illegal or immoral activity of his or her employer. Because of this public policy, the courts, in a few limited situations, have allowed an employee to go forward with a wrongful termination claim as an exception to the employment-at-will doctrine.

The Ethics Committee cannot make a definitive ruling in the light of the competing public policies illustrated in this inquiry—one favoring the protection of client confidences and the right to counsel of choice and the other condemning the termination of an employee for refusing to participate in wrongful activity. The exception in Rule 1.6(d)(6) is broad enough to include a wrongful termination action. Nevertheless, even when there is an exception permitting disclosure of confidential information, the comment to Rule 1.6 states that:

> the lawyer must make every effort practicable to avoid unnecessary disclosure of information relating to a representation, to limit disclosure to those having the need to know it, and to obtain protective orders or make other arrangements minimizing the risk of disclosure.

Rule 1.6, cmt. [19]. Given the competing public policies described above, a lawyer may reveal no client confidences in a complaint for wrongful termination except as necessary to put the opposing party on notice of the claim. Prior to disclosing any other confidential information of the former employer and client, the lawyer must obtain a ruling from a court of competent jurisdiction authorizing the lawyer to reveal confidential information of the former client, and even then may only reveal such confidential information as is necessary to establish the wrongful termination claim. Requesting in camera review of the confidential information the plaintiff intends to proffer to establish the wrongful termination claim would be an appropriate procedure for obtaining the court's ruling. There may be other similarly appropriate procedures.

Inquiry #3:

May Attorney A reveal information and documents of Corporation C to establish a claim under the False Claims Act in his own lawsuit against Corporation C?

Opinion #3:

No, unless a court rules that the information may be revealed to pursue the claim. Rule 1.6(d)(3) permits a lawyer to reveal confidential information when required by a court order. This would appear to be the only exception to the duty of confidentiality that permits a lawyer to disclose confidential information in order to make a third party or "qui tam" claim under the False Claims Act. In this inquiry, there are also competing public policies favoring disclosure on the one hand and confidentiality on the other. The Ethics Committee again defers to the ruling of a court of competent jurisdiction to determine the extent to which Attorney A may reveal confidential client information in order to establish a claim under the False Claims Act. Attorney A may reveal no client confidences in a complaint asserting a claim under the False Claims Act except as necessary to put the opposing party on notice of the claim. Thereafter, Attorney A may only reveal confidential client information as permitted by a court order.

2001 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

April 27, 2001

Petition to Court for Attorney's Fee When Client is Member of Legal Services Plan

Opinion rules that, in a petition to a court for an award of an attorney's fee, a lawyer must disclose that the client paid a discounted hourly rate for legal services as a result of the client's membership in a prepaid or group legal services plan.

Inquiry:

Attorney represented the plaintiffs in a dispute involving the interpretation of restrictive covenants for a subdivision. Suit was filed and the plaintiffs ultimately prevailed in an appeal to the North Carolina Supreme Court. The restrictive covenants provide that in the event of a litigated dispute, the prevailing party is entitled to recover costs and reasonable attorney's fees.

The attorney's fee agreement with the plaintiffs provides that Attorney's hourly rate will be $59.00 per hour. This rate is one-half of Attorney's customary rate at the time the representation commenced in 1995. A discount was given to the plaintiffs because they subscribe to a prepaid or group legal services plan that benefits enrollees who pay a monthly premium. Attorney is one of the lawyers for the plan. As such, his firm receives a monthly payment from the plan administrator of $1.50 to $2.00 per client enrolled in the plan. This provides the firm with about $1,200.00 to $1,400.00 in income per month.

Attorney's usual fee petition to a court includes an affidavit with the following information: a breakdown of the time expended and the legal services rendered for the client; a summary of the client's costs; a statement on Attorney's expertise in the area of practice; and a description of the difficulty of the matter. It does not usually include a description of the fee arrangement with the client.

Attorney believes that disclosure of his fee arrangement with the plaintiffs in this case would violate the duty of confidentiality he owes to the plaintiffs. He also believes that the opposing party should not benefit from the plaintiffs' foresight in subscribing to a legal services plan.

May Attorney file a petition for legal fees in the current case that does not disclose the discounted hourly rate charged to the plaintiffs but instead recites Attorney's full hourly rate at the time the representation of the plaintiffs commenced?

Opinion:

Rule 3.3(a)(2) requires a lawyer to disclose material facts to a court when necessary to avoid assisting in a fraudulent act by the client. Although Attorney and the plaintiffs may have no intent to defraud the opposing party, the effect may be the same if the court does not have all of the facts necessary to make a fair and informed decision about an award of legal fees. See, e.g., 98 Formal Ethics Opinion 5 (to petition court for a limited driving privilege, prior driving record must be disclosed even if disclosure is adverse to client). The fee petition must recite the discounted hourly rate actually charged to the clients but it may also explain to the court that the clients purchased a prepaid or group legal services plan in order to obtain the discount. Attorney may then argue to the court that the opposing party should not reap the benefit of the plaintiffs' foresight and that Attorney's usual hourly rate is a reasonable amount upon which to calculate the award of legal fees. If the plaintiffs do not consent to the disclosure of this information about the fee arrangement in the petition, Attorney may disclose only that the plaintiffs were charged $59.00 per hour for his services. He may not imply or infer that the plaintiffs were charged more.

2001 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

April 27, 2001

Contracting with Management Firm to Administer Law Office

Opinion rules that there is no prohibition on a law firm entering into a contract with a management firm to administer the firm provided the lawyers in the firm can fulfill their ethical duties including the duty to exercise independent professional judgment, the duty to protect and safe keep client property, and the duty to maintain client confidences.

Inquiry:

Law Firm wants to enter into a contract with a management company that will oversee the day-to-day administration of the firm. Among other things, the company will employ all of the nonlawyer employees of the firm. The company will be responsible for the hiring and training of employees. The company will also provide all accounting, marketing, human resources, and information-technology systems for the firm. The firm's only employees will be the lawyers. The company will execute confidentiality agreements with the law firm and all employees of the company will also sign confidentiality agreements.

May Law Firm enter into this business relationship?

Opinion:

There is nothing in the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct that prohibits such a business relationship per se. However, a law firm may not relinquish control of the firm in a manner that gives a nonlawyer the power or authority to direct or control the professional activities of the lawyers in the firm. See Rule 5.4. Moreover, the delegation of administration of the firm to an outside company does not relieve the lawyers in the firm from their professional responsibilities to maintain the confidences of clients and to safe-keep the property of clients. See Rules 1.6 and 1.15. These duties may be more difficult to fulfill when using an independent management firm and when the nonlawyers in the firm are employees of the management firm and not the law firm. With regard to client confidences, the lawyers also have a duty to insure that the use of an outside management firm does not compromise a client's right to assert the attorney-client privilege to prevent the disclosure of confidential client information in a court proceeding.

Maintaining independent professional judgment also means that the lawyers in the firm may not split legal fees with the management company. See Rule 5.4(a). If the management company is allowed to share in the fees of the firm, especially by compensation based upon a percentage of the revenue of the firm, the management company may attempt to maximize its earnings to the detriment of the representation of clients. Restatement (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyers §10 Com. b. Nevertheless, if a financial arrangement can be worked out with the management company for a flat fee or other means of payment that is not tied to profits, the rules are not intended to prevent, as stated in the Restatement, "new and useful ways of providing legal services or [make] sure that nonlawyers do not profit indirectly from legal services in circumstances and under arrangements presenting no significant risk of harm to clients or third persons." Id.

2001 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

April 27, 2001

Disbursement for Tort Claim Settlement Upon Deposit of Funds Provisionally Credited to Trust Account

Opinion rules that a lawyer may settle a tort claim by making disbursements from a trust account in reliance upon the deposit of funds provisionally credited to the account if the deposited funds are in the form of a financial instrument that is specified in the Good Funds Settlement Act, G.S. Chap. 45A.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney regularly represents individuals with personal injury claims. When an insurance company check for $5000 or more is paid in settlement of a client's claim, the check is deposited into the trust account of Attorney's firm. No disbursements are made to the client, or to third parties on behalf of the client, until the funds are actually collected because RPC 191 limits the disbursements that can be made against provisional credit. RPC 191 prohibits a lawyer from making disbursements from a trust account unless the funds are actually on deposit in the account or, if the depository institution grants provisional credit, unless the financial instrument deposited into the account is one of the ones specified in the Good Funds Settlement Act, G.S. Chap. 45A (the "Act").

Attorney believes that RPC 191 should not apply to disbursements from a trust account for a personal injury settlement because the Act is specifically limited to the settlement of residential real estate transactions. See G.S. §45A-2. Attorney believes that the limitations of RPC 191 create a hardship on his firm and the client because the client has to come to the firm's office to endorse the settlement check and, after the check clears the bank, return to the firm to collect the disbursement. This may have an adverse effect on a client's credit and delay repairs to or replacement of an automobile if there is also a property damage settlement. It also costs Attorney additional time to meet with the client twice.

Is RPC 191 applicable to personal injury settlements? If so, is there an exemption for personal injury settlements or checks from insurance companies licensed to do business in North Carolina?

Opinion #1:

RPC 191 is applicable to all disbursements from a trust account against financial instruments that are not irrevocably credited to the account upon deposit although the Good Funds Settlement Act was adopted by the General Assembly only to regulate the settlement of residential real estate transactions. The rationale for the opinion is found in the following excerpt from the opinion:

> Notwithstanding the fact that some of the forms of funds designated in the Act are not irrevocably credited to the lawyer's trust account at the time of deposit, the risk of noncollectibility is so slight that a lawyer's disbursement of funds from a trust account in reliance upon the deposit into the account of provisionally credited funds in these forms shall not be considered unethical. However, a closing lawyer should never disburse against any provisionally credited funds unless he or she reasonably believes that the underlying deposited instrument is virtually certain to be honored when presented for collection. A lawyer may immediately disburse against collected funds, such as cash or wired funds, and may immediately make disbursements from his or her trust account in reliance upon provisional credit extended by the depository institution for funds deposited into the trust account in one or more of the forms set forth in G.S. §45A-4.

The disbursement of funds from a trust account by a lawyer in reliance upon provisional credit extended upon the deposit of an item into the trust account which does not take one of the forms prescribed in the Act constitutes professional misconduct, regardless of whether the item is ultimately honored or dishonored.

The exception allowed in RPC 191 to the duty to disburse only against collected funds in a trust account is purposefully narrow to limit the potential for disbursements against instruments that are subsequently dishonored. If an instrument is subsequently dishonored, it puts at risk all client funds on deposit in the trust account. The relatively minor inconvenience of waiting for a check to clear the bank is offset by the protection that disbursement against collected funds provides to all clients with funds deposited in the trust account. The General Assembly, as a matter of public policy, has determined that the items set forth in the Good Funds Settlement Act are sufficiently reliable to exempt these items from the safeguard of waiting to collect the funds but the Ethics Committee of the State Bar does not have the authority to expand the exemption.

Inquiry #2:

When Attorney settles a property damage claim on a client's vehicle, he asks the insurance company to put only the name of the client on the settlement check. Attorney believes that this is the only way that the check can be given directly to the client. If the check is made out to both the client and the law firm, Attorney deposits the check into the trust account and waits until the check is collected before disbursing the entire amount of the check to the client. The delay before disbursement can be a serious inconvenience to a client who needs an automobile for transportation.

If an insurance check is made out jointly to the law firm (or Attorney) and the client, may Attorney endorse the check and give the check to the client without depositing it first into the trust account?

Opinion #2:

When funds belonging presently or potentially to a lawyer are received in combination with funds belonging to a client, or other persons, the funds must be deposited in tact into the trust account. See Rule 1.15-2(g). However, if all of the funds represented by a check from a third party belong to the client or the lawyer is prepared to forgo being paid for his legal services from the check proceeds (and bill the client instead), the check may be endorsed directly to the client without being deposited into the trust account.

2001 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

October 19, 2001

Editor's note: This opinion is overruled by 2002 Formal Ethics Opinion 9.

Supervision of Paralegal Closing a Residential Real Estate Refinancing

Opinion rules that competent legal representation of a borrower requires the presence of the lawyer at the closing of a residential real estate refinancing. A nonlawyer may oversee the execution of documents outside the presence of the lawyer provided the lawyer adequately supervises the nonlawyer and is present at the closing conference to complete the transaction.

Inquiry:

99 Formal Ethics Opinion 13 rules that competent practice requires the presence of the closing lawyer at a residential real estate closing conference to explain the documents being executed, answer questions, and advocate for the client. A nonlawyer employee of the lawyer may oversee the execution of documents outside of the lawyer's presence; however, the closing lawyer must adequately supervise the nonlawyer and must be present at some time during the closing conference to complete the transaction.

When a homeowner refinances his or her residential property, there is a potential for harm to the interest of the homeowner from high interest rates, dissipation of equity, and refinancing pitfalls such as prepayment penalties and balloon notes. May a lawyer allow a nonlawyer employee to close a residential real estate refinancing if the lawyer is not present at the closing?

Opinion:

No. As with an initial purchase of residential property, the closing of a refinancing of residential property is the primary opportunity that a lawyer has to meet with the borrower, explain the refinancing documents, define the borrower's rights and obligations, and answer questions. These activities are the practice of law because the lawyer gives legal advice and opinion on the rights of the borrower. See 99 FEO 13. Therefore, competent representation requires that the closing lawyer must be present at the closing. Nevertheless, a lawyer may permit a nonlawyer employee to oversee the execution of the financing documents outside of the lawyer's presence. Nothing in this opinion is intended to infringe upon a lender's right to represent itself as provided in State v. Pledger, 257 N.C. 634, 127 S.E.2d 337 (1962).

2001 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

July 27, 2001

LAP Support Groups and the Duty to Report Misconduct

Opinion rules that disclosures made during a LAP support group meeting are confidential and not reportable to the State Bar under Rule 8.3.

Inquiry:

The Lawyer Assistance Program (LAP) of the North Carolina State Bar has the following three purposes: (1) to protect the public by assisting lawyers and judges who are professionally impaired by reason of substance abuse, addiction, or debilitating mental condition; (2) to assist impaired lawyers and judges in recovery; and (3) to educate lawyers and judges concerning the causes of and remedies for such impairment. 27 N.C.A.C. 1D, Rule .0601. To assist lawyers who are professionally impaired because of depression or another debilitating mental condition, LAP organizes support groups for impaired lawyers sometimes called "accountability groups." At a meeting of one of these groups, impaired lawyers share their experiences in an effort to support each other's recovery. A designated representative of LAP is present and facilitates each meeting of a group.

The therapeutic purpose of the group is to hold each member accountable and to encourage honesty and openness. However, Rule 8.3(a) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct provides "A lawyer having knowledge that another lawyer has committed a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct that raises a substantial question as to that lawyer's honesty, trustworthiness, or fitness as a lawyer in other respects shall inform the North Carolina State Bar or the court having jurisdiction over the matter." If a participant in a support group is worried that he or she may be making a reportable disclosure, it will prevent the honesty and openness that is necessary to the therapeutic purpose of the group. It would be equally counter-productive for a lawyer who is listening to another participant's disclosures to be concerned that he or she may have to report the lawyer to the State Bar.

Does a lawyer who is participating in a LAP accountability group have to report the conduct of another lawyer in the group to the North Carolina State Bar if the other lawyer discloses conduct that is reportable under Rule 8.3(a)?

Opinion:

No. To promote the purposes of the LAP program, the exception to reporting found in Rule 8.3(c) is extended to communications during a meeting of an accountability group. Rule 8.3(c) states that the disclosure rule does not require disclosure of confidential information. Under Rule 1.6(c), confidential information includes "information received by a lawyer then acting as an agent of a lawyer's or judge's assistance program approved by the North Carolina State Bar or by the North Carolina Supreme Court regarding another lawyer or judge seeking assistance or to whom assistance is being offered." Since a representative of LAP is present at each meeting of an accountability group, the duty of confidentiality extends to all communications to the representative during the meeting as well as to any communication among the members of the support group during the meeting.

2001 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

July 27, 2001

Multiple Representation of Claims for Workers' Compensation Death Benefits

Opinion examines when a lawyer has a conflict of interest in representing various family members on claims for a deceased employee's workers' compensation death benefits.

Inquiry #1:

Worker was fatally injured in a work related accident covered under the Workers' Compensation Act. At the time of Worker's death, he was married to Wife #2 who has two children from a previous marriage (the "stepchildren"). Worker had two children of his own from his first marriage ("Worker's children"). Wife #2 and Worker also had one child together (the "joint child"). All of the children are under 18 years of age. Only the joint child is under 10 years of age.

Liability is admitted and the only issue before the Industrial Commission is the determination of the beneficiaries of the workers' compensation benefits payable by reason of Worker's death. Under the Workers' Compensation Act, the death benefits are divided equally among all the beneficiaries and then paid out over at least 400 weeks. N.C.G.S. §97-38. Every additional beneficiary entitled to compensation reduces the compensation payable to any individual beneficiary. A minor child who is under 10 years of age will receive compensation until the child reaches 18 years of age even if that is longer than 400 weeks. Compensation payments are usually made payable to a surviving spouse for the use and benefit of minor children of the surviving spouse. Once a surviving minor child turns 18 years old, compensation is paid directly to the child. A stepchild of a deceased employee qualifies as a dependent only if the child was substantially dependent upon the deceased employee at the time of death. Whether a stepchild was substantially dependent upon the deceased employee may be disputed.

Wife #2 asked Attorney A to represent all of the following claimants to the death benefits: Wife #2; the guardians ad litem for Worker's children; the stepchildren; and the joint child. May Attorney A represent Worker's children and stepchildren simultaneously?

Opinion #1:

Worker's children will maximize their shares of the death benefits by excluding Worker's stepchildren from the distribution. Attorney A cannot represent the interests of Worker's children unless he advocates against the compensation of Worker's stepchildren. Such a direct conflict of interest is prohibited under Rule 1.7(a).

Attorney A may not ask the guardians ad litem for Worker's children to consent to the conflict of interest because, as stated in Comment [5] to Rule 1.7, "When a disinterested lawyer would conclude that the client should not agree to representation under the circumstances, the lawyer involved cannot properly ask for such agreement or provide representation on the basis of the client's consent."

Inquiry #2:

Wife #2 asked Attorney A to represent her, Worker's stepchildren, and the joint child of the marriage of Wife #2 and Worker. The two stepchildren are over age 10 and will continue to receive benefits after turning 18 years old. While they are minors, they will live with their mother and any benefits they receive will likely be paid to Wife #2 to support the household. Similarly, any compensation payable to the joint child of the marriage will be paid to Wife #2 to support the child. May Attorney A represent Wife #2, the stepchildren, and the joint child?

Opinion #2:

Attorney A may represent Wife #2 and her own children from her first marriage or Attorney A may represent Wife #2 and the joint child of her marriage to Worker. It is assumed that Wife #2 will receive the benefits payable to all of these children during their minority if they reside with Wife #2 and, therefore, Wife #2 and these children have a common economic interest. Moreover, Wife #2 is financially responsible for her children until they reach age 18. See RPC 123.

Nevertheless, Attorney A may not represent the stepchildren and the joint child of the marriage simultaneously. The interest of the stepchildren of Worker and the joint child of the marriage are opposed because the joint child has an interest in maximizing the benefits payable by eliminating the claims of the two stepchildren on the basis that the two stepchildren were not substantially dependent on Worker at the time of his death. Even though the compensation to the two stepchildren might initially be payable to Wife #2 to run the household, once the two stepchildren are emancipated, they will receive compensation directly. Therefore, their interests are adverse to that of the joint child of the marriage. See Rule 1.7(a).

2001 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

October 19, 2001

Editor's note: See Rule 1.8 (e)(1) for amendments in 2003 that supersede this opinion.

Financial Assistance to Client

Opinion prohibits a lawyer from advancing the cost of a rental car to a client even though the car will be used, on occasion, to transport the client to medical examinations.

Inquiry:

Attorney A represents Client on a personal injury claim. Client requires medical treatment as a result of the injuries he sustained but lacks a means of transportation to and from medical appointments. May Attorney A advance money to client to pay for a rental car?

Opinion:

No. Rule 1.8(e) prohibits a lawyer from providing financial assistance to a client in connection with pending or contemplated litigation "except the lawyer may advance court costs and expenses of litigation, including medical examinations and costs of obtaining and presenting evidence, provided the client remains ultimately liable for such costs and expenses." A transportation expense that directly arises from the prosecution of a client's case may be advanced to a client. In general, however, money for a rental car to be used over an extended period of time is a living expense even if the rental car may be used, on occasion, to transport a client to medical exams and treatment necessitated by the injury giving rise to the litigation. A lawyer may advance money to a client only to pay for the actual costs of transportation associated with the litigation or medical examinations. Such expenses may include an occasional cab or bus fare and, when reasonable in light of the distance to be traveled, the cost of a rental car for one trip or the cost of an airplane fare.

2001 Formal Ethics Opinion 8

October 19, 2001

Editor's note: This opinion is overruled by 2002 Formal Ethics Opinion 9.

Lawyer's Presence at Residential Real Estate Closing

Opinion rules that competent practice requires the physical presence of the lawyer at a residential real estate closing conference.

Inquiry:

In 99 Formal Ethics Opinion 13, the Ethics Committee of the North Carolina State Bar ruled that a lawyer may not permit a paralegal to close a residential real estate transaction but the paralegal may oversee the execution of closing documents outside the presence of the lawyer. May a lawyer close a residential real estate transaction without being physically present in the closing conference room if the lawyer remains in contact with the client and the lawyer's paralegal by telephone and is available, by phone, to answer the client's questions and to instruct and supervise the paralegal?

Opinion:

No. The lawyer must be physically present at the closing conference and may not be present through a surrogate such as a paralegal. See 99 Formal Ethics Opinion 13. This opinion establishes a bright line and removes any ambiguity about the requirements of 99 Formal Ethics Opinion 13.

2001 Formal Ethics Opinion 9

October 19, 2001

Sale of Financial Products to Legal Client

Opinion rules that, although a lawyer may recommend the purchase of a financial product to a legal client, the lawyer may not receive a commission for its sale.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney owns a small financial planning firm that he started prior to entering law school. Through this firm, Attorney provides investment advice, invests in securities (including stock mutual funds, and bonds) and sells insurance. Attorney maintains Series 7, 63, and 65 licenses, a NC health and life insurance license, and a NC real estate license.

Attorney is starting a legal practice. As part of his legal practice, Attorney hopes to provide estate-planning services to his clients. He would like to incorporate his legal practice into his financial planning business and provide his clients with turnkey service. Attorney believes that a quality financial plan often requires estate and tax planning and that clients will benefit from working with an attorney/financial advisor because they will receive advice from someone with experience in both legal and financial matters who provides a comprehensive approach to the management of their financial assets.

For example, Attorney will use credit shelter trusts and irrevocable life insurance trusts, business planning, tax planning, and appropriate investment products to meet the needs of the client. Attorney believes that if a client desires a single person to manage his or her entire financial situation, then these integrated services should be made available. Although there may be an increased incentive to promote the use of insurance products or other investment products if the attorney also benefits from the sale of these products, Attorney believes there is minimal difference over a period of time between charging commissions and charging hourly fees for financial planning services.

2000 Formal Ethics Opinion 9 permits an attorney who is also a CPA to refer legal clients to himself as a CPA. Attorney believes that because many accounting firms are now offering securities as part of their services, this opinion impliedly permits attorney/CPA's, who have a Series 6 license, to offer financial products and charge a fee or commission from the sale of these products.

May Attorney, with appropriate disclosures to and consent from the client, provide his estate-planning clients with financial planning services, which may include the sale of financial products, if Attorney will receive a fee or commission from the sale of such products?

Opinion #1:

No. Rule 1.8(b) of the Rules of Professional Conduct provides as follows:

> During or subsequent to legal representation of a client, a lawyer shall not enter into a business transaction with a client for which a fee or commission will be charged in lieu of, or in addition to, a legal fee, if the business transaction is related to the subject matter of the legal representation, any financial proceeds from the representation, or any information, confidential or otherwise, acquired by the lawyer during the course of the representation.

This rule prevents an attorney from taking advantage of financial information received from a client during the legal relationship. If the attorney learns through confidential communications that the client has received money, the attorney may not profit from the sale of a financial product to the client. Comment [2] to Rule 1.8 specifically admonishes an attorney who is also a securities broker or insurance agent not to "endeavor to sell securities or insurance to a client when the lawyer knows by virtue of the representation that such client has received funds suitable for investment." But see RPC 238 (permitting a law firm to offer financial products to clients so long as no fee or commission is earned by the lawyer or law firm on the sale of such products).

Rule 1.8(b), however, does not prevent an attorney from providing law-related services to a legal client, so long as the attorney fully discloses his self-interest in the referral and the referral is in the best interest of the client. 2000 Formal Ethics Opinion 9 was not intended to and does not create an exception to Rule 1.8(b). That opinion allows an attorney to provide accounting services to his legal clients. Nothing in the opinion specifically permits an attorney/CPA, who holds an appropriate license, to sell securities or other products to a client and profit from the sale. An attorney may, however, provide accounting, financial planning, or other law-related services to a client and charge a fee for rendering those services. An attorney may also provide financial products to the client, but may not profit from the sale of those products by charging either an additional fee or a commission.

Inquiry #2:

If a third party insurance salesman or financial advisor refers a client to Attorney after recommending that the client purchase a financial product from the third party, does Attorney have an ethical duty to tell the client that there are financial products available that can be purchased without paying a commission to the third party (e.g., "no load" insurance policies and mutual funds)?

Opinion #2:

Yes, if Attorney determines from all of the facts and circumstances known to him that it is in the client's best interest to consider the "no-load" options and the disclosure to the client is within the scope of Attorney's engagement.

2001 Formal Ethics Opinion 10

January 18, 2002

Restrictions on Right to Practice

Opinion prohibits a lawyer from entering into an employment agreement with a law firm that includes a provision reducing the amount of deferred compensation the lawyer will receive if the lawyer leaves the firm and engages in the private practice of law within a 50-mile radius of the firm's offices.

Inquiry:

Law Firm would like to enter into employment agreements with the principals of the firm. It is proposed that the employment agreement contain a provision dealing with deferred compensation. The provision reduces the amount of deferred compensation payable to a shareholder if the shareholder decides to leave the firm. Deferred compensation is reduced by 75% if the departing shareholder engages in "competitive activity" within a 50-mile radius of Law Firm's offices. Stated in its entirety, the provision provides as follows:

> If Employee's employment is terminated by Employee under Section 2.2(e) hereof, and Employee, following such termination of employment, engages in a competitive activity as hereinafter defined, the Deferred Credit, as above determined, shall be reduced by 75%. This reduction of the Deferred Credit is necessitated because of the loss of goodwill and earnings capacity of the Corporation caused by the employee's action. As used herein "competitive activity" means the employee's engaging in the private practice of law, other than in employment by the Corporation, within a 50-mile radius of the principal offices of Corporation within a two-year period following termination of employment.

Does this provision comply with the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion:

No. Rule 5.6(a) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits a lawyer from participating in a partnership or employment agreement with another lawyer or law firm that restricts the right of a lawyer to practice after the termination of the relationship created by the agreement except as a condition to payment of retirement benefits. The purpose of the rule, as explained in Comment [1], is to encourage professional autonomy of lawyers and to facilitate the freedom of clients to choose a lawyer. In Ethics Decision 2000-6, the Ethics Committee held that a provision of a law firm employment agreement that made the payment of a client's account with a law firm a condition precedent to a departing lawyer's receipt of compensation from the client after leaving the firm is a violation of Rule 5.6(a). In the same ethics decision, the Ethics Committee held that an employment agreement with a law firm "must not create a financial disincentive that discourages or prevents a departing lawyer from representing a client from the former firm if the client chooses to follow the lawyer." The Ethics Committee also found that a provision of the same employment agreement that limited the departing lawyer's financial compensation for representation in contingency cases to a specified hourly rate for work done for a client after the lawyer left the firm was a violation of Rule 5.6.

The proposed provision set forth in the inquiry above clearly creates a specific financial disincentive for a lawyer to engage in the private practice of law in the same community in which there are likely to be clients who will want to continue to be represented by the lawyer after departing Law Firm. This will inhibit the right of clients to be represented by their chosen lawyer. This disincentive is a violation of Rule 5.6(a) and is prohibited.

2001 Formal Ethics Opinion 11

January 18, 2002

Disbursements to Medical Providers in Absence of Medical Lien

Opinion rules that when a client authorizes a lawyer to assure a medical provider that it will be paid upon the settlement of a personal injury claim, the lawyer may subsequently withhold settlement proceeds from the client and maintain the funds in her trust account, although there is no medical lien against the funds, until a dispute between the client and the medical provider over the disbursement of the funds is resolved.

Inquiry:

Attorney settled Client's personal injury claim. Client is now demanding Attorney disburse all proceeds to her, even though there are outstanding medical bills to be paid. For two medical providers, Client signed written assignments of proceeds in the amount of the providers' bills. For one of these providers, Attorney also signed a "letter of protection," with Client's knowledge and authorization, in which Attorney represented that the provider's bill would be paid from the proceeds of any settlement or liquidated judgment. If Client insists that all of the settlement proceeds be paid to her, what should Attorney do?

Opinion:

Rule 1.15-2(m) generally requires a lawyer to disburse settlement proceeds in accordance with the client's instructions.

> The only exception to this rule arises when the medical provider has managed to perfect a valid physician's lien. In such a situation the lawyer is relieved of any obligation to pay the subject funds to his or her client, and may pay the physician directly if the claim is liquidated, or retain in his or her trust account any amounts in dispute pending resolution of the controversy.

RPC 69. A number of ethics opinions hold that settlement funds belong to the client who has the right to determine how to disburse the funds unless there is a valid lien against the funds. See RPC 69, RPC 75, and RPC 125. Thus, if Client instructs Attorney to pay the proceeds to Client rather than the medical providers, Attorney may ignore this instruction if there is a valid lien against the proceeds or other valid legal assignment of the rights in the proceeds. See Revised 2000 FEO 4. Attorney must determine whether the assignments given by Client to the medical providers are valid and whether they create liens against the proceeds. If Attorney determines that liens are created, she may hold the funds in her trust account or pay the providers, over the client's objections, if the providers' claims are liquidated. If the assignments do not create valid liens against the proceeds and no representation of payment was made to the medical provider, then Attorney must give the settlement proceeds to Client.

The ethics opinions have not previously addressed a lawyer's professional responsibility when, in the absence of a valid medical lien or assignment, a client instructs a lawyer to disregard a "letter of protection" or some other specific representation to a medical provider that it will be compensated, in whole or in part, from settlement proceeds or a liquidated judgment. This opinion clarifies when a lawyer may withhold settlement funds from a client in this situation. To the extent that this opinion is inconsistent with previous opinions of the Ethics Committee, the prior opinions are overruled.

When a lawyer makes a representation to a third party with the knowledge and authorization of a client, the representation should be honored. See Rule 4.1 which prohibits a lawyer, in the course of representing a client, from knowingly making a false statement of material fact or law to a third party. However, between the time that a medical provider is told that it will be paid and the time that settlement or judgment proceeds are received, a dispute may arise between the client and the medical provider over the medical bill, or the client may decide to defer payment of the medical provider and instruct the lawyer not to pay the medical provider. In the absence of a liquidated medical lien against the funds, the lawyer may not unilaterally decide whether the funds rightfully belong to the medical provider or to the client. Therefore, the lawyer may hold the portion of proceeds allegedly owed to the medical provider in her trust account until the impasse between the client and the provider is resolved by agreement of the parties, by court order, or by interpleading the funds to the court. See G.S. §1A-1, Rule 22. To insure that medical providers are not mislead, any "letter of protection" or other assurance of payment given to a medical provider must explain that the lawyer will hold disputed settlement funds in the trust account in the event the client subsequently instructs the lawyer not to pay the medical provider.

2001 Formal Ethics Opinion 12

October 19, 2001

Affixing Excess Tax Stamps on a Recorded Deed

Opinion rules that a closing lawyer may not counsel or assist a client to affix excess excise tax stamps on an instrument for registration with the register of deeds.

Inquiry #1:

The excise tax stamps affixed to a recorded instrument of conveyance or deed are based upon the sales price for the property reported to the register of deeds. See GS §105-228.32. Therefore, the purchase price for real property can be calculated from the tax stamps on the deed. Appraisers, developers, real estate agents, and lenders rely upon the tax stamps to evaluate the purchase price of real property. If excess tax stamps are affixed to a deed, the higher value reflected by the tax stamps may deceive third parties. For example, a developer sells a lot to a buyer for a certain purchase price but gives the buyer a credit at closing. The lawyer closing the transaction obtains tax stamps for the deed based upon the higher price recited in the purchase agreement even though the actual consideration paid by the buyer is less. To encourage sales of other lots in the development at inflated prices, the developer claims that he sold the lot for the inflated price reflected in the tax stamps.

May a lawyer who closes a real estate transaction have the register of deeds affix more tax stamps to the deed than are warranted by the actual consideration paid for the property?

Opinion #1:

It is professional misconduct for a lawyer to engage in conduct involving dishonesty, fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation. Rule 8.4(c). Members of the public regularly rely upon the information about the price of real property that can be derived from tax stamps on recorded instruments. Therefore, a lawyer may not counsel or help a client to put excess tax stamps on an instrument when it is recorded with the register of deeds because such conduct involves dishonesty and misrepresentation. See also Rule 1.2(d) (prohibiting a lawyer from counseling a client to engage in conduct that the lawyer knows is fraudulent).

Inquiry #2:

May a lawyer draft for a client a purchase agreement for real property wherein the purchase price recited in the written agreement is greater than the actual consideration the parties have orally agreed will be exchanged at closing?

Opinion #2:

No. See Opinion #1.

2001 Formal Ethics Opinion 14

January 18, 2002

Using CD-ROM Digital Check Images for Trust Account Records

Opinion rules that retaining a CD-ROM with digital images of trust account checks that is provided by the depository bank satisfies record-keeping requirements for trust accounts.

Inquiry:

Rule 1.15-3(a)(2) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct provides that a lawyer must keep minimum records for a trust account that include either original canceled checks or "printed digital images thereof furnished by the bank." C Bank, Inc. currently provides to its customers a CD-ROM that contains digital images of the fronts and backs of checks. Once downloaded to a computer, the check images can be viewed on a computer monitor and printed. There are protections against recording on or tampering with the digital images on the CD-ROM. If tampering or counterfeiting of the digital images is suspected, the images or printed copies thereof can be compared to the original check images retained by C Bank, Inc. C Bank, Inc. can provide the canceled checks to lawyers but prefers to provide the CD-ROM.

Some lawyers with trust accounts at C Bank are concerned that the CD-ROM does not satisfy Rule 1.15-3(a)(2). If a lawyer receives only the CD-ROM, is the lawyer in compliance with the record keeping requirements of Rule 1.15-3(a)(2)?

Opinion:

The CD-ROM satisfies the record keeping requirements of Rule 1.15-3(a)(2) because digital images of the checks can be retrieved from the CD-ROM and printed when necessary. (The CD-ROM also satisfies the minimum records requirements for dedicated trust accounts and fiduciary accounts set forth in Rule 1.15-3(b)(2).) See also G.S. §66-322(e) and G.S. §66-323.

2001 Formal Ethics Opinion 15

April 19, 2002

Ex Parte Communication With A Judge When Permitted by Law

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not communicate ex parte with a judge in reliance upon the communication being "permitted by law" unless there is a statute or case law specifically and clearly authorizing such communications or proper notice is given to the adverse party or counsel.

Inquiry:

Rule 3.5(a)(3) prohibits ex parte communications with a judge or other official except under the following circumstances:

(i) in the course of official proceedings;
(ii) in writing, if a copy of the writing is furnished simultaneously to the opposing party;
(iii) orally, upon adequate notice to opposing party; or
(iv) as otherwise permitted by law.

G.S. 15A-539 of the North Carolina General Statutes states as follows: "A prosecutor may at any time apply to an appropriate district court judge or superior court judge for modification or revocation of an order of release under [Article 26]." The statute does not say that the application to the judge may be made ex parte.

On more than one occasion, Attorney A has gotten a client's bond modified in a court proceeding only to have the prosecutor communicate with the judge ex parte and obtain a reinstatement of the original bond. The prosecutor, in reliance upon the statement "at any time" in G.S. 15A-539, presumes that he or she is permitted by law to engage in these ex parte communications without notice to Attorney A or the client.

Does the ex parte communication with the judge violate Rule 3.5(a)(3)?

Opinion:

Yes. Lawyers must act in good faith when determining whether an ex parte communication is "permitted by law" particularly because such communications limit the adverse party's right to be heard and to be represented by counsel. Therefore, a lawyer may not engage in an ex parte communication with a judge or other official in reliance upon the communication being "permitted by law" unless there is a statute or case law specifically and clearly authorizing such communication. Such authorization may not be inferred by the absence in the statute or case law of a specific statement requiring notice to the adverse party or counsel prior to the ex parte communication. See RPC 237.

2002 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

April 19, 2002

Participation in Collaborative Resolution Process Requiring Lawyer to Agree to Limit Future Court Representation

Opinion rules that a lawyer may participate in a non-profit organization that promotes a cooperative method for resolving family law disputes although the client is required to make full disclosure and the lawyer is required to withdraw before court proceedings commence.

Inquiry #1:

Several lawyers from different law firms would like to start a non-profit organization (the "CFL Organization") to promote the use of a process called "collaborative family law" to facilitate the resolution of domestic disputes through non-adversarial negotiation. The goal of the collaborative family law process is to avoid the negative economic, social, and emotional consequences of protracted litigation by using cooperative negotiation and problem solving. In the "four-way meetings" to negotiate a settlement, each spouse is represented by a lawyer of his or her choice provided the lawyer is trained in and dedicated to the process of collaborative family law. A spouse who wants the CFL Organization to facilitate a collaborative family law process may be represented by a lawyer who is not a member of the organization provided the lawyer is committed to the process. However, it is anticipated that in the majority of cases, both the husband and the wife will be represented by lawyers who are members of the CFL Organization. Each spouse agrees to pay his or her own legal fees. A lawyer participating in the process, including a member of CFL Organization, receives all compensation for legal representation from his or her client.

May a lawyer who is a member of the CFL Organization represent a spouse in a collaborative family law process if another member of the organization represents the other spouse?

Opinion #1:

Yes, provided both lawyers determine that their professional judgment on behalf of their respective clients will not be impaired by their relationship to the other lawyer through the CFL Organization, and both clients consent to the representation after consultation. See Rule 1.7(b).

Inquiry #2:

To further the goal of avoiding litigation, the lawyers must agree to limit their representation of their respective clients to representation in the collaborative family law process and to withdraw from representation prior to court proceedings. May a lawyer ask a client to agree, in advance, to this limitation on the lawyer's legal services?

Opinion #2:

Yes. Rule 1.2(c) permits a lawyer to limit the objectives of a representation if the client consents after consultation.

Inquiry #3:

The CFL Organization wants to publish a brochure describing the process of collaborative family law and its differences from litigation and other methods of resolving disputes. May the brochure include the names of the lawyers who are members of the CFL Organization and provide a description of their training and their commitment to the process?

Opinion #3:

Yes. As a communication about lawyers and their legal services, the brochure must comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct including the duty to be truthful and not misleading. See Rule 7.1.

Inquiry #4:

May a lawyer representing a spouse contact the other spouse, if not represented by counsel, to propose the use of the collaborative family law process and, if interested, to recommend contacting another member of the CFL Organization, or another lawyer trained in collaborative family law? May the lawyer send the opposing party a copy of the CFL Organization brochure and other information about the process?

Opinion #4:

Yes, provided there is full disclosure of the lawyer's relationship to the CFL Organization and the lawyer complies with the limitations on communications with unrepresented persons set forth in Rule 4.3. This communication is not a prohibited solicitation if the lawyer will receive no financial benefit from the CFL Organization as a result of the other spouse's employment of another CFL lawyer. See Rule 7.3(a). Nevertheless, the lawyer may not give advice to the unrepresented spouse other than the advice to secure counsel. See Rule 4.3(a). Such advice must be general: the lawyer may not refer the unrepresented spouse to a specific lawyer but may provide a list of lawyers who ascribe to the collaborative family law process. Moreover, the lawyer may describe the collaborative family law process in communications with the unrepresented spouse but the lawyer may not give the unrepresented spouse advice about the benefits or risks of the process for the unrepresented spouse.

Inquiry #5:

The collaborative family law process requires both spouses to agree to disclose voluntarily all assets, income, debts, and other information necessary for both parties to make informed choices. Is it a violation of the lawyer's duty of competent representation to encourage a client to participate in the process and to disclose such information voluntarily?

Opinion #5:

In order that the client may make an informed decision about participating in the process, the lawyer must use his or her professional judgment to analyze the benefits and risks for the client in participating in the collaborative family law process, taking the disclosure requirements into consideration, and advise the client accordingly. See Rule 1.1 and Rule 1.4(b).

Inquiry #6:

In a court proceeding, adultery may determine a client's right to alimony. May a lawyer represent a client in the collaborative family law process if the disclosure requirements for the process permit withholding of information about adultery despite the general policy of full disclosure? May a lawyer represent a client in the process if the disclosure requirements require the disclosure of information about adultery even if it may be detrimental to the disclosing party?

Opinion #6:

A lawyer may represent a client in the collaborative family law process if it is in the best interest of the client, the client has made informed decisions about the representation, the disclosure requirements do not involve dishonesty or fraud, and all parties understand and agree to the specific disclosure requirements. Before representing a client in the collaborative family law process, the lawyer must examine the totality of the situation and advise the client of the benefits and risks of participation in the collaborative family law process including the benefits and risks of making and receiving certain disclosures (or not receiving those disclosures). See Rule 1.4(b).

2002 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

July 19, 2002
Revised January 24, 2003

Implications of Service on a Public Body or Non-Profit Board

Opinion rules that a lawyer may represent a party suing a public body or non-profit organization, although the lawyer's partner or associate serves on the board, subject to certain conditions.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A is a lawyer with Law Firm C. He was retained by the defendant in a condemnation lawsuit filed by D County pursuant to Chapter to 40A of the North Carolina General Statutes. Subsequent to Attorney A's entering an appearance in the condemnation proceeding, Attorney B, who is also a lawyer with Law Firm C, was elected to the Board of County Commissioners of D County ("the Board").

The Board is the governing body of D County. Neither the Board nor its members are parties to the condemnation proceeding. However, the proceeding was filed at the direction of the Board and the Board has the authority to compromise or dismiss the action. Attorney B disclosed to the Board that Attorney A represents the defendant in the condemnation suit. He also advised the Board that he would refrain from consideration or comment, as a member of the Board, on the condemnation action. He promised to absent himself from meetings in which the matter is discussed and will not vote on any issue relating to the condemnation proceeding. After full disclosure from Attorney B, and upon the advice of its attorney, the Board unanimously resolved that it does not object to Attorney A's representation of the defendant in the condemnation proceeding, provided Attorney B continues to comply with the conditions previously noted. Attorney A's client, after the full disclosure, also has no objections.

May Attorney A continue as counsel for the defendant in the condemnation action while Attorney B serves as a member of the Board of Commissioners of D County?

Opinion #1:

Yes, subject to certain conditions. Lawyers should be encouraged to serve on public bodies, whether by election or appointment, because, by education and experience, lawyers are uniquely qualified for such service. Any barriers to public service by lawyers should be removed if procedures can be established that preserve the ethical values of the profession.

To avoid the appearance of impropriety or undue influence, a lawyer who is elected or appointed to a public body must be screened in his law firm from participation in an action brought by another lawyer in the firm against the public body or any subsidiary of that public body. See Rule 6.6 and RPC 53. This means that the law firm must adopt reasonably adequate procedures, under the circumstances, to isolate the lawyer from participation in the discussion of the matter with the other members of the firm and from exposure to any confidential information relative to the matter. Sharing of the legal fee generated by the representation, while not specifically prohibited, is discouraged. Although receipt of the fee by the board member/lawyer may not materially affect his judgment or neutrality, screening from participation in the profit earned from the representation increases the isolation of the lawyer and thereby enhances the public's perception that the lawyer is not exercising undue influence on the other members of the board. Therefore, if practical, a law firm should adopt reasonable procedures for withholding the lawyer's share in the profit (after overhead) from the legal fee earned from the representation.

The lawyer serving on the public body must also make full disclosure to the body on which he serves and be screened from participation in the public body's deliberations on the matter. The lawyer must do the following:

(1) Disclose in writing or in open meeting to the governing body his relationship to the matter involved;

(2) Refrain from any expression of opinion, public or private, or any formal or informal consideration of the matter, including any communication with other members of the staff of the governing body;

(3) Absent himself from any discussion of the matter by the governing body; and

(4) Withdraw from voting on all issues relating to the matter.

CPR 290 and RPC 53. These safeguards will help avoid any inappropriate influence on the other members of the governing body and will protect the lawyer's neutrality. See Rule 6.6(b). Nevertheless, if the lawyer is named, in an official or individual capacity, as a party in the action, it is unlikely that the lawyer will be able to maintain his neutrality on the public body or within the law firm. Therefore, it is a disqualifying conflict of interest for the board member's law partner or associate to undertake the representation of any party in litigation or other adversary action if the board member is a necessary party to the action in either his individual or official capacity. See RPC 53.

In RPC 160, the Ethics Committee ruled that a lawyer whose associate is an appointed member of a public hospital's board of trustees may not sue the hospital on behalf of a client. The opinion holds that permitting the lawyer to go forward with the suit against the hospital creates a conflict of interest. However, the opinion fails to distinguish between a suit against the hospital itself and a suit against the members of the board of trustees in their official or individual capacities. In dicta, it is implied that the holding in RPC 160 also pertains to a lawyer whose partner or associate is an elected member of a public governing body but the exact application of RPC 160 to this situation is unclear. For the reasons noted above, RPC 160 is overruled.

Inquiry #2:

May lawyers at Law Firm C accept new representation adverse to County D provided it does not involve litigation?

Opinion #2:

Yes, subject to the limitations set forth above, and further subject to the limitation that the representation may not be undertaken if it is known at the outset or reasonably should be known, that, in the event there is subsequent litigation arising from the matter, Attorney B will be named, in either his individual or official capacity, as an opposing party in the lawsuit. See RPC 53. If this cannot be ascertained at the beginning of the representation, the lawyers may undertake the representation but must withdraw if it subsequently becomes apparent that Attorney B should be named as an opposing party in a lawsuit arising from the matter.

Inquiry #3:

May lawyers at Law Firm C accept new representations in litigation matters adverse to D County?

Opinion #3:

Yes, subject to the limitations set forth in Opinion No. 1 above.

Inquiry #4:

May lawyers at Law Firm C accept new representations in which the Board itself, or members of the Board in their official capacity, are adverse parties?

Opinion #4:

See Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #5:

Attorney X, another member of Law Firm C, serves on the board of a non-profit organization. Attorney Y, also of the firm, is representing a client with a claim against the organization. May Attorney X continue to serve as a member of the board if Attorney Y files an action against the organization on behalf of the client?

Opinion #5:

Lawyers should be encouraged to serve on the boards of non-profit organizations for the same reasons that they should be encouraged to serve on government bodies. Therefore, subject to the screening and disclosure conditions set forth in Opinion No. 1 above, a lawyer may continue to serve on the board of a non-profit organization although another member of the firm brings an action against the organization. RPC 160, as noted above, is overruled.

Inquiry #6:

Assume that the preceding inquiries concern representation of a client in a transaction rather than representation in an adversarial proceeding or litigation. If another lawyer in the firm serves on a board of the public body or non-profit organization that is a party to the transaction, may the representation continue if the lawyer serving on the board of the public body or non-profit organization follows the procedures set forth in Opinion #1?

Opinion #6:

Yes.

2002 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

July 19, 2002

Representation of a Fiduciary With Personal Conflict

Opinion rules that a lawyer for an estate may seek removal of the personal representative if the personal representative's breach of fiduciary duties constitutes grounds for removal under the law.

Inquiry #1:

Several years prior to his death, Decedent was involved in an automobile accident. Decedent's personal injury claim was resolved by a structured settlement agreement calling for monthly payments, with periodic lump sum payments, extending 10 years after his death. The structured settlement documents named Daughter, the child of his first marriage, as beneficiary should he pass away prior to completion of the payouts. However, Decedent subsequently entered into two separate contracts with Company to assign a portion of the monthly and lump sum payments to Company for valuable consideration. As part of the agreement with Company, Decedent gave notice to the annuity carrier of a change in beneficiary from Daughter to his estate.

When Decedent passed away, the annuity carrier refused to honor the change of beneficiary documentation and began sending the monthly annuity payments to Daughter. The estate has two heirs, Daughter and Widow. Widow qualified as administratrix and hired Attorney to represent the estate. Several creditors' claims were filed against the estate. In an attempt to collect all the assets of the estate, including the annuity payments, Attorney filed a declaratory judgment action against Daughter, Company, and the annuity carrier. At the same time, Company filed suit against the estate, the annuity carrier, and Daughter. The annuity carrier thereafter stopped making any payments pending the resolution of the case.

Both the declaratory judgment action and Company's lawsuit were assigned to mediation. A mediated agreement was first reached between Widow, Daughter, and the annuity carrier. The annuity carrier would only agree to make payments to Daughter but did not care how Daughter divided the payments. Daughter and Widow agreed to a percentage split of whatever would be received from the annuity irrespective of the ultimate resolution of Company's claim.

The agreement between Daughter and Widow requires money to be deposited in a trust account and then divided by the trustee between the two heirs of the estate pursuant to their agreement. No money will be paid into the estate to cover creditors' claims. The estate has several creditors, potential creditors including Company, and funeral bills.

Assuming the assets in the estate are sufficient to satisfy the creditors' claims, what is Attorney's duty under these circumstances?

Opinion #1:

Attorney represents the estate and the personal representative in her official capacity. RPC137. As attorney for the estate, Attorney has a duty to see that the estate is properly administered and that funds due to the estate are first used to satisfy the claims of creditors of the estate. (But for the settlement between the sole two heirs, Attorney would also have a duty to see that the remaining funds of the estate are distributed to the lawful beneficiaries.) Attorney must inform Widow of the conflict between her personal interest in receiving a share of the annuity payments and her duties as administratrix. Notwithstanding this conflict, Attorney may conclude that the assets currently in the estate are sufficient to cover the creditors' claims, and therefore no interests are prejudiced if the annuity proceeds are not paid directly into the estate. Attorney need not withdraw from the representation under these circumstances.

Inquiry #2:

If the assets of the estate are insufficient to satisfy all debts of the estate, what are Attorney's duties?

Opinion #2:

Attorney may not continue the representation of the estate under these circumstances because the interests of Widow as an individual are in conflict with the interests of the estate. See RPC 22 and Rule 1.7. If Widow decides that she wants to pursue her personal interest in the annuity proceeds without regard for her fiduciary duties to the estate, Attorney must recommend that she resign as administratrix for the estate in order that a neutral party may be appointed.

Attorney does not represent Widow in her individual capacity and owes no duty to protect her individual interests. RPC 22. If Widow will not step down, and insists upon pursuing her personal interests to the detriment of the estate, Attorney may conclude that Widow is in breach of her fiduciary duty to the estate. Attorney must determine whether Widow's actions constitute grounds for removal under applicable law. If so Attorney must inform Widow that he may petition to remove her as administratrix. If she still declines to resign, Attorney may notify the clerk of court and seek to have her removed. See Rule 1.6(d)(4); but cf. 99 FEO 4 (distinguishable because of representation of co-executors). In any case, Attorney should seek to withdraw from the representation rather than assist or ignore Widow's pursuit of her personal interests to the detriment of the estate. If Widow is removed, Attorney may represent the estate at the request of the new personal representative. See RPC 22.

2002 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

April 18, 2003

Collecting Contingent Fee and Court-Awarded Attorney Fee

Opinion rules that a lawyer may collect a contingent fee and/or a court-awarded attorney fee if consistent with the fee agreement with the client but may not collect a clearly excessive total fee under any circumstance.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney has a contingent fee contract for representation of Plaintiff on injuries arising out of an automobile accident. The contract provides for the payment to Attorney of one-third of any amount recovered for Plaintiff. There is no provision in the contract on what will be done with any court-awarded legal fee. The case is tried and the jury awards the Plaintiff $3,000 in damages. Attorney petitions the court for an attorney fee pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat. §6-21.1. The statute gives the trial judge the discretion to award an attorney fee when a judgment in a personal injury or property damage suit is $10,000 or less. After examining the time Attorney spent representing Plaintiff, the court awards a $6,000 attorney fee to be taxed as a part of the court costs.

May Attorney collect both the contingent fee and the attorney fee awarded by the court?

Opinion #1:

A lawyer may collect both the contingent fee and the court-awarded fee, or some portion thereof, provided the total amount received by the lawyer is consistent with the fee agreement with the client and is not clearly excessive. See Opinion #2 and #3. However, unless results obtained for the client are extremely favorable and the work required by the representation was substantial, ordinarily collecting the entire contingent fee and the entire court-awarded fee would be clearly excessive in violation of Rule 1.5(a). See Rule 1.5(b)(4) (whether a fee is clearly excessive depends, in part, on the amount involved and the results obtained); see also Ethics Decision 97-3.

Inquiry #2:

If Attorney keeps the fee awarded by the court, he will receive more from the representation than the Plaintiff will receive from the damage award. Is this unethical?

Opinion #2:

The purpose of N.C. Gen. Stat. §6-21.1 is to allow the judge to award a "reasonable attorney fee" in cases where it might not be feasible for the injured party to bring suit if the injured party must pay a lawyer out of the damage award. See, e.g. Martin v. Hartford Accident & Indemnity Company, 68 N.C. App. 534, 316 S.E. 2d 126, cert. denied, 311 N.C. 760, 321 S.E. 2d 140 (1984). The courts have set out the factors that trial judges must consider in deciding whether to award an attorney fee under N.C. Gen. Stat. §6-21.1. See, e.g. Washington v. Horton, 132, N.C. App. 347, 515 S.E. 2d 331 (1994).

The "reasonableness" of the fee award is determined by the court pursuant to the statute and the appellate opinions interpreting the statute. The Ethics Committee has no authority to interpret the law. As a matter of professional responsibility, however, if the fee received by the lawyer is not "clearly excessive" or illegal in violation of Rule 1.5(a), and it complies with or is consistent with the fee agreement with the client, it is irrelevant whether the fee awarded by the judge exceeds the amount of the verdict.

Inquiry #3:

May Attorney add the court-awarded attorney fee ($6,000) to the judgment ($3,000) and take a one-third contingent fee from the total? Is this prohibited fee sharing with a nonlawyer? Does it matter that this will give Plaintiff twice as much ($6,000) as the amount awarded by the jury?

Opinion #3:

The lawyer may share some or the entire attorney fee award with the client since this will clearly benefit the client and may, in some instances, avoid a violation of Rule 1.5. Unless otherwise prohibited by law, whether the client receives more than the jury award as a result of this arrangement is a matter of private agreement between the client and the lawyer.

Rule 5.4(a) prohibits a lawyer from sharing legal fees with a nonlawyer. As noted in comment [1] to the rule, the prohibition is meant to protect the exercise of a lawyer's independent professional judgment on behalf of a client from interference by a nonlawyer with a pecuniary interest in the outcome of the representation. Sharing an attorney fee award with the client will not interfere with the lawyer's professional judgment on behalf of the same client and, therefore, is not prohibited.

Inquiry #4:

What provisions should be included in Attorney's fee agreement with Plaintiff to address this situation?

Opinion #4:

To help the client make informed decisions about the representation and to avoid a fee dispute, the fee agreement should explain the potential availability of a court awarded attorney fee under N.C. Gen. Stat. §6-21.1. See Rule 1.4(b) and Rule 1.5. If the agreement provides that the lawyer will be paid an amount that is contingent upon the amount of damages awarded to the client in a judgment, the agreement should also set forth the basis for determining the total fee to be paid to the lawyer if the court awards a legal fee in addition to the damage award. For example, if the lawyer intends to take either the contingent fee amount or the court awarded fee, whichever is greater, the fee agreement should so specify.

2002 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

October 18, 2002

Retention of E-mail in a Client's File

Opinion rules that whether electronic mail should be retained as a part of a client's file is a legal decision to be made by the lawyer.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney represented Client in a domestic matter for 18 months. Attorney and Client exchanged e-mail messages, sometimes on a daily basis, regarding routine issues arising in Client's custody matter. Should the e-mail messages be retained, in either an electronic or paper format, as a part of Client's legal file?

Opinion #1:

A lawyer must exercise his or her legal judgment when deciding what documents or information to retain in a client's file. Whether the lawyer should retain an e-mail communication, or any other written communication or document, in a client's file depends upon the requirements of competent representation under the circumstances of the particular case. Rule 1.1. Competent representation includes organized record-keeping practices that safeguard documentation and information so that the lawyer remains abreast of the status of the case, and is adequately prepared to handle the client's matter. See Rule 1.1 cmt. [5]. Competent representation may also require the lawyer to retain sufficient documentation to protect the client's interests, to provide assistance to successor counsel, and to protect the lawyer in the event the representation of the client is ever questioned. See generally Rule 1.16(d) and cmt. [11].

Inquiry #2:

Attorney decides that an e-mail communication should be retained. The communication may be stored in electronic format (on the computer or by downloading the communication to a computer disk) or in a paper format by printing the communication. May Attorney store the communication in an electronic format or should it be printed to create a hard copy?

Opinion #2:

A lawyer must also exercise legal judgment, subject to the duty of competent representation, when deciding which format is the most appropriate for storing communications, documents, and information generated during the representation of a client. See, e.g., RPC 234 (permitting the storage of inactive client files in an electronic format).

Inquiry #3:

Upon termination of the representation, Client requests her file. What is Attorney's duty with regard to production of e-mail communications generated during Client's representation?

Opinion #3:

Rule 1.16(d) states that, upon termination of a representation, a lawyer shall take steps as reasonably practicable to protect the client's interests, including "surrendering papers and property to which the client is entitled." CPR 3 ruled that, when a representation is terminated, the lawyer must give the client a copy of any document in the client's file that may be helpful to successor counsel except personal notes and unfinished work product. If a lawyer determines that an e-mail communication (whether in electronic format or hard copy) should be retained as a part of a client's file, at the time of the termination of the representation, the lawyer should provide the client with a copy of the retained -e-mail communication, together with the other documents in the client's file, subject to the limitations set forth in CPR 3.

Inquiry #4:

Attorney saved e-mail communications relating to Client's case in a file on his computer. Converting the e-mail communications to a paper format will be expensive and time-consuming. Upon the termination of the representation, may Attorney give Client a computer disk containing the e-mail communications (or transmit them to Client in some other electronic format) even if Client specifically requests paper copies of the e-mail communications?

Opinion #4:

Yes. Rule 1.16(d) requires the lawyer to take "reasonably practicable" steps to protect the interests of the client upon termination. In light of the widespread availability of computers, this standard is met if Attorney provides Client with a computer disk containing the retained e-mail communications or otherwise transmits them to Client in an electronic format.

2002 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

January 24, 2003

Providing Pleading to Unrepresented Adverse Party

Opinion rules that the lawyer for the plaintiff may not prepare the answer to a complaint for an unrepresented adverse party to file pro se.

Inquiry #1:

A lawsuit must be filed to obtain a divorce order and certain marital property can only be divided by court order. However, other issues between divorcing spouses are often resolved by agreement without filing suit. Frequently, the parties resolve their differences amiably, through formal mediation or otherwise, and filing suit to obtain the divorce or a property distribution order is a mere formality.

The Ethics Committee has been asked, on a number of occasions, whether a lawyer representing one spouse in an amiable marital dissolution may prepare for the other, unrepresented, spouse simple responsive pleadings that admit the allegations of the complaint. It is argued that, if this practice is allowed, the expense of additional legal counsel will be avoided and the proceedings will be expedited. The committee has consistently held, however, that a lawyer representing the plaintiff may not send a form answer to the defendant that admits the allegations of the divorce complaint nor may the lawyer send the defendant an "acceptance of service and waiver" form waiving the defendant's right to answer the complaint. CPR 121, CPR 125, CPR 296. The basis for these opinions is the prohibition on giving legal advice to a person who is not represented by counsel. See also RPC 165 (lawyer may not prepare a pleading that appears to represent the position of the adverse party).

Rule 2.2 allows a lawyer to act as an intermediary between clients with potentially conflicting interests provided certain conditions are met. Rule 2.2 seems to permit the conduct prohibited in the ethics opinions cited in the preceding paragraph. If the conditions in Rule 2.2 are satisfied, may a lawyer act as the intermediary for divorcing spouses and, in this capacity, prepare the divorce pleadings and appear as counsel of record for both parties?

Opinion #1:

No, one lawyer may not appear in court as legal counsel for opposing parties no matter how "friendly" the lawsuit. See Rule 1.7, Cmt. [8].

Inquiry #2:

Assume that the conditions for intermediation between divorcing spouses are satisfied and that the lawyer has been representing both spouses on non-litigation matters. May the lawyer draft the pleadings for both parties but give an unsigned pleading to one party (presumably the defendant) who will appear in the litigation pro se?

Opinion #2:

No. The pro se client may be confused about the extent of the lawyer's representation in the litigation. The pro se client must be treated as an unrepresented person under Rule 4.3

Inquiry #3:

A lawyer represents only the husband in a domestic dissolution. However, the wife agrees to the divorce and the parties are on amiable terms. The wife is unrepresented and does not want to incur the expense of hiring a lawyer to represent her. May the lawyer prepare a waiver or an answer admitting the allegations of the divorce complaint and give the pleading to the wife to sign and file pro se?

Opinion #3:

No. See CPR 121, CPR 125, CPR 296, and RPC 165.

2002 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

January 24, 2003

Disclosure of Deceased Client's Confidences in a Will Contest Proceeding

Opinion clarifies RPC 206 by ruling that a lawyer may reveal the relevant confidential information of a deceased client in a will contest proceeding if the attorney/client privilege does not apply to the lawyer's testimony.

Inquiry:

RPC 206 rules that a lawyer may disclose the confidential information of a deceased client to the personal representative of the deceased client's estate but not to the heirs of the estate. The opinion relies upon the duty of confidentiality which continues after the death of a client. That duty prohibits the lawyer from revealing the client's confidences unless the disclosure is allowed by the exceptions to the duty of confidentiality set forth the Rules of Professional Conduct. (At the time of the adoption of RPC 206, the confidentiality rule was Rule 4. During the revision of the rules in 1997, the confidentiality rule was renumbered as Rule 1.6.) The opinion states:

> [A] lawyer may reveal confidential information of a deceased client if the disclosure was impliedly authorized by the client during the client's lifetime as necessary to carry out the goals of the representation. Rule 4(c)(1) [now Rule 1.6(d)(1)]. It is assumed that a client impliedly authorizes the release of confidential information to the person designated as the personal representative of his estate after his death in order that the estate might be properly and thoroughly administered.

RPC 206 does not address whether the lawyer for a deceased client may testify in a will contest or other litigation about the distribution of the decedent's estate if such testimony will require the disclosure of client confidences. May the lawyer for a deceased client testify in such litigation?

Opinion:

Yes, if the personal representative calls the lawyer as a witness in the will contest, the lawyer may testify because the personal representative consents to the disclosure. See Rule 1.6(d)(2). Rule 1.6(d)(3) also permits a lawyer to disclose client confidences if required by law or court order. If someone other than the personal representative calls the lawyer as a witness, the lawyer may testify to relevant confidential information of the deceased client if the lawyer determines that the attorney/client privilege does not apply as a matter of law or the court orders the lawyer to testify on this basis.

RPC 206 continues to be an appropriate application of the duty of confidentiality as set forth in Rule 1.6 of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct and is not changed by this opinion.

2002 Formal Ethics Opinion 8

January 24, 2003

Direct Contact with Lawyer Appointed Guardian Ad Litem for Minor Plaintiff

Opinion rules that a lawyer who is appointed the guardian ad litem for a minor plaintiff in a tort action and is represented in this capacity by legal counsel, must be treated by opposing counsel as a represented party and, therefore, direct contact with the guardian ad litem, without consent of counsel, is prohibited.

Inquiry #1:

An action alleging medical malpractice was brought on behalf of Child, who was injured, and Child's Mother and Father. Plaintiff-Attorneys represent Child, Mother, and Father. The defendants are represented by Defense-Attorneys. A private lawyer (Guardian Ad Litem) was appointed by the court to serve as guardian ad litem for the minor. At mediation, Defense-Attorneys asked to meet privately with Guardian Ad Litem to discuss Child's case. Plaintiff-Attorneys denied the request, maintaining that Guardian Ad Litem is their client and, pursuant to Rule 4.2(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, Defense-Attorneys may not communicate with their represented client without their consent. Defense-Attorneys contend that, as a lawyer, Guardian Ad Litem "represents" Child and, therefore, has a professional responsibility to exercise independent professional judgment on behalf of Child, which includes making an independent inquiry of Defense-Attorneys' proposals and positions. Defense-Attorneys further contend that Plaintiff-Attorneys may not interfere with Guardian Ad Litem's decision on whether to communicate privately with Defense-Attorneys.

If a guardian ad litem is a lawyer, is he or she still a client represented by counsel for the purposes of Rule 4.2, thus prohibiting direct contact by opposing counsel without consent of the guardian ad litem's lawyer?

Opinion #1:

Rule 17(a) and (b) of the North Carolina Rules of Civil Procedure require an action to be brought by the "real party in interest" and, in the case of a minor, by a general guardian or, if there is none, by an appointed guardian ad litem. As a party, the guardian ad litem may choose to be represented by legal counsel and permit legal counsel to make decisions about the strategy for the litigation. See Rule of Professional Conduct 1.2, cmt. [1] ("In questions of means, the lawyer should assume responsibility for technical and legal tactical issues…."). The fact that the guardian ad litem is a lawyer does not make him or her co-counsel for the purpose of litigating the case. Therefore, opposing counsel must comply with Rule 4.2 and respect the decision of the guardian ad litem's trial counsel to deny a request to communicate privately with their client, the guardian ad litem.

The role and responsibilities of a guardian ad litem are established by the court making the appointment as well as by statute and case law. See, e.g., N.C.G.S. 1A-1, Rule 17; Satler v. Purser, 12 NC App 206, 182 SE 2d 850 (1971). These remain the same whether the person appointed is a lawyer or not. Nevertheless, if a lawyer is appointed, he or she must fulfill the responsibilities of the guardian ad litem in a manner that is consistent with the requirements of the Rules of Professional Conduct. This means that the lawyer must be honest, avoid conflicts of interest, and exercise professional judgment in making decisions about matters that are within the purview of the guardian ad litem such as whether a settlement proposal should be accepted.

Inquiry #2:

If separate legal counsel represents a guardian ad litem who is a lawyer, is the guardian ad litem entitled to a court-awarded attorney's fee?

Opinion #2:

Whether a guardian ad litem who is a lawyer is entitled to a court-awarded fee is a question for the court and not for the Ethics Committee. See Rule .0102(g) of the Procedures for Ruling on Questions of Legal Ethics, 27 N.C.A.C. 1D, Section .0100 (Ethics Committee generally does not respond to inquiries that seek opinions on issues of law).

2002 Formal Ethics Opinion 9

January 24, 2003

Delegation to Nonlawyer Assistant of Certain Tasks Associated with a Residential Real Estate Transaction

Opinion rules that a nonlawyer assistant supervised by a lawyer may identify to the client who is a party to such a transaction the documents to be executed with respect to the transaction, direct the client as to the correct place on each document to sign, and handle the disbursement of proceeds for a residential real estate transaction, even though the supervising lawyer is not physically present.

Introduction:

The North Carolina State Bar was asked to reconsider Formal Ethics Opinions 2001-4 and 2001-8. These opinions, together with Formal Ethics Opinion 99-13, rule that competent legal practice requires the physical presence of the lawyer at the closing conference for both a purchase and a refinancing of residential real estate.

This opinion is issued after full consideration and investigation of the issues raised by the entities requesting the review. The opinion supersedes Formal Ethics Opinions 99-13, 2001-4, and 2001-8 to the extent that they are inconsistent with the conclusions expressed herein.

Inquiry:

In connection with a residential real estate transaction, a lawyer is retained to ensure that the documents are properly executed and that the loan and sale proceeds are properly distributed, in addition to other services, if any, that the lawyer is retained to provide. May the lawyer assign to a nonlawyer assistant the tasks of presiding over the execution of the documents and the disbursement of the closing proceeds necessary to complete the transaction?

Opinion:

Yes. The lawyer may delegate the direction of the execution of the documents and disbursement of the closing proceeds to a nonlawyer who is supervised by the lawyer provided, however, the nonlawyer does not give legal advice to the parties.

As is the case with any task that a lawyer delegates to a nonlawyer, competent practice requires that the lawyer determine that delegation is appropriate after having evaluated the complexity of the transaction, the degree of difficulty of the particular task, the training and ability of the nonlawyer, the client's sophistication and expectations, and the course of dealings with the client. Rule 1.1 and Rule 5.3.

When and how to communicate with clients in connection with the execution of the closing documents and the disbursement of the proceeds are decisions that should be within the sound legal discretion of the individual lawyer.[1] Therefore, the requirement of the physical presence of the lawyer at the execution of the documents, as promulgated in Formal Ethics Opinions 99-13, 2001-4, and 2001-8, is hereby withdrawn. A nonlawyer supervised by the lawyer may oversee the execution of the closing documents and the disbursement of the proceeds even though the lawyer is not physically present. Moreover, the execution of the documents and the disbursement of the proceeds may be accomplished by mail, by e-mail, by other electronic means, or by some other procedure that would not require the lawyer and the parties to be physically present at one place and time. Whatever procedure is chosen for the execution of the documents, the lawyer must provide competent representation and adequate supervision of any nonlawyer providing assistance. Rule 1.1, Rule 5.3, and Rule 5.5.

In considering this matter, the State Bar received strong evidence that it is in the best interest of the consumer (the borrower) for the lawyer to be physically present at the execution of the documents.[2] This ethics opinion should not be interpreted as implying that the State Bar disagrees with that evidence.

Endnotes

1. It is already common for lawyers, exercising their sound legal discretion, to delegate to their nonlawyer assistants certain other tasks in connection with a residential real estate transaction, such as the search of the public records and the recording of documents.
2. Transcript of the investigatory meeting of the Special Committee on Real Estate Closings, June 7, 2002. The transcript of the evidence received at the meeting is available from the North Carolina State Bar upon request.

2003 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

April 18, 2003

Representation of a General Contractor and Surety

Opinion rules that a lawyer must withdraw from joint representation of a general contractor and a surety if a position advanced on behalf of the general contractor is frivolous, for the purpose of delay or interferes with a legal duty owed by the surety to the claimant.

Inquiry:

In North Carolina, a general contractor working on a public project in excess of a certain amount must acquire performance and payment bonds executed by one or more surety companies. The payment bond serves to protect subcontractors and materialmen providing labor, equipment, materials, and supplies for use on public projects. If a general contractor fails to pay a subcontractor or a subcontractor fails to pay a supplier, either the subcontractor or the supplier may make a claim against the general contractor's bond. The surety will respond to a demand by requesting a proof or affidavit of claim with supporting documentation. The surety will also reserve its right to assert any defenses available to the general contractor. Without action by the general contractor to tender a defense, the surety will ordinarily pay the claim.

A supplier advances a payment bond claim for materials supplied to a subcontractor for use on a public project. The supplier has provided the surety with documentation including invoices and delivery tickets clearly indicating that the materials were delivered to the project. The subcontractor disappears. The general contractor has paid the subcontractor in full for the project. According to the law, this does not abrogate the payment bond claim, so the general contractor is obligated to pay twice. If the general contractor allows the surety to pay, the surety will look to the general contractor for indemnification.

The general contractor gives notice that it is tendering a defense on behalf of itself and the surety. Discussions between the surety and the claimant cease. The claimant files a complaint to perfect the bond claim. The complaint names the subcontractor, the general contractor, and the surety as defendants who are jointly and severally liable for the debt.

The surety has an obligation to the claimant, absent valid defenses, timely to resolve a payment bond claim. The general contractor does not have any valid defenses under the law, but wants to delay the proceeding to avoid payment. Under these circumstances, may one lawyer represent both the surety and the general contractor in defense of the claim?

Opinion:

Ordinarily, the interests of the surety and the general contractor will be aligned in defending a payment bond claim. However, the lawyer has an obligation to assert only valid defenses to the claims asserted and to avoid unnecessary delay in the proceedings. Rule 3.1 and Rule 3.2. The lawyer should explain these duties to both parties at the outset. If the general contractor insists upon a course of conduct that would violate the Rules of Professional Conduct, the lawyer must withdraw from the joint representation and advise both the general contractor and the surety to obtain separate counsel. See Rule 1.7(b).

Similarly, if the lawyer believes that an appropriate defensive action taken on behalf of the general contractor would interfere with a legal duty the surety owes to the claimant/supplier, such that the surety could be exposed to a bad faith claim, a conflict arises. In this situation, the lawyer must withdraw from the representation of both parties and may only continue with the representation of the general contractor with the consent of the surety. Rule 1.9(a).

2003 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

October 24, 2003

Responding to Opposing Counsel's Mental Health Problem

Opinion rules that a lawyer must report a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct as required by Rule 8.3(a) even if the lawyer's unethical conduct stems from mental impairment (including substance abuse).

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A and Attorney B represent opposing parties in a legal matter. Attorney A's behavior has led Attorney B to suspect that Attorney A has a serious mental health problem (or possible substance abuse problem) that may be interfering with the representation of Attorney A's client. May Attorney B report her concerns directly to Attorney A's client?

Opinion #1:

No, Rule 4.2(a) prohibits communications about the representation with a person a lawyer knows is represented by another lawyer unless the other lawyer consents. There is no exception in the rule for reporting concerns about a lawyer's mental competency to the opposing party.

Inquiry #2:

May Attorney B take advantage of Attorney A's erratic behavior for the benefit of her client? What if her client instructs her to do this?

Opinion #2:

Although a lawyer must competently and diligently represent her clients, she does not have a duty to press every advantage for a client particularly when such conduct is inconsiderate or repugnant. The client establishes the legal objectives of the representation, but the lawyer is primarily responsible for choosing the means by which those objectives are obtained. As noted in Rule 1.2(a)(2), a lawyer does not violate the duty to abide by the client's decisions relative to the objectives of the representation, "…by avoiding offensive tactics, or treating with courtesy and consideration all persons involved in the legal process."

A lawyer may resolve the conflict between the duty of competent representation and the desire not to take advantage of the impaired lawyer by making a confidential report to the Lawyer Assistance Program (LAP) of the State Bar and/or seeking the court's oversight when appropriate. If the client is insistent and the client-lawyer relationship is no longer functional because of the disagreement about tactics, the lawyer may withdraw from the representation pursuant to Rule 1.16(b)(4).

Inquiry #3:

Is Attorney B required to report her observations about Attorney A's mental health to the State Bar or other authority?

Opinion #3:

No, reporting to the State Bar is not required unless a lawyer has knowledge of an actual violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct by the other lawyer. Specifically, Rule 8.3(a) requires a lawyer "who knows that another lawyer has committed a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct that raises a substantial question as to that lawyer's honesty, trustworthiness, or fitness as a lawyer in other respects [to] inform the North Carolina State Bar or the court having jurisdiction over the matter." The Preamble to the Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 0.1, cmt. [6], on the other hand, underscores a lawyer's obligations to the legal system and would encourage the lawyer to communicate the situation of a distressed lawyer to LAP.

Inquiry #4:

If Attorney B does not have knowledge that Attorney A has violated the Rules of Professional Conduct, may she report her observations about Attorney A's mental health to LAP or other lawyer assistance program approved by the State Bar?

Opinion #4:

Yes, Attorney B may report, and professionalism would encourage her to communicate her observations about Attorney A's mental health to an approved lawyer assistance program without regard to whether she had knowledge of a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct by Attorney A. See, e.g., Rule 1.6(b); see also, 27 N.C.A.C. 1D, Rule .0613 of the Rules Governing the Lawyer Assistance Program.

Inquiry #5:

Attorney A's representation of his client is clearly incompetent in violation of Rule 1.1 of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Is Attorney B required to report this conduct to the State Bar? Will a report to LAP satisfy the reporting requirement?

Opinion #5:

Attorney B must report to the State Bar, or a court having jurisdiction, any violation of the Rules that raises a substantial question about another lawyer's fitness to practice law. A lawyer's violation of the duty of competent representation, set forth in Rule 1.1, may raise a substantial question about a lawyer's fitness to practice law and, therefore, be sufficient to trigger the reporting requirement under Rule 8.3(a).

If a disclosure of client confidential information is necessary to make the report, the client's consent must be obtained. Rule 8.3(c). Whether the opposing counsel's conduct alone constitutes confidential client information is debatable. See Rule 1.6(a). The clear incompetence of opposing legal counsel may afford an apparent advantage to Attorney B's client in the matter at hand, and reporting (and thereby possibly terminating) such incompetent representation arguably would be contrary to the client's interests. However, the termination of a somewhat conjectural individual advantage gained through the obvious incompetence of opposing counsel is not the kind of detriment to the client that would normally preclude reporting particularly when the failure to report may produce disproportionate future harm to current and future clients of Attorney A.

The report of misconduct should be made to the Grievance Committee of the State Bar if a lawyer's impairment results in a violation of the Rules that is sufficient to trigger the reporting requirement. The lawyer must be held professionally accountable. See, e.g., Rule .0130(e) of the Rules on Discipline and Disability of Attorneys, 27 N.C.A.C. 1B, Section .0100 (information regarding a member's alleged drug use will be referred to LAP; information regarding the member's alleged additional misconduct will be reported to the chair of the Grievance Committee).

Making a report to the State Bar, as required under Rule 8.3(a), does not diminish the appropriateness of also making a confidential report to LAP. The bar's disciplinary program and LAP often deal with the same lawyer and are not mutually exclusive. The discipline program addresses conduct; LAP addresses the underlying illness that may have caused the conduct. Both programs, in the long run, protect the public interest.

Inquiry #6:

Another lawyer in Attorney B's law firm is demonstrating mental health problems that may be affecting the representation of his clients. What duty does Attorney B have to notify the lawyer's clients? What duty does Attorney B have to report this conduct to LAP or the State Bar?

Opinion #6:

Attorney B should intervene to assist the lawyer and to avoid harmful consequences to the lawyer's clients. See, e.g., Rule 5.1(a). Such intervention may include, if necessary, notifying the clients and switching their representation to another lawyer in the firm. Rule 4.2 does not prohibit direct communications with the clients of other lawyers in a firm.

For a discussion of reporting another lawyer's mental health problem to LAP or the State Bar, see Opinions #3, #4, and #5 above.

Inquiry #7:

Attorney X attends a LAP support group meeting that Attorney A is attending. During the meeting, Attorney A discloses conduct that is otherwise reportable to the State Bar pursuant to Rule 8.3(a). Is Attorney X required to report this conduct to the State Bar?

Opinion #7:

No. 2001 Formal Ethics Opinion 5 holds that disclosures made by a lawyer during a LAP support group meeting are confidential and not reportable to the State Bar under Rule 8.3.

2003 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

October 24, 2003

Advertising Membership in Organization with Self-Laudatory Title

Opinion rules that a lawyer may advertise that he is a member of an organization with a self-laudatory title, provided it is a legitimate, disinterested organization with objective and verifiable standards for admission.

Inquiry:

Attorney would like to run an advertisement in the yellow pages that will include the following statement:

> Member, Million Dollar Advocates Forum. Membership is limited to successful trial lawyers who have demonstrated exceptional skill, experience, and excellence in advocacy by achieving a trial verdict, award, or settlement in the amount of One Million Dollars or more.

The advertisement would also state, "We do not represent that similar results will be achieved in your case. Each case is different and must be evaluated separately."

May Attorney advertise his services in this way under the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion:

Yes, provided advertising membership in such an organization does not violate Rule 7.1. Rule 7.1 prohibits a lawyer from making a false or misleading communication about the lawyer or the lawyer's services. A communication is misleading if it creates unjustified expectations about the results a lawyer can achieve or makes a comparison with the services of another lawyer that cannot be factually substantiated. See Rule 7.1(a)(2) and (3). Information about a lawyer's verdict record can be misleading if it is not provided in context. See 99 FEO 7 and 2000 FEO 1. Therefore, to avoid a misleading communication, a lawyer may only advertise his membership or participation in an organization with a self-laudatory name or designation if the following conditions are satisfied: 1) the organization has strict, objective standards for admission that are verifiable and would be recognized by a reasonable lawyer as establishing a legitimate basis for determining whether the lawyer has the knowledge, skill, experience, or expertise indicated by the designated membership; 2) the standards for membership are explained in the advertisement or information on how to obtain the membership standards is provided in the advertisement; 3) the organization has no financial interest in promoting the particular lawyer; and 4) the organization charges the lawyer only reasonable membership fees. Moreover, when the membership information may create unjustified expectations, such as the expectation that a lawyer obtains a million dollar verdict in every case, a disclaimer, similar to the one in this inquiry, must be included in the advertisement. Whether Million Dollar Advocates Forum satisfies these conditions must be determined by Attorney prior to the publication of the advertisement.

2003 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

July 25, 2003

Communicating with a Represented Person through an Agent

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not proffer evidence gained during a private investigator's verbal communication with an opposing party known to be represented by legal counsel unless the lawyer discloses the source of the evidence to the opposing lawyer and to the court prior to the proffer.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney represents the employer and the workers' compensation carrier in a workers' compensation case filed by Plaintiff, an injured employee. Attorney knows that Plaintiff is represented by legal counsel. Attorney hired a private investigator to watch Plaintiff to see if Plaintiff engaged in any physical activity indicating that he is not injured to the extent that he claims. Attorney instructed the private investigator not to engage Plaintiff in conversation. During the surveillance, the investigator ignored Attorney's instructions and engaged Plaintiff in a conversation about a motel property located next to Plaintiff's property. As a pretext for the communication, the investigator told Plaintiff he was interested in purchasing the motel property. During the conversation, Plaintiff stated that he was repairing the motel property from storm damage. The investigator's observations of Plaintiff during the remainder of the surveillance, without further verbal contact with Plaintiff, indicate that Plaintiff is physically able to work.

May Attorney proffer the private investigator's testimony about his conversation with Plaintiff as evidence in the workers' compensation trial?

Opinion #1:

Rule 4.2(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct (2003) prohibits a lawyer from communicating about the subject of the representation with a person the lawyer knows to be represented by another lawyer in the matter unless the other lawyer consents or the communication is authorized by law. A lawyer may not do through an agent that which the lawyer is prohibited by the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct (2003) from doing himself. See Rule 5.3.

The Ethics Committee declines to opine on the admissibility of evidence. However, to discourage unauthorized communications by an agent of a lawyer and to protect the client-lawyer relationship, the lawyer may not proffer the evidence of the communication with the represented person, even if the lawyer made a reasonable effort to prevent the contact, unless the lawyer makes full disclosure of the source of the information to opposing counsel and to the court prior to the proffer of the evidence. See Rule 3.3, Rule 4.1, and ABA Comm. On Ethics and Professional Responsibility, Formal Op. 95-396 (1995).

Inquiry #2:

If the information gained from the investigator's conversation with Plaintiff may not be used at trial, may Attorney still offer the evidence gained through the investigator's visual observations of Plaintiff?

Opinion #2:

Yes. Visual observation is not a direct contact or communication with a represented person and does not violate Rule 4.2(a).

2003 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

July 25, 2003

Participating in Misrepresentation of Prior Record Level in Sentencing Proceeding

Opinion rules that neither a defense lawyer nor a prosecutor may participate in the misrepresentation of a criminal defendant's prior record level in a sentencing proceeding even if the judge is advised of the misrepresentation and does not object.

Introduction:

Chapter 15A, Article 81B of the North Carolina General Statutes provides for the structured sentencing of persons convicted of crimes (the "Structured Sentencing Act"). The Act requires the court to sentence an offender to a term of imprisonment within the range specified in the Act for the class of offense and the offender's prior record level. See N.C. Gen. Stat. §15A-1340.13 and §15A-1340.20. An offender's prior record level is determined by the calculation of points assigned, by statute, to various kinds of convictions. See N.C. Gen. Stat. §15A-1340.14 and §15A-1340.21.

Inquiry #1:

Lawyer represents Defendant who is convicted of a crime. At the sentencing hearing, Prosecutor gives the court a sentencing worksheet showing a prior record level for Defendant. Lawyer knows that the worksheet does not include some prior convictions from other jurisdictions that would increase Defendant's point level. Defendant and Lawyer did not criminally or fraudulently conceal the prior convictions. When the court asks Lawyer, "Do you stipulate to the prior record level as shown on the worksheet," may Lawyer respond, "The State has the burden of proof to establish the defendant's prior record"?

Opinion #1:

Yes. Formal Ethics Opinion 98-5 rules that a defense lawyer may remain silent while the prosecutor presents an inaccurate driving record to the court provided the lawyer and the client did not criminally or fraudulently misrepresent the driving record to the prosecutor or the court.

Inquiry #2:

Prosecutor and Lawyer are negotiating a plea for Defendant #2. Prosecutor is unwilling to reduce the charge but she is willing to leave some of Defendant's prior convictions off of the worksheet. This will reduce the prior record level and thereby reduce Defendant #2's exposure to active prison time. Defendant #2 instructs Lawyer to accept the plea offer. At the plea hearing, Prosecutor tenders a sentencing worksheet to the court that does not include some of Defendant #2's prior convictions. The court asks Lawyer to stipulate to the worksheet. May Lawyer do so? May Lawyer respond by telling the court that the prosecutor has the burden of proof?

Opinion #2:

No. Both the prosecutor and the defense lawyer are required by the duties of honesty and candor to the tribunal to disclose to the court all the material terms of the negotiated plea. RPC 152; Rule 3.3(b) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct (2003).

Inquiry #3:

Would the response to Inquiry #2 be different if the judge was advised and agreed that Defendant #2's prior record level would exclude some of Defendant's known prior convictions?

Opinion #3:

No. Prosecutor and Lawyer may not collude with the judge to avoid the requirements of the Structured Sentencing Act. Such conduct violates Rule 8.4 (c) because it involves dishonesty and misrepresentation. It also violates the prohibitions in Rule 8.4(d) and (f) on conduct that is prejudicial to the administration of justice and on knowingly assisting a judge to violate the rules of judicial conduct or other law.

2003 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

July 25, 2003

Contracting with Professional Employer Organization to Handle Human Resources, Payroll, and Other Functions for Law Firm

Opinion rules that a law firm may contract with a professional employer organization (PEO) to perform human resources, payroll, and other non-operational employment functions, including the employment of the lawyers of the firm, provided the PEO does not control or influence the lawyers' exercise of independent professional judgment.

Inquiry:

A professional employer organization (PEO), as described in N.C. Gen. Stat. §58-89-5(6) and (8), provides a small business with an alternative to the traditional employment relationship between a company and its workers. An employer that enters into a service agreement with a PEO agrees that human resource, payroll, and other non-operational employment functions will be "outsourced" to the PEO. The PEO becomes the employing unit of the client company's workers. The service agreement typically obligates the PEO to pay the employees, pay and withhold payroll taxes, maintain workers' compensation coverage, provide employee benefit programs, establish protocols for consistent administration of human resource complaints, and provide worksite safety guidance. However, the worksite employees continue to be employees of the client company for all operational purposes. The client company continues to supervise and direct its core business operations and the employees who are operating the company. The PEO does not assume responsibility for the client company's business, does not direct or supervise the work, and does not participate in the profit and losses of the client company. The PEO's compensation is calculated as a percentage of payroll cost. The compensation is not related to the client company's operational income or the outcome of a client company's business transactions.

Formal Ethics Opinion 2001-2 ruled that there is no prohibition on a law firm entering into a contract with a management company to employ the nonlawyers in the firm, in the same manner as a PEO, provided the lawyers in the law firm can continue to fulfill their ethical duties, including the duty to exercise independent professional judgment, the duty to protect client property, and the duty to maintain client confidences. The opinion did not consider whether such an arrangement would be permissible if the employment of the firm's lawyers, as well as its nonlawyers, is outsourced.

To maximize efficiency and the economic benefit to a law firm, the entire employment function, including the employment of lawyers and nonlawyers, should be outsourced to the PEO. The PEO would not supervise or interfere with the law practice of the lawyers. The lawyers would be employees of the PEO only for payroll, tax reporting, benefit plans, workers' compensation, and other human resource-related functions. The compensation paid to the lawyers in the firm would be determined by the agreement between the lawyers who own or manage the firm. Is this arrangement prohibited by the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct (2003)?

Opinion:

Rule 5.4(a) of the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct (2003) prohibits sharing legal fees with a nonlawyer and Rule 5.4(d) prohibits a lawyer from practicing in a professional corporation or association if a nonlawyer has the right to direct or control the professional judgment of a lawyer. As noted in comment [2], Rule 5.4 expresses the "traditional limitations on permitting a third party to direct or regulate the lawyer's professional judgment in rendering legal services to another."

There is no specific prohibition in the Rules on the arrangement described in this inquiry. Provided the PEO does not control, seek to influence, or interfere with the lawyers' exercise of professional judgment and the compensation paid to the PEO is a percentage of the payroll costs and not a percentage of the legal fees earned by the firm, the employment outsourcing arrangement described in this inquiry does not violate Rule 5.4. Moreover, if the law firm retains complete control of the legal practice, there should be no problems with conflicts of interest, protecting client property that is entrusted to the firm, or maintaining client confidentiality. See, e.g., 2001 FEO 2.

2003 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

January 16, 2004

Preparation of Power of Attorney for Principal Upon Request of Prospective Attorney-in-Fact

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not prepare a power of attorney for the benefit of the principal at the request of another individual or third-party payer without consulting with, exercising independent professional judgment on behalf of, and obtaining consent from the principal.

Inquiry #1:

Adult Child asks Attorney to prepare a durable power of attorney for her father to execute. No explanation is given as to why the father is not present to make the request. Adult Child has asked that specific powers be included in document, including the power to transfer to her, as Attorney-in-Fact, title to any of her father's assets. Adult Child asks that the document contain the condition that it will be effective upon its execution by her father. Adult Child will take the Power of Attorney to her father to execute. She does not want the document to contain provisions whereby witnesses can attest to either her father's capacity or whether he is under undue influence at the time he executes the document. Adult Child is ready to write out a check for the fee.

May Attorney draft the power of attorney?

Opinion #1:

Yes, but not based solely on the instructions of Adult Child. Attorney must clarify that she represents the father and, therefore, has certain duties to the father as a client. When a lawyer is engaged by a person to render legal services to another person, the lawyer may not allow the third party to direct or regulate the lawyer's professional judgment in rendering such legal services. Rule 5.4(c). Similarly, Rule 1.8(f) provides that when a lawyer's services are being paid for by someone other than the client, the lawyer may not accept the compensation unless the client gives informed consent, there is no interference with the lawyer's independence of professional judgment or with the client-lawyer relationship, and confidential information relating to the representation of the client is protected. Competent representation of the father in this situation requires an independent consultation with the father to obtain his informed consent to the representation and to determine whether he wants or needs the power of attorney and, if so, who should be appointed attorney-in-fact and what powers should be granted to that person. For guidance on the representation of a client who may have diminished capacity, see Rule 1.14.

The situation described in this inquiry is distinguishable from a commercial or business transaction in which the lawyer is engaged by one person to prepare a power of attorney for execution by another person. Frequently, the power of attorney names the person requesting the legal services as the attorney-in-fact. If the document is being prepared to facilitate a specific task for the benefit of this person, such as the transfer of stock or real estate, the lawyer represents the person requesting the legal services and does not represent the signatory on the power of attorney. Thus, the purpose and goals of the engagement determine the identity of the client, not the signatory on the document prepared by the lawyer.

A lawyer may be asked by a client to prepare a document for the signature of a third party under circumstances that give rise to a reasonable belief that the client may be using the lawyer's services for an improper purpose such as actual or constructive fraud or the exertion of undue influence. If so, the lawyer may not assist the client and must decline or withdraw from the representation. Rule 1.2(d) and Rule 1.16(a)(1).

Inquiry #2 (facts are unrelated to facts in Inquiry #1):

Mom is elderly and, although she lives on her own, depends upon the assistance of Daughter, her adult child. Although Daughter believes Mom's mental and physical capacities are diminishing and that Mom can no longer care for herself in her own home, Mom's mental competency is not the immediate issue. Daughter contacts Attorney, stating that she is doing so "on Mom's behalf" to have Daughter appointed as Mom's attorney-in-fact and for assistance placing Mom in a nursing home. Daughter asked for a consultation at which Mom will not be present.

May Attorney meet with Daughter alone and, if so, who will be the client, Daughter or Mom?

Opinion #2:

Attorney may meet with Daughter alone to discuss the representation. However, because the purpose of the representation is to benefit Mom, Mom is the client. See Opinion #1. Attorney must explain to Daughter, in a timely and clear manner, that Attorney represents Mom and does not represent Daughter. Rule 4.3. Further, Attorney must inform Daughter that, in the event Mom and Daughter become antagonistic, Attorney will continue to represent only Mom and any information provided to Attorney by Daughter may be used to further the representation of Mom.

Inquiry #3:

May Attorney represent both Mom and Daughter?

Opinion #3:

Yes, however, because the representation of one of the clients may be materially limited by Attorney's responsibilities to the other client, Attorney must satisfy the conditions of Rule 1.7(b) before asking the clients to consent to the joint representation. In particular, Attorney must be able to make a reasonable determination that she can provide competent and diligent representation to each affected client and she must provide sufficient information about the potential conflict to obtain Mom's and Daughter's informed consents. Their consents must be confirmed in writing. Rule 1.7(b)(1) and (4).

In a family situation such as this, a lawyer may readily determine that the parties are working together for a common goal that is in the best interest of the elderly parent. However, these situations are fraught with the potential for abuse of the elderly client or conflicts between the relative's goal for the representation (e.g., putting Mom in a nursing home) and the parent's goal (e.g., independent living). In the current situation, for example, Attorney must advise Mom that she can choose anyone to be the attorney-in-fact and is not required to name Daughter.

Comment [29] to Rule 1.7 offers these cautionary words:

> In considering whether to represent multiple clients in the same matter, a lawyer should be mindful that if the common representation fails because the potentially adverse interests cannot be reconciled, the result can be additional cost, embarrassment and recriminations . . . Moreover, because the lawyer is required to be impartial between commonly represented clients, representation of multiple clients is improper when it is unlikely that impartiality can be maintained. Generally, if the relationship between the parties has already assumed antagonism, the possibility that the clients' interests can be adequately served by common representation is not very good.

Inquiry #4:

Would the following disclosure and consent form satisfy the requirements of Opinion #2?

> I, [Daughter], understand that Attorney does not represent me regarding issues that concern my mother. I understand that Attorney may be representing my mother after Attorney meets with her. I also understand that whatever I say to Attorney may be used against my interests by Attorney in her representation of my mother. I understand I could hire my own lawyer and I have chosen not to do so. I have read this document and understand its contents.

Opinion #4:

Yes.

Inquiry #5:

Daughter signs the disclosure form described in Inquiry #4. Mom refuses to move to a nursing home and Daughter brings a guardianship proceeding. May Daughter's statements to Attorney in the initial interview be used by Attorney to defend Mom's competency in the guardianship proceeding brought by Daughter?

Opinion #5:

Yes.

2003 Formal Ethics Opinion 8

October 24, 2003

Duties to Prospective Clients

Opinion interprets various provisions of Rule 1.18.

Inquiry #1:

Rule 1.18(d) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, adopted in 2003, states that "representation" of a client with interests materially adverse to those of a prospective client in the same or substantially related matter > is permissible if both the affected client and the prospective client have given informed consent in writing, or:

>
> (1) the disqualified lawyer is timely screened from any participation in the matter; and
>
> (2) written notice is promptly given to the prospective client.

Does the definition of "representation" under Rule 1.18(d) include an initial consultation with a client?

Opinion #1:

Yes. The term "representation" in the above context includes not only services provided subsequent to the formation of an attorney-client relationship, but also any initial consultation for the purpose of establishing an attorney-client relationship. See Rule 1.18, cmt. [1].

Inquiry #2:

Rule 1.18(d)(2) requires that written notice be given promptly to the prospective client. What comprises sufficient written notice under Rule 1.18(d)(2)?

Opinion #2:

Written notice should be given as soon as practicable after the need for screening becomes apparent and before any confidential information is leaked, even inadvertently, to the other lawyers in the firm. The notice should include a description of the screened lawyer's prior representation and of the screening procedures employed. Rule 1.18, cmt. [8]. Such procedures may include the following: the screened lawyer will acknowledge the obligation not to communicate with any of the other lawyers in the firm with respect to the matter; other lawyers in the firm will not communicate with the screened lawyer concerning the matter; the firm will employ special procedures to ensure the screened lawyer has no contact with other personnel, firm files, or other materials associated with the matter; and there will be periodic reminders of the screen to all members of the firm. Rule 1.0, cmt. [9].

Inquiry #3:

Lawyer conducts an initial consultation with Client 1 on January 1, 2002. Client 1 does not retain Lawyer for any further representation. On April 1, 2003, Client 2 calls Lawyer to seek an initial consultation in the same matter.

Which client is the "prospective client" and which is the "affected client?"

Opinion #3:

Client 1 is a former "prospective client" and Client 2 is an "affected client" under Rule 1.18(d).

Inquiry #4:

Assume the facts in Inquiry #3. Firm drafts the following policy to handle inquiries of this nature:

> No such consultation from Client 2 will be accepted unless a period of no less than three months has elapsed between the date of the prior meeting with Client 1 and the telephone call of Client 2. At such time as a consultation with Client 2 and Lawyer is scheduled, a letter will be sent promptly to Client 2 stating that Lawyer conducted an initial consultation with Client 1 on January 1, 2002. As a result of the prior representation, if Client 2 chooses to continue with the initial consultation, Lawyer will be screened from any and all participation in the matter. "Screening" means that Lawyer will be locked out of all files and databases related to the matter and an internal memo will be immediately circulated advising all employees of the firm of the screen and requiring that no employee of the firm engage in any interaction with Lawyer on the matter.
>
> Does this policy sufficiently address the requirements of Rule 1.18?

Opinion #4:

Rule 1.18 requires that written notice, as the type described above, be given to the former "prospective client" rather than the "affected client." In Inquiry #3, the prospective client is Client 1, and the affected client is Client 2. Therefore, Client 1 must receive this notice before Lawyer proceeds with Client 2's consultation, presuming the conflict and need for screening are discovered at that time. It is not necessary to obtain Client 1's consent to the representation if Lawyer implements screening measures in a timely fashion.

See Opinion #2 for a description of effective screening techniques to include in the notice.

2003 Formal Ethics Opinion 9

January 16, 2004

Representation of Clients with Similar Claims After Participation in a Confidential Settlement Agreement for Another Client

Opinion rules that a lawyer may participate in a settlement agreement that contains a provision limiting or prohibiting disclosure of information obtained during the representation even though the provision will effectively limit the lawyer's ability to represent future claimants.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney represents Plaintiff in an employment dispute with Employer. There are several other employees with factually similar potential claims. Attorney does not represent these employees and they have not yet asserted claims against Employer.

Attorney negotiates his client's claim with counsel for Employer. Counsel for Employer explains to Attorney that Employer is willing to negotiate the matter and perhaps settle it if it can be done confidentially to avoid additional claims by the other potential plaintiffs. At this point Attorney has no intention of representing the other potential plaintiffs and tells Counsel for Employer this. Based on this representation, Counsel for Employer agrees to provide Attorney with information about Employer's financial status, insurance coverage, and other facts about the case.

While negotiating the terms of a settlement that will be favorable to Plaintiff, Counsel for Employer requests that the settlement agreement include a provision prohibiting Attorney from representing any other employee who has a factually similar potential claim against Employer. May Counsel for Employer propose such a settlement provision and, if so, may Attorney participate in a settlement agreement that includes such a provision?

Opinion #1:

No. Rule 5.6(b) of the Rules of Professional Conduct provides that "[a] lawyer shall not participate in offering or making. . . an agreement in which a restriction on the lawyer's right to practice is part of the settlement of a controversy between private parties." An agreement not to represent other claimants against the opposing party denies members of the public access to the very lawyer who may be best suited, by experience and background, to represent them. RPC 179 ("Although public policy favors settlement, the policy that favors full access to legal assistance should prevail.") In addition, such agreements result in a personal conflict for the lawyer who is asked to give up future representations in the interest of a current client. ABA Formal Opinion 00-417, 1101: 204 (2000). Restrictive provisions of this nature also raise public policy concerns that the ultimate settlement figure will bear less of a relationship to the merits of the case than to the amount necessary to "buy off" defendant's counsel. Id.

Inquiry #2:

Counsel for Employer withdraws the request for a term in the settlement agreement that would prohibit Attorney from representing other employees. Instead, he requests that the agreement include the following provision:

> Confidentiality: The parties stipulate, acknowledge, and agree that the Agreement and its terms shall remain confidential to the maximum extent allowable under North Carolina law and that such confidentiality is of the essence of the Agreement and its underlying terms. The parties agree not to disclose to anyone the terms of the Agreement, save and except to their tax return preparers, accountants, auditors, lenders, attorneys, courts, or to governmental agencies where such disclosure is required by law or administrative regulation, only as necessary, and to that extent the parties agree to use their best efforts to assure that such disclosure of the terms of the Agreement is not further disclosed.

May Counsel for Employer propose such a settlement provision and, if so, may Attorney participate in a settlement agreement that includes such a provision?

Opinion #2:

Yes. The confidentiality provision above does not specifically prohibit Attorney's use of confidential information learned during the representation or representation of other claimants with similar claims against Employer. Instead, it restricts only the disclosure of certain information gained in the representation. The provision is not proscribed by Rule 5.6(b) which is silent on participation in a settlement agreement that prohibits a lawyer from revealing information about the matter or the terms of the settlement. In fact, such a provision is consistent with the lawyer's continuing duty to not reveal the confidential information of a client or a former client without the informed consent of the client or the former client. Rule 1.6 and Rule 1.9(c). Accord, ABA Formal Opinion 00-417.

Inquiry #3:

A settlement agreement containing the confidentiality provision set forth in Inquiry #2 is entered into by Plaintiff and Employer, and Plaintiff's representation by Attorney is concluded. May Attorney subsequently agree to represent the other employees on their similar claims against Employer?

Opinion #3:

Yes, provided it can be done without revealing Plaintiff's confidential information, including the terms of the settlement agreement, and without exposing Plaintiff to liability under the agreement.

Attorney may be able to represent other employees without revealing Plaintiff's confidential information to them or to any third party. However, it will be difficult for Attorney to represent other employees without using Plaintiff's confidential information to advance their claims—for example, to obtain certain records from Employer, to subpoena witnesses, or in settlement negotiations.

Rule 1.9(c) prohibits a lawyer who has formerly represented a client in a matter from using information relating to the representation to the disadvantage of the former client except as permitted by the Rules or when the information has become generally known. Thus, Attorney may not use the confidential information of Plaintiff to advance the interests of new clients if doing so will harm the interests of Plaintiff. Attorney's use of Plaintiff's confidential information to represent the other employees, even without overt disclosure of the information, would violate Rule 1.9(c) if it exposed Plaintiff to liability under the confidentiality provision of the settlement agreement. In this event, Attorney would be prohibited from representing other employees because Attorney's failure to use Plaintiff's confidential information would materially limit his representation of the other employees. Rule 1.7(a)(2). But see, ABA Formal Opinion 00-417.

As to whether representation of the other employees may expose Plaintiff to liability under the agreement, it is beyond the purview of the Ethics Committee to interpret contractual language in a settlement agreement.

2003 Formal Ethics Opinion 10

January 16, 2004

Fee Sharing with Nonlawyer/Claimant's Representative in Social Security Case

Opinion rules that a Social Security lawyer may agree to compensate a nonlawyer/ claimant's representative for the prior representation of a claimant.

Inquiry:

The Social Security Act permits nonlawyers to represent claimants in matters before the Social Security Administration (SSA) including representing claimants at administrative hearings before an administrative law judge (ALJ). However, only a lawyer may represent a client who is appealing an unfavorable decision of the SSA to federal district court. The nonlawyer representatives, as well as the lawyers who represent claimants before the SSA, do so almost exclusively on a contingent-fee basis.

A claimant's representative (whether a lawyer or nonlawyer) does not have to file a fee petition with the SSA if, at the time the representation commences, the representative submits a copy of his or her fee agreement with the claimant to the SSA. In most situations, if the fee agreement complies with the law capping the fee for representation of a claimant, the fee is automatically approved. If the claim is denied at the administrative level and an appeal to district court must be filed, a lawyer representative may pursue the legal fees available under the Equal Access to Justice Act in addition to the contingent fee payable under the fee agreement with the claimant.

Inevitably, some nonlawyer representatives die or decide to stop representing claimants. On occasion, a nonlawyer representative turns over a case to a lawyer to pursue an appeal to federal district court. Given the prohibition on sharing legal fees with nonlawyers set forth in Rule 5.4(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, may a lawyer negotiate an agreement with a nonlawyer representative of Social Security claimants by which the lawyer takes over the representation of a claimant from the nonlawyer and agrees to compensate the nonlawyer representative for his or her work on the case in the event the case is favorably resolved for the claimant?

Opinion:

Rule 5.4(a) prohibits a lawyer from sharing legal fees with a nonlawyer except in limited circumstances which are inapplicable here. The purpose of the prohibition, as noted in comment [1] to the rule, is to protect the lawyer's professional independence of judgment from interference from a nonlawyer. The prohibition also prevents solicitation of cases by lawyers and discourages nonlawyers from engaging in the unauthorized practice of law. (The latter reason for the prohibition is not implicated here because the Social Security Administration authorizes nonlawyer representation before a claim is appealed to federal court.)

When a lawyer represents a client on a Social Security claim, it is presumed that the lawyer utilizes his or her legal knowledge, skill, and professional judgment for the benefit of the client. Indeed, some Social Security claimants may seek out a lawyer to represent them precisely because these attributes are not held by nonlawyer representatives.

Rule 5.4(a) should not be applied in a way that may make it difficult or impossible for a claimant to switch to a lawyer representative. Nor should the rule be applied in a way that ignores the prior work the nonlawyer representative did on the case or the fact that the nonlawyer representative may be compensated, by law, on a contingent fee basis. Therefore, a lawyer representative may negotiate an agreement with a nonlawyer representative to transfer a claimant's case and to compensate the nonlawyer although the compensation will be paid from the legal fee ultimately paid on behalf of the client from the Social Security benefits awarded. The amount of the compensation paid to the nonlawyer representative must be reasonable and must be related to the work actually performed by the nonlawyer on behalf of the claimant. To guard against the potential dangers of fee sharing with a nonlawyer, there must be full disclosure to the presiding ALJ or federal judge. This can be accomplished by submitting a fee agreement with the claimant that recites the lawyer's arrangement for compensation with the prior representative even if such compensation is a percentage of the fee ultimately approved by the court.

2003 Formal Ethics Opinion 11

April 23, 2004

Duty of Departed Lawyer When Dividing Fee with Former Firm

Opinion rules that a lawyer must deal honestly with the members of her former firm when dividing a legal fee.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney X worked for ABC Law Firm when she began the representation of Client in a workers' compensation claim. Prior to the resolution of the workers' compensation claim, Attorney X left the firm to join another firm. Client chose to continue to be represented by Attorney X. The Industrial Commission entered an order releasing ABC Law Firm from further representation and acknowledged ABC's entitlement to a portion of any legal fee ultimately awarded in the case by the Industrial Commission.

Client's workers' compensation case settled. An order was entered by the Industrial Commission approving the settlement and the total attorney's fee to be paid from the settlement. The settlement proceeds have not been delivered to Attorney X for disbursement. Separate checks for the client's settlement proceeds and the approved legal fee will be sent to Attorney X. Is Attorney X required to notify ABC Law Firm that the Industrial Commission has awarded a legal fee in the case and to notify the firm of the amount of the fee?

Opinion #1:

Yes, the Rules of Professional Conduct require lawyers to deal honestly with each other and to comply with the law and court orders. Rule 8.4(c) and (d).

Inquiry #2:

When the check for the legal fee is received by Attorney X, where should it be deposited?

Opinion #2:

Rule 1.15-2(g) requires mixed funds to be deposited in a lawyer's trust account intact: "When funds belonging to the lawyer are received in combination with funds belonging to the client or other persons, all of the funds shall be deposited intact."

Inquiry #3:

Should Client's consent be obtained prior to disbursing any of the legal fees from the money deposited into Attorney X's trust account?

Opinion #3:

No, if the Industrial Commission has already approved the total amount of the legal fee and Client has no liability to ABC Law Firm for the fee, the dispute is between ABC and Attorney X and Client's consent is irrelevant

Inquiry #4:

Is Attorney X required to advise Client of Client's obligations relative to ABC Law Firm or any other party with a claim against the settlement funds?

Opinion #4:

Yes. Rule 1.4(b) requires a lawyer to explain a matter to a client to the extent reasonably necessary to make informed decisions about the representation. If Client is liable to ABC for litigation expenses or to a provider for medical expenses, Attorney X should advise Client of this and may withhold the funds to pay medical liens as provided in 2001 Formal Ethics Opinion 11.

Inquiry #5:

May Attorney X determine the amount of her share of the legal fee and disburse that amount to herself without the specific consent of ABC Law Firm

Opinion #5:

Yes, if Attorney X, acting in good faith, determines that her entitlement to a specified portion of the legal fee is undisputed, she may withdraw this amount from the trust account and pay it to herself. She should also disburse any undisputed portion of the remaining fee to ABC Law Firm. The disputed portion of the legal fee must remain on deposit in the trust account until the dispute with ABC Law Firm is resolved by agreement or litigation. In determining the amount of her fee, Attorney X must be guided by her duty of honesty to the members of ABC Law Firm. See Opinion #1 above.

2003 Formal Ethics Opinion 12

October 22, 2004

Advising Insured and Insurance Company on Settlement Value of Case

Opinion rules that an insurance defense lawyer may give the insured and the insurance carrier an evaluation of a pending case, including settlement prospects, but may not recommend that the carrier decline to settle and go to trial if this recommendation is contrary to the wishes of the insured.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney is retained by Insurance Company to represent Physician in medical malpractice lawsuit involving significant injuries to the plaintiff. Physician has a professional liability policy with a limit of $1,000,000 per claim. Plaintiff is seeking $5,000,000 in damages. After discovery, Attorney is of the opinion that Physician has a 60% chance of prevailing on the merits. However, if Physician loses the case, Attorney believes that the jury verdict will be between $1,250,000.00 and $1,500,000.00, resulting in personal exposure for the Physician. Physician has advised Attorney that she wants to avoid personal exposure and has made a demand on the insurance company that the case be settled for an amount at or less than the policy limit.

Insurance Company requests Attorney's advice on (1) his evaluation of the likelihood of an adverse verdict on liability; (2) his evaluation of the likely verdict range if the jury returns a liability verdict against Physician; and (3) the amount it should pay in settlement. Attorney believes that the case could be settled for an amount between $500,000 and $750,000. If Attorney recommends settlement in this range, he recognizes that the Insurance Company may refuse to offer up to the policy limit to settle the claim, as demanded by Physician.

May Attorney provide Insurance Company with a letter stating his evaluation of the likelihood of a verdict adverse to Physician on liability, the likely amount of the verdict if the jury reaches the damages issue, and the amount he believes the plaintiff's counsel would accept to settle the case?

Opinion #1:

Yes.

Prior ethics opinions have firmly established that a lawyer defending an insured at the request of an insurer represents both clients. Rule 1.7, cmt. [29] to [33]; see also RPC 56, 92, 118. The lawyer's primary duty of loyalty, however, is to the insured. RPC 56, 92, 118.

Because both the Physician and Insurance Company are Attorney's clients, they are each entitled to Attorney's full, candid evaluation of all aspects of the claim, including but not limited to (1) the probability of an adverse liability verdict, (2) the range of potential verdicts, and (3) probable settlement amounts. See Rule 1.4(b), Rule 1.7, cmt. [31], and RPC 91. Prior opinions established that "the attorney should keep the insured informed of his or her evaluation of the case as well as the assessment of the insurance company." RPC 92. RPC 92 envisioned that this work product would be shared with the insurance company so that both clients are fully informed of their lawyer's opinion on this central issue of the representation. Id.

Inquiry # 2:

If the plaintiff does not accept a settlement within the estimated range, may Attorney recommend to Insurance Company that it decline to settle the case?

Opinion # 2:

No.

Because of the potential conflict between Insurance Company, which might prefer to press for a lower settlement, and Physician, who has clearly expressed her desire to avoid personal exposure and for a settlement up to Insurance Company's policy limits, Attorney cannot recommend an upper limit as the amount Insurance Company should offer short of proceeding to trial. In this situation, Attorney should advise Insurance Company of Physician's wishes regarding settlement. RPC 91. Then, after advising both clients of Attorney's evaluation of liability, damages, and likely settlement prospects, Attorney should advise Physician and Insurance Company to consider employing separate counsel to represent them on issues concerning whether the case should be settled within Insurance Company's policy limits. See RPC 91, RPC 92, RPC 111. This opinion is not intended to preclude Attorney from suggesting settlement strategies or negotiating a settlement that benefits both clients.

2003 Formal Ethics Opinion 13

January 16, 2004

Filing Suit After the Statute of Limitations Has Run

Opinion rules that an attorney may file a time-barred claim on behalf of a client, even when the defendant is unavailable and can only be served by publication.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney consults with a Client who has a valid tort claim for money damages against Defendant. Upon further review of the facts, Attorney discovers the statute of limitations has run on the claim. Client insists that Attorney bring an action against Defendant.

Is it ethical to file a lawsuit, knowing that the statute of limitations has run on the claim?

Opinion #1:

The question is whether filing a time-barred claim is "frivolous" under Rule 3.1 of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Rule 3.1 provides as follows:

> A lawyer shall not bring or defend a proceeding, or assert or controvert an issue therein, unless there is a basis in law and fact for doing so that is not frivolous, which includes a good faith argument for an extension, modification, or reversal of existing law.

Filing suit after the limitations period has expired does not affect the validity of the claim, nor does it divest a court from having jurisdiction to hear the matters raised therein. ABA Formal Opinion 94-387, 1001:235, 237 (1994). Instead, the statute of limitations is merely an affirmative defense to an otherwise enforceable claim. Id. The defendant must plead the statute of limitations in his answer or it is waived. Northampton County Drainage Dist. No. 1 v. Bailey, 92 N.C. App. 68, 373 S.E.2d 560 (1988), rev'd in part and aff'd in part, 326 N.C. 742, 392 S.E.2d 352 (1990). In addition, the expiration of the limitations period does not prevent a plaintiff from continuing to negotiate settlement with an opposing party who is unaware of the limitations period. ABA Formal Opinion 94-387 at 236-237. Because a time-barred claim can be enforced by a court if the defense raises no objection, filing suit under these circumstances would not violate the prohibition against an attorney advancing a frivolous claim under Rule 3.1.

Inquiry #2:

Assume the same facts as in Inquiry #1, except that Defendant has disappeared and all reasonable efforts to locate him or to effect personal service upon him have failed.

May Attorney file suit against a missing defendant, with the intent to serve the lawsuit by publication, knowing the statute of limitations has run on the claim?

Opinion #2:

There is no basis for reaching a different conclusion when the defendant is unavailable. Service by publication is another means by which a party is given notice of a legal action against him, but such service can only be used when all other efforts to serve the party have failed. Rule 4(j1), Rules of Civil Procedure. If the facts warrant service by publication, and if service is in accordance with statutory law, then service in this fashion will be sufficient to confer jurisdiction over the matter upon the courts. In the Matter of Phillips, 18 N.C. App. 65, 196 S.E.2d 59 (1973). A client with a valid claim should not be penalized because a defendant successfully evades personal service during the period of the statute of limitations. If service by publication is procedurally appropriate under the circumstances, an attorney may file suit against a missing defendant, even when the claim is time-barred.

2003 Formal Ethics Opinion 14

October 22, 2004

Conflicts Involving Successive Government and Private Employment

Opinion rules that if a current representation requires cross-examination of a former client using confidential information gained in the prior representation, then a lawyer has a disqualifying conflict of interest.

Inquiry #1:

Assistant District Attorney (ADA) was formerly in private practice, concentrating in criminal defense matters. ADA's current duties include prosecuting habitual felons. To be charged as a habitual felon, a defendant must have three prior felonies for which the dates of conviction and the dates of occurrence do not overlap.

A habitual felon trial involves two phases:

1. The underlying felony trial in which the jury is not informed of the second trial for determination of habitual felon status, and

2. The habitual felon trial at which the same jury hears the habitual felon charge if the defendant was convicted of the underlying felony.

During the second phase of the habitual felon trial, the prosecutor usually introduces certified copies of the defendant's three prior felony convictions, as well as live testimony identifying the defendant as the person named in the previously certified judgments. At the same time, the defendant's lawyer will raise arguments for disallowing evidence of the prior convictions or attacking the sufficiency of the habitual felon charge.

ADA is assigned to prosecute the defendant as a habitual felon. ADA previously represented the defendant on one of the prior felonies that will be used to support habitual felon status. If the defendant is convicted in phase one, then ADA must introduce evidence regarding the prior convictions in the subsequent phase. Prosecution of either phase of the habitual felon trial may require ADA to cross-examine the defendant, his former client.

May ADA prosecute the underlying felony phase and/or the habitual felon phase of the criminal action against defendant?

Opinion #1:

ADA may not prosecute either the underlying felony phase or the habitual felon phase against defendant if he must cross-examine his former client using confidential information gained in the prior professional relationship. In prosecuting either phase of the trial, it is possible that ADA will need to cross-examine his former client. Conflicts involving cross-examination of former clients arise most frequently in two situations: 1) a lawyer misuses confidential information previously obtained in the professional relationship, or 2) a lawyer fails to cross-examine the witness effectively for fear of misusing confidential information. If ADA needs to use confidential information to effectively cross-examine his former client about the prior conviction, then ADA may not prosecute the case.

One exception, under Rule 1.9(c) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, permits a lawyer to reveal confidential information of a former client "when the information has become generally known." A criminal conviction may be considered generally known if, in addition to public record information, the fact of the conviction is known to all relevant parties. See Rule 1.9, cmt. [8]. Thus, if ADA need only to present a certified copy of the prior conviction as evidence in phase two and cross-examination of the defendant is unnecessary, then this exception will apply and ADA may continue the representation. If, on the other hand, ADA must cross-examine his former client about the conviction using confidential information, then ADA is disqualified. As stated in 98 Ethics Decision 9 (unpublished), it is rare that cross-examination about a prior criminal record can be limited to the fact of the convictions alone.

> Given the high probability that the lawyer will delve into facts relative to the conviction that are not public record and are, therefore, subject to the confidentiality rule or, in foregoing such questions, fail adequately to represent the lawyer's current client, it must be concluded that the lawyer is prohibited from representing the current client due to a conflict of interest.

98 Ethics Decision 9.

If ADA concludes that effective representation of the State requires inquiry into one or more prior convictions for which he provided representation to the defendant, then ADA should not undertake prosecution of this matter. Instead, another member of the district attorney's staff should be assigned to prosecute the case and ADA should be screened from participation in the matter. See Rule 1.11, cmt. [2].

Inquiry #2:

Attorney was formerly a prosecutor but left the district attorney's office to enter private practice as a criminal defense attorney. Attorney has been retained to represent Client on felony charges. Client has also been indicted as a habitual felon. Attorney discovers that he was the prosecutor for one of the felony convictions being used to establish that Client is a habitual felon. In a habitual felon case, the defense attorney must scrutinize the charges, ascertain if there are irregularities in the prior convictions, and attack the propriety of using the convictions that form the basis of the habitual felon charge if there is a legal or factual basis for doing so. In this case, however, Attorney does not believe there is any basis for disallowing the convictions.

May Attorney represent Client in any phase of the habitual felon case?

Opinion #2:

No. Although Attorney does not believe there is a basis for disallowing the convictions, his judgment may be impaired because his evaluation of the prior conviction is not impartial. It is not possible for a lawyer to scrutinize his own work while exercising independent professional judgment on behalf of a criminal defendant. Rule 1.7(a)(2). Therefore, Attorney has a conflict of interest and is disqualified from representing Client during the second phase of the habitual felon trial. Because the same jury is empaneled for both phases of the trial, the better practice would be to withdraw from the entire matter.

Notwithstanding Attorney's disqualification, Rule 1.11(b) permits another lawyer in Attorney's firm to continue representation of Client if Attorney is screened in a timely fashion and appropriate written notice is given to the district attorney's office. See also Rule 1.0(l).

2003 Formal Ethics Opinion 15

January 16, 2004

Providing an Accounting of Disbursements to Medical Lienholders in Personal Injury Cases

Opinion rules that an attorney may provide an accounting of disbursements of sums recovered for a personal injury claimant as required by N.C.G.S. § 44-50.1.

Inquiry:

Attorney A represents Client in a personal injury matter. Several medical providers treated Client and now have valid medical liens against any funds awarded. N.C.G.S. § 44-50.1 provides that medical lienholders may request an accounting of disbursements made on behalf of a lawyer's client when certain conditions are met. May Attorney A provide an accounting of the disbursements from Client's settlement proceeds to the medical providers?

Opinion:

N.C.G.S. § 44-50.1 imposes a duty, in limited situations, to account for the manner in which settlement proceeds are disbursed. Attorney A does not violate the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct by complying with the mandates of the statute. Rule 1.6(b)(1).

2003 Formal Ethics Opinion 16

July 16, 2004

Representation of Absent Respondent in Dependency Proceeding

Opinion rules that a lawyer who is appointed to represent a parent in a proceeding to determine whether the parent's child is abused, neglected, or dependent, must seek to withdraw if the client disappears without communicating her objectives for the representation, and, if the motion is denied, must refrain from advocating for a particular outcome.

Inquiry:

At an initial non-secure custody proceeding, Attorney is appointed by the court to represent Mother who is a respondent in a proceeding brought by the local department of social services to determine whether Mother's minor son is an abused, neglected, or dependent juvenile. Another lawyer is appointed to represent Father. Although Mother is present at the time of the appointment, she and Father subsequently disappear. At the time of the appointment, Attorney had minimal conversation with Mother and he does not know what position she would take in the proceedings.

"Dependent juvenile" is defined in the Juvenile Code, G.S. 7B-101(9), as "[a] juvenile in need of assistance or placement because the juvenile has no parent, guardian, or custodian responsible for the juvenile's care or supervision or whose parent, guardian, or custodian is unable to provide for the care or supervision and lacks an appropriate alternative child care arrangement."

Attorney knows that the parents are missing and, therefore, there is no parent responsible for the son's care. May Attorney advocate for an adjudication of dependency in the proceeding?

Opinion:

No. As stated in Rule 1.2(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, "…a lawyer shall abide by a client's decisions concerning the objectives of representation…." Comment [1] adds that the rule "confers upon the client the ultimate authority to determine the purposes to be served by legal representation, within the limits imposed by law and the lawyer's professional obligations." If the client is not present to give instructions to the lawyer as to the objectives of the representation, the lawyer may not substitute his own objectives even if the facts appear to support a particular position.

A lawyer is required to make a motion to withdraw when the client has disappeared and the lawyer is ignorant of the client's objectives for the litigation. RPC 223. Such a motion is appropriate only after the lawyer has used reasonable diligence to locate the client but is unsuccessful. Id.

If Attorney's motion to withdraw is denied, Attorney may participate in the proceedings to the limited extent that such participation is consistent with the known objectives of the missing client and the court's order of appointment. However, Attorney may not advocate for any particular position or outcome in the proceeding and Attorney does not have a duty to file an appeal.

2003 Formal Ethics Opinion 17

January 16, 2004

Post-Hearing Submission of Ex Parte Written Communications to a Judge

Opinion rules that an attorney may only provide a judge with additional authority post-hearing if the communication is permitted by the rules of the tribunal and a copy of the writing is furnished simultaneously to opposing counsel.

Inquiry:

Attorney A and Attorney B argue a motion before a judge. Following the motion hearing, the judge delays ruling on the motion until a later date or takes the arguments under advisement. While awaiting the judge's decision, Attorney A finds additional authority to support his position. Attorney A believes the newly discovered authority is directly on point and may be decisive on the issue argued. Attorney A would like to provide the judge with the case law and accompanying argument in support of his client's position.

Under these circumstances, may Attorney A, subsequent to a hearing, engage in written ex parte communications with a judge by providing additional authority and argument in support of his position?

Opinion:

Attorney A may only provide the judge with additional authority and argument in writing if the rules of the tribunal permit the communication and a copy of the writing is furnished simultaneously to Attorney B, opposing counsel. Rule 3.5(a)(3)(B) permits a written ex parte communication with a judge so long as the "writing is furnished simultaneously to the opposing party[.]" While this rule appears to permit unlimited written communications with a judge provided a copy is furnished to opposing counsel, 98 FEO 13 qualifies the type of communications that may be submitted:

> To avoid the appearance of improper influence upon a tribunal, informal written communication with a judge or other judicial official should be limited to the following:
>
> 1) Written communications, such as a proposed order or legal memorandum, prepared pursuant to the court's instruction;
>
> 2) Written communications relative to emergencies, changed circumstances, or scheduling matters that may affect the procedural status of a case such as a request for a continuance due to the health of a litigant or an attorney;
>
> 3) Written communications sent to the tribunal with the consent of the opposing lawyer or opposing party if unrepresented; and
>
> 4) Any other communication permitted by law or the rules or written procedures of the particular tribunal.

By limiting the kinds of written communications that may be submitted ex parte, 98 FEO 13 strives to preserve the integrity of the legal system, to avoid the appearance of improper influence on a tribunal, and to prevent one party from gaining unfair advantage by using ex parte communications to introduce new evidence, to argue the merits, or to cast opposing counsel in a bad light. At the same time, a court cannot reach a just and informed result unless it is apprised of material and relevant facts as well as authoritative case law. A wholesale restriction on submission of additional, potentially decisive authority would frustrate a court's ability to make informed decisions.

A resolution of this issue requires a balancing of equally compelling interests. 98 FEO 13 permits a written ex parte communication if "permitted by law or the rules or written procedures of the particular tribunal." Thus, if the local rules would permit the submission of additional authority subsequent to arguments in open court, then it is not unethical to do so. A copy of the writing must be furnished to opposing counsel simultaneously, however. Allowing the written submission of additional authority and supporting arguments promotes the interest in informed decision-making of the tribunal. Requiring the writing to be copied to opposing counsel gives opposing counsel the opportunity to respond in kind and reduces the likelihood that the ex parte communication will result in unfair advantage to one party.

Notwithstanding the above, the attorney making the ex parte submission to the judge post-hearing should include only that authority which he in good faith believes is decisive, on point, and not otherwise cumulative in nature.

2004 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

April 23, 2004

Participation in On-Line Legal Matching Service

Opinion rules that a lawyer may participate in an on-line service that is similar to both a lawyer referral service and a legal directory provided there is no fee sharing with the service and all communications about the lawyer and the service are truthful.

Inquiry #1:

A commercial Internet company (the company) operates a website that matches prospective clients with lawyers. A prospective client logs onto the website where he registers and is given an identification number to preserve anonymity. The prospective client posts an explanation of his legal problem on the website and consents to contact from participating lawyers. There is no charge to the prospective client for the standard service but, for more individualized and faster service, there is a fee.

The company solicits lawyers to participate in its service. To participate, a lawyer must be licensed and in good standing with the regulatory agency of his state of licensure. A participating lawyer is charged a one-time registration fee that covers expenses for verifying credentials, technical system programming, and other set-up expenses. An annual fee is charged to each participating lawyer for ongoing administrative, system, and advertising expenses. The amount of the annual fee varies by lawyer based on a number of components, including the lawyer's current rates, areas of practice, geographic location, and number of years in practice.

Only participating lawyers can access the information posted by a prospective client on the website. A local participating lawyer who is interested in a posted case may list his qualifications and send the prospective client an offer message setting forth an explanation of the services he can provide and his qualifications. The prospective client can review offer messages from lawyers and learn more about these lawyers by reviewing the company's on-line lawyer profiles and consumer rating information. If a lawyer has a website, the prospective client may also visit it. Using this information, the prospective client selects a lawyer and contacts the lawyer at which time the prospective client reveals his identity.

If a client-lawyer relationship is formed between a participating lawyer and a user of the service, it is done without the participation of the company. The company does not get involved in the lawyer-client relationship or in related financial matters such as fees, retainers, invoicing, or payment.

May a lawyer participate in this service?

Opinion #1:

Yes, provided there is no fee sharing with the company in violation of Rule 5.4(a), and further provided the participating lawyer is responsible for the veracity of any representation made by the company about the lawyer or the lawyer's services or the process whereby lawyers' names are provided to a user.

This on-line service has aspects of both a lawyer referral service and a legal directory. On the one hand, the on-line service is like a lawyer referral service because the company purports to screen lawyers before allowing them to participate and to match a prospective client with suitable lawyers. On the other hand, it is like a legal directory because it provides a prospective client with the names of lawyers who are interested in handling his matter together with information about the lawyers' qualifications. The prospective client may do further research on the lawyers who send him offer messages. Using this information, the prospective client decides which lawyer to contact about representation.

A lawyer may participate in an on-line legal directory provided the information about the lawyer in the directory is truthful. RPC 241. A lawyer may also participate in a lawyer referral service subject to the following conditions set forth in Rule 7.2(d):

> (1) the lawyer is professionally responsible for its operation including the use of a false, deceptive, or misleading name by the referral service;
>
> (2) the referral service is not operated for a profit;
>
> (3) the lawyer may pay to the lawyer referral service only a reasonable sum which represents a proportionate share of the referral service's administrative and advertising costs;
>
> (4) the lawyer does not directly or indirectly receive anything of value other than legal fees earned from representation of clients referred by the service;

(5) employees of the referral service do not initiate contact with prospective clients and do not engage in live telephone or in-person solicitation of clients;

(6) the referral service does not collect any sums from clients or potential clients for use of the service; and

(7) all advertisements by the lawyer referral service shall: (A) state that a list of all participating lawyers will be mailed free of charge to members of the public upon request and state where such information may be obtained; and (B) explain the method by which the needs of the prospective client are matched with the qualifications of the on-line recommended lawyer.

It appears that the on-line service satisfies all of the conditions of Rule 7.2 except that it is operated for a profit, potential clients are charged a fee if they chose the priority service, and the website does not include a statement on how the names of all participating lawyers may be obtained.

Nevertheless, the company's on-line service is not strictly a referral service and failure to meet all of conditions set forth in Rule 7.2(d) should not prohibit a lawyer from participating. Unlike the passive recipient of a referral from a lawyer referral service, a user of the company's website must evaluate the information and offers he receives from potentially suitable lawyers and decide for himself which lawyer to contact. Thus, the potential harm to the consumer of a pure lawyer referral service is avoided because the company does not decide which lawyer is right for the client.

A lawyer's participation in on-line service is subject to the other requirements of the Rules. Notably, the prohibition on fee sharing with a nonlawyer must be observed. Although a participating lawyer may pay a proportionate share of the reasonable costs of operating the service, the lawyer may not pay the company any portion or percentage of legal fees earned from clients obtained through the service. Rule 5.4(a).

In addition, a participating lawyer is responsible for the truthful content of any information the company provides, via the Internet or otherwise, to prospective clients about the lawyer or the lawyer's services. Rule 7.1; see also Rule 7.2, cmt. [7]. The lawyer is also responsible for the veracity of any representations made by the company on the website or elsewhere about the screening and qualifications of the lawyers who participate in the service and the matching process and may not participate if such representations are untruthful or misleading.

Inquiry #2:

The company provides a satisfaction guarantee. If a dispute arises between the client and a lawyer engaged through the on-line service, a customer services representative from the company will try to resolve the problem. If this fails, the client and the lawyer will be directed to voluntary arbitration. If an arbitration judgment is awarded to the client, the company will pay up to $1000 ($5000 for priority service cases) to the client if the lawyer fails to pay.

Rule 1.5(f) requires a lawyer who has a fee dispute with a client to participate in the State Bar's program of fee dispute resolution. How does the guarantee relate to this requirement?

Opinion #2:

The guarantee may not interfere with a lawyer's compliance with the requirements of Rule 1.5(f) to notify a client of the State Bar's fee dispute resolution program and, if the client so requests, to participate in good faith. If the company's guarantee provides a duplicative dispute resolution procedure, it is only beneficial for clients.

2004 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

April 23, 2004

Offer of Promotional Merchandise in a Targeted Direct Mail Solicitation Letter

Opinion rules that an attorney may not offer promotional merchandise in a targeted direct mail solicitation letter as an inducement to call the attorney's office.

Inquiry:

Attorney sends out targeted direct mail letters to accident victims. He would like to include in his letter an offer to send the recipient free promotional merchandise, such as a calculator, key chain, pen, coffee mug or similar object, if they call his office in response to the direct mailing. The promotional item would contain the firm's name and address and would be sent to the caller irrespective of whether the caller is accepted as a client.

May Attorney include an offer for promotional merchandise to callers in his targeted direct mail advertisements?

Opinion:

No. As a general proposition, it is not a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct to include the name of a lawyer or law firm and contact information on merchandise such as t-shirts, mugs, pens, magnets, golf balls, etc. These objects do not solicit legal business themselves, but instead are just another type of media through which attorneys may advertise, like the yellow pages or a billboard. Rule 7.2(a).

A promise of promotional merchandise as an inducement to call the lawyer or law firm, however, is an improper solicitation. The recipient of the letter may call the lawyer for the purpose of receiving the promotional item, having no intent to initiate a lawyer- client relationship. But because the recipient initiated the call to the lawyer, the lawyer may then solicit that person directly over the telephone. Rule 7.3(a) prohibits lawyer-initiated live telephone solicitation of a prospective client because of the potential for abuse inherent in live telephone contact by a lawyer with a person known to be in need of legal services.

> The prospective client, who may already feel overwhelmed by the circumstances giving rise to the need for legal services, may find it difficult fully to evaluate all available alternatives with reasoned judgment and appropriate self-interest in the face of the lawyer's presence and insistence upon being retained immediately. The situation is fraught with the possibility of undue influence, intimidation, and overreaching.

Rule 7.3, cmt. [1]. Therefore, Attorney may not promise to send promotional merchandise to callers in a targeted direct mail solicitation letter. Nevertheless, an attorney may include promotional merchandise of minimal value (i.e., magnets and pens) in targeted direct mail letters.

2004 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

April 23, 2004

Common Representation of Lender and Trustee on a Deed of Trust

Opinion rules that a lawyer may represent both the lender and the trustee on a deed of trust in a dispute with the borrower if the conditions on common representation can be satisfied.

Inquiry:

Mr. Doe is the trustee on a deed of trust securing a loan from Lender to Borrower. Lender notified Mr. Doe that Borrower was in default and asked Mr. Doe to initiate a foreclosure proceeding. Soon after the foreclosure was commenced, Borrower filed a lawsuit naming Lender as the defendant and alleging unfair debt collection practices. Mr. Doe is also named as a party to the proceeding in order to enjoin the foreclosure proceeding. Lender asks Attorney A to represent it in the lawsuit and would like Attorney A to also represent Mr. Doe. Mr. Doe wants to be represented by Attorney A.

May Attorney A represent both Lender and Mr. Doe in his capacity as trustee on the deed of trust?

Opinion:

A lawyer may not engage in common representation of multiple clients if the common representation involves a concurrent conflict of interest. Rule 1.7(a). A concurrent conflict of interest exists whenever the representation of one client will be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client. Rule 1.7(a)(2). However, a lawyer may proceed with the representation, despite the concurrent conflict, if the lawyer reasonably believes that the lawyer will be able to provide competent and diligent representation to each affected client and the representation is not prohibited by law, does not involve the assertion of a claim by one client against another in the same proceeding, and each affected client gives informed consent. Rule 1.7(b).

Comment [29] to Rule 1.7 provides additional guidance on when common representation is appropriate. It observes, "because the lawyer is required to be impartial between commonly represented clients, representation of multiple clients is improper when it is unlikely that impartiality can be maintained."

Attorney A may proceed with the common representation of Lender and

Mr. Doe if she concludes that she can maintain her impartiality as between the clients and the other conditions of Rule 1.7(b) are satisfied. In making this determination, she must remember that the trustee's role in a foreclosure is a neutral role. If Attorney A cannot represent both clients in a manner that will preserve Mr. Doe's neutrality (as trustee), then she cannot satisfy the condition requiring her to provide both clients with competent and diligent representation.

The situation described in this inquiry must be distinguished from the limitations placed upon a lawyer who is actually serving as the trustee on a deed of trust. There are a number of ethics opinions that hold that a lawyer who serves as a trustee must be neutral as between the interests of the lender and the interests of the borrower and may not, therefore, represent either party individually while initiating a foreclosure proceeding. See RPC 46, RPC 82, and RPC 90. Since Attorney A is providing legal representation to the trustee but is not herself serving in that neutral role, common representation with the lender is not prohibited if the conditions of Rule 1.7(b) can be satisfied.

2004 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

July 16, 2004

Communication with Represented Opposing Party Via a Witness Deposition in Unrelated Litigation

Opinion rules that a lawyer may ask questions of a deponent that were recommended by another lawyer, although the deponent is the defendant in the other lawyer's case, provided notice of the deposition is given to the deponent's lawyer.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A represents Roe, a plaintiff in a medical malpractice lawsuit against Dr. Jones (Lawsuit #1). Dr. Jones is represented by Attorney X. Attorney B represents Doe, a plaintiff in an entirely different medical malpractice lawsuit against Dr. Smith (Lawsuit #2). Dr. Smith is represented by Attorney Y. The two cases are unrelated and involve different plaintiffs, hospitals, defendants, and venues. Attorney A and Attorney B are also in different law firms. The medical treatment/procedure that is the basis for the malpractice claims is the same in both lawsuits.

At the request of Attorney Y, Dr. Jones agrees to act as an expert witness for the defense in Lawsuit #2. Attorney B schedules Dr. Jones' deposition. Prior to the deposition, Attorney A hears that the defendant in his lawsuit will be testifying as an expert witness in Lawsuit #2. Attorney A asks Attorney B to include a series of questions in the deposition of Dr. Jones. The questions do not relate to the specific facts in either case but rather ask the doctor to explain or opine about the medical treatment/procedure that is at issue. The answers to the questions will be relevant to both lawsuits. Attorney A does however hope that the questions will solicit answers from Dr. Jones that will be helpful to the plaintiff's case against Dr. Jones. Attorney A does not notify Attorney X that he has submitted questions for Dr. Jones to Attorney B.

Is Attorney A violating the prohibition in Rule 4.2 on communications with a represented party?

Opinion #1:

No. Rule 4.2(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits a lawyer, during the representation of a client, from communicating about the subject of the representation with a person the lawyer knows to be represented by another lawyer in the matter unless the other lawyer consents or the communication is authorized by law. A lawyer may not circumvent the prohibition in the rule by asking another person to engage in the prohibited communications for him. Nevertheless, lawyers are encouraged to consult with other lawyers who practice in the same field or who handle similar cases in order that they might learn from each other and thereby improve the representation of their clients. See, e.g., Rule 1.1 ("A lawyer shall not handle a legal matter that the lawyer knows of should know he or she is not competent to handle without associating with a lawyer who is competent to handle the matter….).

Inquiry #2:

Attorney A would also like Attorney B to include questions in the deposition that relate to the treatment of Roe and the facts specifically at issue in Lawsuit #1. May Attorney B ask these questions?

Opinion #2:

Yes, provided, however, if the proposed questions will probe the facts and circumstances at issue in Lawsuit #1, Attorney A must notify Attorney X of the date and location of the deposition. Rule 4.2 helps to prevent the dangers of overreaching, interference with the client-lawyer relationship, and uncounseled disclosure of information relating to the representation. In the current inquiry, these dangers can be avoided if Dr. Jones's lawyer is notified of the scheduled deposition of Attorney X's client so that Attorney X may chose to attend the deposition. The duty to provide this notice falls upon Attorney A, the lawyer for the plaintiff in the action against Dr. Jones, because the potential for unrepresented communication arises in that lawsuit.

2004 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

January 21, 2005

Solicitation of Claimants in a Class Action

Opinion rules that a solicitation letter to prospective members of a class action must contain the words "This is an advertisement for legal services" pursuant to Rule 7.3(c).

Inquiry #1:

Attorney filed a class action on behalf of 65 individual plaintiffs, three of whom are designated class representatives. The class has not yet been certified by the court. Attorney believes there are unknown North Carolina class members numbering approximately 250. Through discovery, the defendants in the action will send to Attorney the names and addresses of all the prospective members of the class. Attorney will file a motion to certify the class, but he expects defendants will oppose the motion on several grounds, including the inability of the class representatives to represent adequately the prospective class.

In a class action, there are generally three categories of communications sent to prospective class members. The first type is a notice from the court, which may be drafted by the parties, informing the prospective class members of the existence and nature of the class action, that the Court has certified the lawsuit as a class action, and giving the recipients the choice to opt out of the class. If the prospective class member opts out, then he or she is free to pursue claims against the defendant individually. A second category of communications includes informal communications by the litigants' counsel with prospective class members on a wide array of topics prior to class certification. Third, plaintiffs' counsel may send a communication that asks a prospective class member if he or she wants to hire Attorney's firm or seeks to expand the number of class representatives that may share in the cost of litigation.

Must any of the above communications with prospective members of a class action include the statement "This is an advertisement for legal services" pursuant to Rule 7.3(c)?

Opinion #1:

Rule 7.3(c) of the Rules of Professional Conduct requires that "[e]very written. . . communication from a lawyer soliciting professional employment from a prospective client known to be in need of legal services in a particular matter shall include the words, 'This is an advertisement for legal services' on the outside of the envelope. . . and at the beginning of the body of the written or recorded communication…."

As set forth in the inquiry, the first type of communication is a notice from the court to class members. This notice need not include the advertising disclaimer because it is a communication by the court, is authorized by law, and is not a solicitation by a lawyer. See Rule 7.2, cmt. [4]. The second category of communications are those typically associated with class action litigation and necessary for counsel on both sides to adequately represent the interests of the parties. These communications do not solicit professional employment, and therefore are not covered by Rule 7.3 either. However, these communications remain subject to such limitations as may be imposed by Rule 4.2, Communication with Person Represented by Counsel, and Rule 4.3, Dealing with Unrepresented Person. The third type of communication with prospective class members is a written solicitation by a lawyer to persons known to be in need of particularized legal services, and must contain the words "This is an advertisement for legal services" on the outside of the envelope and at the beginning of the body of the communication. Rule 7.3(c).

Inquiry #2:

Attorney plans to send out a mass mailing to prospective class members early in the litigation. The notice from the court advising prospective class members of their rights due to class certification has not been sent as of yet. Attorney would like to send his own letter (1) to inform prospective class members of the class action, (2) to find out whether the prospective class members have discoverable information which may be helpful to the litigation, and (3) to determine whether the prospective class members want to hire Attorney's firm and to share in the cost of litigation as a class representative. Attorney is concerned that if he includes the language "This is an advertisement for legal services" on the outside of the envelope, prospective class members may discard the letter without opening it.

Must this communication with prospective members of a class action include the statement "This is an advertisement for legal services" pursuant to Rule 7.3(c)?

Opinion #2:

Yes, unless otherwise authorized by the Court. It is clear from the facts presented, that Attorney's mailing to prospective class members includes a solicitation component, and that the notice will be sent to persons known to be in need of particularized legal services. Rule 7.3(c).

2004 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

July 16, 2004

Disclosure of Confidential Information in Suit to Collect a Fee

Opinion rules that a lawyer may disclose confidential client information to collect a fee, including information necessary to support a claim that the corporate veil should be pierced, provided the claim is advanced in good faith.

Inquiry:

Attorney was engaged by Husband to represent a corporation in several matters. Husband's wife (Wife) is the corporation's sole shareholder. Husband and the corporation failed to pay the fee for Attorney's services. Pursuant to Rule 1.5(f), Attorney's firm sent the necessary notice of right to participate in the State Bar's fee dispute resolution program to the client. The client did not respond to the notice within the requisite 30 days. Attorney would now like to sue the corporation to collect the fee, and he would like to include a claim in the complaint that the corporate veil should be pierced in order to impose personal liability on Wife and gain access to her assets.

During his representation of the corporation, Attorney learned that Husband has experienced legal trouble before and, therefore, titled most of his assets in Wife's name. By reason of the representation of the corporation, Attorney is also aware that the corporation does not follow the corporate formalities.

In the litigation, may Attorney reveal the information that he learned during the representation of the corporation in order to establish the basis for asking the court to pierce the corporate veil?

Opinion:

Rule 1.6(b)(6) allows a lawyer to disclose confidential client information, "to establish a claim or defense on behalf of the lawyer in a controversy between the lawyer and the client…." Comment [12] to the rule specifies that "[a] lawyer entitled to a fee is permitted by paragraph (b)(6) to prove the services rendered in an action to collect it. This aspect of the rule expresses the principle that the beneficiary of a fiduciary relationship may not exploit it to the detriment of the fiduciary." Nevertheless, Comment [15] cautions that disclosures under paragraph (b) of the rule must be limited:

> …a disclosure adverse to the client's interest should be no greater than the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to accomplish the purpose. If the disclosure will be made in connection with a judicial proceeding, the disclosure should be made in a manner that limits access to the information to the tribunal or other persons having a need to know it and appropriate protective orders or other arrangements should be sought by the lawyer to the fullest extent practicable.

In light of limited nature of the disclosure allowed under Rule 1.6(b)(6), Attorney may disclose the information necessary to establish the claim that the corporate veil should be pierced, provided Attorney has a good-faith belief that the piercing claim is war ranted by the law and the facts and, further provided, appropriate protective orders or actions are undertaken to limit access to the information.

2004 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

July 16, 2004

Advertising Combined Legal Experience

Opinion rules that it is misleading to advertise the number of years of experience of the lawyers with a firm without indicating that it is the combined legal experience of all of the lawyers with the firm.

Inquiry:

An advertisement for Jones, Smith & Johnson, PA, contains the statement, "Put our 30 years of experience to work for you." The law firm employs a number of lawyers.

Although the combined legal experience of these lawyers is 30 years, no single lawyer with the firm has practiced law for more than ten years. Is this statement in an advertisement allowed under the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion:

No. Rule 7.1 prohibits false and misleading communications about a lawyer or a lawyer's services. A communication is false or misleading if omits a fact necessary to make the statement considered as a whole not materially misleading. Rule 7.1(a). To comply with the rule, the Jones, Smith & Johnson advertisement must state that the "combined legal experience" of the lawyers with the firm is 30 years.

2004 Formal Ethics Opinion 8

October 22, 2004

Advertising Contingent Fees

Opinion rules that unless the lawyer invariably makes the repayment of costs advanced contingent upon the outcome of each matter, an advertisement for legal services that states that there is no fee unless there is a recovery must also state that costs advanced must be repaid at the conclusion of the matter.

Inquiry #1:

Lawyers who advertise that they will represent clients in personal injury matters on a contingent fee basis frequently include statements such as the following in their legal advertisements:

- No fee unless you collect.
- No fee unless we recover money for you.
- No recovery-no fee.
- No fee unless we win.

Are advertisements containing statements of this nature false or misleading, in violation of Rule 7.1 of the Rules of Professional Conduct, because the advertisements do not also state that a client may have to repay court costs and expenses of litigation advanced on the client's behalf by the lawyer even if there is no recovery on the client's claim?

Opinion #1:

Yes, these statements are misleading if the lawyer who is advertising his or her services does not make the repayment of court costs and expenses of litigation contingent upon the outcome of the matter in every contingent fee representation that he or she undertakes.

Consumers of legal services may be mislead by the statements such as those set forth above because they do not distinguish between payment of legal fees and the repayment of costs advanced by the lawyer on the client's behalf. Although Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to "advance court costs and expenses of litigation, the repayment of which may be contingent on the outcome of the matter," the lawyer has the option of requiring the client to reimburse the lawyer for costs advanced even if there is no recovery. Therefore, unless the lawyer always waives the costs that he or she advances for clients in contingent fee matters, it is misleading to state in an advertisement that there is "no fee unless you recover." If the lawyer does not invariably waive the costs advanced, the advertisement must state that the client may be required to repay the costs advanced regardless of success of the matter.

Inquiry #2:

May a lawyer advertise "no attorney's fee unless we win" in lieu of including a statement in the advertisement that specifies that costs may be subject to repayment?

Opinion #2:

Yes, the statement is not misleading because it is limited to the obligation to pay the lawyer's fee which is contingent upon the outcome of a matter.

2004 Formal Ethics Opinion 9

October 22, 2004

Trade Name Implying Affiliation with Financial Planning Company

Opinion rules that a trade name for a law firm that implies an affiliation with a financial planning company is misleading and prohibited.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A wants to organize a law firm as a professional corporation or professional limited liability company. Attorney A will be the sole owner of the firm. The law firm will lease space in a building called the "North Star Building" which is owned and occupied by North Star Financial Group. Attorney A's firm will have separate space in the building and will be able to maintain the confidentiality of client files. The firm will provide estate planning and real estate services to clients, some of whom will be referred by North Star Financial Group. The law firm will not share legal fees with the financial planning company nor will referral fees be paid to the company.

May Attorney A form a professional corporation or professional limited liability company with the official name of "North Star Law Office"?

Opinion #1:

No, the North Carolina State Bar's Regulations for Professional Corporations and Professional Limited Liability Companies Practicing Law require the official name of a professional corporation or a professional limited liability company to contain the surname of one or more of its shareholders or members (or the surname of one or more lawyers who owned an interest in an immediate predecessor law firm) and prohibit the official name from containing any other name, word, or character with limited exceptions.1

Inquiry #2:

If Attorney A forms a professional corporation or a professional limited liability company using his surname in the official name in the articles of incorporation or the articles of organization, may he register "North Star Law Office" with the State Bar as the trade name of the law firm?

Opinion #2:

No. Rule 7.5(a) permits a lawyer to use a trade name for a law firm if the name is not false or misleading in violation of Rule 7.1 and the trade name is registered with the State Bar for a determination of whether the name is misleading. In this situation, "North Star Law Office" is misleading. The trade name, together with the location of the law firm in the North Star Building, implies that North Star Financial Group and Attorney A's firm are affiliated. Clients who are referred by the financial planning company to the law firm for legal services associated with their financial plan may erroneously conclude that they do not have a right to legal counsel of their choice but must use the services of Attorney A. Moreover, clients who use the services of the North Star Financial Group may not understand that the services that they receive from the financial planning company do not carry with them the protections afforded by the client-lawyer relationship such as confidentiality and the prohibitions on conflicts of interest. See, e.g., Rule 5.7, cmt. [2].

Endnote

1. The regulations allow the name of a professional corporation or professional limited liability company to contain the surname of a deceased or retired shareholder or member. The regulations also allow the use of a trade name if permitted by the Rules of Professional Conduct. 27 NCAC 1E, Rule .0102(a)(2) and (5).

2004 Formal Ethics Opinion 10

July 14, 2005

Preparation of Deed When Representing Buyer in Closing

Opinion rules that the lawyer for the buyer of residential real estate may prepare the deed without creating a client-lawyer relationship with the seller provided the lawyer makes specific disclosures to the seller and clarifies her role for the seller.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A represents Buyer for the purpose of closing on the purchase of residential real property. Seller is not represented by a lawyer. The purchase contract states that the property is to be conveyed by Seller to Buyer by a deed but the form of the deed may or may not be specified in the contract. If Attorney A prepares the deed as a part of her representation of Buyer, is it assumed that she also represents Seller?

Opinion #1:

No. Attorney A may prepare the deed as an accommodation to the needs of her client, the buyer, without becoming the lawyer for Seller. Prior to the execution of the deed by Seller, Attorney A must explain to Seller that her client is Buyer, that she does not represent Seller, and that she cannot give legal advice to Seller other than the advice to secure legal counsel. Rule 4.3(a). Furthermore, Attorney A must inform Seller that she will prepare the deed consistent with the specifications in the purchase agreement, if any, but, in the absence of such specifications, she will prepare a deed that will protect the interests of her client and, therefore, Seller may desire to seek legal advice. These disclosures avoid the risk of overreaching or misleading Seller. See Rule 8.4(c). To the extent that this opinion is contrary to CPR 100 or RPC 210 (Opinion #3), this opinion controls.

This situation is distinguishable from the situation addressed in 2002 FEO 6 which holds that a lawyer for a plaintiff may not prepare the answer to a complaint for an unrepresented adverse party to file pro se because the lawyer may not give legal advice to an unrepresented adverse party. An answer to a complaint, unlike a deed, is an adversarial document that sets forth the defendant's legal position without regard to the interests of the plaintiff. A deed, on the other hand, does not represent the unilateral interests of the seller because the buyer is the specific and intended beneficiary of the deed even though the buyer is not a signatory on the deed. Therefore, as long as the lawyer clarifies her role, makes the disclosures specified above, and does not give the seller legal advice, the lawyer may prepare the deed to further the interests of her client, the buyer. See, e.g., 2003 FEO 7 ("[T]he purpose and goals of the engagement determine the identity of the client, not the signatory on the document prepared by the lawyer.) Note, however, that preparing documents for the seller other than a deed may mislead the seller as to the lawyer's role and raise a presumption that the lawyer has duties to the seller. See, e.g., Cornelius v. Helms, 120 N.C. App. 172, 461 S. E. 2d 338 (1995), disc. rev. denied, 342 N.C. 653, 467 S. E. 2d 709 (1996).

Although the disclosures required by this opinion do not have to be in writing and the written consent of the seller is not required, it is the better practice for the closing lawyer to include the disclosures in a written statement that is provided to the seller prior to the seller's execution of the deed.

Inquiry #2:

If the legal fee for preparing the deed is allocated to Seller do the responses to the prior inquiries change?

Opinion #2:

No, provided Attorney A makes the disclosures required in Opinion #1 above and follows the requirements of Rule 1.8(f). Rule 1.8(f) permits a lawyer to accept compensation for a representation from someone other than the client provided the client gives informed consent, there is not interference with the lawyer's professional judgment or the client-lawyer relationship, and the confidentiality of client information is protected.

2004 Formal Ethics Opinion 11

January 21, 2005

Lawyer Appointed as Guardian-ad-Litem

Opinion explores the role of a lawyer who is appointed guardian-ad-litem for respondent parent with diminished capacity.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A is appointed guardian-ad-litem (GAL) for a respondent parent with diminished capacity in a Termination of Parental Rights (TPR) action. The parent is indigent and, pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat. § 7B-1111(a)(6), has also been appointed legal counsel, Attorney B. In In re Shepard, 03-212 (N.C. App. filed January 20, 2004), the court of appeals held that, in a TPR action based upon parental "incapability," a parent's GAL, who is a lawyer but is not providing legal representation to the parent, "may testify as to the ward's parental capability, and ultimately against the interest of their ward as to the termination hearing." Id. at 1. The basis for the court's decision stems from the observation that the North Carolina State Bar's Rules of Professional Conduct do not appear to govern the conduct of a GAL who acts "purely as a guardian and not an attorney." Id. at 8. The court also suggested that the role of the GAL is to ensure that the parent receives procedural due process by helping to explain and execute his or her rights.

Is a lawyer, appointed solely as GAL for the parent, governed by the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion #1:

The court in Shepard recognized that some of the Rules of Professional Conduct create duties that are owed only in the professional client-lawyer relationship. For example, the confidentiality rule only applies when a lawyer has a client-lawyer relationship or has agreed to consider the formation of one. Scope, cmt. [4]. Conversely, there are other rules that apply although a lawyer is acting in a non-professional capacity. For example, a lawyer who commits fraud in a business transaction has violated Rule 8.4 by engaging in conduct involving dishonesty, fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation. Preamble, cmt. [3].

The GAL does not have a client-lawyer relationship with the parent, and therefore, would not be governed by the Rules of Professional Conduct relating to duties owed to clients. See RPC 249. Notwithstanding the above, it may be prudent for the GAL to explain fully to the parent, to the extent possible, his or her role in the litigation, specifically that the GAL is not acting as the parent's lawyer.

Inquiry #2:

If the court appointed a lawyer to serve both as lawyer for the parent and as the parent's GAL, do the Rules of Professional Conduct require that the lawyer keep all communications confidential?

Opinion #2:

Yes. A lawyer serving as both lawyer and GAL for a parent in a TPR action must comply with Rule 1.6 of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Rule 1.6 generally prohibits a lawyer from revealing information acquired during the professional relationship unless the client gives informed consent or one of the exceptions allowing disclosure applies.

Inquiry #3:

If the court appoints the same lawyer as lawyer for the parent and as the parent's GAL, does the lawyer have a conflict of interest?

Opinion #3:

The Shepard court acknowledged that there exists little guidance on the role or specific duties of a GAL, but suggested that the role of the GAL is guardian of the parent's procedural due process. Shepard, at 7. If the role of the GAL is limited to ensuring procedural due process for the parent by helping to explain and execute his or her rights, then this role is consistent with the role of a lawyer representing a client. Therefore, there is no conflict of interest in undertaking representation as both GAL and lawyer. The Ethics Committee takes no position at this time as to whether the GAL has additional responsibilities or whether an expanded role could result in a conflict of interest.

Inquiry #4:

Assume the parent has separate appointed counsel. Under Shepard, how can the parent's GAL perform his duties with competence if the parent has been advised by her lawyer that she should not share confidential information with the GAL?

Opinion #4:

The performance of the GAL's duties, as distinct from a lawyer's duties to a client, is not a matter upon which the Ethics Committee can opine.

Inquiry #5:

Assume the facts in Inquiry #4. Can the parent's lawyer ever advise the client to confer candidly with the GAL under the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion #5:

Yes. In light of the Shepard decision, a lawyer should inform the parent, to the extent possible, that the GAL does not owe the parent a duty of confidentiality and that the GAL could be called upon to testify as to parental capability. Then, the lawyer must analyze each case and determine whether the parent's full disclosure to the GAL will accomplish the goals of the representation. If the lawyer believes full disclosure is appropriate under the circumstances, he or she may advise the client that he may be candid with the GAL. Likewise, a lawyer may reasonably conclude that full disclosure would not be in the parent's interests and may advise the client against it.

Proposed 2004 Formal Ethics Opinion 12

October 21, 2005

Hiring an Independent Title Search Company

Editor's Note: At a meeting on October 21, 2005, in the absence of a majority vote of all members of the committee as required by the Procedures for Ruling on Questions of Legal Ethics, 27 N.C.A.C. 1D, Section .0100, no action was taken and no opinion will be henceforth proposed by the committee on the inquiry that was previously designated Proposed 2004 FEO 12, Hiring an Independent Title Search Company.

2004 Formal Ethics Opinion 13

January 21, 2005

Forming A Law Partnership of Professional Corporations

Opinion rules that a lawyer may form a professional corporation for the practice of law and the professional corporation may enter into a law partnership with another such professional corporation.

Inquiry:

Attorney A and Attorney B have practiced law together since 1982. Originally, they practiced together in a partnership but, after a few years, they filed articles of incorporation to form A & B, Professional Corporation. Each lawyer owns 50% of the shares of the professional corporation. Over time, the personal financial objectives of Attorney A and Attorney B have diverged, primarily with regard to their retirement objectives. Attorney A, for example, does not want to contribute to the firm's 401(k) plan. Attorney B, on the other hand, wants to contribute the maximum amount to the plan. They have reached an impasse over this issue and other business issues.

Attorney B would like to retain his professional relationship with Attorney A while accommodating each lawyer's individual financial needs. To accomplish this, he suggests that each lawyer form his or her own professional corporation[1] in which he or she would be the sole shareholder. The two professional corporations would then form a partnership for the practice of law. From an accounting perspective, Attorney B has been advised that this approach will allow the two lawyers to meet their individual financial goals.

Rule 5.4(b) provides that "[a] lawyer shall not form a partnership with a nonlawyer if any of the activities of the partnership consist of the practice of law." As noted in comment [2], the rule "expresses the traditional limitations on permitting a third party to direct or regulate the lawyer's professional judgment in rendering legal services to another."

Technically, the arrangement proposed by Attorney B would create a partnership of nonlawyers—the professional corporations—and, therefore, be prohibited under Rule 5.4(b). However, by law, all of the shareholders of a North Carolina professional corporation formed for the practice of law must be licensed North Carolina lawyers. G.S. §55B-4(2).[2] Therefore, all of the humans involved in the management and operation of the partnership would be licensed lawyers and there would be no risk that a nonlawyer could interfere with the independent professional judgment of the lawyers in their representations of clients. May Attorney A and Attorney B organize their law practice in this manner?

Opinion:

Yes. As noted in Rule 0.2, Scope, the Rules of Professional Conduct are

"rules of reason" and "[t]hey should be interpreted with reference to the purposes of legal representation and of the law itself." The purpose of Rule 5.4(b) is to prevent the creation of law firm in which a person who does not have a law license has the authority as a partner, or otherwise, to interfere in a lawyer's decisions about the representation of a client. Where, as here, all of the owners of the constituent professional corporations are themselves licensed as lawyers, that risk is not present. So long as the signage and the letterhead for the partnership disclose the relationship between the professional corporations and correctly identify the shareholders in the constituent professional corporations as required by Rule 7.1, this arrangement does not violate Rule 5.4(b). The same would be true of a partnership of professional limited liability companies formed for the practice of law.

Endnotes

1. Alternatively, one or both of the lawyers could form a professional limited liability company with the same effect.
2. Similarly, G.S. §57C-2-01(c) requires that all of the members of a professional limited liability company formed for the practice of law must be licensed North Carolina lawyers.

2005 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

October 21, 2005

Appearance Before Judge Who Is a Family Member

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not appear before a judge who is a family member without consent from all parties and, although consent is not required, the other members of the firm must disclose the relationship before appearing before the judge.

Inquiry #1:

Law Firm hires Attorney A, who is married to District Court Judge B. Attorney A is also the daughter of Senior Resident Superior Court Judge C. Judges B and C are in the same judicial district and the lawyers in Law Firm regularly appear before judges in this district, including Judges B and C.

May a member of Law Firm, other than Attorney A, appear before Judges B and C?

Opinion #1:

Yes. While Attorney A may not personally appear before Judges B and C without consent from all parties involved in the matter, a member of Attorney A's firm is not disqualified. See CPR 225 (lawyer permitted to appear before judge who is his brother with consent from all parties to the matter). A previous ethics opinion held that the personal disqualification of a lawyer from practicing before a family member ordinarily is not imputed to the other members of the lawyer's firm. CPRs 226 and 367. Nonetheless, a judge may determine independently that he must recuse himself if his impartiality may be reasonably questioned by reason of financial interests or some other special circumstances. Canon III D of the Code of Judicial Conduct; see also 97 Formal Ethics Opinion 1.

Inquiry #2:

May Attorney A work on a case which is pending before either Judge B or C, so long as she does not make an appearance in the matter and does not appear in court while the matter is being heard?

Opinion #2:

No, unless there is disclosure.

A lawyer's personal disqualification from appearing before a judge closely related[1] to her protects the integrity of the judicial system and avoids the appearance of impropriety or judicial partiality. Strictly speaking, a lawyer who appears before a judge with whom she has a familial relationship does not have a conflict of interest because the representation does not disadvantage or prejudice the lawyer's own client. Rule 1.7. It is also unlikely that the lawyer's judgment would be impaired or that she could not exercise independent professional judgment on behalf of the client under the circumstances. Instead, the client may appear to be advantaged by his lawyer's relationship with the judge, and it is this appearance of unfair advantage that both the Code of Judicial Conduct and our ethics opinions strive to avoid.

While the Rules of Professional Conduct do not prohibit Law Firm[2] from appearing before Judge B or C in this situation, Law Firm must disclose Attorney A's familial relationship to opposing counsel as soon as it becomes apparent that the matter will be heard by either Judge B or C. Disclosure of the familial relationship is required whenever a law firm appears before the family member of one of its members.3 Disclosure serves the interest of promoting the administration of justice and the public confidence in a fair and impartial judicial system. See 0.1 Preamble, cmt. [6].

Inquiry #3:

Assume that Attorney A has no involvement in a matter coming before Judge B, her husband. The matter involves fees for Law Firm either because it is a collection case on behalf of Law Firm or because there is a claim for attorney's fees associated with the underlying claim (e.g., custody or child support in district court; Rule 11 in Superior Court).

May members of Law Firm appear before Judge B without disclosing Attorney A's relationship?

Opinion #3:

No. If Attorney A stands to benefit directly from a favorable outcome, then Judge B, Attorney A's husband, would also benefit financially. Under these circumstances, Law Firm may seek first to have the matter heard by someone other than Judge B if possible. If it is not possible, disclosure should be made to opposing counsel so that he has the opportunity to move for recusal. Law Firm should disclose Attorney A's relationship, even where Attorney A would not directly benefit financially from the outcome. See Opinion #2, above. In addition, Judge B may independently determine that he must recuse himself under the Code of Judicial Conduct because his impartiality may be reasonably questioned under the circumstances.

Inquiry #4:

Assume the same facts as in Inquiry #3, except that a member of Law Firm is appearing before Judge C, Attorney A's father.

May members of Law Firm appear before Judge C without disclosing Attorney A's relationship?

Opinion #4:

No.

Inquiry #5:

May Attorney A appear before judges other then Judges B and C in the same judicial district?

Opinion #5:

Yes.

Inquiry #6:

What disclosures, if any, do the Rules of Professional Conduct require Law Firm to make to clients concerning Attorney A's relationship to local judges?

Opinion #6:

Pursuant to Rule 1.4, a lawyer must provide information and explain a matter to the extent necessary to permit the client to make informed decisions regarding the representation. Whether a matter will go to trial, or be heard by a particular judge, may be speculative at the outset of the representation. If a lawyer knows that she will need to seek opposing counsel's consent to proceed before Judge B or C, then the lawyer should also inform her client. Ordinarily, it will be in the lawyer's discretion to determine whether disclosure about the relationship between a firm lawyer and a judge is appropriate under the circumstances.

Endnotes

1. For purposes of this opinion, a "close relative" is defined consistently with Canon 3C of the Code of Judicial Conduct: a person within the third degree of relationship to the lawyer or the lawyer's spouse, or a spouse of such person. The third degree of relationship includes parent or child, grandparent or grandchild, great grandparent or great grandchild, sibling, uncle, aunt, niece or nephew.
2. The duties applicable to a "Law Firm," in this opinion arise only to the extent a lawyer in the firm has knowledge of such relationship. "Knowledge" is defined as "actual knowledge of the fact in question," however, "[a] person's knowledge may be inferred from the circumstances." Rule 1.0(g).
3. In a large or multistate law firm, the familial relationship between a firm member and a judge may not be known to all lawyers of the firm. The judge, who presumably would be aware of the relationship, would assess whether he must recuse himself because his impartiality may be reasonably questioned under the circumstances. Canon 3C, Code of Judicial Conduct.

2005 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

April 15, 2005

Employment of Nonlawyer to Represent Social Security Claimants

Opinion rules that a law firm that employs a nonlawyer to represent Social Security claimants must so disclose to prospective clients and in any advertising for this service.

Inquiry #1:

The Social Security Act permits lawyers and nonlawyers to represent claimants before the Social Security Administration; however, nonlawyers are not allowed to represent claimants on appeals to a federal district court. 42 U.S.C. §406. The Social Security Administration currently withholds up to one-quarter of a claimant's past due benefits for payment of legal fees but it does not withhold funds to pay nonlawyer representatives. Nonlawyer representatives must collect their fees directly from claimants. In 2005 this practice will change and nonlawyer representatives who pass an open book test will be eligible for withholding. Although some firms already employ nonlawyer representatives, with the change to allow withholding, it is anticipated that more law firms will employ nonlawyer representatives to represent Social Security claimants.

A law firm that employs a nonlawyer representative need not assign a firm lawyer to oversee the work of the nonlawyer. Therefore, a claimant may never meet with a firm lawyer.

If a law firm advertises that its services include representation before the Social Security Administration, should the advertisement disclose that a nonlawyer will provide the representation?

Opinion #1:

Yes. Rule 7.1 prohibits a lawyer from making a false or misleading communication about the lawyer or the lawyer's services. The prohibition extends to a communication that omits a fact necessary to make an entire statement not materially misleading. Rule 7.1(a)(1). Most consumers assume that a lawyer will provide any representational services advertised by a law firm. Therefore, when representation will be provided by a nonlawyer, as allowed by law, the law firm must disclose this fact in its advertising.

Inquiry #2:

If a law firm employs a nonlawyer to represent Social Security claimants, is the conduct of the nonlawyer governed by the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion #2:

Yes. Although a task is assigned to a nonlawyer employee of a law firm, the lawyers in the firm are responsible for assuring that the conduct of the nonlawyer is in compliance with the professional obligations of the lawyers. Rule 5.3. This is true even when the nonlawyer may, by law, provide unsupervised representation.

Inquiry #3:

If a law firm employs a nonlawyer claimants' representative, what disclosures must be made to a prospective client who seeks representation before the Social Security Administration and who will be assigned to the nonlawyer representative?

Opinion #3:

The prospective client must be advised that the person who will be providing the representation is not a lawyer. The prospective client must also be informed if any of the protections afforded by the client-lawyer relationship will not be present. For example, the attorney-client privilege not to testify to communications made for the purpose of obtaining or providing legal assistance may not extend to the client's communications with the nonlawyer representative. (Whether the privilege extends to communications with a nonlawyer representative who, although an agent of the law firm, will be providing representation without supervision from a lawyer, is a question of law outside the purview of the Ethics Committee.) Nevertheless, the prospective client may be assured that the nonlawyer must comply with the professional obligations of the firm's lawyers including the duty of confidentiality and the duty to avoid conflicts of interest.

2005 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

July 14, 2005

Immigration Prosecution to Gain An Advantage in a Civil Matter

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not threaten to report an opposing party or a witness to immigration officials to gain an advantage in civil settlement negotiations.

Inquiry:

During the discovery phase of a civil lawsuit, the defense lawyer learns that the plaintiff may be in the country illegally. Some of the plaintiff's witnesses may also be in the country illegally. The plaintiff's immigration status is entirely unrelated to the civil suit.

May the defense lawyer threaten to report the plaintiff or a witness to immigration authorities to induce the plaintiff to capitulate during the settlement negotiations of the civil suit?

Opinion:

This is a matter of first impression. The Rules of Professional Conduct and the ethics opinions have previously addressed only the issue of threatening criminal prosecution to gain an advantage in a civil matter.

Before 1997, Rule 7.5 of the Rules of Professional Conduct made it unethical for a lawyer "to present, participate in presenting, or threaten to present criminal charges primarily to obtain an advantage in a civil matter." The rule was not included in the Rules of Professional Conduct when they were comprehensively revised in 1997. Nevertheless, a lawyer may not use a threat of criminal prosecution with impunity. Threats that constitute extortion, compounding a crime, or abuse of process are already prohibited by other rules. See Rule 3.1 (meritorious claims); Rule 4.1 (truthfulness in statements to others); Rule 4.4 (respect for rights of third persons); Rule 8.4(b) and (c)(prohibiting criminal or fraudulent conduct). Moreover, 98 FEO 19 provides that a lawyer may present or threaten to present criminal charges in association with the prosecution of a civil matter but only if the criminal charges are related to the civil matter, the lawyer believes the charges to be well grounded in fact and warranted by law, and the lawyer does not imply an ability to improperly influence the district attorney, the judge or the criminal justice system.

The present inquiry involves the threat, not of criminal prosecution, but of disclosure to immigration authorities. Whether making such a threat is criminal extortion is a legal determination outside the purview of the Ethics Committee. If it is, the conduct is prohibited under Rule 8.4(b). Even where a lawyer may lawfully threaten to report a party or a witness to immigration authorities to gain leverage in a civil matter, the exploitation of information unrelated to the client's legitimate interest in resolving the lawsuit raises some of the same concerns as threatening to pursue the criminal prosecution of the opposing party for an unrelated crime.

In ABA Formal Opinion No. 92-363, threats of criminal prosecution are permitted only when there is a nexus between the facts and circumstances giving rise to the civil claim, and those supporting criminal charges. As explained in the opinion, requiring a relationship between the civil and criminal matters > tends to ensure that negotiations will be focused on the true value of the civil claim, which presumably includes any criminal liability arising from the same facts or transaction, and discourages exploitation of extraneous matters that have nothing to do with evaluating that claim. Introducing into civil negotiations an unrelated criminal issue solely to gain leverage in settling a civil claim furthers no legitimate interest of the justice system, and tends to prejudice its administration.

ABA Formal Op. No. 92-363; see also Rule 8.4(d)(prohibiting conduct that is prejudicial to the administration of justice).

There is no valid basis for distinguishing between threats to report unrelated criminal conduct and threats to report immigration status to the authorities: the same exploitation of extraneous matters and abuse of the justice system may occur. Rule 4.4(a) prohibits a lawyer, when representing a client, from using means that have no substantial purpose other than to embarrass, delay, or burden a third person. In addition, the prohibition on conduct that is prejudicial to the administration of justice "should be read broadly to proscribe a wide variety of conduct including conduct that occurs outside the scope of judicial proceedings." Rule 8.4, cmt. [4]. The threat to expose a party's undocumented immigration status serves no other purpose than to gain leverage in the settlement negotiations for a civil dispute and furthers no legitimate interest of our adjudicative system. Therefore, a lawyer may not use the threat of reporting an opposing party or a witness to immigration officials in settlement negotiations on behalf of a client in a civil matter.

2005 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

April 21, 2006

Disclosure of Confidences of Parent Seeking Representation for Minor

Opinion rules that absent consent to disclose from the parent, a lawyer may not reveal confidences received from a parent seeking representation of a minor.

Inquiry #1:

Daughter schedules an office consultation with Lawyer A to discuss her father's estate. At the time the appointment was made, Lawyer A did not discuss the nature of Daughter's legal problem or whether Daughter was the person in need of representation. Daughter meets with Lawyer A and initially describes her father's estate as follows: Father left a holographic will naming his Brother as executor. Father was survived by Son, who is a lawyer, and by Daughter. Father's will makes provisions for Widow, then leaves everything else to Grandchild, the 15-year-old son of Daughter. The will specifically disinherits Son and Daughter. Brother qualified as executor and retained Son as attorney for the estate. Brother is also guardian of the minor's estate until Grandchild reaches age 25. The will was probated two years ago.

Next, Daughter discloses that Brother has made some unauthorized disbursements from the estate. First, Brother executed a document ("Renunciation Document") purporting to renounce the estate's interest in $100,000, and then paid that money in equal shares to Son and Daughter. Son was acting as attorney for the estate at this time.

Second, Brother and Son entered into a "Settlement Agreement" which recites that Son has raised questions about and has threatened to challenge the validity of the will. The agreement provides for payment to Son of the sum of $250,000 and a deed to a tract of real estate in exchange for Son's renunciation of any and all rights to his father's estate and any right to contest the will. Brother and Son took the Settlement Agreement to a superior court judge, without notice to Daughter or Grandchild, and the judge signed an order approving the settlement agreement.

Daughter asks Lawyer A whether he will provide representation to have the "Settlement Agreement" overturned and have Brother replaced as executor and guardian.

If Lawyer A agrees to take the case, who will be the client?

Opinion #1:

Daughter seeks Lawyer A's assistance in protecting Grandchild's interest in Father's estate. To accomplish this goal, Grandchild must be the client. Although Daughter asks that Lawyer A overturn the Settlement Agreement only, it is likely that a lawyer representing Grandchild would also seek to overturn the Renunciation Document, thereby adversely affecting Daughter's interests. Thus, if Lawyer A agrees to take the case, he would represent Grandchild, but he may not also represent Daughter because Daughter's interests are adverse to those of her son's. See Rule 1.7(a).

Lawyer A should explain to Daughter that if hired to represent Grandchild, he would require both Daughter and her husband to consent to the representation, and that he may seek appointment of a guardian ad litem to protect Grandchild's interests. To obtain informed consent, Lawyer A must explain that as Grandchild's lawyer, Lawyer A also would challenge the validity of the Renunciation Document, which could result in Daughter being required to return the $50,000 she received. See Rule 1.7(b).

Inquiry #2:

Assume Lawyer A has explained the limits of his representation as recited in Opinion #1 and Daughter leaves his office to confer with her husband. Later, Daughter leaves Lawyer A a voicemail message indicating they would consider hiring Lawyer A to represent their son, but only if he would agree to limit his representation to overturning the Settlement Agreement and getting Brother replaced as executor and guardian.

May Lawyer A agree to the representation under these circumstances?

Opinion #2:

No. See Opinion #1. Lawyer A cannot agree to accept the representation with these restrictions because to do so would curtail his ability to exercise independent professional judgment on behalf of Grandchild, and because these instructions may be prejudicial to Grandchild's interests.

Inquiry #3:

Assume that Lawyer A declines representation, and that Daughter will not authorize Lawyer A to disclose any information imparted to him in the consultation, may Lawyer A use or reveal any information learned from Daughter to protect Grandchild's interests?

Opinion #3:

> Every lawyer consulted about a legal matter incurs certain ethical obligations to the person who consulted the lawyer, even if the relationship goes no further. These obligations—confidentiality, loyalty, and competence—are separate from the lawyer's duties under agency, contract, and tort law. Because they exist by virtue of ethics rules rather than legal precepts, the obligations arise even in the absence of a cognizable lawyer-client relationship.

ABA/BNA Lawyer's Manual on Professional Conduct 31:151 (2005).

When someone consults with a lawyer in good faith for the purpose of seeking professional legal advice, the ethics rules impose, at a minimum, a duty of confidentiality on the lawyer consulted. Rule 1.18(b). This duty arises even when the individual is seeking a second opinion but does not intend to form a client-lawyer relationship, or when the individual is consulting the lawyer about a legal issue on behalf of a friend or family member. The person who divulges information to an attorney in either case has the reasonable belief, induced by the lawyer's conduct, that the information imparted will be held in confidence. See generally Rule 1.18.

Here, Daughter consulted with Lawyer A to determine whether to employ him. After the consultation, Lawyer A declined representation of Daughter based upon a conflict of interest, and ultimately did not undertake representation of Grandchild. Clearly, there was no client-lawyer relationship between Lawyer A and Daughter or Grandchild.

Nevertheless, Daughter was owed the duty of confidentiality inasmuch as she disclosed confidential information to Lawyer A and sought legal advice from Lawyer A to determine how to proceed on behalf of her son. She had the reasonable belief that the information discussed with Lawyer A would be held in confidence. Absent any disclaimer from Lawyer A that the information discussed in the consultation may be revealed, Lawyer A owed a duty of confidentiality to Daughter. See Rule 1.18, cmt [3] (lawyer prohibited from using or revealing information imparted in a consultation, even if the client or lawyer decides not to proceed with a representation).[1]

The question then becomes whether, absent consent from Daughter, Lawyer A may disclose Daughter's confidences to assist Grandchild regardless of whether he represents Grandchild. Unless one of the exceptions to the confidentiality rule applies, Lawyer A is required to maintain Daughter's confidences pursuant to Rule 1.6.

Rule 1.6 enumerates seven exceptions to the duty of confidentiality when there is no authorization to disclose. Only two of those exceptions merit consideration here. First, a lawyer may reveal information protected from disclosure "to comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct, the law or court order[.]" Rule 1.6(b)(1). Lawyer A is not subject to any law or court order requiring him to reveal Daughter's confidences. The Rules of Professional Conduct also do not require disclosure under these circumstances.[2]

Second, Rule 1.6(b)(2) permits disclosure of confidential information to the extent reasonably necessary "to prevent the commission of a crime by the client[.]" Even assuming the fraudulent conduct amounts to a crime, the conduct in question has already occurred and the person committing the crime is not the client. While it is true that Lawyer A has information that could undo the fraud, Rule 1.6 does not permit disclosure to rectify past conduct, unless the lawyer's services were used to perpetrate the crime or fraud. Rule 1.6(b)(4).

Inquiry #4:

May Lawyer A ever reserve the right to reveal confidential information of a prospective client who does not ultimately retain his services?

Opinion #4:

Pursuant to Rule 1.18, cmt. [5], > a lawyer may condition conversations with a prospective client on the person's informed consent that no information disclosed during the consultation will prohibit the lawyer from representing a different client in the matter. . . . If the agreement expressly so provides, the prospective client may also consent to the lawyer's subsequent use of information received from the prospective client. [Emphasis added.]

A general disclaimer stating that the initial consultation does not create a client-lawyer relationship is insufficient to overcome the duty of confidentiality. See e.g., RPC 244. An effective disclaimer must clearly demonstrate the prospective client's informed consent to the disclosure and use of confidential information, even against his or her interests. In addition, the disclaimer must be made before any disclosures are made to the lawyer and the consent to disclosure must be confirmed in writing. Rule 1.0(f), cmt. [1].

Endnotes

1. The duty of confidentiality owed to prospective clients under Rule 1.18 is the same as that owed to former clients under Rule 1.9. Rule 1.9 incorporates the confidentiality requirements in Rule 1.6, except that a lawyer may use confidential information of a former client "when the information has become generally known."
2. Rule 3.3, Candor Toward the Tribunal, requires a lawyer to reveal, if necessary, a fraud upon the court when the lawyer represents a client in an adjudicative proceeding and knows of criminal or fraudulent conduct related to the proceeding. Rule 3.3(b). This duty to rectify the fraud only continues to the conclusion of the proceeding. Here, Lawyer A has no obligation to disclose Daughter's confidences under this rule because he has no client with respect to the matter and because all proceedings involving the fraudulent conduct have concluded.

2005 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

July 21, 2006

Communications with Government Entity Represented by Counsel

Opinion explores the extent to which a lawyer may communicate with employees or officials of a represented government entity.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A represents a former employee of County in an employment dispute with County. County Attorney is a full-time employee of County. Attorney A has had no communications with County Attorney on this particular matter. However, County Attorney has defended County in other employment litigation brought by Attorney A in the past. In prior employment litigation cases, County Attorney asked Attorney A that communications with senior county staff, such as the county manager and department heads, concerning litigation or threatened litigation against County, be directed to County Attorney. Attorney A now wants to write a letter to County's human resources director and the county manager on behalf of his current client, threatening litigation if the employment matter is not settled.

May Attorney A address his letter directly to the human resources director and the county manager under these circumstances?

Opinion #1:

No. Under Rule 4.2(a), "a lawyer shall not communicate about the subject of the representation with a person the lawyer knows to be represented by another lawyer in the matter, unless the lawyer has the consent of the other lawyer, or is authorized to do so by law or court order." Rule 4.2(a) prohibits direct communications with represented persons even prior to the commencement of formal proceedings. See Rule 4.2, cmt. [6]. Notwithstanding this general rule, there is some authority that the Rule 4.2(a) prohibition should only apply to communications with a government agency or employee if the communication relates to negotiation or litigation of a specific claim of a client. We agree.

The Restatement of the Law Governing Lawyers § 101(2) (2000) "permits direct lawyer contact with a government officer or employee except when the governmental client is represented with respect to negotiation or litigation of a specific claim…." Routine communications on general policy issues or administrative matters would not require prior approval from government counsel. The rationale for this partial exception is that the limitations on communications under Rule 4.2(a) should be confined to those instances where the government stands in a position analogous to a private litigant or any other private organizational party. Under these circumstances, the government agency or official should be protected because the opportunity for abuse is clear. Additionally, if Rule 4.2(a) were applied broadly to cover all communications with government employees, "any matter disputed with the governmental agency could be pursued with safety only through the agency's lawyer[,]" which would "compromise the public interest in facilitating direct communication between representatives of citizens and government officials . . . ." Restatement of the Law Governing Lawyers § 101, cmt. b., p. 102 (2000).

Because Attorney A's proposed letter to County's employees concerns a specific claim and threatens litigation, Rule 4.2(a) applies to this communication. The question then becomes, if Rule 4.2(a) applies, to which employees does the anti-contact protection of the rule extend?

Even when a lawyer knows an organization is represented in a particular matter, Rule 4.2(a) does not restrict access to all employees of the represented organization. See e.g., 97 FEO 2 and 99 FEO 10 (delineating which employees of a represented organization are protected under Rule 4.2). Counsel for an organization, be it a corporation or government agency, may not unilaterally claim to represent all of the organization's employees on current or future matters as a strategic maneuver. See "Communications with Person Represented by Counsel," Practice Guide, Lawyers' Manual on Professional Conduct 71:301 (2004)(list of cases and authorities rejecting counsel's right to assert blanket representation of organization's constituents). The rule's protections extend only to those employees who should be considered the lawyer's clients either because of the authority they have within the organization or their degree of involvement or participation in the legal representation of the matter. See 97 FEO 2; 99 FEO 10.

> In the case of a represented organization, this Rule prohibits communications with a constituent of the organization who supervises, directs, or consults with the organization's lawyer concerning the matter or has authority to obligate the organization with respect to the matter or whose act or omission in connection with the matter may be imputed to the organization for purposes of civil or criminal liability. It also prohibits communications with any constituent of the organization, regardless of position or level of authority, who is participating or participated substantially in the legal representation of the matter.

Rule 4.2, cmt. [9].

The protections under Rule 4.2(a) only extend to County Manager and department heads if, with respect to this employment matter, 1) they supervise, direct, or consult with County Attorney, 2) they can bind or obligate County as to its position in litigation or settlement, 3) their acts or omissions are at issue in the litigation, or 4) they have participated substantially in the legal representation of County. Because it is likely that the human resources director and the county manager fall within one or more of these categories in an employment dispute, and because Attorney A should have known that County Attorney represented County on this matter, Attorney A must obtain consent from County Attorney before communicating a threat of litigation directly to County Manager and Human Resources Director. To the extent this opinion conflicts with RPC 67 and RPC 132, they are hereby overruled.

Inquiry #2:

Even when a government entity is represented under Rule 4.2(a), Rule 4.2(b) permits direct contact with elected officials under certain circumstances. Attorney A gives written notice stating that he intends to contact members of the elected Board of County Commissioners, but does not specify if he will be addressing them in session, or individually. Nor does the letter state when he intends to contact them. When called by County Attorney for clarification on these points, Attorney A acknowledges that these details are absent, but contends the notice is still sufficient.

Is the "adequate notice" requirement of Rule 4.2(b)(2) met under these circumstances?

Opinion #2:

No. Under Rule 4.2(b), in representing a client who has a dispute with a represented government agency or body, a lawyer may communicate orally about the subject of the representation with elected officials who have authority over such government agency or body so long as the lawyer gives "adequate notice to opposing counsel." Adequate notice should be meaningful notice: that is, sufficient information for opposing counsel to act on it to protect the client's interests. The time and place of the intended oral communication with the elected official must be included as well as the identity of the elected official or officials to whom the communication will be directed. Notice must also be reasonable and give opposing counsel enough time to act on it and be present if he so chooses.

Inquiry #3:

Attorney A appears at a public meeting of the elected Board of County Commissioners. Prior to the board meeting, Attorney A approaches a member of the board to tell him that he is there to advise the board of a grave injustice that has been done to his client, and that County Attorney is trying to prevent Attorney A from bringing this matter to the board's attention.

Does this communication with an elected board member violate Rule 4.2(b)?

Opinion #3:

Yes. Pursuant to Rule 4.2(b), a communication with an elected official may only occur under the following circumstances: 1) in writing, if a copy is promptly delivered to opposing counsel, 2) orally, with adequate notice to opposing counsel, or 3) in the course of official proceedings. To the extent RPC 202 differs from this opinion and Rule 4.2(b), it is hereby overruled.

2005 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

October 21, 2005

Compensation of Nonlawyer Employee Who Represents Social Security Claimants

Opinion rules that the compensation of a nonlawyer law firm employee who represents Social Security disability claimants before the Social Security Administration may be based upon the income generated by such representation.

Inquiry #1:

Law Firm employs Legal Assistant, a nonlawyer, to assist Attorney with the representation of disability claimants before the Social Security Administration (SSA). Because nonlawyer representation of claimants before the SSA is allowed by the Social Security Act, see 42 U.S.C. A7406, and Attorney believes that Legal Assistant is competent, Legal Assistant frequently represents the claimant in the hearing before the SSA Administrative Law Judge (ALJ) without the involvement of Attorney. Prospective clients are advised of this arrangement as required by 05 FEO 2 and Attorney represents any claimant who files an appeal to federal district court. Legal Assistant is currently paid a salary and bonuses.

Legal Assistant has informed Attorney that she is leaving the firm to become an independent claimant's representative on Social Security disability claims. After Legal Assistant establishes her separate business, may Attorney refer disability claimants to her, including claimants that he was representing when Legal Assistant was still employed by the firm?

Opinion #1:

Yes. If Attorney believes that Legal Assistant is competent to represent claimants before the SSA and that it is in the best interest of a client to be represented before the SSA by Legal Assistant, he may refer clients to her. See Rule 1.1.

Inquiry #2:

Attorney and Legal Assistant work on a client's disability claim before Legal Assistant leaves the firm to establish her own practice. After she leaves the firm, Attorney refers the client to Legal Assistant for representation before the SSA. Disability benefits are awarded to the client and the ALJ also awards a fee for the representation to Legal Assistant. From that fee, may Legal Assistant reimburse Law Firm for the work performed by Legal Assistant and/or Attorney while the matter was still with Law Firm?

Opinion #2:

Yes. There is nothing in the Rules of Professional Conduct that prohibits a lawyer or a law firm from accepting such compensation provided it is otherwise lawful. Cf. 03 FEO 10 (Social Security lawyer may agree to compensate a nonlawyer/claimant's representative for the prior representation of a claimant).

Inquiry #3:

Legal Assistant wants to remain an employee of Law Firm but she would like her salary to be based upon the fees that she generates from the representation of claimants before the SSA. May the compensation a law firm pays to a nonlawyer employee who represents claimants before the SSA take into consideration the income generated from the representations?

Opinion #3:

Yes.

Rule 5.4(a) specifically prohibits a lawyer or a law firm from sharing "legal fees" with a nonlawyer except in certain specific situations that are not relevant to this inquiry. As noted in comment [1] to the rule, "The provisions of this Rule express traditional limitations on sharing fees. These limitations are to protect the lawyer's professional independence of judgment." In reliance upon this prohibition, RPC 147 holds that a lawyer may pay a paralegal a bonus for productivity but the bonus may not be a percentage of the income the firm derives from legal matters upon which the paralegal has worked.

The present inquiry is distinguishable. Rule 5.4(a) regulates the distribution of fees that, because of the prohibition on the unauthorized practice of law, may only be earned by a lawyer. However, nonlawyers are legally permitted to represent disability claimants before the SSA and to be awarded fees for such representation. When generated by a nonlawyer as authorized by law, such a fee cannot be designated a "legal fee" subject to the limitations of Rule 5.4(a). See e.g., 03 FEO 10. Moreover, the nonlawyer's participation in the fee does not impair a lawyer's independent professional judgment when the nonlawyer may, by law, represent the claimant without the supervision or participation of the lawyer.

Inquiry #4:

May Legal Assistant and Law Firm enter into an agreement clarifying how fees from Legal Assistant's representation of Social Security disability claimants will be distributed between Legal Assistant and Law Firm in the event Legal Assistant leaves the firm?

Opinion #4:

Yes.

2005 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

October 21, 2005

Recommending Services of a Third Party to Bankruptcy Client

Opinion rules that an attorney may recommend that a prospective client use a computer in the attorney's office and the services of an Internet-based company to complete a required bankruptcy certification form.

Inquiry:

The Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act ("the Act") makes sweeping changes to the Bankruptcy Code, almost all of which will go into effect on October 17, 2005. Two of the more significant changes to the code are as follows:

1. The requirement that (with certain narrow exceptions) no individual may file any chapter of bankruptcy without first obtaining an "individual or group briefing (including a briefing conducted by telephone or on the Internet) that outline[s] the opportunities for available credit counseling and assist[s] such individual in performing a related budget analysis" (the entrance requirement). 11 U.S.C. A7109(h) (1).

2. The requirement (again, with certain narrow exceptions) that no individual may receive a discharge under chapter 7 or chapter 13 of the amended Bankruptcy Code without first completing "an instructional course concerning personal financial management described in section 11185" (the exit requirement). 11 U.S.C. A7A7 727 ((a)(11) and 1328(g) (1).

A newly formed North Carolina non-profit corporation, Hummingbird Credit Counseling and Education ("HCCE"), intends to offer the entrance and exit requirements via the Internet. HCCE will market low-cost and free financial education to the consumer. HCCE's goal is to provide the necessary entrance requirement in a completely unbiased way.

When a client seeks information and/or advice from a bankruptcy attorney, the attorney must inform the client that the client cannot file a bankruptcy case without first completing the entrance requirement. Time is usually of the essence when filing for bankruptcy. Consequently, the client must immediately comply with the entrance requirement and the Internet offers the best solution. A bankruptcy attorney could refer a client to HCCE and allow the client to complete the interactive program that HCCE provides on a computer in the attorney's office. The bankruptcy attorney would verify that the debtor, and not someone else, participated in the program. At the conclusion of the case, the client would return to the attorney's office and perform the exit requirement, utilizing the HCCE service, on the attorney's computer and again pay the appropriate fee to the attorney.

The costs associated with using HCCE's programming and support will be approximately $40.00 per entrance requirement. Potential bankruptcy filers usually do not have credit cards or should not use them. Since the only practical way to collect fees for Internet services is via a credit card, HCCE proposes that HCCE's certification fees be billed to the attorney's credit card on a monthly basis and the attorney will then collect the fees from his/her clients. The attorney will not receive any financial compensation for referrals to HCCE.

Due to the billing and identity verification concerns, the entrance and exit requirements will only be available at the attorney's office until such time as HCCE develops adequate direct delivery to consumers.

May a bankruptcy attorney offer prospective clients the opportunity to perform the entrance requirement via the Internet utilizing a computer provided by the attorney for this purpose and the services of HCCE?

Opinion #1:

Yes. Rule 1.1 requires competent representation and Rule 1.7 requires the exercise of independent professional judgment. Further, Rule 1.4 (a)(2) requires that the attorney reasonably consult with the client about the means by which the client's objectives are to be accomplished. When recommending that a client use the business services of a third party, the attorney's recommendation must be based upon a determination that the client needs the service, and upon an informed, unbiased analysis of the businesses that offer the service and the quality thereof.

Before the attorney may undertake representation of a prospective client for purposes of filing a bankruptcy petition, the attorney is required by the Act to advise the prospective client of the entrance requirement. It is therefore appropriate for the attorney to offer prospective clients the opportunity to perform the entrance requirement via the Internet in the attorney's office, on a computer provided by the attorney for this purpose, as a service that is related to anticipated legal services.

However, the attorney must determine that the use of the services of HCCE, or whatever third party company he recommends, is in the best interest of the client. To avoid conflicts of interest, the attorney may not earn a commission or a fee on the entrance requirement. See RPC 238. There must be full disclosure to the prospective client that the fee for the entrance requirement is being paid to the third party provider and that no portion of that fee goes to the attorney.

Inquiry #2:

Is it proper for the bankruptcy attorney to allow one of his/her employees to assist a prospective client in completing the entrance requirement via the Internet in the attorney's office?

Opinion #2:

Yes. The attorney may also bill the prospective client for any time devoted by the attorney's staff to assisting the prospective client. Rule 1.5.

Inquiry #3:

May the attorney collect HCCE's fee in cash from the prospective client and allow HCCE to charge the attorney's credit card?

Opinion #3:

Yes. See Opinion #1.

Inquiry #4:

May the attorney also verify the identity of the debtor prior to allowing the individual to complete the entrance requirement via the Internet?

Opinion #4:

Yes.

2005 Formal Ethics Opinion 8

October 21, 2005

URL for Firm Website is Trade Name and Must Register with Bar

Opinion rules that the URL for a law firm website is a trade name that must register with the North Carolina State Bar and meet the requirements of Rule 7.5(a).

Inquiry:

Rule 7.5(a) provides as follows:

> A trade name may be used by a lawyer in private practice if it does not imply a connection with a government agency or with a public or charitable legal services organization and is not false or misleading in violation of Rule 7.1. Every trade name used by a law firm shall be registered with the North Carolina State Bar for a determination of whether the name is misleading.[1]

Attorney V is setting up a website and would like to use a Uniform Resource Locator (URL) for the website that is not the same as the name of his law firm. Does Attorney V have to register the URL with the State Bar as a trade name?

Opinion:

Yes. A trade name is any designation adopted and used by a lawyer or a law firm to identify the lawyer, the firm, or the services rendered by the lawyer or firm. The comment to the rule clearly contemplates that a URL may be a trade name for a firm. As noted in Comment [1] of the rule, "[a] lawyer or law firm may also be designated by a distinctive website address or comparable professional designation." Therefore, if a URL for a law firm's website is more than a minor variation on the official name of the firm, it must be registered with the State Bar in accordance with Rule 7.5(a) and the conditions and limitations on registration set forth in Comment [1].

Endnote

1. To register a trade name, a lawyer must complete and submit an Application for Trade Name Registration to the State Bar. This form can be found on the State Bar website at www.ncbar.gov. (Click "Resources and Forms" from the main menu.) There is no fee for applying. The application will be reviewed to determine whether the requested trade name is misleading. If the name is approved and registered, the lawyer will receive a certificate of registration.

2005 Formal Ethics Opinion 9

January 20, 2006

Lawyer for Publicly Traded Company May "Report Out" Pursuant to SEC Regulations

Opinion rules that a lawyer for a publicly traded company does not violate the Rules of Professional Conduct if the lawyer "reports out" confidential information as permitted by SEC regulations.

Background:

Section 307 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002, 15 U.S.C. §7245 ("SOX §307") required the Securities and Exchange Commission (the Commission) to issue rules setting forth minimum standards of professional conduct for attorneys appearing and practicing before the SEC including a rule

> (1) requiring an attorney to report evidence of a material violation of securities law or breach of fiduciary duty or similar violation by the company or any agent thereof, to the chief legal counsel or the chief executive officer of the company (or the equivalent thereof); and
>
> (2) if the counsel or officer does not appropriately respond to the evidence (adopting, as necessary, appropriate remedial measures or sanctions with respect to the violation), requiring the attorney to report the evidence to the audit committee of the board of directors of the issuer or to another committee of the board of directors comprised solely of directors not employed directly or indirectly by the issuer, or to the board of directors.

In response to this directive, the Commission adopted Rule 205, Standards for Professional Conduct for Attorneys Appearing and Practicing Before the Commission in the Representation of an Issuer, which became effective on August 5, 2003, 17 C.F.R. Part 205 ("Rule 205"). Section 205.3 of Rule 205 sets forth the duty of an attorney appearing and practicing before the Commission to report evidence of a material violation of securities law or breach of fiduciary duty to the chief legal officer and chief executive officer of the client company and, if an appropriate response is not forthcoming, to the audit committee of the board of directors or to the board itself (commonly referred to as "reporting up"). Paragraph (d)(2) of section 205.3 contains a provision permitting, but not requiring, what is commonly referred to as "reporting out" as follows:

> (2) An attorney appearing and practicing before the Commission in the representation of an issuer may reveal to the Commission, without the issuer's consent, confidential information related to the representation to the extent the attorney reasonably believes necessary:
>
> (i) To prevent the issuer from committing a material violation that is likely to cause substantial injury to the financial interest or property of the issuer or investors;
>
> (ii) To prevent the issuer, in a Commission investigation or administrative proceeding from committing perjury, proscribed in 18 U.S.C. 1621; suborning perjury, proscribed in 18 U.S.C. 1622; or committing any act proscribed in 18 U.S.C. 1001 that is likely to perpetrate a fraud upon the Commission; or
>
> (iii) To rectify the consequences of a material violation by the issuer that caused, or may cause, substantial injury to the financial interest or property of the issuer or investors in the furtherance of which the attorney's services were used.

Section 205.6 of Rule 205 addresses sanctions and discipline. Paragraph (c) provides:

> (c) An attorney who complies in good faith with the provisions of this part shall not be subject to discipline or otherwise liable under inconsistent standards imposed by any state or other United States jurisdiction where the attorney is admitted or practices.

Inquiry:

Have the duties of a North Carolina attorney under the Rules of Professional Conduct been affected by the regulations promulgated by the Securities and Exchange Commission under Section 307 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002, which authorize a lawyer to disclose confidential or privileged information of a publicly traded company under certain circumstances?

Opinion:

A North Carolina attorney who represents or is employed by a publicly traded company and who appears and practices before the Commission faces a potential dilemma. Pursuant to Rule 205, under certain circumstances such an attorney may disclose or "report out" corporate confidential information relative to a material violation of securities law, breach of fiduciary duty, or similar violation by the corporation. Nevertheless, under Rule 1.13(c) of the North Carolina Rules of Professional Conduct, an attorney for any organization, whether it is a publicly traded company or not, who has fulfilled the duty set forth in Rule 1.13(a) to report internal misconduct to the highest authority for the organization and the highest authority insists upon action, or a refusal to act, that is clearly a violation of law and is likely to result in substantial injury to the organization, may reveal confidential client information outside the organization only to the extent permitted by Rule 1.6, the confidentiality rule (Rule 1.13 and Rule 1.6 collectively are referred to as the "NC Rule"). In this situation, disclosure outside the organization might be permitted by Rule 1.6(b)(2), which allows disclosure of client confidences to prevent the commission of a crime by the client, or Rule 1.6(b)(4), which permits disclosure of client confidences to prevent, mitigate, or rectify the consequences of a client's criminal or fraudulent act in the commission of which the attorney's services were used. However, in the rare instances that the activity that a North Carolina attorney desires to disclose pursuant to Rule 205 does not involve a crime or the attorney's services were not used to advance the activity, the attorney may not know whether he or she faces professional discipline if the attorney chooses to "report out."

The potential conflict between Rule 205 and the NC Rule raises the question of whether the NC Rule is preempted by Rule 205. A federal regulation validly promulgated carries the force of federal law, with no less preemptive effect than federal statutes. Fidelity Federal v. de la Cuesta, 458 U.S. 141 (1982). According to de la Cuesta, the questions upon which resolution of preemptive effect of a regulation rests is whether the agency means to preempt state law, and if so, whether that action is within the scope of the agency's delegated authority. de la Cuesta at 154. The Commission's intention to preempt state ethics rules conflicting with Rule 205 is unambiguous. In its letter discussing the implementation of the final version of Rule 205, the Commission states:

> The language we adopt today clarifies that this part does not preempt ethical rules in United States jurisdictions that establish more rigorous obligations than imposed by this part. At the same time, the Commission reaffirms that its rules shall prevail over any conflicting or inconsistent laws of a state or other United States jurisdiction in which an attorney is admitted or practices.[1]

In determining whether the regulation is validly promulgated, the courts are directed by the Supreme Court in Chevron USA, Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 457 U.S. 837 (1984) to conduct a two-prong inquiry. First, the court must determine whether Congress has directly spoken on the precise question at issue (the "First Prong"). However, if Congress has not addressed the precise issue and the statute is ambiguous, then the question is whether the agency's interpretation of the statute and the regulation promulgated is based on permissible construction of the statute (the "Second Prong"). SOX §307 mandates the Commission to require "reporting up" in its regulations There is no provision in SOX, however, that expressly authorizes the Commission to adopt "reporting out" regulations. Good faith arguments can be made for both propositions, i.e., that SOX does, and does not, implicitly grant such authority to the Commission.

It has been argued that there is no conflict between Rule 205 and the North Carolina Rules. Because Rule 205 is permissive, the argument goes, one can comply with a more stringent state requirement while not offending federal law, i.e. compliance with both regulatory regimes is not a "physical impossibility." Once again, de la Cuesta is instructive. In that case, the court noted that the more stringent state law effectively created an obstacle to the achievement of "the full purposes and objective" of the federal regulation. Following the reasoning in de la Cuesta, the NC Rule undeniably impinges on the flexibility provided by Rule 205, and a reviewing court would likely hold that if Rule 205 was validly promulgated, it preempts the NC Rule.

It is beyond the capacity of an ethics opinion to determine whether or not the "reporting out" provision of Rule 205 was validly promulgated. Therefore, unless and until the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals or the US Supreme Court determines that Rule 205 was not validly promulgated, (a) there will be a presumption that Rule 205 was promulgated by the Commission pursuant to a valid exercise of authority and (b) a North Carolina attorney may, without violating the North Carolina Rules of Professional Conduct, disclose confidential information as permitted by Rule 205 although such disclosure would not otherwise be permitted by the NC Rule.

Endnote

1. US Securities & Exchange Commission, Final Rule: Implementation of Standards of Conduct for Attorneys, Release Nos. 33-8185, 34-47276, IC-25929, republished in Practicing Law Institute, Corporate Law and Practice Course Handbook Series 489, 494 (May 2005).

2005 Formal Ethics Opinion 10

January 20, 2006

Virtual Law Practice and Unbundled Legal Services

Opinion addresses ethical concerns raised by an internet-based or virtual law practice and the provision of unbundled legal services.

Inquiry #1:

Law Firm markets and provides legal services via the internet under the name Virtual Law Firm (VLF). VLF plans to offer and deliver its services exclusively over the internet. All communications in the virtual law practice are handled through email, regular mail, and the telephone. There would be no face-to-face consultation with the client and no office in which to meet.

May VLF lawyers maintain a virtual law practice?

Opinion #1:

Advertising and providing legal services through the internet is commonplace today. Most law firms post websites as a marketing tool; however, this opinion will not address passive use of the internet merely to advertise legal services. Instead, the opinion explores use of the internet as an exclusive means of promoting and delivering legal services. Many lawyers already use the internet to offer legal services, answer legal questions, and enter into client-lawyer relationships. While the Rules of Professional Conduct do not prohibit the use of the internet for these purposes, there are some key concerns for cyberlawyers who use the internet as the foundation of their law practice. Some common pitfalls include 1) engaging in unauthorized practice (UPL) in other jurisdictions, 2) violating advertising rules in other jurisdictions, 3) providing competent representation given the limited client contact, 4) creating a client-lawyer relationship with a person the lawyer does not intend to represent, and 5) protecting client confidences.

Advertising and UPL concerns are endemic to the virtual law practice. Cyberlawyers have no control over their target audience or where their marketing information will be viewed. Lawyers who appear to be soliciting clients from other states may be asking for trouble. See South Carolina Appellate Court Rule 418, "Advertising and Solicitation by Unlicensed Lawyers" (May 12, 1999)(requiring lawyers who are not licensed to practice law in South Carolina but who seek potential clients there to comply with the advertising and solicitation rules that govern South Carolina lawyers). Advertising and UPL restrictions vary from state to state and the level of enforcement varies as well. At a minimum, VLF must comply with North Carolina's advertising rules by including a physical office address on its website pursuant to Rule 7.2(c). In addition, VLF should also include the name or names of lawyers primarily responsible for the website and the jurisdictional limitations of the practice. Likewise, virtual lawyers from other jurisdictions, who actively solicit North Carolina clients, must comply with North Carolina's unauthorized practice restrictions. See N.C. Gen. Stat. § 84-4. 2.1. In addition, a prudent lawyer may want to research other jurisdictions' restrictions on advertising and cross-border practice to ensure compliance before aggressively marketing and providing legal services via the internet.

Cyberlawyers also tend to have more limited contact with both prospective and current clients. There will rarely be extended communications, and most correspondence occurs via email. The question becomes whether this limited contact with the client affects the quality of the information exchanged or the ability of the cyberlawyer to spot issues, such as conflicts of interest, or to provide competent representation. See generally Rule 1.1 (requiring competent representation); Rule 1.4 (requiring reasonable communication between lawyer and client). Will the cyberlawyer take the same precautions (i.e., ask the right questions, ask enough questions, run a thorough conflicts check, and sufficiently explain the nature and scope of the representation), when communications occur and information is exchanged through email?

While the internet is a tool of convenience and appears to respond to the consumer's need for fast solutions, the cyberlawyer must still deliver competent representation. To this end, he or she should make every effort to make the same inquiries, to engage in the same level of communication, and to take the same precautions as a competent lawyer does in a law office setting.

Next, a virtual lawyer must be mindful that unintended client-lawyer relationships may arise, even in the exchange of email, when specific legal advice is sought and given. A client-lawyer relationship may be formed if legal advice is given over the telephone, even though the lawyer has neither met with, nor signed a representation agreement with the client. Email removes a client one additional step from the lawyer, and it's easy to forget that an email exchange can lead to a client-lawyer relationship. A lawyer should not provide specific legal advice to a prospective client, thereby initiating a client-lawyer relationship, without first determining what jurisdiction's law applies (to avoid UPL) and running a comprehensive conflicts analysis.

Finally, cyberlawyers must take reasonable precautions to protect confidential information transmitted to and from the client. RPC 215.

Inquiry #2:

VLF offers its legal services to pro se litigants and small law firms seeking to outsource specific tasks. VLF aims to provide more affordable legal services by offering an array of "unbundled" or discrete task services. Unbundled services are legal services that are limited in scope and presented as a menu of legal service options from which the client may choose. In this way, the client, with assistance from the lawyer, decides the extent to which he or she will proceed pro se, and the extent to which he or she uses the services of a lawyer. Examples of unbundled services include, but are not limited to, document drafting assistance, document review, representation in dispute resolution, legal advice, case evaluation, negotiation counseling, and litigation coaching. Prior to representation, VLF will ask that the prospective client sign and return a limited scope of representation agreement. The agreement will inform the prospective client that VLF will not be monitoring the status of the client's case, will only handle those matters requested by the client, and will not enter an appearance on behalf of the client in his or her case.

May VLF lawyers offer unbundled services to clients?

Opinion #2:

Yes, if VLF lawyers obtain informed consent from the clients, provide competent representation, and follow Rule 1.2(c). The Rules of Professional Conduct permit the unbundling of legal services or limited scope representation. Rule 1.2, Comment 6 provides:

> The scope of services to be provided by a lawyer may be limited by agreement with the client or by the terms under which the lawyer's services are made available to the client….A limited representation may be appropriate because the client has limited objectives for the representation. In addition the terms upon which representation is undertaken may exclude specific means that might otherwise be used to accomplish the client's objectives. Such limitations may exclude actions that the client thinks are too costly or that the lawyer regards as repugnant or imprudent.

Rule 1.2, comment [7], however, makes clear that any effort to limit the scope of representation must be reasonable, and still enable the lawyer to provide competent representation.

> Although this Rule affords the lawyer and client substantial latitude to limit the representation, the limitation must be reasonable under the circumstances. If, for example, a client's objective is limited to securing general information about the law the client needs in order to handle a common and typically uncomplicated legal problem, the lawyer and client may agree that the lawyer's services will be limited to a brief telephone consultation. Such a limitation, however, would not be reasonable if the time allotted was not sufficient to yield advice upon which the client could rely.

VLF's website lists a menu of unbundled services from which prospective clients may choose. Before undertaking representation, lawyers with VLF must disclose exactly how the representation will be limited and what services will not be performed. VLF lawyers must also make an independent judgment as to what limited services ethically can be provided under the circumstances and should discuss with the client the risks and advantages of limited scope representation. If a client chooses a single service from the menu, e.g., litigation counseling, but the lawyer believes the limitation is unreasonable or additional services will be necessary to represent the client competently, the lawyer must so advise the client and decline to provide only the limited representation. The decision whether to offer limited services must be made on a case-by-case basis, making due inquiry into the facts, taking into account the nature and complexity of the matter, as well as the sophistication of the client.[1]

Endnote

1. The ABA Standing Committee on the Delivery of Legal Services has created a website encouraging the provision of "unbundled" legal services and assisted pro se representation. The Standing Committee believes unbundling is an important part of making legal services available to people who could not otherwise afford a lawyer. The website has also has compiled a list of state ethics opinions addressing limited scope representation. See abanet.org/legalservices/deliver/delunbund.html

---

2005 Formal Ethics Opinion 11

January 20, 2006

Interim Account for Costs Associated with Real Estate Closings

Opinion examines the requirements for an interim account used to pay the costs for real estate closings and also rules that the actual costs may be marked up by the lawyer provided there is full disclosure and the overcharges are not clearly excessive.

Inquiry #1:

ABC Law Firm limits its practice to residential real estate sale and refinance transactions. On a monthly basis, it processes a high volume of such transactions involving real estate in both the county where its office is located and in contiguous counties.

RPC 44 and North Carolina's Good Funds Settlement Act, Chapter 45A of the North Carolina General Statutes, prohibit disbursement of funds from a lawyer's trust account prior to recording if the lender so requires. Lenders' instructions often require the recording of documents prior to disbursement of loan proceeds.

A number of the lenders providing financing to ABC's clients require the closing lawyer to estimate the settlement charges and disbursements, including courier and recording costs, prior to the issuance of the final loan package. Once the loan package is issued, the closing lawyer is not permitted to deviate from the figures specified in the loan package because the lenders are subject to scrutiny, and potential liability, for deviations between their "good faith estimate" of closing costs and the actual closing costs. Not infrequently, however, the actual costs for recording and overnight mail/couriers exceed the initial estimates.

ABC Law Firm has adopted the following procedure to address the above-described situation:

1. ABC established with its depository bank a depository account called the "Recording Account;"

2. ABC prepares for each real estate client, each of whom reviews and signs prior to closing, a closing affidavit making various disclosures, including the following:

I/we hereby acknowledge and agree that certain charges on my HUD-1 Settlement Statement, including but not limited to overnight/courier and recording fees, may not reflect the actual costs and in fact may be more than the actual costs to the settlement agent. The additional amount(s) may vary and are to help cover the administrative aspects of handling the particular item or service. I/we hereby consent to and accept the above-referenced up-charges.

3. ABC marks up the estimated overnight/courier fees and recording fees it provides to lenders by anywhere from $2.00 to $15.00, and reflects the marked-up amount on the HUD-1 Settlement Statement on line 1201 denominated as "Recording Fees."

4. When the transaction closes, the amount reflected on the HUD-1 Settlement Statement as "Recording Fees" is transferred from ABC's trust account to ABC's Recording Account, and disbursements to recording offices and for reimbursement for overnight/courier fees are made from the Recording Account.

5. All amounts reflected on the HUD-1 Settlement Statement which are payable to ABC, including the Recording Fees, are reported by ABC as business income, and all disbursements from the Recording Account for overnight/courier fees and recording charges are reported as business expenses.

6. ABC considers all funds in the Recording Account to be funds of ABC, and from time to time, surplus funds are drawn from the Recording Account and transferred to the firm's Operating Account, or if necessary, funds are transferred from the Operating Account to the Recording Account.

After a closing but before the recording of the documents, may ABC transfer the amount for Recording Fees, as reflected on the HUD-1, from the law firm trust account to the Recording Account and write a check to the Register of Deeds (and courier/overnight service) against those funds to tender to the Register of Deeds when the documents are recorded?

Opinion #1:

No, unless the Recording Account is maintained as a lawyer's trust account in accordance with Rule 1.15-1 to Rule 1.15-3 of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Although the transaction has closed, the funds to cover costs of the closing, including recording and overnight/courier fees, remain client funds until disbursed and must be segregated from the lawyer's funds and be deposited and disbursed in accordance with the trust accounting rules.

As a trust account, the funds in the Recording Account would be client funds and not the funds of ABC. Funds could not be transferred from the Recording Account to the firm's operating account unless earned by the firm or payable to the firm as reimbursement for costs advanced.

Inquiry #2:

ABC does not want the Recording Account to be a trust account. Therefore, ABC deposits its own money into the Recording Account. Checks for the recording and overnight/courier fees for a closing are written from this account. At closing, the line item for these closing costs on the HUD-1 reflects payment to the law firm to reimburse the firm for advancing these costs. After the closing and the recording of the documents, ABC deposits the check to the firm from the closing into the Recording Account to reimburse the firm for advancing the funds to cover these costs. Does this procedure comply with the trust accounting rules?

Opinion #2:

Yes. Because the Recording Account contains only the funds of the law firm, it does not have to be maintained as a lawyer's trust account.

Inquiry #3:

ABC would like to avoid advancing the funds of the law firm to cover the recording and courier/overnight fees. If the closing lawyer tenders a firm trust account check, written against the loan proceeds on deposit in the trust account, to the Register of Deeds at the time that the documents are recorded, has the lawyer complied with the lender's requirement that documents be recorded before the loan proceeds are disbursed?

Opinion #3:

Yes.

Inquiry #4:

The Fourth Circuit in Boulware v. Crosland Mortgage, 291 F.3d 261 (4th Cir. 2002), the Seventh Circuit in Krzalic v. Republic Title Company, 314 F.3d 875 (7th Cir. 2002), and the Eighth Circuit in Haug v. Bank of America, 317 F.3d 832 (8th Cir. 2003) have all ruled that "up charges," or markup, by mortgage lenders and settlement agents for recording fees and other expenses of settlement is not a violation of the Federal Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act.

If there is disclosure to its clients as set forth in Inquiry #1 above, may ABC inflate its estimate of the costs for recording and overnight/couriers fees that will be incurred in closing a transaction and, if the actual costs prove to be less than the estimated costs, retain the overcharges?

Opinion #4:

Yes, provided this practice is not prohibited by law, the disclosure is made to the lender as well as the seller, the overcharges are not clearly excessive in violation of Rule 1.5(a), and the clients are not misled, in violation of Rule 8.4(c), about the fact that the overcharges will be kept by the law firm as profit.

2005 Formal Ethics Opinion 12

January 20, 2006

Payment of Legal Fees By Third Parties

Opinion explores a lawyer's obligation to return legal fees when a third party is the payor.

Inquiry #1:

Lawyer receives a $5,000 advance fee from Client in a domestic case. After Lawyer expended $2,000 in fees, Lawyer receives a telephone call from "Ronnie," who says Client stole the $5,000 from him and he wants it back. Lawyer confronts Client, who denies having stolen the money or even knowing Ronnie.

What is Lawyer's ethical obligation with respect to the $5,000?

Opinion #1:

A lawyer may not accept funds the lawyer knows to be obtained illegally or fraudulently. See Rule 8.4. In the above inquiry, however, Lawyer has no actual knowledge that the funds were stolen. Ronnie could be an interloper. Without knowledge to the contrary, Lawyer owes no duty to a third party claiming an interest in the funds. Furthermore, Lawyer has an obligation to follow the client's directive with respect to funds belonging to the client. Rule 1.15-2(m).

Inquiry #2:

Lawyer receives a $5,000 advance fee from domestic Client. At the time Lawyer receives the funds, Client says that the $5,000 was a gift from her boyfriend. After Lawyer has expended $2,000 of the fee, Boyfriend and Client break up. Boyfriend calls Lawyer and demands the unused portion of the fee back. Prior to this telephone call, Lawyer has never had any contact with Boyfriend. Client maintains that the $5,000 was a gift to her, with no strings attached, and directs the Lawyer not to return the funds.

What is Lawyer's ethical obligation with respect to the $5,000?

Opinion #2:

Lawyer again has no duty to the ex-boyfriend under these facts. Lawyer may rely upon Client's representation that the $5,000 was a gift and follow Client's directive as to how to use those funds. Lawyer may also need to advise Client about any legal obligations she may have to the ex-boyfriend if the $5,000 was a loan rather than a gift.

Inquiry #3:

Lawyer receives a $5,000 advance fee from domestic Client. Client says the $5,000 is a general loan from her mother. After Lawyer expends $2,000, Mom calls Lawyer and says she didn't know Client would use the funds for legal fees, and she doesn't support her daughter's case. Mom asks that the unused portion of the funds be returned to her. Client does not consent and demands that Lawyer retain the money and pursue her case. Prior to this telephone call, Lawyer has never had any contact with Mom.

Must lawyer return the unused portion of the fee to Mom?

Opinion #3:

No. Again, Mom is a third party claiming an interest in the $5,000. Client agrees that the funds were a loan from Mom, but it is unclear whether there were any restrictions placed upon the loan. This is a dispute between Client and Mom, inasmuch as Lawyer was never involved in the original loan from Mom to Client. Lawyer should follow Client's directive as to the use of these funds and advise Client of any legal obligations she may have to Mom.

Inquiry #4:

Adult Client and her mother come to Lawyer's office together. Mother agrees to pay a $5,000 advance fee for representation of Client in her domestic case. Pursuant to Rule 1.8, Lawyer makes sure Mother understands that Lawyer represents only Client's interests, not Mother's, and that information received from Client during the course of the representation remains confidential. Client consents to the payment of her fees by Mother, and Mother agrees to pay under these terms. Lawyer deposits the $5,000 in his trust account and begins billing against it.

Shortly thereafter, Mother and Client having a falling out, and Mother demands the unused portion of the $5,000 back. Client wants Lawyer to keep the funds and continue with the representation.

Must Lawyer return the unearned portion of the fees to Mother?

Opinion #4:

Yes. Under these facts, Lawyer understands that the legal fees were paid by a third party for the purpose of Client's representation. See Rule 1.8(f). The unearned funds held in trust belong to the third party, not the client. In the event the payor wants the funds returned, Lawyer is obliged to do so. Lawyer should explain to both Client and the third-party payor, at the outset, that the funds belong to the third party, that the funds will remain in trust until earned, and that if the third-party payor demands return of the unearned funds, Lawyer must return the funds to the payor. In addition, Lawyer may continue representation and seek payment from Client. If Client is unable to pay, Lawyer must decide whether withdrawal from representation is appropriate under Rule 1.16(b)(6).

Inquiry #5:

Assume the same facts as in Inquiry #4, except that Lawyer received a $5,000 flat fee from Mother to represent Client in her domestic matter. Lawyer explained to Client and Mother that the fee is earned immediately and will be placed in Lawyer's operating account. Lawyer also explained that the flat fee would not vary based upon the amount of time expended and assured them that this was the only legal fee owed to him. After Lawyer has begun work on the case, Mother demands the fee back. Client does not consent.

What should Lawyer do?

Opinion #5:

If the flat fee is earned immediately and it is not "clearly excessive" under the circumstances, then the fee will ordinarily belong to the lawyer. See Rule 1.5(a). Lawyer need not return any portion of the fee to Mother. If, upon conclusion of the representation, however, Mother disputes the amount of fee charged, Lawyer must notify Mother of the State Bar's program of fee dispute resolution. Lawyer should place the disputed portion of the funds back in his trust account and must participate in good faith in the fee dispute process if Mother submits a proper request to the State Bar. See Rule 1.5(f).

2005 Formal Ethics Opinion 13

January 20, 2006

Unearned Portion of a Minimum Fee Must Be Returned to the Client

Opinion rules that a minimum fee that will be billed against at an hourly rate and is collected at the beginning of representation belongs to the client and must be deposited into the trust account until earned and, upon termination of representation, the unearned portion of the fee must be returned to the client.

Inquiry #1:

Law Firm is made up of five partners and one associate. Partnership expenses, debts, and profits are divided equally among all partners irrespective of gross receipts and are paid weekly.

Partner C, who practiced family law litigation, typically used a fee contract referred to by the firm as a "minimum fee" contract. The contract provides that the initial fee charged to the clients is the greater of (1) the flat fee established in the contract, or (2) an hourly rate applied to actual time that will be spent in representation of the client. A minimum fee paid by the client was deposited into the firm's general account. The contract, however, did not state that the fee was deemed earned and payable to the attorney upon receipt.

Partner C left Law Firm and opened his own practice. Most of his clients chose to follow C for continued representation. These clients paid the minimum fee, according to the terms of the fee contract, to Law Firm prior to C's departure. Shortly after C's departure, C sent a letter to Law Firm requesting a transfer of his clients' remaining funds to C. The remaining funds are the difference between the fees collected at the beginning of each representation and the value of the hourly services performed by C for each client prior to leaving Law Firm.

Law Firm refused to comply with C's request reasoning that the fees were deposited into the firm's operating account and used to pay ongoing expenses, including partnership draws, of which C received his share. At C's direction, the clients then began to contact Law Firm demanding a refund of their remaining funds so that the money could be paid to C for continued representation. If the remaining funds are not returned, C's clients may be precluded from having C continue to represent them.

Are the lawyers remaining with Law Firm required to refund any funds to C's clients?

Opinion #1:

Yes. Law Firm incorrectly deposited the "minimum fees" into the firm's operating account. In order for a payment made to an attorney to be earned immediately, the attorney must clearly inform the client that it is earned immediately, and the client must agree to this arrangement. See RPC 158. Even with the consent of the client, only true retainers and flat fees are deemed earned by the lawyer immediately and therefore can be deposited into the operating account upon receipt. A minimum fee that will be billed against at the lawyer's hourly rate is client money and belongs in the trust account until earned. See Rule 1.15-2 (b). In the present case, at some point during the representation, Law Firm would calculate the number of hours C spent on the case and determine whether the client owed more money. The fee arrangement was therefore neither a true retainer nor a flat fee. Furthermore, Law Firm's fee contract did not make an allowance for the fee to be deposited into the firm's operating account. Therefore, those portions of the minimum fees that were not earned by C's labor while with Law Firm remain client funds and must be returned to the clients. See Rule 1.16(d). If Law Firm does not return the unearned portions of the funds to C's clients, they will have collected an excessive fee in violation of Rule 1.5(a).

Inquiry #2:

Will the answer be different if by subsequent agreement the client consents to the deposit of the minimum fee into Law Firm's operating account?

Opinion #2:

No. A client has the right to terminate the representation at any time with or without cause. See 97 Formal Ethics Opinion 4. When the client-lawyer relationship ends, if the fee is clearly excessive in light of the services actually rendered, the portion of the fee that makes the total payment clearly excessive must be returned to the client. See 2000 Formal Ethics Opinion 5. See also Opinion #1.

Inquiry #3:

What duties are owed by Law Firm and/or C to former clients of Law Firm for whom legal work is ongoing, with respect to (a) an accounting for fees previously paid to Law Firm pursuant to the fee contract, (b) a request for refund of fees, and (c) providing future legal services in accordance with the fee contract?

Opinion #3:

(a) Law Firm and C are responsible for providing an accounting of the fees to the client, upon request or at the end of the representation. See Rule 1.15-3 (d).

(b) All of the lawyers in Law Firm, whether in its current incarnation or at the time the fees were collected, are responsible for refunding any unearned portions of the fees. See Opinion #1.

(c) Once a fee agreement is reached between attorney and client, the attorney has an ethical obligation to fulfill the contract and represent the client's best interest, subject to the right or duty to withdraw under Rule 1.16. See Rule 1.5, comment 5.

Inquiry #4:

Is it ethical for C to instruct former clients of Law Firm, who are represented by C, to seek a refund of fees so that they can pay for their continued representation by C?

Opinion #4:

Yes. See Opinion #1.

2005 Formal Ethics Opinion 14

January 20, 2006

Identifying Information in URL for Law Firm Website

October 20, 2005

Opinion rules that the URL for a law firm website does not have to include words that identify the site as belonging to a law firm provided the URL is not otherwise misleading.

Inquiry:

2005 FEO 8 ruled that the URL for a law firm website is a trade name that must be registered with the State Bar, in compliance with Rule 7.5(a), and may not be misleading.

Lawyers have applied to the State Bar to register the following URLs for their law firm websites: "Asbestos-Mesothelioma.com" "DrugInjury.com" and "NCworkinjury. com". None of the URLs contain language sufficient to indicate to a user that the URL is for the website of a law firm. May a law firm use a URL that does not include words or language sufficient to identify it as the address of a website of a law firm?

Opinion:

Yes, provided the URL is not otherwise false or misleading and the homepage of the website clearly and unambiguously identifies the site as belonging to a lawyer or a law firm.

Rule 7.1 and Rule 7.5(a) prohibit lawyers and law firms from using trade names that are misleading. Nevertheless, the Rules of Professional Conduct are rules of reason and should be interpreted with reference to the purposes of legal representation. Rule 0.2, Scope, cmt. [1]. None of the URLs listed in the inquiry make false promises or misrepresentations about a lawyer or a lawyer's services. Although a person who is using the internet to research a medical condition, such as mesothelioma, or injuries caused by prescription medications or on the job, may be given one of these website addresses in a response to an internet browser search, if the user is not interested in legal advice relative to the medical condition or the injury, the user does not have to click on the URL or, having done so, may exit the website as soon as he or she determines that it does not contain the information being sought. At worst, the URLs may cause the user of the internet an extra click of the mouse and, at best, they may provide a user with helpful information about legal rights. Therefore, as long as a URL of a law firm is not otherwise misleading or false and the homepage of the website identifies the sponsoring law firm or lawyer, the URL does not have to contain language specifically identifying the website as one belonging to a law firm.

2006 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

April 21, 2006

Withholding Information from Employer at Direction of Workers' Compensation Carrier in Joint Representation

Opinion rules that a lawyer who represents the employer and its workers' compensation carrier must share the case evaluation, litigation plan, and other information with both clients unless the clients give informed consent to withhold such information.

Inquiry:

As a defense attorney for workers' compensation cases, Attorney A is retained by an insurance company or a third-party administrator to represent both the carrier and the employer. In most workers' compensation insurance policies, the carrier has the right to direct the litigation and to resolve the claim without approval of the employer. Attorney A frequently receives general instruction from the carrier/third-party administrator not to provide the employer with a copy of any correspondence that includes an evaluation of the claim or a discussion of the litigation strategy. In addition, the following are common situations in which a defense lawyer is faced with the dilemma of what information relative to the evaluation of the claim or the litigation strategy may or should be provided to the employer:

1. The employer's representative and the plaintiff are the same person (i.e., the plaintiff owns the business).

2. The employer's representative and the plaintiff are related or close friends. Anything Attorney A sends to the representative will be forwarded to the plaintiff.

3. Two or more insurance carriers provided coverage for the employer over different time periods and the interests of the carriers are adverse. If Attorney A sends an evaluation to the employer, it can be anticipated that it will be forwarded to the other carrier(s).

What duty does the defense lawyer have, in these situations, to provide the employer with copies of correspondence to the carrier/third-party administrator that contain evaluations of the claim or discussions of the litigation plan?

Opinion:

Attorney A represents both the employer and the carrier and therefore has a duty to keep each client informed about the status of the matter. As noted in comment [31] to Rule 1.7, "…common representation will almost certainly be inadequate if one client asks the lawyer not to disclose to the other client information relevant to the common representation." The comment continues as follows:

> This is so because the lawyer has an equal duty of loyalty to each client, and each client has the right to be informed of anything bearing on the representation that might affect that client's interests and the right to expect that the lawyer will use that information to that client's benefit. See Rule 1.4. The lawyer should, at the outset of the common representation and as part of the process of obtaining each client's informed consent, advise each client that information will be shared and that the lawyer will have to withdraw if one client decides that some matter material to the representation should be kept from the other. In limited circumstances, it may be appropriate for the lawyer to proceed with the representation when the clients have agreed, after being properly informed, that the lawyer will keep certain information confidential.

Loyalty to a client is impaired when a lawyer cannot keep the client reasonably informed or promptly comply with reasonable requests for information. Rule 1.4(a); RPC 153; 03 FEO 12. The employer and the carrier are both entitled to Attorney A's full, candid evaluation of all aspects of the claim. See 03 FEO12. If the carrier will not consent to Attorney A providing the same information to employer or the employer will not agree that certain information will be withheld, then Attorney A has a conflict and must withdraw from the representation of the employer and the carrier. If the carrier hires another lawyer to represent only the employer, Attorney A may—with the employer's consent—continue to represent the carrier and withhold evaluation and litigation strategy information from the employer.

2006 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

April 21, 2006

Referring Client to a Financing Company

Opinion rules that a lawyer may only refer a client to a financing company if certain conditions are met.

Inquiry #1:

Lawyer receives an unsolicited email from a representative of ABC Financial, a company that purchases notes secured by deeds of trust, mortgages, and contracts. ABC Financial also will pay its clients a lump sum of cash in exchange for a client's interest in lottery winnings, structured insurance settlements, and rental income. ABC Financial would like Lawyer to refer his clients to them.

May Lawyer do so?

Opinion #1:

Lawyer may only make the referral if certain conditions are satisfied. Pursuant to 2000 Formal Ethics Opinion 4, a lawyer may refer a client in need of money for living expenses to a finance company if the lawyer is satisfied that the company's financing arrangement is legal, the lawyer receives no consideration from the financing company for making the referral, and, in the lawyer's opinion, the referral is in the best interest of the client. In no event should Lawyer refer a client to ABC Financial merely as a means to pay Lawyer for his legal services.

The Ethics Committee cannot opine as to the legality of any financing arrangement with ABC Financial.

Inquiry #2:

If Lawyer determines that the financing arrangement is legal and that the referral is in the best interest of the client, may Lawyer accept a "finder's fee" from ABC Financial in exchange for the referral?

Opinion #2:

No. See Opinion #1 above.

2006 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

January 23, 2009

Representation in Purchase of Foreclosed Property

Opinion rules that a lawyer who represented the trustee or served as the trustee in a foreclosure proceeding at which the lender acquired the subject property may represent all parties on the closing of the sale of the property by the lender provided the lawyer concludes that his judgment will not be impaired by loyalty to the lender and there is full disclosure and informed consent.

Inquiry #1:

Seller (a financial institution) acquires property as a result of the foreclosure by execution of the power of sale contained in a deed of trust securing its own note or a note that it was servicing. Buyer entered into a contract with Seller to buy the property that was repossessed via foreclosure.

Attorney A regularly handles foreclosure proceedings for Seller either serving as the trustee or as the lawyer for the trustee (both roles are referred to herein as the "foreclosure lawyer"). In the current proceeding Attorney A served as the foreclosure lawyer.

Buyer would like Attorney A to close the sale. May Attorney A represent both Buyer and Seller on the closing of the transaction, including examining title and giving an opinion as to title to Buyer or on behalf of Buyer?

Opinion #1:

Yes, provided there is full disclosure to Buyer of all potential risks and Buyer gives informed consent. Multiple representation of parties to a real estate closing is allowed in RPC 210 and in 97 FEO 8. The latter opinion holds that a lawyer who regularly represents a real estate developer may represent the buyer and the developer in the closing of residential real estate. Rule 1.7 permits multiple representation notwithstanding the existence of a concurrent conflict of interest if the lawyer concludes that he or she can provide competent and diligent representation to each affected client and the clients give informed consent which is confirmed in writing.

If Attorney A's relationship with Seller is such that Attorney A's personal financial interests in preserving and protecting his relationship with Seller impairs his independent professional judgment, ability to provide competent and diligent representation to Buyer, and/or his ability to be objective and impartial when making disclosures necessary to obtain informed consent, then Attorney A may not seek the informed consent of Buyer and may not represent Buyer in the closing.

If Attorney A concludes that, under the circumstances, he can still exercise independent professional judgment on behalf of all of the parties to the closing, he may seek the informed consent of Buyer. Obtaining the informed consent of the buyer in this situation means that the buyer must be advised of the potential risks to a purchaser of property that was previously foreclosed including the distinctions between marketable and insurable title and between a non-warranty and a warranty deed. The buyer must also be advised of his potential liability for homeowners' association dues. Most importantly, the lawyer must disclose his prior participation in the foreclosure and explain that the lawyer must examine his own work on the foreclosure to certify title to the property.

Attorney A may represent all of the parties to the closing even if Buyer procures financing to purchase the property (including financing provided by Seller). Attorney A must be able fully to explain, without objection from the lender/seller the loan documents, setting forth the terms of repayment (and potentially including a balloon payment and/or prepayment penalty), and the status of title including any material exceptions between the lender's and owner's title insurance policies.

If Buyer consents to the representation, Attorney A may proceed unless and until it becomes apparent that he cannot manage the potential conflict between the interests of the lender/seller and the buyer. If the lawyer determines that he can no longer exercise his independent professional judgment on behalf of both clients, he must withdraw from the representation of both clients.

Inquiry #2:

Under the facts of Inquiry #1, the contract signed by Buyer provides that Seller will select the title and closing agent. However, the contract specifies that the buyer is also entitled to legal representation at the buyer's own expense. Seller names Attorney A as the "title/closing agent" for the sale to Buyer. While serving in the capacity of "title/closing agent", Attorney A proposes to provide legal representation to both Buyer and Seller with the consent of both parties. May Attorney A represent both Buyer and Seller on the closing of the transaction, including examining title and giving an opinion as to title to Buyer?

Opinion #2:

No. Although 97 FEO 8 allows a lawyer to represent both the developer and the buyer of a house in a subdivision with the informed consent of the buyer, the purchase of foreclosed property presents special risks to a purchaser that are not present in the purchase of a subdivision property. The purchaser of foreclosed property requires legal representation that is completely unimpaired by even the potential of a conflict of interest. The fact that Attorney is named in the contract as the title/closing agent indicates that there is a close business and professional relationship between Attorney A and Seller. It is apparent that, under these circumstances, it is in Attorney A's personal financial interest to preserve and protect his relationship with Seller. This self-interest will impair Attorney A's independent professional judgment and his ability to be objective and impartial when making the disclosures necessary to obtain informed consent from Buyer. Therefore, Attorney A may not seek the informed consent of Buyer and may not represent Buyer in the closing.

Inquiry #3:

Under the facts of Inquiry #2, Attorney B regularly represents Seller on various matters but did not represent the trustee on the foreclosure of the subject property and did not act as trustee. May Attorney B represent both Buyer and Seller on the closing of the transaction, including examining title and giving an opinion as to title to Buyer?

Opinion #3:

Yes, subject to fulfilling the conditions on common representation set forth in Opinion #1.

Inquiry #4:

Under the facts of Inquiry #2, Attorney A intends to represent only the interests of Seller and does not intend to represent Buyer in closing the transaction. May Attorney A limit his representation in this manner?

Opinion #4:

Yes, Attorney A may limit his representation to Seller. However, if he does so, in light of the provisions of the purchase contract, it is possible that Buyer will be misled about Attorney A's role. Therefore, Attorney A must fully disclose to Buyer that Seller is his sole client, he does not represent the interests of Buyer, the closing documents will be prepared consistent with the specifications in the contract to purchase and, in the absence of such specifications, he will prepare the documents in a manner that will protect the interests of his client, Seller, and, therefore, Buyer may wish to obtain his own lawyer. See, e.g., RPC 40 (disclosure must be far enough in advance of the closing that the buyer can procure his own counsel), RPC 210, 04 FEO 10, and Rule 4.3(a). Because of the strong potential for Buyer to be misled, the disclosure must be thorough and robust.

Inquiry #5:

Under the facts of Inquiry #4, if Attorney A limits his representation to Seller, but closes the transaction, does he have any duty to disclose or discuss any of the following with Buyer: defects of title; the difference between insurable title and marketable title; the exceptions contained in the title policy and the need for exception documents at closing; and the terms of the sales contract?

Opinion #5:

If Attorney A explicitly limits his representation to Seller, he cannot give any legal advice to Buyer except the advice to secure counsel. Rule 4.3(a). In light of the significant issues involved for Buyer, Attorney A should advise Buyer to obtain his own lawyer.

Inquiry #6:

Under the facts of Inquiry #4, Attorney A closes the transaction. The contract required the buyer to pay the closing agent's "customary closing fee," therefore, Buyer pays a fee to Attorney A as the title/closing agent. Subsequently, a defect of title caused by Seller is discovered. May Attorney A be held liable to Buyer for malpractice?

Opinion #6:

This is a legal question that is outside the purview of the Ethics Committee.

Inquiry #7:

Under the facts of Inquiry #1, the contract to buy the property signed by Buyer contains the following conditions: Seller will select the title and closing agent; Seller will pay the title examination fee and the premium for the owner's title insurance policy; Buyer will pay the title/closing agent's "customary closing fee"; and all closing transactions will be held at the title/closing agent's office. The contract specifies that the buyer is entitled to legal representation at the buyer's own expense. Seller names Attorney A as the "title/closing agent" for the sale to Buyer.

May Attorney A represent both Buyer and Seller on the closing of the transaction, including examining title and giving an opinion as to title to Buyer?

Inquiry #7:

No, see Opinion #2 above.

Inquiry # 8:

Under the facts of Inquiries #2, 3 and 4, Buyer asks Attorney Y to represent him on the closing of the purchase of the property. Buyer wants Attorney Y to examine the title to the property, give his opinion as to title, and act as Buyer's agent at the closing.

Attorney A insists that the contract requires Buyer to accept him as the closing agent for the transaction even if he only represents Seller. May Attorney A refuse to allow Attorney Y to participate in the closing as Buyer's lawyer?

Opinion #8:

No. Clients are entitled to legal counsel of their choice. See, e.g., RPC 48. A lawyer may not participate in any scheme or contract that states or implies that a party to the transaction does not have the right to obtain independent legal counsel to represent his interests. Drafting such a provision for a client or agreeing to provide representation pursuant to such a provision is unethical because the provision will chill the buyer's right to independent legal counsel even if the enforceability of the provision is doubtful.

Attorney A may, by the terms of the purchase agreement, be the designated closing agent for the sale. However, if Buyer hires a lawyer to represent his interests by examining and giving him an opinion on title and participating in the closing on his behalf, the other lawyer may not interfere with this representation. See, e.g., Rule 4.2. In addition, Attorney A must comply with the prohibition in Rule 4.2(a) on direct communications with a represented person without the consent of the lawyer for the represented person. Any funds that are delivered by Buyer to Attorney A are held by Attorney A in a fiduciary capacity for Buyer and must be disbursed in accordance with and upon fulfillment of the conditions of the contract. See Rule 1.15-2(a). If Buyer chooses to obtain his own lawyer, Attorney A may not interfere with Buyer's representation by his chosen lawyer or needlessly complicate the ability of that lawyer to represent Buyer. Both lawyers shall endeavor to insure that closing responsibilities are completed expeditiously and in compliance with RPC 191 and the Good Funds Settlement Act (if applicable). Specifically, both lawyers shall endeavor expeditiously to provide and review draft documents, to resolve title issues subject to the terms of the contract, to deliver the executed documents, to update title, and to disburse the closing funds.

Inquiry #9:

Under the facts of Inquiries #2, 3, and 4, Attorney A agrees that Attorney Y will represent Buyer's interests at the closing. However, Attorney A claims that he is still entitled to a fee from Buyer because the terms of the contract.

May the legal fee for Attorney A's representation of Seller be charged to Buyer?

Opinion #9:

Whether the contract to purchase the property requires Buyer to pay Attorney A's fee for representation of Seller is a legal question outside the purview of the Ethics Committee. However, a lawyer may be paid by a third party, including an opposing party, provided the lawyer complies with Rule 1.8(f) and the fee is not illegal or clearly excessive in violation of Rule 1.5(a). See RPC 196. Attorney A's time and labor relative to the closing may be reduced because of the legal services performed by Attorney Y on behalf of Buyer. If so, this fact should be taken into account in determining whether the "customary fee" for closing the transaction is excessive and an appropriate reduction in the fee should be made. Rule 1.5(a). Because Buyer is represented by Attorney Y, Attorney A may not charge or collect any money for representing Buyer.

Inquiry #10:

A real estate agent prepared the purchase contract. It alters the usual closing arrangements, waives many "normal" rights of a buyer, and favors the seller by allowing the seller to terminate the contract for any reason and return the deposit without further liability. Is the real estate agent engaged in the unauthorized practice of law when preparing the contract? Does it matter whether the real estate agent is a buyer's agent, a seller's agent, or a dual agent? Does it matter whether the seller and the buyer have different real estate agents? Is consumer protection legislation needed?

Opinion #10:

These questions do not relate to the professional responsibilities of lawyers and cannot be answered by the Ethics Committee.

2006 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

July 21, 2006

Participation in a Prepaid Legal Service Plan

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not participate in a prepaid legal services plan unless all the conditions for participation are met and participation does not otherwise result in a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct.

Inquiry #1:

Estate Plans is a prepaid legal service plan registered with the North Carolina State Bar. In its solicitation letter, Estate Plans states that it provides various “plans of protection” from the most basic, consisting of a will, trust documents, power of attorney, health care power of attorney, and living will, to more comprehensive estate planning services. For a yearly fee, the solicitation letter claims clients would have access to “qualified local attorneys” who would draft these legal documents for about half the price the client would normally pay.

In addition, Estate Plans also claims to be "approved" by the State Bar.

May a lawyer participate in Estate Plans and provide legal services to persons covered under the plan?

Opinion #1:

No. A lawyer may only participate in a prepaid legal service plan if the plan meets the conditions of participation in Rule 7.3(d)(2). A prepaid legal services plan is "any arrangement by which a person, firm, or corporation, not authorized to engage in the practice of law, in exchange for any valuable consideration, offers to provide or arranges the provision of legal services that are paid for in advance of the need for the service." Rule 7.3(d)(1).

For a lawyer to ethically participate with a prepaid legal services plan, the following conditions must be satisfied:

(A) The plan must be operated by an organization that is not owned or directed by the lawyer;

(B) The plan must be registered with the North Carolina State Bar and comply with all applicable rules regarding such plans;

(C) The lawyer must notify the State Bar in writing before participating in a plan and must notify the State Bar no later than 30 days after the lawyer discontinues participation in the plan;

(D) After reasonable investigation, the lawyer must have a good faith belief that the plan is being operated in compliance with the Revised Rules of Professional Conduct and other pertinent rules of the State Bar;

(E) All advertisements by the plan representing that it is registered with the State Bar shall also explain that registration does not constitute approval by the State Bar; and

(F) Notwithstanding the prohibitions in paragraph (a), the plan may use in-person or telephone contact to solicit memberships or subscriptions provided:

(i) The solicited person is not known to need legal services in a particular matter covered by the plan; and

(ii) The contact does not involve coercion, duress, or harassment and the communication with the solicited person is not false, deceptive, or misleading.

Rule 7.3(d)(2).

Estate Plans has failed to meet at least one of the conditions for participation by a North Carolina lawyer. Although Estate Plans may represent that it is registered with the North Carolina State Bar, it may not state or imply that the State Bar has approved its plan. Rule 7.3(d)(2)(E). Under these circumstances, a lawyer must inform Estate Plans that it cannot participate in the plan unless its solicitation letter complies with Rule 7.3(d)(2)(E). Even if a prepaid services plan was at one time operating in compliance with the Rules of Professional Conduct, a lawyer participating in such a plan has an ongoing duty to determine that the plan continues to operate in accordance with the Rules.

Inquiry #2:

Estate Plans claims that its legal services plan can save clients money because the clients meet directly with its employees, who are qualified estate planning consultants, rather than a lawyer. It is unclear whether or to what extent the client has contact with the lawyer drafting the estate planning documents.

May a lawyer participate with Estate Plans under these circumstances?

Opinion #2:

Rule 5.4(c) states that a lawyer "shall not permit a person who recommends, engages, or pays the lawyer to render legal services for another to direct or regulate the lawyer's professional judgment in rendering such legal services." The lawyer also has an obligation to provide competent representation and to communicate with the client to the extent necessary to do so. Rules 1.1 and 1.4.

The lawyer need not be present during communications with a prospective insured relative to participate in the plan. However, the lawyer must communicate with the insured client in order to fulfill the duties described above. If a third party decides what services the lawyer ultimately will provide to the client, then the lawyer has been deprived of the ability to exercise independent judgment to determine what services may be appropriate under the circumstances in violation of Rule 5.4(c). In addition, the lawyer needs to make sure he has received and has given enough information to the client so that he can provide competent representation. Certainly, there is no issue with a third party recording intake information; however, the lawyer must be able to engage in a dialogue with the client in order to elicit the information necessary to provide competent representation. See 2003 FEO 7.

Inquiry #3:

A lawyer believes the initial packet provided by Estate Plans to clients contains information that may be misleading.

May the lawyer participate with Estate Plans under these circumstances?

Opinion #3:

No. If a lawyer believes the information Estate Plans is providing to the client is misleading, then he should not participate in the plan.

2006 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

April 21, 2006

County Tax Attorney Purchasing Property at Tax Foreclosure Sale

Opinion rules that the county tax attorney may not bid at a tax foreclosure sale of real property.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A is the tax attorney for the county. If the county's tax collector is unsuccessful in collecting taxes, the case is referred to Attorney A for legal action. Ordinarily, Attorney A sends a demand letter to the delinquent taxpayer. If the demand letter does not result in payment, Attorney A files a foreclosure action. If service of the lawsuit does not result in the payment of taxes, the presiding judge appoints Attorney A as the commissioner to foreclose upon the real property to satisfy the taxes due. Attorney A then follows all statutory procedures for a foreclosure action. The county always "bids in" the property for the amount of back taxes owed plus the costs that have accrued.

On at least one occasion, a property owner contacted Attorney A after receiving the demand letter and offered to sell her property directly to Attorney A to satisfy her tax liability. Attorney A agreed to purchase the property directly from the property owner. On another occasion, Attorney A instructed his paralegal to attend the public auction and submit a bid in excess of the amount bid by the county if no one else bid on the property. The paralegal submitted the only other bid and later transferred the real property to Attorney A for the amount bid at auction. May Attorney A, who is the appointed commissioner, submit a bid on her own account at a tax foreclosure sale she is conducting?

Opinion #1:

No. As the appointed commissioner, Attorney A has a duty to oversee the sale of the foreclosed property in a fair and impartial manner. Advancing a personal interest by bidding on the foreclosed property violates this duty. G.S. §105-374; Hinson v. Morgan, 225 N.C. 740, 36 S.E. 2d 266 (1945); Rule 8.4(d); see also RPC 24 and RPC 82.

Inquiry #2:

If Attorney A may not submit a bid, may she have an agent or employee bid on her behalf?

Opinion #2:

No. Attorney A must insure that the conduct of her employee is compatible with her own professional obligations. Rule 5.3(b)(c).

Inquiry #3:

May Attorney A agree to purchase property from a delinquent taxpayer who offers to sell her property to Attorney A prior to the initiation of a formal tax foreclosure proceeding?

Opinion #3:

No, Attorney A may not purchase property directly from a delinquent taxpayer unless she has a reasonable belief that her personal interest in the property will not adversely affect the representation of the county, the transaction is fair, and she has obtained the informed consent of the county, confirmed in writing. Rule 1.7 and Rule 1.8(b). The duty to disclose and obtain the consent of the county arises as soon as the lawyer decides to act in her own interest by offering to purchase the property in written or oral communications with the taxpayer.

If Attorney A obtains the consent of the county, she must also follow the disclosure requirements in Rule 4.3 when dealing with unrepresented taxpayers. Specifically, she may not state or imply that she is disinterested and she must make reasonable efforts to correct any misunderstandings in this regard. She must also refrain from giving legal advice to unrepresented taxpayers other than the advice to secure counsel.

2006 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

April 21, 2006

Editor's Note: Amendments to Rule 7.3(c) were approved after this opinion was adopted. The amendments supersede this opinion. See also 2007 FEO 15.

Requirements for Extraneous Statements on Envelope of Solicitation Letter

Opinion rules that a lawyer may put extraneous statements on the envelope of a solicitation letter provided the statements do not mislead the recipient and the font used for the statements is smaller than the font used for the advertising disclaimer required by Rule 7.3(c).

Inquiry #1:

After one of his employees goes to the court house to copy recent accident reports from the public records, Attorney A sends targeted direct mail letters to the people involved in the automobile accidents. The purpose of the letters is to solicit professional employment. Attorney A complies with the requirements of Rule 7.3(c) by including the words "This is an advertisement for legal services" on the outside envelope and at the beginning of the body of the letter in print as large as Attorney A's firm name in the return address and letterhead. Attorney A would like to include a copy of the accident report with each letter and put the statement "Accident Report Enclosed" on the envelope.

May Attorney A put the statement "Accident Report Enclosed" on the envelope of a targeted direct mail letter?

Opinion #1:

Rule 4.1 requires a lawyer to be truthful in his statements to others. As noted in comment [1] to Rule 4.1, "[m]isrepresentations can …occur by partially true but misleading statements or omissions that are the equivalent of affirmative false statements." Although Attorney A includes a copy of the accident report in each solicitation letter, the statement "Accident Report Enclosed" implies that the solicitation letter is an official communication and omits the fact that the enclosed document is a copy of the public record. As a result, a recipient may believe that the solicitation letter is an official communication and open it without reading or heeding the advertising disclosure. The statement appears designed to mislead the recipient about the importance and purpose of the correspondence.

If extraneous statements, such as this, are put on the envelope of a solicitation letter, the statements must provide enough information to avoid misleading the recipient. Therefore, Attorney A may state on the envelope of a targeted direct mail letter that a copy of the accident report is enclosed but only if the statement makes clear that (1) the report is a copy of a public record and (2) the solicitation letter itself is not an official communication of a government agency.

Inquiry #2:

What size font should be used for an extraneous statement on the envelope of a solicitation letter?

Opinion #2:

The purpose of the advertising disclaimer required by Rule 7.3(c) is to forewarn the recipient as to the nature of the communication. For this reason, the rule requires the disclaimer to be conspicuous by dictating that it must be in a font that is at least as large as the name of the lawyer or the firm name in the return address. However, if other statements on the envelope are in a font that is larger than the advertising disclaimer, the disclaimer will no longer be conspicuous. Therefore, to preserve the intent and purpose of Rule 7.3(c), the print used for the advertising disclaimer must be as large or larger than the print used for the name of the lawyer or the law firm in the return address and any other statement on the envelope.

2006 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

October 20, 2006

Participation in a For-Profit Networking Organization

Opinion rules that a lawyer may be a member of a for-profit networking organization provided the lawyer does not distribute business cards and is not required to make referrals to other members.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney wants to become a member of a for-profit referral and networking organization that has numerous chapters around the world. Each chapter consists of various professionals and business people who seek business referrals through networking with others. Only one person from any given profession or line of business can become a member in any particular chapter. The annual fee for a membership is approximately $295.00.

Each chapter holds weekly meetings. Members are required to attend these meetings (exceeding a maximum number of absences results in termination of membership), and they may bring guests. Among the activities at each meeting, each member gives a short presentation (which may be described as a 60-second "commercial") advertising his/her services to those present.

Members are encouraged to provide each other with business referrals, although no tangible compensation is provided for such referrals and there is no penalty for not providing referrals to other members. To keep track of referrals, a member is expected to fill out a "ticket" for each referral he/she provides to another member. The ticket is given to the member receiving the referral, and the referring member retains a copy.

The organization's website states in part:

> Belonging to [this organization] is like having dozens of sales people working for you...because all of them carry several copies of your business card around with them. When they meet someone who could use your products or services, they hand out your card and recommend you.* It's as simple as that! It's simple because it's based on a proven concept by [the organization's] founder…. If I give you business you'll give me business and we'll both benefit as a result.

(*) Note, some professions, specifically attorneys and certain health care professionals, may not be permitted to seek direct referrals through in-person solicitation through the use of business cards pursuant to their ethical code. Members of [the organization] that belong to these professions are directed to follow their profession's own ethical guidelines.

May Attorney become a participating member of this organization?

Opinion #1:

Yes, provided participation does not require Attorney to violate the Rules of Professional Conduct.

When advising a client to use the services of a third party, a lawyer must exercise independent professional judgment and give competent advice. Rule 1.7 and Rule 1.1. In addition, the lawyer may not give anything of value to a person for recommending the lawyer's services (with certain limited exceptions not relevant here), and may not engage in in-person solicitation of prospective clients either directly or by use of an agent. Rule 7.2(b) and Rule 7.3(a).

Therefore, a lawyer may participate in a networking organization, such as the one described in this inquiry, only if making referrals to other members of the organization is not a condition of membership and the lawyer is not required to fill out referral "tickets." If the lawyer refers a client to another member of the organization, he may only do so upon receiving the informed consent of the client, and after determining that the client would benefit from the referral, the other member's credentials are legitimate, and the other member is qualified to provide services to the client.

The lawyer is prohibited from making a referral to another member of the organization on a quid pro quo basis. The lawyer must emphasize to the other members of the organization that any referral to him should be based upon the member's independent analysis of his qualifications.

Any lawyer who participates in an organization of this nature is expected to act in good faith. If, in fact, reciprocal referrals are an explicit or implicit condition of membership in the organization, the lawyer may not participate.

Inquiry #2:

If Attorney may participate in the organization, may Attorney make presentations regarding his/her services to members and their guests at weekly meetings?

Opinion #2:

Yes.

Inquiry #3:

May Attorney provide his/her business cards to other members for distribution to third parties?

Opinion #3:

No, because of the risk of in-person solicitation by the other members on the lawyer's behalf.

Inquiry #4:

May Attorney ask other members to refer business to Attorney?

Opinion #4:

No. However, Attorney may provide the other members with information about his qualifications.

2006 Formal Ethics Opinion 8

July 21, 2006

Disbursement of Trust Funds

Opinion rules that a lawyer may disburse against deposited items in reliance upon a bank's funding schedule under certain circumstances.

Inquiry:

Attorney receives insurance company checks for payment of workers' compensation and personal injury settlements. Upon receipt, Attorney deposits these checks into her trust account. Because the insurance checks are not among the identified instruments in the Good Funds Settlement Act, G.S. §45A-4, she must wait until the funds have been "irrevocably credited" or collected before disbursing from the trust account to the client. RPC 191. Attorney has been unable to locate a bank that is willing to confirm when deposited funds have been collected.

Attorney has consulted with other lawyers in her locality with similar practices. Rather than call the bank to confirm that the funds have been collected, the lawyers routinely disburse against items deposited in the trust account, based upon prior dealings with the banks, in accordance with the following funding schedule: 3 business days for an in-state check and 7 business days for an out-of-state check. Attorney would like to follow this funding or "float" schedule for disbursements, as it appears to be the standard in her community.

May Attorney disburse funds from her trust account in reliance upon this schedule?

Opinion:

RPC 191 permits lawyers to disburse immediately from the trust account in reliance upon the deposit of funds provisionally credited to the account if the funds are in the form of cash, wired funds, or one of the enumerated instruments listed in the Good Funds Settlement Act. For all other instruments, a lawyer has an obligation to conduct reasonable due diligence to determine whether funds deposited into the trust account have been collected prior to disbursement.

Initially, a lawyer always should consult with her bank to determine when a particular instrument has been collected or funded. Before disbursing, a lawyer should also consider the source of the funds, i.e., whether the payor is reputable and whether the instrument is likely to be honored. If a lawyer receives confirmation by the bank that the funds deposited are collected, then the lawyer may rely upon this information and disburse against the funds. A lawyer reasonably may rely upon her bank's funding or "float" schedule or policy only when the lawyer is unable to confirm whether funds have been irrevocably credited to his account and he has no reason to believe a particular instrument will not be honored under the circumstances. In any case, if the lawyer subsequently learns that an instrument has been dishonored, the lawyer must act immediately to protect other trust account property by personally paying the amount of any failed deposit or arranging for payment from other sources. "An attorney should take care not to disburse against uncollected funds in situations where the attorney's assets or credit would be insufficient to fund the trust account checks in the event that an... item is dishonored." RPC 191.

Therefore, if Attorney is unable to confirm that a particular insurance check has been collected, she may reasonably rely upon and disburse in accordance with her bank's funding schedule as long as 1) she reasonably believes the trust account check will be honored, and 2) she is able to fund the check in the event it is ultimately dishonored.

2006 Formal Ethics Opinion 9

July 21, 2006

Pursuing Frivolous Claim at the Direction of GAL for Plaintiff

Opinion rules that if the lawyer concludes that pursuit of a lawsuit filed against a defendant is frivolous, but the GAL for the minor client insists on continuing the litigation, the lawyer must either move to withdraw from the representation or seek to have the GAL removed.

Inquiry #1:

Lawyer was hired by the mother of a minor (Minor) to file a personal injury action. The mother (GAL) is the appointed guardian ad litem for Minor. Minor was a passenger in a car driven by his maternal grandmother (Grandmother) when he was severely injured as a result of a collision between a truck and Grandmother's car. Based upon the limited information that was initially available, Lawyer brought an action against the driver of the truck but not against Grandmother. Subsequent scientific investigation by Lawyer's expert has led the expert to conclude that Grandmother was negligent and the truck driver was not negligent. Grandmother has substantial assets.

Lawyer and GAL disagree about the conduct of the litigation. Based upon the expert's analysis, Lawyer believes that the action against the truck driver is not warranted by the facts and should be dismissed. He also believes that the interests of Minor can only be protected if a personal injury lawsuit is initiated against Grandmother. GAL does not want a lawsuit filed against her mother.

Does Lawyer owe a duty of confidentiality to GAL?

Opinion #1:

Yes, in her representative capacity as GAL for Minor.

Minor and GAL, in her representative capacity, are both clients of Lawyer. 2002 FEO 8 provides:

> Rule 17(a) and (b) of the North Carolina Rules of Civil Procedure require an action to be brought by the "real party in interest" and, in the case of a minor, by a general guardian or, if there is none, by an appointed guardian ad litem. As a party, the guardian ad litem may choose to be represented by legal counsel and permit legal counsel to make decisions about the strategy for the litigation. See Rule of Professional Conduct 1.2, cmt. [1] ("In questions of means, the lawyer should assume responsibility for technical and legal tactical issues....").

Therefore, Lawyer's primary duty is to represent the interests of Minor, who is the real party in interest. See RPC 163.

Lawyer owes the duty of confidentiality to Minor and to GAL acting in her official capacity. See e.g., RPC 195. To the extent GAL acts outside of her official capacity as the legal representative for Minor, the information learned by Lawyer may be disclosed, even over the objections of GAL, if necessary to represent Minor.

Inquiry #2:

If GAL insists that Lawyer continue to prosecute the lawsuit against the truck driver, what should Lawyer do?

Opinion #2:

Rule 3.1 states in pertinent part,

> [a] lawyer shall not bring or defend a proceeding, or assert or controvert an issue therein, unless there is a basis in law and fact for doing so that is not frivolous, which includes a good faith argument for an extension, modification, or reversal of existing law...

If, based upon his expert's analysis, Lawyer believes that Minor does not have a claim against the truck driver and the litigation against the truck driver is, therefore, frivolous, Lawyer must file a motion to withdraw. See Rule 1.16(b)(8). As an alternative to withdrawal, if Lawyer believes GAL is failing to fulfill her fiduciary duties, Lawyer may seek to have GAL removed and replaced by an independent guardian ad litem who can evaluate the action against the truck driver and the claim against Grandmother objectively and make an unbiased decision about the conduct of the litigation. See e.g., Rule 1.14(b); see also RPC 163 and 2002 FEO 8.

Inquiry #3:

What communication should Lawyer have with his clients prior to filing a motion to withdraw?

Opinion #3:

Prior to filing a motion to withdraw, Lawyer must inform GAL and Minor of the status of the case, explain the reason he is moving to withdraw, and provide appropriate legal advice. Rule 1.2 and Rule 1.4.

Inquiry #4:

What information may Lawyer disclose about the dispute with GAL in either a motion to withdraw or a motion to remove GAL?

Opinion #4:

Lawyer may only disclose confidential client information if he is allowed to do so by Rules of Professional Conduct. Rule 1.6(b)(1) permits disclosure of confidential information to comply with the Rules, the law, or a court order. (The other exceptions to the duty of confidentiality that are found in Rule 1.6 are not relevant.) Lawyer's motion to withdraw may, therefore, disclose only that Lawyer believes that his withdrawal is required by Rule 1.16(a)(1) (representation will result in violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct), Rule 1.16(b)(2) (client insists on action that is contrary to the advice and judgment of the lawyer), and/or Rule 1.16(b)(8) (client insists upon presenting a claim or defense that is not warranted under existing law). To further protect the confidences of Minor, Lawyer may ask that the court consider the motion in camera.

A motion to remove and replace GAL should, similarly, avoid the disclosure of confidential information unless the disclosure is allowed by law or court order, or disclosure is impliedly authorized to carry out the representation. Rule 1.6(a). For example, Lawyer may disclose information about GAL relative to actions that violate her fiduciary duties to Minor.

Inquiry #5:

GAL is also named in her individual capacity as a plaintiff in the lawsuit against Grandmother in order to pursue her personal claim for reimbursement of medical expenditures made on behalf of Minor. Lawyer also represents her in this capacity. Does the dual representation of GAL in her personal and official capacities alter the responses set forth above?

Opinion #5:

Yes. Lawyer may not file a motion to remove GAL while GAL is represented by Lawyer in her personal capacity because this action would be directly adverse to GAL. Rule 1.7(a). Even if Lawyer withdraws from the representation of GAL in her personal capacity only (and continues to represent Minor and GAL in her official capacity as representative for Minor), Lawyer may not file a motion to remove and replace GAL because Rule 1.9(a) prohibits a lawyer from representing a person whose interests are materially adverse to those of former client in the same or a substantially related matter. Therefore, the only course of action available to Lawyer is to move to withdraw from the representation of all of the plaintiffs if he believes that the action against the truck driver is frivolous.

2006 Formal Ethics Opinion 10

July 21, 2006

Safeguarding Confidential Health Information of Clients and Third Parties

Opinion rules that a lawyer must use reasonable care under the circumstances to protect from disclosure a client's confidential health information and is encouraged, but not required, to use similar care with regard to health information of third parties.

Inquiry #1:

The Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 (HIPAA) required the US Department of Health and Human Services to establish a set of national standards for the protection of certain health information including identifiable medical records of individual patients. Pursuant to this mandate, the US Department of Health issued Standards for Privacy of Individually Identifiable Health Information (the Privacy Rule) which establishes national standards for the protection of protected health information. The Privacy Rule applies to health plans, health care clearinghouses, and to any health care provider who transmits health information in electronic form in connection with certain specified transactions.[1]

Lawyers frequently obtain medical records and health information of both clients and opposing parties in conjunction with the prosecution or defense of medical malpractice and personal injury cases and other representations involving questions of injury or disability. It does not appear that lawyers or law firms are covered by the Privacy Rule.[2] However, in light of the public policy favoring the protection of sensitive medical information that is manifested by the Privacy Rule, what actions should a lawyer take to safeguard the health information of a client from disclosure to unauthorized persons?

Opinion #1:

The duty of confidentiality set forth in Rule 1.6 of the Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits a lawyer from revealing information acquired during the professional relationship unless the client gives informed consent, the disclosure is impliedly authorized to carry out the purpose of the representation, or the disclosure is otherwise permitted by the Rules. Comment [3] to Rule 1.6 observes that the confidentiality rule applies "not only to matters communicated in confidence by the client, but also to all information acquired during the representation." Therefore, health information obtained during the representation of a client is clearly covered by the duty of confidentiality.

Neither Rule 1.6 nor the comment to the rule provide guidance on the standard of care that a lawyer must use in fulfilling the duty of confidentiality. However, in the absence of a specific mandate, a lawyer is generally expected to use reasonable care in fulfilling his or her duties under the Rules. See Rule 0.2, Scope ("The Rules of Professional Conduct are rules of reason."). For example, RPC 133 states that a law firm is not required to shred waste paper that includes confidential client information and may recycle the waste paper provided the lawyer determines that > those persons or entities responsible for the disposal of waste paper employ procedures which effectively minimize the risk that confidential information might be disclosed….[and] custodial personnel…are conscious of the fact that confidential information may be present in waste paper products and are aware that the attorney's professional obligations require that there be no breach of confidentiality in regard to such information.

Similarly, RPC 215 provides that a lawyer may communicate confidential client information over a cellular or cordless telephone, despite the risk of interception, because the duty of confidentiality "does not require that a lawyer use only infallibly secure methods of communication." Instead, the lawyer "must use reasonable care to select a mode of communication that, in light of the exigencies of the existing circumstances, will best maintain any confidential information that might be conveyed in the communication." Id.; accord RPC 133 (some client information may be so sensitive that the duty can only be satisfied by shredding waste paper). Thus, the standard of care for safeguarding client confidential information is reasonable care as dictated by the circumstances.

In determining the degree of protection and care with which a client's health information is handled, the public policy of providing substantial protection for the privacy of such information which is expressed in the Privacy Rule should inform the actions of lawyers and law firms, particularly with regard to the disposal of such records.

Inquiry #2:

Lawyers may receive the health information of an opposing party or other third party in conjunction with the representation of a client. What duty does a lawyer have to protect the privacy of the health information of a third party?

Opinion #2:

Any information acquired during the course of a representation, including information of third parties, is confidential and may only be disclosed as authorized by Rule 1.6. Nevertheless, even if disclosure is permitted under the Rules, lawyers are encouraged to respect the privacy of third parties and to handle and dispose of health information of third parties with the same care that would be used with regard to the health information of a client.

It goes without saying that if a lawyer determines that health information in his or her possession is subject to the requirements of the Privacy Rule, the lawyer must follow the mandates of the rule with regard to the retention, transmission, or disposal of the health information.

Endnotes

1. Summary of the HIPAA Privacy Rule, OCR Privacy Brief, US Department of Health and Human Services, Office for Civil Rights. http://www.hhs.gov/ocr/privacysummary.pdf
2. Id.

2006 Formal Ethics Opinion 11

July 21, 2006

Preparation of Legal Documents at the Request of Another

Opinion rules that, outside of the commercial or business context, a lawyer may not, at the request of a third party, prepare documents, such as a will or trust instrument, that purport to speak solely for principal without consulting with, exercising independent professional judgment on behalf of, and obtaining consent from the principal.

Inquiry:

This inquiry seeks a clarification of the scope of 2003 Formal Ethics Opinion 7 which provides that a lawyer may not prepare a power of attorney for the benefit of the principal at the request of another individual without consulting with, exercising independent professional judgment on behalf of, and obtaining consent from the principal. The opinion responds to an inquiry involving the preparation of a power of attorney, the conduct of the attorney-in-fact, and the appropriate actions of the lawyer who is asked to prepare the power of attorney. The opinion provides as follows:

> When a lawyer is engaged by a person to render legal services to another person, the lawyer may not allow the third party to direct or regulate the lawyer's professional judgment in rendering such legal services. Rule 5.4(c). Similarly, Rule 1.8(f) provides that when a lawyer's services are being paid for by someone other than the client, the lawyer may not accept the compensation unless the client gives informed consent, there is no interference with the lawyer's independence of professional judgment or with the client-lawyer relationship, and confidential information relating to the representation of the client is protected….
>
> The situation described in this inquiry is distinguishable from a commercial or business transaction in which the lawyer is engaged by one person to prepare a power of attorney for execution by another person. Frequently, the power of attorney names the person requesting the legal services as the attorney-in-fact. If the document is being prepared to facilitate a specific task for the benefit of this person, such as the transfer of stock or real estate, the lawyer represents the person requesting the legal services and does not represent the signatory on the power of attorney. Thus, the purpose and goals of the engagement determine the identity of the client, not the signatory on the document prepared by the lawyer.
>
> A lawyer may be asked by a client to prepare a document for the signature of a third party under circumstances that give rise to a reasonable belief that the client may be using the lawyer's services for an improper purpose such as actual or constructive fraud or the exertion of undue influence. If so, the lawyer may not assist the client and must decline or withdraw from the representation. Rule 1.2(d) and Rule 1.16(a)(1).

Does 2003 FEO 7 apply only to the preparation of a power of attorney upon the request of the prospective attorney-in-fact or does it apply broadly to the preparation of other legal documents that purport to speak solely for the principal (such as a will, an advance directive, or a trust instrument) upon the request of another person?

Opinion:

2003 Formal Ethics Opinion 7 applies to the preparation of all such legal documents for the principal upon the request of another. (A notable exception is the preparation of documents in a business or commercial context as described in the quotation from 2003 FEO 7 above.) A lawyer should not undertake the representation of a client or the preparation of a legal document on behalf of that client without having consulted with the client to obtain his informed consent to the representation and to determine whether he needs or wants the legal services requested. Further, the lawyer must exercise his independent professional judgment, and advise the client accordingly, with respect to the advisability of and the scope of the requested legal services.

2006 Formal Ethics Opinion 12

October 20, 2006

Obtaining a Loan to Fund Litigation Costs

Opinion explores the circumstances under which a lawyer may obtain litigation funding from a financing company.

Inquiry #1:

ABC Litigation Funding (hereinafter "ABC") is a company that offers non-recourse loans to personal injury lawyers who need to borrow funds for expenses advanced in contingency cases. Lawyer is interested in obtaining financing for a large personal injury case for which he has already advanced some of the expenses. Lawyer will be unable to complete the matter unless he receives help with the costs.

Can a lawyer enter into a contract with a litigation funding company to finance the costs and expenses of a contingency fee case?

Opinion #1:

Yes, provided that the litigation funding company's practices are lawful and the lawyer otherwise complies with the Rules of Professional Conduct. Rule 1.8(e) specifically permits lawyers to advance the costs and expenses of litigation to clients. Before there were litigation funding companies, lawyers borrowed money from banks or drew from a line of credit to assist with costs associated with litigation. Such practices do not violate the fee sharing restrictions in the Rules because the lawyer could repay the loan with funds from any source and the amount to be repaid was unrelated to the lawyer's contingency fee in any given matter.

Financing arrangements that do not require that repayment be a percentage of the lawyer's fee in a given case or restrict repayment from a specific source of funds should be treated no differently than bank loans or lines of credit.

Inquiry #2:

Suppose that ABC's non-recourse loan is contingent upon Lawyer's willingness to give ABC a lien on the recovery in one or more of his pending personal injury cases.

May Lawyer obtain financing from ABC under these circumstances?

Opinion #2:

No. Lawyer may never put a client's funds at risk to obtain a loan. Lawyer, however, may put up his own assets, including his contingent fee in the case, as collateral to secure a loan.

Inquiry #3:

Suppose Lawyer puts up law firm assets as collateral for the loan from ABC. ABC now requires Lawyer to provide it with information about the nature and value of his clients' cases so that it can determine the amount to be loaned. ABC agrees not to be involved in any of Lawyer's cases and Lawyer has assumed that he will retain complete control of the matters.

May Lawyer contract with ABC under these circumstances?

Opinion #3:

Lawyer owes a duty of confidentiality to every client, and may not disclose information learned in the course of the representation without informed consent from the client. Rule 1.6. The nature and value of a case is certainly client confidential information, and Lawyer may not supply ABC with any confidential information without first seeking the client's informed consent. Consent will be informed only if Lawyer has had a full and frank discussion with the client concerning the advantages and risks of disclosure, including the risk that disclosure may result in a waiver of the attorney-client privilege.

Inquiry #4:

Assume ABC's financing agreement requires the lawyer to repay the amount borrowed plus a fee equivalent to 100% of the amount of funding ABC provided. So, for every dollar the lawyer borrows, he will have to repay two dollars if the case is successfully tried. If the lawyer is unsuccessful and there is no recovery, he will owe nothing to ABC Financial. ABC suggests that Lawyer can pass along the 100% financing charge to the client as an expense of litigation.

May Lawyer pass along the expense of obtaining litigation financing to the client?

Opinion #4:

Lawyer may pass along the expense of obtaining litigation financing to the client only if 1) the lawyer obtains informed consent, in a writing signed by the client, before Lawyer enters into the agreement with ABC, 2) the financing expense is not clearly excessive under the circumstances, and 3) the funds borrowed will be used only to pay expenses incurred on behalf of the client. Rule 1.5(a) and (c).

For consent to be fully informed, the fee agreement must evidence that the client understands and agrees that the lawyer will borrow funds to pay for litigation expenses incurred in the client's case, that the client will be responsible for the repayment of the interest or fee charged in the event the case is successfully tried (as defined by the financing company), and that the client agrees to the amount and terms of repayment. Disclosures about the terms of repayment must explain the client's responsibility in the event the ultimate recovery is substantially less than the damages sought or the client terminates the lawyer's services prior to completion of the matter. Furthermore, prior to asking the client to sign the fee agreement, a lawyer must discuss other financing arrangements, their availability, and the risks and advantages of each. See Rule 1.0(f).

2006 Formal Ethics Opinion 13

October 20, 2006

Nonlawyer Signing a Lawyer's Name to a Pleading

Opinion rules that if warranted by exigent circumstances, a lawyer may allow a paralegal to sign his name to court documents so long as it does not violate any law and the lawyer provides the appropriate level of supervision.

Inquiry:

Paralegal works in Law Firm. Supervising Attorney A would like Paralegal to sign Attorney A's name to pleadings in the event Attorney A is unavailable to do so. Paralegal would put her initials after the lawyer's signature so it is clear she is signing on the lawyer's behalf. Assume for purposes of this inquiry that Attorney A has either drafted the pleading herself or has closely supervised the form and substance of the pleading drafted by Paralegal.

May Attorney A delegate the signing of the pleadings to nonlawyer staff under these circumstances?

Opinion:

As a general matter, a lawyer should always sign court documents and pleadings and should only delegate the signing of her name to a nonlawyer when the lawyer is unavailable and no other lawyer in the firm is able to do so. Nonetheless, if exigent circumstances require the signing of a pleading in the lawyer's absence, a lawyer may delegate this task to a paralegal or other nonlawyer staff only if 1) the signing of a lawyer's signature by an agent of the lawyer does not violate any law, court order, local rule, or rule of civil procedure, 2) the responsible lawyer has provided the appropriate level of supervision under the circumstances, and 3) the signature clearly discloses that another has signed on the lawyer's behalf.[1] The following two rules are relevant to a lawyer's responsibilities under the circumstances.

Rule 5.3 Responsibilities Regarding Nonlawyer Assistants

With respect to a nonlawyer employed or retained by or associated with a lawyer:

. . .

(b) a lawyer having direct supervisory authority over the nonlawyer shall make reasonable efforts to ensure that the person's conduct is compatible with the professional obligations of the lawyer;

Rule 5.5 Unauthorized Practice of Law

(d) A lawyer shall not assist another in the unauthorized practice of law.

Before permitting a paralegal or other nonlawyer staff member to sign the lawyer's name to any court document, the lawyer must carefully review pertinent case law, local rules, or rules of civil procedure to determine whether such delegation is permissible and therefore, compatible with the lawyer's professional obligations. Rule 5.3 (see above). If, for example, a pleading signed by the paralegal on the lawyer's behalf would be legally insufficient, then the lawyer cannot condone this practice. Nothing herein is intended to opine as to the legal sufficiency of a pleading signed on behalf of a lawyer.

In addition, the lawyer must exercise the appropriate level of supervision to avoid aiding in the unauthorized practice of law. Rule 5.5(d). The preparation of a pleading is the practice of law. G.S. § 84-2.1 (2004). Nevertheless, a paralegal may prepare such a document under the close supervision of a lawyer. A lawyer must carefully and thoroughly review both the substance and form of a pleading prepared by a paralegal before filing the document with the court. Likewise, a lawyer may not permit her paralegal to sign the lawyer's name to a pleading, even in exigent circumstances, if the lawyer has not afforded the appropriate level of review and supervision.

Finally, the signature must evidence, on its face, that it is by another's hand to avoid misleading the court.

Endnote

1. A paralegal or paraprofessional may never sign and file court documents in her own name. To do so violates the statutes prohibiting the unauthorized practice of law.

2006 Formal Ethics Opinion 14

April 20, 2007

Payment of Fee for Consultation

Opinion rules that when a lawyer charges a fee for a consultation, and the lawyer accepts payment, there is a client-lawyer relationship for the purposes of the Rules of Professional Conduct.

Inquiry:

John Doe consulted Attorney A about a property line dispute with Mr. Doe's neighbor. At the request of Attorney A, Mr. Doe paid Attorney A a consultation fee of $100, which was accepted by Attorney A. Thereafter, Mr. Doe hired another lawyer to represent him in the property dispute.

Attorney A contends that Mr. Doe was a "prospective client," as that term is defined and addressed in Rule 1.18, Duties to Prospective Client, and that he owes Mr. Doe only the protections afforded a prospective client. Is Attorney A correct?

Opinion:

No. A client-lawyer relationship may be formed in an initial consultation although no legal fee is paid. However, a client-lawyer relationship is unequivocally established, for the purposes of the Rules of Professional Conduct, when a lawyer charges a fee for a service, regardless of how limited, and the fee is paid. The duties of loyalty and confidentiality exist with respect to the matter discussed. Rule 1.7. If the client does not retain the lawyer for further assistance, the client becomes a former client.

Ordinarily, a person who discusses the possibility of forming a client-lawyer relationship with respect to a matter is a prospective client. A prospective client receives some, but not all, of the protections afforded clients and former clients. Rule 1.18. However, when a lawyer charges a fee that the heretofore prospective client pays, in exchange for the lawyer's time and/or advice, a client-lawyer relationship exists with respect to the provision of that service. If the representation proceeds no further—for example, the client does not retain the lawyer for additional assistance—the client becomes a former client. Rule 1.9.

2006 Formal Ethics Opinion 15

January 19, 2007

Dormancy Fee on Unclaimed Funds

Opinion rules that a lawyer may charge a reasonable dormancy fee against unclaimed funds if the client agrees in advance and the fee meets other statutory requirements.

Inquiry:

Rule 1.15-2(q) requires a lawyer to make due inquiry into the identity and location of the owner of unclaimed funds in his trust account. If this effort is unsuccessful and the provisions of G.S. 116B-53 are satisfied, the property shall be deemed abandoned. The lawyer must then follow the provisions of G.S. 116B for the escheat of abandoned property. Pursuant to G.S. 116B-57(a), the holder of abandoned or unclaimed funds may charge a reasonable "dormancy" fee, thereby reducing the amount of funds transferred to the State Treasurer's Office, so long as the holder has made a good faith effort to locate the owners of the funds, there is a valid and enforceable written contract which imposes the charge, and the charge is applied on a regular basis.

Attorney A would like to start charging a dormancy fee for abandoned funds to cover some of the costs and time associated with reasonable efforts to locate the client. Attorney A proposes including the following language in all his fee contracts:

> A reasonable dormancy fee shall be charged against any remaining funds in the client's trust account which are not claimed after notice to the client and/or issuance of a refund check six months from the date of the finalization of client's case. The charge shall be based on time and effort spent making reasonable efforts to contact client and return funds. Said charges shall not exceed $200.00 per year.
>
> May Attorney A charge a dormancy fee as set forth in his fee contract?

Opinion:

Attorney A may charge a dormancy fee against unclaimed funds so long as (1) the client receives prior notice of and gives written consent to the dormancy fee, (2) the amount of the fee is appropriate under Rule 1.5(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, and (3) the fee complies with the statutory requirements of G.S. 116B-57(a) and any other restrictions imposed by the Unclaimed Property Program of the State Treasurer's Office.

2006 Formal Ethics Opinion 16

January 19, 2007

Distribution of Disputed Legal Fees

Opinion rules that under certain circumstances a lawyer may consider a dispute with a client over legal fees resolved and transfer funds from the trust account to his operating account to pay those fees.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney represents Client in a personal injury matter. Client signs a written fee agreement and agrees to pay Attorney 30% of any recovery made in his case. After negotiations with the insurance carrier, Attorney settles Client's case. Attorney receives the settlement check and release and places the funds in his trust account. Client signs the release but disputes the 30% contingent fee. Pursuant to Rule 1.15-2(g), Attorney holds the disputed fees in his trust account and disburses the remainder appropriately. Attorney then gives Client notice of the State Bar's Fee Dispute Resolution Program as required under Rule 1.5(f). Client elects to participate in the process by filing a petition. After Attorney provides a response to the petition and the State Bar staff reviews the file, it is determined that Client's dispute is not meritorious and the staff issues a dismissal letter.

Notwithstanding the dismissal, Client continues to object to the payment of the fee. Because fee dispute resolution is nonbinding, Attorney continues to hold the funds in his trust account. Attorney would like to transfer the funds from the trust account to his operating account.

When may Attorney consider the dispute resolved and transfer the funds without Client's consent?

Opinion #1:

A lawyer is required to hold disputed legal fees in his trust account until the dispute is resolved. Rule 1.15-2(g) and Rule 1.15, comment [13]. Therefore, a client who continues to dispute a legal fee but takes no action to recover the funds, in effect, forces the lawyer to hold the disputed funds in trust indefinitely. To avoid this anomalous result, the lawyer may transfer the funds from the trust account to his operating account after the dismissal of a petition by the State Bar's Fee Dispute Resolution Program, but only if he has given the client reasonable notice that the funds will be transferred to the operating account if no legal action is taken by a certain date. Providing 30 days notice for the client to take legal action to recover the funds should be a reasonable amount of time. If, within that time frame, the client files a lawsuit to recover the funds, the lawyer must continue to hold them in trust.

Inquiry #2:

Assume the same facts as in Inquiry #1, except that Attorney indicates, in his response to the fee petition, a willingness to reduce his fee to try to resolve the controversy. Attorney and Client agree to have their dispute mediated by the State Bar's Fee Dispute Resolution Program, but they reach an impasse during the mediation process. The State Bar staff sends a letter to Client and Attorney notifying them that the file has been closed due to an impasse.

If Client continues to dispute the fee but takes no legal action, may Attorney transfer the disputed funds from the trust account to his operating account?

Opinion #2:

Yes, so long as Attorney has given adequate notice to Client of his intent to transfer the funds as set forth in Opinion #1, and Client does not file a lawsuit to recover the funds within the notice period.

Inquiry #3:

Assume Client notifies Attorney that he disputes his 30% contingent fee, but fails to file a fee dispute petition or to initiate legal action to recover the disputed funds.

When may Attorney consider the dispute resolved and transfer trust funds to the operating account to pay his fee?

Opinion #3:

In the absence of oversight from the Fee Dispute Resolution program, a lawyer may transfer disputed funds in his trust account only if (1) he has given the client 30-days written notice of the fee dispute program required under Rule 1.5(f); (2) the client fails to elect fee dispute resolution; (3) the funds held in the trust account are for services rendered and are not clearly excessive; and (4) after the 30 days has expired with no fee petition filed by the client, the lawyer gives the client a second written notice, as required in Opinion #1, that the funds will be transferred to the operating account unless the client initiates legal action within 30 days. If, at any point during the 30 days, the client elects to participate in the fee dispute program or initiates legal action to recover the funds, the lawyer must hold the funds in trust pending resolution of the dispute.

2006 Formal Ethics Opinion 17

January 19, 2007

Editor's Note: G.S. § 75-104 may render this opinion moot.

Autodialed Recorded Message to Potential Clients

Opinion rules that a lawyer may advertise by autodialing potential clients and playing a recorded telephone message with information about a legal issue or the lawyer's legal services provided the message does not include a mechanism to connect the recipient directly to the lawyer or an agent of the lawyer.

Inquiry:

Attorney would like to solicit professional employment by use of a recorded telephone message. He intends to obtain telephone numbers from the census bureau's database of persons who are not on the "do not call" list for commercial solicitations by telephone. Attorney's law firm (or a service hired by the firm) will autodial the people on the list. When a person answers the phone, he will hear the following recorded message:

> This is an announcement of the Tax, Estate & Elder Planning Center, a North Carolina law firm. Have you or your loved ones experienced the overwhelming cost of nursing home, assisted living, or in home care? The Tax, Estate & Elder Planning Center would like for you to know more about government programs that may help cover these costs while protecting your savings. If you would like to know more about these programs press one now.

If the recipient presses the number one on the key pad of his phone, he will hear a short pre-recorded informational message on programs such as Medicaid, Special Assistance, and veterans' benefits. Whether the recipient opts to listen to the message or not, he will hear the following recorded message at the end of the phone call:

> If you are interested in knowing more about how to qualify for these programs, then press two to be connected with a representative of the Tax, Estate & Elder Planning Center Law Firm. Thank you for taking time to listen to this announcement.

If the recipient of the phone call follows the prompts, he will be connected with a person at Attorney's law firm.

Does this comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion:

Rule 7.2(a) permits a lawyer to advertise services through "written, recorded, or electronic communications" subject to the requirements of Rule 7.1 and Rule 7.3. Rule 7.1 requires all communications about a lawyer and the lawyer's services to be truthful and not misleading. Rule 7.3 limits direct contact with potential clients for the purpose of soliciting business. Rule 7.3(a) provides that "A lawyer shall not by in-person, live telephone, or real-time electronic contact solicit professional employment from a potential client when a significant motive of the lawyer's doing so is the lawyer's pecuniary gain…." The comment explains the prohibition as follows:

> [1] There is a potential for abuse inherent in direct in-person, live telephone, or real-time electronic contact by a lawyer with a prospective client known to need legal services. These forms of contact between a lawyer and a prospective client subject the layperson to the private importuning of the trained advocate in a direct interpersonal encounter. The prospective client, who may already feel overwhelmed by the circumstances giving rise to the need for legal services, may find it difficult fully to evaluate all available alternatives with reasoned judgment and appropriate self-interest in the face of the lawyer's presence and insistence upon being retained immediately. The situation is fraught with the possibility of undue influence, intimidation, and over-reaching.
>
> [2] This potential for abuse inherent in direct in-person, live telephone, or real-time electronic solicitation of potential clients justifies its prohibition, particularly since lawyer advertising and written and recorded communication permitted under Rule 7.2 offer alternative means of conveying necessary information to those who may be in need of legal services. Advertising and written and recorded communications which may be mailed or autodialed make it possible for a potential client to be informed about the need for legal services, and about the qualifications of available lawyers and law firms, without subjecting the potential client to direct in-person, telephone or real-time electronic persuasion that may overwhelm the client's judgment.

The rule and the comment distinguish a prohibited live telephone call from a lawyer in which "the layperson [is subject] to the private importuning of the trained advocate in a direct interpersonal encounter" from "recorded communications which may be…autodialed...without subjecting the potential client to direct in-person, telephone, or real-time electronic persuasion that may overwhelm the client's judgment."

Although it appears that recorded telephone advertising messages are permitted by the Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 7.3(a) and the comment to the rule do not contemplate that a recorded message will lead to an interpersonal encounter with a lawyer (or the lawyer's agent) at the push of a button on the telephone key pad. To avoid the risks of undue influence, intimidation and, over-reaching, a potential client must be given an opportunity to contemplate the information about legal services received in a recorded telephone solicitation. This cannot occur if a brief, unexpected, and unsolicited telephone call leads to an in-person encounter with a lawyer, even if the recipient of the phone call must choose to push a number to be connected with the lawyer.

Therefore, Attorney may autodial potential clients and play a recorded message provided the message is truthful and not misleading. He may not, however, include a means for the recipient of the call to be immediately connected with a lawyer (or an agent of the lawyer). Instead, the message may provide a telephone number or other contact information for the lawyer or the lawyer's firm so that the potential client may subsequently call the lawyer or law firm after contemplating the information received from the recorded message. Comment [3] to Rule 7.3 supports this "clean" and "free" flow of information to potential clients:

> The use of general advertising and written, recorded, or electronic communications to transmit information from lawyer to potential client, rather than direct in-person, live telephone, or real-time electronic contact, will help to assure that the information flows cleanly as well as freely. The contents of advertisements and communications permitted under Rule 7.2 can be permanently recorded so that they cannot be disputed and may be shared with others who know the lawyer. This potential for informal review is itself likely to help guard against statements and claims that might constitute false and misleading communications, in violation of Rule 7.1. The contents of direct in-person, live telephone, or real-time electronic conversations between a lawyer and a potential client can be disputed and may not be subject to third-party scrutiny. Consequently, they are much more likely to approach (and occasionally cross) the dividing line between accurate representations and those that are false and misleading.

2006 Formal Ethics Opinion 18

January 19, 2007

Surrender of Deposition Transcript

Opinion rules that, when representation is terminated by a client, a lawyer who advances the cost of a deposition and transcript may not condition release of the transcript to the client upon reimbursement of the cost.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A represented Client in an action alleging that Client was beaten by guards at the county jail. Attorney A advanced over $2,000 for the cost of a deposition and the deposition transcript. Client discharged Attorney A and hired Attorney B to prosecute his claim. Attorney B requested the file, including the deposition transcript, from Attorney A. Attorney A refused to release the transcript unless he was paid for the cost of the deposition and the transcript.

May Attorney A condition release of the deposition transcript on reimbursement for the amount advanced for the deposition and the transcript?

Opinion #1:

No. Rule 1.16(d) requires a lawyer "[u]pon termination of representation…[to] take steps to the extent reasonably practicable to protect a client's interests, such as…surrendering papers and property to which the client is entitled..." RPC 79 is also on point. The opinion provides that a lawyer who advanced the cost of obtaining medical records to decide whether to take a case may not condition the release of the records to the client upon reimbursement for the cost. The following excerpt includes the operative provisions of the opinion:

> Law Firm X must turn over unconditionally to its client any material such as copies of medical reports or statements of expert opinion which were obtained on the client's behalf and account if such would be useful to the client in further prosecution of her claim. Rule 2.8(a)(2) of the Rules of Professional Conduct [now Rule 1.16[1]] requires that a lawyer who withdraws from employment take reasonable steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice to rights of the client. One means of avoiding such prejudice is, in the language of the rule, "delivering to the client all papers and property to which the client is entitled." Although the rule itself does not define the extent of the client's entitlement, the comment to the rule does indicate that, "anything in the file which would be helpful to successor counsel should be turned over."…. If material obtained during the evaluation process on the client's account would be of some value to the client in pursuing her claim, it must, under the terms of the rule, be surrendered unconditionally without regard to whether the cost of its acquisition was advanced by the law firm or the client.

Rule 1.16(d) does permit a lawyer to retain papers relating to the client "to the extent permitted by other law." However, the Ethics Committee is aware of no North Carolina statutory or case law that entitles a discharged lawyer to a general or retaining lien on the papers or other property received by the lawyer during the client's representation. Even in jurisdictions where retaining liens are permitted by law, the regulatory bars "generally have held that a lawyer's legal right to execute a lien granted by law to secure a fee or expense is subordinate to ethical obligations owed to the client." Annotated Model Rules of Professional Conduct, Fifth Ed., p. 275 (2003); see also, Restatement of the Law Governing Lawyers, §43 Comment b. ("A lawyer ordinarily may not retain a client's property or documents against the client's wishes."); Rule 1.16, cmt. [10]("The lawyer may never retain papers to secure a fee.").

Inquiry #2:

Attorney A would like to include the following provision in his legal services agreement:

> Except in the case of misconduct, client agrees not to settle, compromise, or litigate said claim, or to retain any other attorney to handle said claim, without first paying attorney the costs and expenses and fees above specified.

May Attorney A include this provision in his legal services agreement?

Opinion #2:

No, this provision is contrary to two key precepts of the Rules of Professional Conduct: the client's right to legal counsel of choice and the client's right to decide the objectives of his representation. A client has a right to discharge a lawyer at any time, with or without cause. Rule 1.16, cmt. [4]. Similarly, a client has an absolute right, at any time, to decide whether to settle, compromise, or litigate his claim. Rule 1.2(a). This provision is a violation of the Rules on its face and may not be included in a legal services agreement.

Endnote

1. Rule 1.16 replaced Rule 2.8 when the Rules of Professional Conduct were revised in 1997. Rule 1.16(d) is essentially identical to the paragraph in Rule 2.8 that it replaced.

2006 Formal Ethics Opinion 19

January 19, 2007

Communication by Guardian ad Litem with Represented Person

Opinion rules that the prohibition against communications with represented persons does not apply to a lawyer acting solely as a guardian ad litem.

Inquiry #1:

G.S. Section 7B-601 of the Juvenile Code provides for the appointment of a guardian ad litem (GAL) for every child alleged to be abused or neglected. The section states that a GAL who is not an attorney shall be appointed an attorney to assure the protection of the child's legal rights through the dispositional phase of the proceedings and after disposition when necessary to further the best interests of the child. The section also provides that the GAL and the attorney advocate have standing to represent the juvenile in all actions under the subject chapter.

Some of the duties of the GAL, as defined in G.S. 7B-601, include: investigating the facts, the needs of the juvenile, and the available resources within the family and community to meet those needs; facilitating, when appropriate, the settlement of disputed issues; exploring options with the judge at the dispositional hearing; and protecting and promoting the best interests of the juvenile.

It is alleged that Child A was sexually abused by her father. Attorney X and Guardian Ad Litem Y were appointed to represent Child A in the juvenile petition. Guardian Ad Litem Y is not an attorney. She is interested in interviewing the mother of Child A. The mother is represented in this matter by another attorney. Must Guardian Ad Litem Y obtain the approval of the mother's attorney before communicating with the mother?

Opinion #1:

No. Rule 4.2 only prohibits communications with a represented person "[d]uring [the lawyer's] representation of a client." This prohibition does not apply to Guardian Ad Litem Y because it does not apply to nonlawyers.

Inquiry #2:

Would Opinion #1 be different if Guardian Ad Litem Y is an attorney but is performing the role of guardian ad litem solely and is not performing the role of the attorney advocate?

Opinion #2:

No. Guardian Ad Litem Y may communicate with the mother without obtaining the consent of the mother's attorney. If Guardian Ad Litem Y is not acting as the attorney advocate but is only serving as the appointed special guardian "at law" of the child, she is not subject to the prohibition in Rule 4.2 because she is not acting in the course of her representation of a client. See Opinion #1.

Inquiry #3:

Would Opinion #1 change if the person with whom Guardian Ad Litem Y wanted to speak also had an appointed GAL?

Opinion #3:

No.

2006 Formal Ethics Opinion 20

July 13, 2007

Use of Departed Lawyer's Surname in Firm Name

Opinion rules that a law firm may not continue to use a former member's surname in the law firm name if the member continues the practice of law with another firm.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney John Doe is the sole shareholder of a professional corporation (PC) engaged in the practice of law. The PC goes by the name of The John Doe Law Firm. Attorney Doe has invested millions of dollars in the PC's marketing materials that contain his surname and likeness. He also uses trademarked slogans that incorporate his first name and/or his surname. Attorney Doe believes that, through his marketing efforts, his name and face have become synonymous with the "face" or "brand" of the PC.

Attorney Doe would like to have other lawyers join the PC as shareholders. Attorney Doe, however, wants to maximize the investment he has already made in the PC. Attorney Doe would like to grant to the PC the right to use his name and likeness under the following terms:

> The PC will purchase from Attorney Doe the right to use his name as a trade name of the PC, and to use his name and likeness in advertising and marketing materials for the private practice of law. The PC may not sell the name or likeness or use the name or likeness in the marketing or advertising of any other service or product. The PC may use the name during Attorney Doe's life and following his death.

May Attorney Doe grant to the PC the right to use Attorney Doe's name under these terms?

Opinion #1:

Yes, so long as the agreement complies with Rule 7.5. While the Rules of Professional Conduct do not specifically limit the use of the lawyer's name by a firm in which he is a member, Rule 7.5 does restrict the circumstances under which a surname can continue to be used when the lawyer ceases to practice with the firm. "A firm may be designated by the names of all or some of its members, by the names of deceased or retired members where there has been a continuing succession in the firm's identity, or by a trade name…." Rule 7.5, cmt. [1].[1]

Rule 7.5 permits a law firm to continue to use a lawyer's surname if he retires from the practice of law or after his death, so long as the lawyer was a member of the firm immediately preceding his retirement or death. Subsequent communications listing the former member's name on law firm letterhead, however, should clarify that the former member is deceased or retired so as not to mislead the public. If Attorney Doe leaves the PC and begins engaging in the private practice of law, the PC could not continue to use Attorney Doe's surname because it would be misleading pursuant to Rule 7.1. See Rule 7.5(a), cmt. [1]. Any agreement between Attorney Doe and the PC must reflect this restriction and may not violate Rule 5.6(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct.

Inquiry #2:

May Attorney Doe grant to the PC the right to use Attorney Doe's likeness under these terms?

Opinion #2:

The agreement may grant to the PC the right to use Attorney Doe's likeness while he practices with the PC but not if he ceases to practice with the PC. As long as Attorney Doe practices with the PC, there is probably no danger that the use of his likeness will mislead, deceive, or confuse the public. However, if Attorney Doe ceases to practice with PC (whether by retirement, departure, or death), the PC's use of his likeness will be inherently misleading and confusing to the public, in violation of Rule 7.1, because of the specific fact that Attorney Doe, while the sole shareholder in the firm, invested substantial resources to make his likeness synonymous with the PC. Therefore, after Attorney Doe's departure from the PC, a disclaimer on the PC's advertisements and marketing communications would be insufficient to overcome the public perception that Attorney Doe's services are still available through the PC.[2] This opinion does not prohibit generally the accurate and nondeceptive use of the likeness of a retired or deceased member of a firm in marketing or advertising, as long as the likeness includes a clear statement of the attorney's status[3] so as not to imply ongoing involvement with the firm.

Inquiry #3:

Assume that the agreement between the PC and Attorney Doe further contemplates that Attorney Doe is free to leave the firm at any time and practice elsewhere in the state, but restricts his ability to use his own name or likeness in any advertising materials promoting the new venture. The agreement states that once Attorney Doe leaves the PC, he is free to practice elsewhere using any proper firm name (not including his own surname) or State Bar approved trade name for advertising purposes. He may only use his surname, however, in listings on firm letterhead, telephone directories, and business cards.

Under this proposed agreement, can the PC continue to use Attorney Doe's surname as the name of the PC after Attorney Doe leaves the PC to engage in the private practice of law?

Opinion #3:

No. See Opinion #1 above.

Endnotes

1. As a point of clarification, Attorney Doe's surname is not a trade name, and the licensing of the name to a PC in which Attorney Doe is a member does not change the surname's classification. The terms "Law Firm" or "Law Office" are technically trade names, but because these are useful means of identifying law firms, lawyers may use either designation without registering the trade name.
2. Opinion #2 differs from Opinion #1 because of the potential misleading nature of a communication using Attorney Doe's likeness after Attorney Doe ceases to practice with the PC.
3. For example, the use of the likeness of a retired partner on a firm's website should clarify his status as a "retired partner" or "of counsel."

2007 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

October 19, 2007

Editor's Note: This proposed opinion is a substitute for the version of the opinion that was adopted by the State Bar Council on April 20, 2007, and subsequently withdrawn by the council on July 13, 2007.

Duty to Heirs When Filing Wrongful Death Action

Opinion rules that a lawyer owes no ethical duty to the heirs of an estate that he represents in a wrongful death action except as set forth in Rule 4.4.

Inquiry #1:

When a lawyer files a wrongful death action on behalf of an estate, what are the lawyer's duties to the heirs of the deceased?

Opinion #1:

Pursuant to RPC 137, a lawyer representing an estate represents the personal representative in his or her official capacity and the estate as an entity. Although the heirs are interested parties and may benefit from a successful wrongful death action, they are not clients of the lawyer in the matter. The personal representative and the estate are the lawyer's clients, to whom the lawyer owes the ethical duties of loyalty, confidentiality, accountability, and independent professional judgment. The ethical duties owed to the heirs are those set out in Rule 4.4 With regard to tort liability, see Jenkins v. Wheeler, 69 N.C. App. 140, 316 S.E.2d 354, disc. rev. denied, 311 N.C. 758, 321 S.E.2d 136 (1984)(holding that heir has standing as non-client third party to sue lawyer in tort for malpractice when lawyer gives erroneous advice to personal representative that causes heir harm).

Inquiry #2:

Can the lawyer advise the heirs of their respective rights to share or not to share in any recovery in the wrongful death action?

Opinion #2:

The lawyer does not represent the heirs and he should inform the heirs of his role in representing the estate. If the heirs are not represented by counsel, the lawyer may not give the heirs legal advice, other than the advice to secure their own counsel. Rule 4.3. With the consent of the estate's personal representative, the lawyer may provide the heirs with factual information concerning the wrongful death action. See Rule 1.6; Rule 1.2.

Inquiry #3:

On behalf of the estate, the lawyer settles a wrongful death claim for a decedent who is survived by her mother and father. The mother, as personal representative of the estate, asks the lawyer not to pay proceeds from the settlement to the father because the mother alleges that the father willfully abandoned the child during her lifetime. N.C. Gen. Stat. §31A-2 prohibits a parent who abandoned a child from participating in the proceeds of a wrongful death action.

May the lawyer communicate an offer from the mother to the father requesting the father to reduce his claim to the proceeds of the settlement to a nominal amount; may the lawyer convey offers and counter offers between the mother and the father without advising either party with respect to their rights or the likelihood of success at a hearing to determine abandonment?

Opinion #3:

Yes. Determining whether there is a legal prohibition to participation in the proceeds of the wrongful death settlement is an appropriate role of the personal representative of the estate and the lawyer should provide legal advice to the personal representative on this issue. Based upon this advice, the estate's personal representative will establish the objectives of the lawyer's representation of the estate on this issue. The lawyer's responsibility is to carry out those objectives provided they are consistent with the personal representative's fiduciary duties. In doing so, the lawyer continues to represent the estate and the personal representative in her official capacity. On behalf of the estate, the lawyer may negotiate with the father to reduce his claim to the wrongful death proceeds. The lawyer must make his role clear to the father and may not give the father legal advice. Rule 4.3.

Inquiry #4:

May the lawyer for the estate file an action to deny the father's right to share in the proceeds of the settlement pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat. §31A-2?

Opinion #4:

Yes. The lawyer may file a motion with the court to determine whether the father is entitled to any proceeds from the settlement. The filing of such a motion comports with the lawyer's duty to see that the estate proceeds are properly administered.

2007 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

October 19, 2007

Taking Possession of Client's Contraband

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not take possession of a client's contraband if possession is itself a crime and, unless there is an exception allowing disclosure of confidential information, the lawyer may not disclose confidential information relative to the contraband.

Inquiry #1:

Defendant was arrested for drug trafficking and placed in jail. At the time of his arrest, Defendant was wearing a hat. The hat was confiscated by the police and put in the jail's repository for inmates' personal property along with Defendant's other clothes. Defendant was unable to post bond and remains in jail.

Attorney is appointed to represent Defendant. In an attorney-client consultation at the jail, Defendant tells Attorney that there is contraband hidden in the hat. It appears that the contraband has not been discovered by law enforcement or the jailers.

Attorney anticipates that Defendant will be convicted, probably by plea, and will be sentenced to prison. At that time, he will be asked about the disposition of his personal property. Personal clothing is not sent with inmates to prison; it is usually given to family or friends.

May Attorney take possession of the contraband for the purpose of destroying it, turning it over to the authorities, or giving it to a third party, such as another lawyer, who would be subject to the duty of confidentially, to be delivered to the authorities?

Opinion #1:

No. Attorney may not take possession of an item that is contraband nor may the lawyer facilitate its transfer to any other person in furtherance of a crime.

A lawyer should not engage in criminal conduct under any circumstance and may not assist a client in conduct that the lawyer knows is criminal. See Rule 1.2(d) and Rule 8.4(d). If possession of an item is itself a crime, as in the case of contraband, a lawyer may not take possession of the item. Compare RPC 221.

Standard 4-4.6 of the ABA Standards for Criminal Justice, The Prosecution and Defense Function, 3rd ed. (1993), provides the following guidance:

> (a) Defense counsel who receives a physical item under circumstances implicating a client in criminal conduct should disclose the location of or should deliver that item to law enforcement authorities only: (1) if required by law or court order, or (2) as provided in paragraph (d).
>
> …
>
> (d) If the item received is contraband, i.e., an item possession of which is in and of itself a crime such as narcotics, defense counsel may suggest that the client destroy it where there is no pending case or investigation relating to this evidence and where such destruction is clearly not in violation of any criminal statute. If such destruction is not permitted by law or if in defense counsel's judgment he or she cannot retain the item, whether or not it is contraband, in a way that does not pose an unreasonable risk of physical harm to anyone, defense counsel should disclose the location of or should deliver the item to law enforcement authorities.
>
> (e) If defense counsel discloses the location of or delivers the item to law enforcement authorities under paragraphs (a) or (d), or to a third party under paragraph (c)(1), he or she should do so in the way best designed to protect the client's interests.

If there is a law requiring Attorney to disclose the location of the contraband to the authorities, Attorney must do so after notifying the client and explaining the legal consequences to the client. If there is no such law but the contraband is evidence in the pending case against Defendant or Attorney knows that there is a criminal investigation relative to the contraband, Attorney must discuss the matter with the client and recommend that the hat be surrendered to law enforcement, perhaps as a part of Defendant's plea bargain. If Defendant refuses and there is no law requiring disclosure to the authorities, Attorney may not disclose the location of the contraband to the authorities or anyone else unless an exception to the duty of confidentiality applies. See RPC 221.

Inquiry #2:

May Attorney disclose the location of the contraband to the authorities or to the family member or friend who is asked by Defendant to retrieve his personal property from the jail?

Opinion #2:

Rule 1.6(a) prohibits a lawyer from revealing information acquired during the professional relationship with a client unless the client consents, the disclosure is impliedly authorized to carry out the representation, or the disclosure is permitted by an exception set forth in paragraph (b) of the rule. The following exceptions might apply in this situation:

> (b) A lawyer may reveal information protected from disclosure by paragraph (a) to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary:
>
> (1) to comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct, the law, or court order;
>
> (2) to prevent the commission of a crime by the client;
>
> (3) to prevent reasonably certain death or bodily harm; or
>
> (4) to prevent, mitigate, or rectify the consequences of a client's criminal or fraudulent act in the commission of which the lawyer's services were used.

With regard to the exception in Rule 1.6(b)(1), if there is a law requiring Attorney to disclose the location of the contraband, she must do so as noted in Opinion #1 above. If disclosure is not legally required, Rule 8.4(d), which prohibits a lawyer from engaging in conduct that is prejudicial to the administration of justice, may permit disclosure if the contraband is evidence in the pending action against Defendant or the subject of a criminal investigation. See also Rule 3.4(a) (lawyer should not unlawfully obstruct access to evidence). If Attorney determines that this exception to confidentiality applies, Attorney should take steps to minimize the harm to Defendant. This would include encouraging Defendant to permit Attorney to use the information in plea negotiations.

The other exceptions to the duty of confidentiality may not apply. Whether the crime of actual or constructive possession of contraband is complete or continuing is a question of state or federal law; therefore, no opinion is expressed as to whether disclosure would be allowed to prevent the commission of a crime pursuant to Rule 1.6(b)(2). Unless the contraband is a weapon or some other dangerous item, disclosure is not necessary to prevent reasonably certain death or bodily harm as contemplated by the exception in Rule 1.6(b)(3). Finally, Attorney's services were not used to perpetrate Defendant's crime and disclosure is not necessary to rectify the consequences of Attorney's conduct as contemplated by the exception in Rule 1.6(b)(4).

Regardless of whether Attorney may disclose information relative to the contraband, Attorney must advise Defendant of the potential risk to a family member or friend who takes possession of the hat. Similarly, Attorney should advise Defendant of the legal and practical consequences of any course of action that he takes, including abandoning the hat and its contents.

No opinion is expressed on whether a lawyer with information about a client's possession of contraband is required to disclose that information to the tribunal in a plea hearing pursuant to the duty of candor in Rule 3.3. The resolution of this issue will vary substantially depending upon the facts of the particular case and upon the forum in which the lawyer is appearing. See, e.g., United States Sentencing Guidelines §3E1.1 (making it a condition of a plea that the defendant "truthfully [admit] or not falsely [deny] any additional relevant conduct for which [the] defendant is accountable").

2007 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

April 20, 2007

Responding to Unauthorized Practice at Quasi-Judicial Hearing Before Government Body

Opinion explains the duties of a lawyer who represents a local government and of a lawyer who is elected to the governing body of the local government relative to a nonlawyer appearing in a representative capacity for a party at a zoning variance and other quasi-judicial hearings before the government body.

Inquiry #1:

In Authorized Practice Advisory Opinion 2006-1, Appearances at Quasi-Judicial Hearings on Zoning and Land Use (October 20, 2006), the Authorized Practice Committee of the North Carolina State Bar was asked whether it is the unauthorized practice of law for an individual who is not an active member of the State Bar to appear in a representative capacity for a party in a quasi-judicial hearing before a planning board, board of adjustment, or other body of local government. In the opinion, the Authorized Practice Committee observed that a hearing on an application for a special use permit or for a variance under zoning ordinances is quasi-judicial in nature, noting, among other things, that evidence is formally presented; witnesses are sworn, testify, and cross-examined; the body has the authority to issue subpoenas; a record is created and preserved; the decision must be based upon the evidence presented and include findings of fact; and the decision is reviewable by an appellate court based solely upon the record of the proceeding. The committee also observed that "the law is…clear that an appearance on behalf of another person, firm, or corporation in a representative capacity for the presentation of evidence through others, cross-examination of witnesses, and argument on the law … is the practice of law." The opinion concludes, therefore, that appearance in a representative capacity at such quasi-judicial proceedings is limited to active members of the State Bar. See N.C. Gen. Stat. §§ 84-2.1 and 84-4.

It is a regular practice, particularly in small communities, for a petitioner at a hearing on a variance to be represented by a nonlawyer such as an architect, landscape architect, engineer, or surveyor. The planning department of the local government is typically made a party to the proceeding and, because of limited resources, appears at the hearing through a nonlawyer employee. The staff usually presents a factual narrative of the zoning history of the property, the nature and effect of the variance requested, and the position of the planning department on the validity of the proposed variance and its consequences for the community. Typically, the staff does not advocate a particular outcome.

Lawyer A regularly represents City. In this capacity, he provides legal advice to the city council and to the administration of City. During a hearing on a petition for a variance, Lawyer A advises the council; he does not advise or represent the planning department or city administration.

Rule 5.5(d) of the Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits a lawyer from assisting another person in the unauthorized practice of law. At a hearing on a petition for a variance or other similar quasi-judicial proceeding, what is Lawyer A's duty pursuant to Rule 5.5(d)?

Opinion #1:

As soon as Lawyer A determines that a nonlawyer is appearing in a representative capacity for a petitioner, Lawyer A must inform the city council of the holding in Authorized Practice Advisory Opinion 2006-1 and advise the council on the legal implications of the opinion. If the council decides to proceed with the hearing despite the advice of Lawyer A, Lawyer A may continue to provide advice to the members of the council on any matter that arises during the remainder of the hearing.

Inquiry #2:

Is Rule 5.5(d) applicable to the conduct of a lawyer who is serving as an elected member of the governing body of a local government?

Opinion #2:

Many of the Rules of Professional Conduct are applicable to a lawyer's conduct without regard to whether the conduct occurs while the lawyer is acting in her capacity as a lawyer or in some other capacity. Rule 5.5(d), however, usually applies to conduct by a lawyer who is acting in her capacity as a lawyer. See, e.g., Rule 5.5, cmt. [8]-[9]. The rule prohibits "assisting" a nonlawyer in the unauthorized practice of law. A lawyer who is an elected member of a governing body does not "assist" a nonlawyer in the unauthorized practice of law if she determines that it is her duty as an elected official to participate as a member of a hearing panel for the governing body although the petitioner is represented by a nonlawyer.

Inquiry #3:

Lawyer M is an elected member of City Council. She is appointed to chair a hearing on a petition for a variance. Is Lawyer M required to prohibit nonlawyers from appearing on behalf of the parties at the hearing?

Opinion #3:

No. See Opinion #2.

Inquiry #4:

When a question is raised about the appearance of the nonlawyer in representative capacity for the petitioner, a member of the city council makes a motion to permit the nonlawyer to appear for the petitioner. Is Lawyer M required by Rule 5.5(d) to vote against the motion?

Opinion #4:

No. See Opinion #2. However, if Lawyer M concludes that the activity is illegal, Lawyer M may have a fiduciary duty, as an elected official, to vote against the motion.

Inquiry #5:

The city council votes in favor of permitting the nonlawyer to appear in a representative capacity for the petitioner. Is Lawyer M required to object or to recuse herself from participating in the hearing?

Opinion #5:

No. See Opinion #2.

Inquiry #6:

Lawyer X is an employee of City and provides legal advice and representation to the city council and to the administration of the city. The administration informs Lawyer X that a nonlawyer employee of the planning department will appear on behalf of the planning department at every hearing on a petition for a variance. What is Lawyer X's duty pursuant to Rule 5.5(d)?

Opinion #6:

No opinion is expressed on whether it is the unauthorized practice of law for a nonlawyer employee of the planning department to appear on behalf of the department at a hearing on a variance petition. On this issue, Authorized Practice Advisory Opinion 2006-1 provides as follows:

> [This] opinion is … not intended to affect the ability of city and county planning staff to present factual information to the hearing board, including a recitation of the procedural posture of the application, and to offer such opinions as they may be qualified to make without an attorney for the government present, as the [Authorized Practice Committee] understands is the proper, current practice and role of the planning staff.

If the employee of the planning department is appearing in a representative capacity and not merely to present factual information or an opinion, and such conduct is the unauthorized practice of law, Lawyer X may not assist the employee to appear on behalf of the planning department at these hearings. Improper assistance would include preparing or assisting with the preparation of the nonlawyer's presentation or with any evidence the nonlawyer intends to present at a hearing. In addition, Lawyer X should advise the city administration of the ruling in Authorized Practice Advisory Opinion 2006-1, explain its legal implications, and give appropriate legal advice and guidance.

Inquiry #7:

Lawyer Y is in private practice but he is under contract to provide legal representation to City. Are Lawyer Y's responsibilities relative to Rule 5.5(d) the same as the duties of Lawyer X?

Opinion #7:

Yes.

Inquiry #8:

Lawyer Q is a member of the Board of Directors of ABC Corporation. ABC Corporation plans to have an architect represent the corporation at a hearing on a petition for a variance that was filed by ABC.

Is Rule 5.5(d) applicable to the conduct of Lawyer Q as a board member?

Opinion #8:

As a member of the board, Lawyer Q may have a fiduciary duty to inform the board that a nonlawyer appearing in a representative capacity for a party may constitute illegal activity, including the unauthorized practice of law, and to vote against the corporation's participation in illegal activities. Lawyer Q does not, however, violate Rule 5.5(d) if he does not take any other action to prevent the corporation's practice of sending a nonlawyer to represent the corporation at the hearing on the variance petition. See, e.g., Opinion #2.

2007 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

April 25, 2008

Solicitation after Seminar, Gifts to Clients and Others, and Distribution of Business Cards

Opinion provides guidance on miscellaneous issues relative to client seminars and solicitation, gifts to clients and others following referrals, distribution of business cards, and client endorsements.

Inquiry #1:

May an attorney advertise and conduct educational seminars for non-clients and, at the end of the presentation, request that the attendees complete an evaluation feedback form which includes the attendee's name, contact, and family information, as well as check boxes to indicate areas of particular interest and a desire, or not, for a free, personal consultation?

Opinion #1:

An attorney may conduct educational seminars for non-clients. See RPC 36. The attorney may advertise the seminars so long as the advertisements comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct. See Rule 7.2. The attorney may request attendees to complete an evaluation feedback form that includes the attendee's name, contact, and family information, as well as check boxes to indicate areas of particular interest. After the seminar, the attorney may not contact an attendee by in-person or telephone solicitation, but must wait for the attendee to contact the attorney. Rule 7.3(a).

Inquiry #2:

May an attorney host a purely social, non-education function for clients and non-clients, including allied professionals, at no charge to them, who have referred prospective business to the attorney?

Opinion #2:

An attorney may host a social function for existing clients, non-clients, or both. See RPC 146. The attorney may invite non-clients, provided the attorney does not solicit business from the non-clients.

Inquiry #3:

May an attorney send a restaurant or store gift certificate to a client or non-client in appreciation for a referral from that person?

Opinion #3:

No. Rule 7.2(b) prohibits a lawyer from giving anything of value to a person for recommending the lawyer's services.

Inquiry #4:

May an attorney send gifts of nominal value—such as holiday fruit baskets, flowers, or gift certificates—to existing clients or non-clients with whom the attorney has an existing professional relationship?

Opinion #4:

Yes, as long as a gift is not a quid pro quo for the referral of clients. Rule 7.2(b).

Inquiry #5:

If a client, non-client, fellow attorney, or allied professional requests one or more business cards or firm brochures from an attorney, may the attorney oblige the request?

Opinion #5:

Yes. The potential for abuse or overreaching is not present where an attorney gives multiple cards or brochures to a third party if there is no understanding that the recipient will engage in in-person solicitation on the attorney's behalf. Rule 7.3.

2006 FEO 7 is distinguishable because it deals with the distribution of business cards at a meeting of a for-profit networking organization whose stated purpose is to provide referrals to its members.

Inquiry #6:

Along with a thank-you letter from the attorney to a client for the client's having allowed the attorney to provide services to that client, may the attorney include a business card and/or firm brochure with the suggestion that the client, if so willing, pass it along to someone who the client thinks might need similar services?

Opinion #6:

Yes, so long as there is no incentive for the client to engage in in-person solicitation on the attorney's behalf. 2006 FEO 7 is distinguishable because it deals with members of a for-profit networking organization rather than a former client.

Inquiry #7:

At the conclusion of rendering services to the client, assume the attorney includes with a thank-you letter a "report card" form for the client to return, if so willing, indicating the client's level of satisfaction with various aspects of the attorney/client experience. If the client chooses to make favorable comments about the attorney or services and expressly consents to the use of those comments for the attorney's marketing purposes, may the attorney use those testimonials in any of its advertising media?

Opinion #7:

With the clients' consent, an attorney may use client endorsements if the clients' statements are truthful "soft" endorsements of the attorney's services that do not create unjustified expectations about the results that the attorney can achieve. A soft endorsement describes characteristics of the lawyer's client service and does not describe the results that the lawyer achieved for the client.

Inquiry #8:

If the attorney's office is in North Carolina but the attorney is also licensed to practice in or for clients in another state, and something is expressly allowed ethically by the other state but prohibited in North Carolina, is the attorney subject to discipline in North Carolina?

Opinion #8:

Yes, if the conduct is unethical under the North Carolina Rules of Professional Conduct and the lawyer's conduct occurred in North Carolina or the predominant effect of the conduct is in North Carolina. Rule 8.5(b)

Inquiry #9:

If any of the foregoing activities are prohibited, which ones must be reported to the State Bar pursuant to Rule 8.3?

Opinion #9:

As stated in Rule 8.3, a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct that raises a substantial question about a lawyer's honesty, trustworthiness, or fitness must be reported to the State Bar.

2007 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

April 20, 2007

Use of the Title "Doctor" in Academia

Opinion rules that a lawyer may use the title "doctor" but only in a post-secondary school academic setting.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney X is licensed to practice law in North Carolina and holds a Juris Doctor degree from an accredited university. Attorney X is working as a full-time college instructor and is not engaged in the private practice of law. RPC 5 prohibits a lawyer from referring to himself as holding a doctorate or using the title "doctor" to refer to himself. Pursuant to the opinion, Attorney X does not refer to herself as "Doctor X." However, the title "doctor" is used by college administrators and faculty with doctorates in fields other than medicine without any apparent risk of misleading students or others within the academic community. The prevailing opinion at the college is that a law degree is of lesser stature or value than other degrees because the title "doctor" does not attach. May Attorney X, and other lawyers who work in academia, use the designation "doctor" within that community?

Opinion:

Yes. RPC 5 provides as follows:

> Since it does not appear to be normal practice to refer to a Juris Doctor degree as simply a [d]octorate or to refer to an attorney holding a Juris Doctor degree as "Doctor," the use of those terms without explanation could be misleading and therefore is inappropriate.

Nevertheless, in academic communities, including community colleges and other post-secondary school institutions of higher education, where individuals with doctoral and other advanced degrees comparable to the juris doctor degree are routinely and traditionally referred to as "doctor," it is not misleading and not inappropriate for a person holding a juris doctor degree to refer to himself or herself as "doctor." The use of the designation "doctor," however, is specifically limited: a lawyer may use the designation only when working or otherwise participating in a function associated with a post-secondary school institution of higher education. In all other contexts, a lawyer may not refer to himself or herself as "doctor."

2007 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

April 20, 2007

Valuing Effect of Lawyer's Departure in Firm Agreement

Opinion rules that a partnership, shareholders, or other similar agreement may include a repurchase or buy-out provision that takes into account the loss in firm value generated by the lawyer's departure provided the provision is fair and is not based solely upon loss in value due to the loss of client billings.

Inquiry:

Law Firm requires all its shareholders to sign an agreement providing for the purchase of shares by incoming shareholders and the repurchase of those shares by the firm upon each shareholder's departure. Attorney A, a shareholder at Law Firm, is leaving to join another firm. A number of clients have elected to have Attorney A continue their representation after he leaves the firm.

Pursuant to the agreement, in the event a departing shareholder takes clients with him, the repurchase obligation of Law Firm is reduced according to the following formula:

> The purchase price shall be reduced . . . by an amount equal to one hundred twenty-five Percent (125%) of the work in process generated by employees of the corporation during the twelve (12) months preceding the event requiring or permitting the stock purchase on behalf of clients of the corporation for whom the shareholder or law firm with whom the shareholder is or becomes associated, performs legal services during the twelve (12) month period following the event requiring or permitting the stock purchase . . . .
>
> In no event does the stock purchase price become reduced below zero.

Assume that the value of Attorney A's stock is $20,000. After leaving Law Firm, Attorney A will continue to represent clients who have traditionally generated more firm revenue than the value of Attorney A's stock. Therefore, Law Firm's repurchase obligation to Attorney A under the circumstances is zero.

Does the above provision violate the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion:

Yes. Rule 5.6(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct reads as follows:

A lawyer shall not participate in offering or making:

(a) a partnership, shareholders, operating, employment, or other similar type of agreement that restricts the right of a lawyer to practice after termination of the relationship, except an agreement concerning benefits upon retirement;

Rule 5.6 protects two important ethical principles: the right of clients to legal counsel of their choice and lawyer mobility. Although this provision is not like a typical covenant not to compete in that it does not have geographical or temporal restrictions, it does tie the decrease in share value to the fact that the departed lawyer represents former clients of the firm. By so doing, the provision provides a disincentive for the departing lawyer to represent clients with whom the lawyer has a prior relationship, penalizes the departing lawyer for representing former clients of the firm, and restricts the lawyer's right to practice. Moreover, the provision does not appear to measure the devaluation of the lawyer's shares in the firm due to the lawyer's departure. If a provision in a firm agreement penalizes a lawyer for taking clients, will dissuade a lawyer from continuing to represent firm clients after his departure, or does not otherwise fairly represent the devaluation of ownership interest in the firm engendered by the lawyer's departure, it violates Rule 5.6(a). See e.g., 2001 FEO 10 (purpose of employment agreement was to discourage competitive activity and was, therefore, unethical).

Nevertheless, Rule 5.6(a) does not prohibit a repurchase provision in a firm agreement that takes into account the financial effect of a lawyer's departure from a firm. However, the provision must include a more refined approach for evaluating the loss of value due to the lawyer's departure. For example, a provision that takes into account various economic factors that affect the value of the firm's shares, such as long-term financial commitments to staff and for space and equipment leases originally made by the firm in reliance upon the departing lawyer's continued contribution to the firm, may be acceptable under the rule. To the extent that a contractual provision represents a fair assessment of the forecasted devaluation in the ownership interest in the firm engendered by a lawyer's departure and does not penalize the lawyer for taking clients with him, the provision might not violate Rule 5.6(a).

2007 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

July 13, 2007

Continuing Chapter 13 Representation of Husband and Wife after Divorce

Opinion rules that a lawyer may continue to represent a husband and wife in a Chapter 13 bankruptcy after they divorce provided the conditions on common representation set forth in Rule 1.7 are satisfied.

Inquiry #1:

Husband and Wife hire Attorney A to file a Chapter 13 bankruptcy petition. While the proceeding is pending, Husband and Wife separate and ultimately divorce. Husband and Wife want Attorney A to continue to represent them jointly and they want to continue to pay creditors pursuant to the Chapter 13 plan. Husband and Wife have reached an agreement on how they will make the mortgage payment and the Chapter 13 plan payments. They believe that they can resolve amicably any other issues that may come up in the case. Attorney A has discussed the potential conflict of interest that might arise due to his common representation. Husband and Wife indicated that they cannot afford to hire other lawyers and that they consent to the common representation.

May Attorney A continue to represent Husband and Wife under these circumstances until an issue upon which they cannot agree arises?

Opinion #1:

Yes. Rule 1.7(b) permits a lawyer to represent two or more clients, despite a concurrent conflict of interest, provided the following conditions can be met:

(1) the lawyer reasonably believes that the lawyer will be able to provide competent and diligent representation to each affected client;

(2) the representation is not prohibited by law;

(3) the representation does not involve the assertion of a claim by one client against another client represented by the lawyer in the same litigation or other proceeding before a tribunal; and

(4) each affected client gives informed consent, confirmed in writing.

Assuming the common representation is not prohibited by bankruptcy law and Husband and Wife do not, at this juncture, have any claims to assert against each other in the bankruptcy proceeding, Attorney A may proceed with the common representation provided he reasonably believes that he can provide competent and diligent representation to both Husband and Wife and he has the informed consent of both clients.

Inquiry #2:

Should Attorney A get something in writing about the issue?

Opinion #2:

Yes, the consent of each client must be confirmed in writing. Rule 1.7(b)(4). While the signature of the client on the written confirmation of consent is not required by the rule, asking a client to sign a statement confirming consent may help the client to understand the importance of the lawyer's disclosures relative to the conflict and the meaning of the consent.

Inquiry #3:

The law of privilege and disclosure requirements for a bankruptcy proceeding may be different than the ethical constraints on Attorney A arising out of the Rules of Professional Conduct. In light of this, is Attorney A required to ask the bankruptcy court for permission to stay in the case?

Opinion #3:

Whether the rules of the bankruptcy court or federal bankruptcy law require Attorney A to obtain the consent of the court is a question of law outside the purview of the Ethics Committee. Attorney A must examine the court rules and federal law to determine whether the court's consent is required. If it is not required, Attorney A may proceed with the common representation subject to the conditions set out in Opinion #1.

To obtain the informed consent of clients to a common representation, a lawyer must "communicate adequate information and explanation appropriate to the circumstances." Rule 0.1(f)(definition of "informed consent.") In the current situation, Attorney A must explain to Husband and Wife the effect, if any, that the law of privilege and disclosure requirements in a bankruptcy proceeding might have on the common representation. In addition, Attorney A must inform each client of the right to information about the representation. As noted in comment [31] to Rule 1.7, "[t]he lawyer should, at the outset of the common representation and as part of the process of obtaining each client's informed consent, advise each client that information will be shared and that the lawyer will have to withdraw if one client decides that some matter material to the representation should be kept from the other." See 2006 FEO 1.

2007 Formal Ethics Opinion 8

July 13, 2007

Charging a Client for Motion to Withdraw

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not charge a client for filing and presenting a motion to withdraw unless withdrawal advances the client's objectives for the representation or the charge is approved by the court when ruling on a petition for legal fees from a court-appointed lawyer.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A is hired by Client to represent him on a matter in litigation. After representing Client for some period of time, Client informs Attorney A that he is no longer satisfied with his services and he discharges Attorney A. Pursuant to the requirements of Rule 1.16 and court rules, Attorney A prepares a motion to withdraw, files the motion, and successfully argues the motion to the court. After he withdraws, Attorney A prepares a final bill for his services that includes charges, at his regular hourly rate, for the time that he expended preparing and presenting the motion.

May Attorney A charge Client for the legal work necessary to withdraw from the case?

Opinion #1:

No. Rule 1.16(c) requires a lawyer "to comply with applicable law requiring notice to or permission of a tribunal when terminating a representation." Once a lawyer makes a formal appearance in a North Carolina court proceeding, the lawyer must obtain the tribunal's permission to withdraw. E.g., N.C. General Rules of Practice for the Superior and District Courts, Rule 16. Thus, the act of withdrawal is a professional obligation of the lawyer, for the benefit of the lawyer, and, with the exceptions described in opinions #5 and #6 below, the cost of withdrawal cannot be shifted to the client.

Inquiry #2:

Does it matter whether the lawyer decides to withdraw against the client's wishes or the client discharges the lawyer?

Opinion #2:

No. Whether the client or the lawyer is the first to conclude that the relationship must end, determining who is at fault or the motivation of the client or the lawyer when ending the relationship is often impossible and, ultimately, beside the point. Regardless of who may be at fault, the cost of the work necessary to file and argue a motion to withdraw must be incurred because the lawyer is required by the Rules of Professional Conduct and the court rules to obtain the permission of the court to withdraw. It is the lawyer's professional duty and, therefore, the lawyer may not shift the cost to the client. Cf., 2000 FEO 7, Charging a Legal Fee for Participation in the Fee Dispute Resolution Program (participation in State Bar's fee dispute resolution program is a professional responsibility making it improper to charge the client for the time expended to participate).

Inquiry #3:

The court denies Attorney A's motion to withdraw. May Attorney A subsequently bill Client for the legal work necessitated by the motion to withdraw?

Opinion #3:

No, see Opinions #1 and #2 above.

Inquiry #4:

Attorney A wants to include a provision in his standard legal services agreement that states that the client will pay the cost of preparing, filing, and arguing a motion to withdraw if the client terminates the lawyer's services.

If a client consents to this provision in a legal services agreement, may Attorney A subsequently charge the costs to the client if the client terminates his services?

Opinion #4:

With the exception of the situation described in Opinion #5 below, a lawyer may not include a provision in his legal services agreement shifting the cost of withdrawal to the client. See Opinions #1 and #2 above. Such a provision would have an improper chilling effect on a client's right to terminate a lawyer's services at will.

Inquiry #5:

On occasion, a lawyer must file a motion to withdraw, with the consent of the client, to advance the client's objectives for the representation and not because the client is dissatisfied with the lawyer's services or the lawyer wishes to terminate the representation. For example, an insurance carrier hires a lawyer to defend its insured in a personal injury lawsuit. Before trial, the carrier offers the full policy limits to the plaintiff. The carrier hires another lawyer to file the appropriate motion seeking to have the carrier relieved of its duty to defend the insured. The lawsuit must go forward, however, to determine whether there is liability entitling the plaintiff to recover the proceeds from an underinsured or other excess liability insurance policy. If the motion to be relieved of the duty to defend is allowed, the lawyer originally hired to defend the insured must make a motion to withdraw to further the insurance carrier's objective of being relieved of the duty to defend. The insurance carrier typically anticipates and assumes that it will pay the legal fees associated with the preparation and presentation of the motion to withdraw.

If a lawyer must withdraw from the representation of a client in a lawsuit to advance the client's objectives for the representation, may the lawyer charge the client for the legal work necessary to withdraw? May the lawyer include a provision in his legal services agreement with the client stating that the client will pay the legal fees for withdrawal under these circumstances?

Opinion #5:

Yes, in this instance, the lawyer is providing a legal service to the client in addition to fulfilling his professional obligation under Rule 1.16(c). Subject to the limitation on clearly excessive fees in Rule 1.5, a lawyer may charge a client for the legal work necessary to withdraw if withdrawal advances the client's objectives for the representation and the lawyer may include a provision in his legal services agreement to this effect.

Inquiry #6:

The client-lawyer relationship between a court-appointed lawyer and a client is often difficult because the client does not select the lawyer. In addition, a court-appointed lawyer may not have an opportunity to check for conflicts of interest prior to being appointed or, in the criminal defense practice, a conflict of interest may not be apparent until the case evolves (e.g., the lawyer realizes that a plea agreement involves cooperation with the authorities that will negatively impact another client of the lawyer). If withdrawal from representation by a court-appointed lawyer is necessitated by a breakdown in the relationship or a conflict of interest or other similar circumstances, may the lawyer include the charges associated with filing and presenting the motion in a fee petition which is reviewed by the court?

Opinion #6:

Yes, provided the lawyer, in good faith, concludes that the lawyer's conduct is not the reason for the motion.[1] Judicial review provides oversight to insure that the fee charges are warranted and, unlike in private representation, seeking compensation for filing the motion will not have a chilling effect on the client's right to terminate the relationship.

Endnote

1. This opinion does not require the lawyer to itemize or describe the conduct of the client leading to the motion to withdraw in the petition for fees. In many instances, this information will be confidential and cannot be disclosed. Rule 1.6.

2007 Formal Ethics Opinion 9

July 13, 2007

Lawyer's Obligation to Disburse Closing Funds

Withdrawn April 25, 2008.

2007 Formal Ethics Opinion 10

January 25, 2008

Lawyer Employed by School Board as Hearing Officer

Opinion holds a lawyer employed by a school board may serve as an administrative hearing officer with the informed consent of the board.

Inquiry:

Before a decision to suspend or expel a student is made by the administration of a public school system, a student is afforded a hearing before an administrative hearing officer who makes findings of fact, conclusions of law, and a recommendation on discipline to the superintendent. These suspension and expulsion hearings precede an appeal to the board.

School Board hires Lawyer X as an employee to provide in-house legal services to the administration of the school system and to the board. As a part of her duties, Lawyer X is appointed by the superintendent as the administrative hearing officer for the initial suspension and expulsion hearings.

May Lawyer X serve in this capacity?

Opinion:

This opinion assumes that there are no due process prohibitions to the arrangement described in this inquiry. To the extent that this arrangement is held by a court to interfere with the due process rights of students, a lawyer may not participate.

Competent representation demands that the lawyer maintain her neutrality and act impartially when serving as a hearing officer to fulfill the board's obligation to provide a fair hearing and to avoid exposing her employer to subsequent hearings or liability. If Lawyer X reasonably believes that she will be able to provide competent and diligent representation to the board while serving in the capacity of hearing officer, she may accept the assignment provided the board gives informed consent, confirmed in writing. Rule 1.7(b). The lawyer's service as the administrative hearing officer may create an appearance of unfairness. Therefore, the disclosure necessary to obtain the informed consent of the board must include warning the board about the appearance problem, advising the board about the practical legal effects of the problem, and advising the board that the problem could be avoided by retaining an independent lawyer, who is not an employee of the board, to serve as the hearing officer. If the board consents after this disclosure, Lawyer X may serve as the hearing officer. Thereafter, Lawyer X must continually reassess her ability to fulfill her obligation to maintain her neutrality as a hearing officer as her relationship with the board and the administration changes over time.

This situation is not governed by Rule 1.12(b) which prohibits a lawyer who is serving as a judge or other adjudicative officer from negotiating for employment with a person who is involved as a party in a matter before the lawyer. Lawyer X is already employed by the board; her decisions as the hearing officer will not be influenced by offers of employment. Similarly, RPC 138 is not applicable. That opinion cites Canon IX of the now superseded 1985 Rules of Professional Conduct as the basis for prohibiting a partner of a lawyer representing a party to an arbitration hearing from acting as an arbitrator. Canon IX set forth the general admonition that "A lawyer should avoid even the appearance of professional impropriety." The canons did not establish specific standards or provide clear guidance for lawyer conduct and, for these reasons, were eliminated from the Rules of Professional Conduct when they were comprehensively revised in 1997. Mine, Executive Summary of the 1997 Revised Rules of Professional Conduct. RPC 138 prohibits lawyers in the same firm from serving, respectively, as advocate and adjudicator because of the appearance of impropriety. In the present inquiry, the lawyer is serving solely as the hearing officer. Moreover, the potential that there will be an appearance of unfairness in the proceeding must be disclosed to the board, as explained above, but, if the lawyer concludes that she can perform the role competently, which includes acting impartially, and the board consents, there is no professional impropriety.

Rule 1.12(a) prohibits a lawyer from representing anyone in connection with a matter in which the lawyer participated personally and substantially as a judge or other adjudicative officer unless all parties to the proceeding give informed consent confirmed in writing. Therefore, Lawyer X may not subsequently act as the advisor to the board or the prosecutor for the administration in an appeal to the board, nor may she represent the board in any further appeal of a disciplinary matter in which Lawyer X served as the initial hearing officer, unless all parties give informed consent confirmed in writing.

2007 Formal Ethics Opinion 11

July 13, 2007

Lawyer's Duties when Client Revokes Consent to Conflict

Opinion rules that a lawyer is not required to withdraw from representing one client if the other client revokes consent without good reason and an evaluation of the factors set out in comment [21] to Rule 1.7 and the Restatement (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyers indicates continued representation is favored.

Inquiry:

May a lawyer rely on a written waiver of conflict regarding the matter at hand signed, with informed consent, by two or more parties, after a subsequent, unforeseen falling out among those parties? (So that the lawyer is not required to relinquish representation of a long-term client/party to the original waiver due to one of the other party/signees revoking the waiver and objecting to the lawyer's continuing to represent the long-term client.)

Opinion:

Pursuant to Rule 1.7 comment [21], a client who has given consent to a conflict may revoke the consent at any time. According to comment [21], whether one client's revocation of consent to his own representation precludes the lawyer from continuing to represent the other client depends on the nature of the conflict, whether the client revoked consent because of a material change in circumstances, the reasonable expectations of the other client, and whether material detriment to the other client or the lawyer would result.

The Restatement (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyers indicates that if one client revokes his consent to representation without good reason, the lawyer may continue representing the other client in the matter if the lawyer and other client have already relied on the consent to their detriment. The Restatement provides that a joint client may be justified in revoking consent to multiple representation when a material change occurs in the factual basis on which the client originally gave informed consent, such as when the clients develop antagonistic positions; the lawyer favors the other client; or the other client takes harmful action. Restatement (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyers § 122 cmt. f (2000). Examples of detrimental reliance by the non-revoking client or the lawyer include the investment of substantial time and money in the representation; the disclosure of confidential information; the development of a relationship of trust and confidence between the lawyer and the non-revoking client; and the election by the lawyer or the non-revoking client to forego other opportunities in reliance on the consent.

The consent agreement may specify the effect of one client's repudiation upon the other client's right to continued representation and the lawyer's right to continue to represent the other client. The DC Bar suggests the following language:

> You have the right to repudiate this waiver should you later decide that it is no longer in your interest. Should the conflict addressed by the waiver be in existence or contemplated at that time, however, and should we or the other client(s) involved have acted in reliance on the waiver, we will have the right—and possibly the duty, under the applicable rules of professional conduct—to withdraw from representing you and (if permitted by such rules) to continue representing the other involved client(s) even though the other representation may be adverse to you.

DC Bar Legal Ethics Committee Opinion 317 (2002).

In the absence of specific language in the consent agreement addressing the effects of repudiation, a lawyer is not required to withdraw from representing one client if the other client revokes consent without good reason and an evaluation of the factors set out in comment [21] and the Restatement favors continued representation.

2007 Formal Ethics Opinion 12

April 25, 2008

Outsourcing Legal Support Services

Opinion rules that a lawyer may outsource limited legal support services to a foreign lawyer or a nonlawyer (collectively "foreign assistants") provided the lawyer properly selects and supervises the foreign assistants, ensures the preservation of client confidences, avoids conflicts of interests, discloses the outsourcing, and obtains the client's advanced informed consent.

Inquiry:

May a lawyer ethically outsource legal support services abroad, if the individual providing the services is either a nonlawyer or a lawyer not admitted to practice in the United States (collectively "foreign assistants")?

Opinion:

The Ethics Committee has previously determined that a lawyer may use nonlawyer assistants in his or her practice, and that the assistants do not have to be employees of the lawyer's firm or physically present in the lawyer's office. See, e.g., RPC 70, RPC 216, 99 FEO 6, 2002 FEO 9. The previous opinions emphasize that the lawyer's use of nonlawyer assistants must comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct. Generally, the ethical considerations when a lawyer uses foreign assistants are similar to the considerations that arise when a lawyer uses the services of any nonlawyer assistant.

Pursuant to RPC 216, a lawyer has a duty under the Rules of Professional Conduct to take reasonable steps to ascertain that a nonlawyer assistant is competent; to provide the nonlawyer assistant with appropriate supervision and instruction; and to continue to use the lawyer's own independent professional judgment, competence, and personal knowledge in the representation of the client. See also Rule 1.1, Rule 5.3, Rule 5.5. The opinion further states that the lawyer's duty to provide competent representation mandates that the lawyer be responsible for the work product of nonlawyer assistants. See also Rule 5.3.

2002 FEO 9 states that, in any situation where a lawyer delegates a task to a nonlawyer assistant, the lawyer must determine that delegation is appropriate after having evaluated the complexity of the transaction, the degree of difficulty of the task, the training and ability of the nonlawyer, the client's sophistication and expectations, and the course of dealing with the client. See also Rule 1.1

and Rule 5.3.

Therefore, as long as the lawyer's use of the nonlawyer assistant's services is in accordance with the Rules of Professional Conduct, the location of the nonlawyer assistant is irrelevant. Rule 5.3(b) requires lawyers having supervisory authority over the work of nonlawyers to make "reasonable efforts" to ensure that the nonlawyer's conduct is compatible with the professional obligations of the lawyer.

When contemplating the use of foreign assistants, the lawyer's initial ethical duty is to exercise due diligence in the selection of the foreign assistant. RPC 216 states that, before contracting with a nonlawyer assistant, a lawyer must take reasonable steps to determine that the nonlawyer assistant is competent. 2002 FEO 9 states that the lawyer must evaluate the training and ability of the nonlawyer in determining whether delegation of a task to the nonlawyer is appropriate. The lawyer must ensure that the foreign assistant is competent to perform the work requested, understands and will comply with the ethical rules that govern a lawyer's conduct, and will act in a manner that is compatible with the lawyer's professional obligations.

In the selection of the foreign assistant, the lawyer should consider obtaining background information about any intermediary employing the foreign assistants; obtaining the foreign assistants' resumes; conducting reference checks; interviewing the foreign assistants to ascertain their suitability for the particular assignment; obtaining a work product sample; and confirming that appropriate channels of communication are present to ensure that supervision can be provided in a timely and ongoing manner. Individual cases may require special or further measures. See New York City Bar Ass'n. Formal Opinion 2006-3; San Diego County Bar Ass'n. Ethics Opinion 2007-1.

Another ethical concern is the lawyer's ability adequately to supervise the foreign assistants. Pursuant to RPC 216, to supervise properly the work delegated to the foreign assistants, the lawyer must possess sufficient knowledge of the specific area of law. The lawyer must also ensure that the assignment is within the foreign assistant's area of competency. In supervising the foreign assistant, the lawyer must review the foreign assistant's work on an ongoing basis to ensure its quality; have ongoing communication with the foreign assistant to ensure that the assignment is understood and that the foreign assistant is discharging the assignment in accordance with the lawyer's directions and expectations; and review thoroughly all work-product of foreign assistants to ensure that it is accurate, reliable, and in the client's interest. The lawyer has an ongoing duty to exercise his or her professional judgment and skill to maintain the level of supervision necessary to advance and protect the client's interest.

If physical separation, language barriers, differences in time zones, or inadequate communication channels do not allow a reasonable and adequate level of supervision to be maintained over the foreign assistant's work, the lawyer should not retain the foreign assistant to provide services.

A lawyer must retain at all times the duty to exercise his or her independent judgment on the client's behalf and cannot abdicate that role to any assistant. A lawyer who utilizes foreign assistants will be held responsible for any of the foreign assistants' work-product used by the lawyer. See Rule 5.3. A lawyer may use foreign assistants for administrative support services such as document assembly, accounting, and clerical support. A lawyer may also use foreign assistants for limited legal support services such as reviewing documents; conducting due diligence; drafting contracts, pleadings, and memoranda of law; and conducting legal research. Foreign assistants may not exercise independent legal judgment in making decisions on behalf of a client. Additionally, a lawyer may not permit any foreign assistant to provide any legal advice or services directly to the client to assure that the lawyer is not assisting another person, or a corporation, in the unauthorized practice of law. See Rule 5.5(d). The limitations on the type of legal services that can be outsourced, in conjunction with the selection and supervisory requirements associated with the use of foreign assistants, insures that the client is competently represented. See Rule 5.5(d). Nevertheless, when outsourcing legal support services, lawyers need to be mindful of the prohibitions on unauthorized practice of law in Chapter 84 of the General Statutes and on the prohibition on aiding the unauthorized practice of law in Rule 5.5(d).

Another significant ethical concern is the protection of client confidentiality. A lawyer has a professional obligation to protect and preserve the confidences of a client against disclosure by the lawyer or other persons who are participating in the representation of the client or who are subject to the lawyer's supervision. See Rule 1.6, cmt. [17]. When utilizing foreign assistants, the lawyer must ensure that procedures are in place to minimize the risk that confidential information might be disclosed. See RPC 133. Included in such procedures should be an effective conflict-checking procedure. See RPC 216. The lawyer must make certain that the outsourcing firm and the foreign assistants working on the particular client matter are aware that the lawyer's professional obligations require that there be no breach of confidentiality in regard to client information. The lawyer also must use reasonable care to select a mode of communication that will best maintain any confidential information that might be conveyed in the communication. See RPC 215.

Finally, the lawyer has an ethical obligation to disclose the use of foreign, or other, assistants and to obtain the client's written informed consent to the outsourcing. In the absence of a specific understanding between the lawyer and client to the contrary, the reasonable expectation of the client is that the lawyer retained by the client, using the resources within the lawyer's firm, will perform the requested legal services. See Rule 1.4, 2002 FEO 9; San Diego County Bar Ass'n. Ethics Opinion 2007-1.

2007 Formal Ethics Opinion 13

January 25, 2008

Billing at Hourly Rate for Intra-Office Communications

Opinion rules that, to insure honest billing predicated on hourly charges, the lawyer must establish a reasonable hourly rate for his services and for the services of his staff; disclose the basis for the amounts to be charged; avoid wasteful, unnecessary, or redundant procedures; and make certain that the total cost to the client is not clearly excessive.

Inquiry:

Attorney's standard contract for legal services provides that the client will be billed for the lawyer's services on a time-expended basis. Attorney charges $200.00 per hour for his legal services. He bills his paralegal's time at $75.00 per hour and his secretary's time at $50.00 per hour. Intra-office email communications are typically billed to clients in the following manner: Attorney A bills for the time that it takes him to type and send an email to a member of the staff; the staff member (secretary or paralegal) bills for the time expended reading Attorney's email and responding; Attorney bills for the time he spends reading the responsive email. Over the course of several months, the charges to a client for intra-office email communications may be in the hundreds of dollars. May a lawyer bill for both the time that it takes the drafter to write an email and the time that it takes the recipient in the same office to read the same email?

Opinion:

Yes. A lawyer may bill for intra-office communications about a client's matter. For example, a lawyer and a paralegal (or two or more lawyers) who meet to discuss a client's case may both bill for the time expended in the meeting provided the meeting advances the representation of the client and the participation of both billing staff members is necessary. Email communications to instruct, update, or confer with other members of the firm is no different and, on occasion, may involve the expenditure of less time by the participants than an in-person meeting (and, therefore, be less expensive for the client). Nevertheless, to insure honest billing predicated on hourly charges, the lawyer must establish a reasonable hourly rate for his services and for the services of his staff; disclose the basis for the amounts to be charged; avoid wasteful, unnecessary, or redundant procedures; and make certain that the total cost to the client is not clearly excessive.

Establishing a Reasonable Hourly Rate for Services

Rule 1.5 prohibits a lawyer from charging or collecting a clearly excessive fee. The rule includes a non-exclusive list of factors to be considered in determining whether a fee is clearly excessive, including the following:

(1) the time and labor required, the novelty and difficulty of the questions involved, and the skill requisite to perform the legal service properly;

(2) the fee customarily charged in the locality for similar legal services;

(3) the amount involved and the results obtained; and

(4) the experience, reputation, and ability of the lawyer or lawyers performing the services. Rule 1.5(a).

The prohibition on charging an excessive fee also applies to the amount charged per hour. When establishing an hourly rate for a lawyer's time or for a staff member's time, the factors set forth in the rule must be considered. In particular, the experience, reputation, and ability of the lawyer or staff member performing the services must be honestly evaluated. If the lawyer or staff member is inexperienced or of modest ability, the hourly rate should so reflect.

With regard to establishing hourly rates for staff members, if a lawyer's hourly rate takes into consideration overhead costs for staff, the lawyer must consider whether the work of a particular staff member advances the legal representation of the client or is so derivative of the lawyer's work that the expense should be subsumed in the lawyer's hourly rate. For example, the services of a typist, filing clerk, receptionist, scheduler, or billing clerk may fall into the latter category.

Disclosing the Basis for the Amounts to be Charged

Rule 1.5(b) provides that "[w]hen the lawyer has not regularly represented the client, the scope of the representation and the basis or rate of the fee and expenses for which the client will be responsible shall be communicated to the client, preferably in writing, before or within a reasonable time after commencing the representation." Although not required by the rule, a written memorandum of the fee arrangement with each client is strongly encouraged particularly when there is the possibility that the client does not understand that hourly charges may include charges for time expended communicating with, instructing, and supervising others, by email communications and otherwise. As noted in the comment to the rule, > [g]enerally, furnishing the client with a simple memorandum or copy of the lawyer's customary fee arrangements will suffice, provided that the writing states the general nature of the legal services to be provided, the basis, rate, or total amount of the fee, and whether and to what extent the client will be responsible for any costs, expenses, or disbursements in the course of the representation. A written statement concerning the terms of the engagement reduces the possibility of misunderstanding.

See also Rule 1.4(b) (lawyer shall explain a matter to the extent reasonably necessary to permit the client to make informed decisions regarding the representation). When a particular billing practice may be a subsequent source of misunderstanding, a lawyer should consider disclosing this billing practice at the beginning of the representation and including an explanation in the fee memorandum.

The duty to disclose the basis for the amounts to be charged is "a two-fold duty, including not only an explanation at the beginning of engagement of the basis on which fees and other charges will be billed, but also a sufficient explanation in the statement so that the client may reasonably be expected to understand what fees and other charges the client is actually being billed." ABA Comm. on Ethics and Prof'l Responsibility, Formal Op. 93-379 (1993). "In an engagement in which the client has agreed to compensate the lawyer on the basis of time expended at regular hourly rates, a bill setting out no more than a total dollar figure for unidentified professional services will often be insufficient to tell the client what he or she needs to know in order to understand how the amount was determined." Id. Gerald F. Phillips in Time Bandits: Attempts by Lawyers to Pad Hours Can Often Be Uncovered by a Careful Examination of Billing Statements, 29 W. St. U. L. Rev. 265 (2002), suggests that a lawyer has a duty to disclose the hourly rates of each timekeeper in each billing statement "so that the client may reasonably understand what fee is being billed and how it was calculated." Id. at 274.

Avoiding Wasteful, Unnecessary, or Redundant Procedures

The fiduciary character of the client-lawyer relationship requires a lawyer to act in the client's best interests and to deal fairly with the client. When billing on an hourly basis, fair dealing requires that the lawyer provide an hour's worth of legal services for each hour billed. This means that a lawyer must avoid wasteful, unnecessary, or redundant procedures that do not serve to advance the client's representation. Time padding, or billing a client for time that was not actually expended on a client's matter, and task padding, or billing a client for unnecessary tasks, are both dishonest and unethical. Phillips at 267; Rule 7.1 and Rule 8.4(c). The comment to Rule 1.5 admonishes, "[a] lawyer should not exploit a fee arrangement based primarily on hourly charges by using wasteful procedures." As further noted in ABA Formal Op. 93-379, > continuous toil on or over-staffing a project for the purpose of churning out hours is...not properly considered "earning" one's fees. One job of a lawyer is to expedite the legal process. Model Rule 3.2. Just as a lawyer is expected to discharge a matter on summary judgment rather then proceed to trial if possible, so too is the lawyer expected to complete other projects for a client efficiently.

Whether a bill for intra-office communications or consultations, by email, telephone, or meeting, constitutes task padding or is a fair charge for a service rendered must be evaluated on a case-by-case basis.

Total Cost to the Client May Not Be Clearly Excessive

Rule 1.5 "deals not only with the determination of a reasonable hourly rate, but also with total cost to the client." ABA Formal Op. 93-379. In light of all services rendered and the factors set forth in Rule 1.5(a), the total cost to the client, on whatever basis charged, must not be clearly excessive. If the inclusion of charges at a lawyer's or a staff member's hourly rate for giving or receiving instructions via intra-office email or otherwise renders the total cost to the client clearly excessive, a lawyer should exclude these charges from the client's bill.

2007 Formal Ethics Opinion 14

January 25, 2008

Advertising Inclusion in List in North Carolina Super Lawyers and Other Similar Publications

Editor's note: This opinion was withdrawn by the council on October 25, 2019.

Opinion rules a lawyer may advertise the lawyer's inclusion in the list of lawyers in North Carolina Super Lawyers and other similar publications and may advertise in such publications subject to certain conditions

Inquiry #1:

North Carolina Super Lawyers is a listing of lawyers published by Key Professional Media, Inc., a for-profit corporation, as a special advertising supplement in North Carolina newspapers and city and regional magazines. It is also published as a magazine and distributed to all active members of the State Bar, corporate counsel of Russell 3000 companies, and libraries of ABA-approved North Carolina law schools.

The selection process for inclusion in an edition of North Carolina Super Lawyers is described on the Super Lawyers website (www.superlawyers.com/about/opinion_39.html) as a "very thorough quantitative and qualitative selection process" that is based upon three steps: creation of the candidate pool, evaluation of the lawyers in the pool, and peer evaluation by practice area. The process, as described on the website and in the advertising supplements and the magazine, involves the following activities and includes the following standards:

- An annual ballot to all active lawyers in North Carolina who are licensed for five years or more with procedures and systems to detect and manage manipulation attempts.
- An annual search during which Law & Politics, a division of Key Professional Media, Inc., seeks out candidates who should be considered but have not been identified through the balloting process. This search includes the use of professional databases and sources, the review of local and national legal journals, and interviews with managing partners and marketing directors of law firms in North Carolina.
- Law & Politics examines the background and experience of each candidate, searching for evidence of peer recognition and professional achievement.
- Candidates are grouped by primary area of practice and reviewed by lawyers with demonstrated expertise in the relevant practice areas.
- Research by Law & Politics during which each candidate is scored on a 12-point evaluation of peer recognition and professional achievement.
- Lawyers selected for inclusion in Super Lawyers are checked for their standing with the bar, including verification that they are not subject to disciplinary proceedings, criminal prosecution, or other legal action that reflects adversely on fitness.
- Lawyers cannot pay to be selected for inclusion in Super Lawyers; they cannot vote for themselves; and they cannot pay to be editorially featured.
- Lawyers are not included or excluded depending upon whether they advertise in Super Lawyers. Every lawyer named in the Super Lawyers list receives a free listing in the Super Lawyers advertising supplement or magazine.

■ Inclusion in a Super Lawyers list is limited to the top five percent of the active members of the State Bar based upon points awarded pursuant to the process described above.

The Super Lawyers website also explains the "advertising opportunities" that are available in Super Lawyers advertising supplements or magazines. There are two "profile" options for advertising in the supplement or the magazine. A standard profile is a one-ninth of a page advertisement that includes a color photo, contact information, and 100-word biography for the profiled lawyer. A platinum profile is a full or half-page advertisement that focuses on an individual lawyer or all lawyers chosen for the Super Lawyers list from a law firm. It also includes a color photo, contact information, and biographies of the profiled lawyers. In the alphabetical listing in the supplement or magazine, the names of lawyers who have purchased a "profile" advertisement are listed in red boldface type instead of the black type used for the other lawyers on the list.

In addition to the profiles, a lawyer or law firm may purchase a display advertisement within and adjacent to the Super Lawyers listing in the supplement or magazine. These display advertisements may be full, half, or quarter-page advertisements. Usually a display advertisement purchased by a law firm congratulates the lawyers with the firm who are included in the Super Lawyers list.

May North Carolina lawyers listed in North Carolina Super Lawyers, or other similar publications with titles that imply that the lawyers listed in the publication are "super," "the best," "elite," or a similar designation, advertise or publicize that fact?

Opinion #1:

Yes, subject to certain conditions.

Rule 7.1(a) prohibits a lawyer from making false or misleading communications about himself or his services. The rule defines a false or misleading communication as a communication that contains a material misrepresentation of fact or law or omits a necessary fact; one that is likely to create an unjustified expectation about results the lawyer can achieve; or one that compares the lawyer's services with other lawyers' services, unless the comparison can be factually substantiated. The question is whether advertising one's inclusion in the Super Lawyers list is a material misrepresentation because the term "super" creates the unjustified expectation that the lawyer can achieve results that an ordinary lawyer cannot or, by implying superiority, compares lawyer's services with the services of other "inferior" lawyers without factual substantiation.

Rule 7.1 derives from a long line of Supreme Court cases holding that lawyer advertising is commercial speech that is protected by the First Amendment and subject to limited state regulation. In Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, 433 U.S. 350 (1977), the Supreme Court first declared that First Amendment protection extends to lawyer advertising as a form of commercial speech. The Court held that a state may not constitutionally prohibit a lawyer's advertisement for fees for routine legal services although it may prohibit commercial expression that is false, deceptive, or misleading and may impose reasonable restrictions as to time, place, and manner. Subsequent Supreme Court opinions clarified that the commercial speech doctrine set forth in Central Hudson Gas & Electric Corporation v. Public Service Commission of N.Y., 447 U.S. 557 (1980) is applicable to lawyer advertising. See In re R.M.J., 455 U.S. 191 (1982). Specifically, a state may absolutely prohibit inherently misleading speech or speech that has been proven to be misleading; however, other restrictions are appropriate only where they serve a substantial state interest, directly advance that interest, and are no more restrictive than reasonably necessary to serve that interest.

Seventeen years after Bates, in Peel v. Attorney Registration and Disciplinary Commission of Illinois, 496 U.S. 91 (1990), a plurality of the Supreme Court concluded that a lawyer has a constitutional right, under the standards applicable to commercial speech, to advertise his certification as a trial specialist by the National Board of Trial Advocacy (NBTA). The Court found NBTA to be a "bona fide organization," with "objectively clear" standards, which had made inquiry into Peel's fitness for certification and which had not "issued certificates indiscriminately for a price." Id. at 102, 110. If a state is concerned that a lawyer's claim to certification may be a sham, the state can require the lawyer "to demonstrate that such certification is available to all lawyers who meet objective and consistently applied standards relevant to practice in a particular area of the law." Id. at 109. In concluding that the NBTA certification advertised by Peel in his letterhead was neither actually nor potentially misleading, the Court emphasized "the principle that disclosure of truthful, relevant information is more likely to make a positive contribution to decision-making than is concealment of such information." Id. at 108.

Ibanez v. Florida Department of Business and Professional Regulation, Board of Accountancy, 512 U.S. 136 (1994), similarly held that a state may not prohibit a CPA from advertising her credential as a "Certified Financial Planner" (CFP) where that designation was obtained from a private organization. As in Peel, the Court found that a state may not ban statements that are not actually or inherently misleading such as a statement of certification, including the CFP designation, by a "bona fide organization." Id. at 145. The Court dismissed concerns that a consumer will be mislead because he or she cannot verify the accuracy or value of the designation by observing that a consumer may call the CFP Board of Standards to obtain this information. Id.

In 2003 FEO 3, the Ethics Committee considered whether a lawyer may advertise that he or she is a member of an organization with a self-laudatory title such as the "Million Dollar Advocates Forum." The opinion rules that a lawyer may advertise such membership but, to avoid a misleading communication, the following conditions must be satisfied:

1) the organization has strict, objective standards for admission that are verifiable and would be recognized by a reasonable lawyer as establishing a legitimate basis for determining whether the lawyer has the knowledge, skill, experience, or expertise indicated by the designated membership;

2) the standards for membership are explained in the advertisement or information on how to obtain the membership standards is provided in the advertisement;

3) the organization has no financial interest in promoting the particular lawyer; and

4) the organization charges the lawyer only reasonable membership fees.

Super Lawyers appears to be a bona fide organization, as described in Peel and Ibanez, in that it has objectively clear and consistently applied standards for inclusion in its lists and inclusion is available to all lawyers who meet the standards. For example, all active North Carolina lawyers who are licensed for five years or more are eligible for inclusion and inclusion is limited to the top five percent of eligible lawyers based upon an objective point system.

As observed by the Supreme Court in Peel, Peel's advertisement of his certification by NBTA "is not an unverifiable opinion of the ultimate quality of a lawyer's work or a promise of success, but is simply a fact, albeit one with multiple predicates, from which a consumer may or may not draw an inference of the likely quality of an attorney's work in a given area of practice." Peel, 496 U.S. at 101. Similarly, advertising inclusion in the Super Lawyers list is not an opinion on the quality of a listed lawyer's work or a promise of success, it is information from which a consumer may draw inferences based upon the standards for inclusion in the list. The Ethics Committee therefore concludes that an advertisement that states that a lawyer is included in a listing in North Carolina Super Lawyers, or in a similar listing in another publication, is not misleading or deceptive provided the relevant conditions from 2003 FEO 3 are satisfied; to wit:

1) the publication has strict, objective standards for inclusion in the listing that are verifiable and would be recognized by a reasonable lawyer as establishing a legitimate basis for determining whether the lawyer has the knowledge, skill, experience, or expertise indicated by the listing;

2) the standards for inclusion are explained in the advertisement or information on how to obtain the standards is provided in the advertisement (referral to the publication's website is adequate if the standards are published therein); and

3) no compensation is paid by the lawyer, or the lawyer's firm, for inclusion in the listing.

In addition, the advertisement must make clear that the lawyer is included in a listing that appears in a publication which is identified (by using a distinctive typeface or italics) and may not simply state that the lawyer is a "Super Lawyer." A statement that the lawyer is a "Super Lawyer," without more, implies superiority to other lawyers and is an unsubstantiated comparison prohibited by Rule 7.1(a). Finally, since a new listing is included in each annual edition of the Super Lawyers supplement and magazine (and, it is presumed, in other similar publications), the advertisement must indicate the year in which the lawyer was included in the list.

Inquiry #2:

May a North Carolina lawyer purchase a profile or display advertisement in a North Carolina Super Lawyers advertising supplement or magazine or in other similar publications?

Opinion #2:

Yes, subject to the conditions set forth in Opinion #1. If the standards for inclusion in the listing are published in the supplement or the magazine, the advertisement does not have to include information on how to obtain the standards.

Inquiry #3:

May a North Carolina lawyer participate in the selection process for the lawyers who are included in such publications?

Opinion #3:

Yes, provided the lawyer's recommendations and evaluations of other lawyers are founded on knowledge and experience of the other lawyers, truthful, and not provided in exchange for a recommendation from another lawyer.

2007 Formal Ethics Opinion 15

April 25, 2008

Clarification of the Requirements for Targeted Direct Mail

Opinion provides clarification of the technical requirements for targeted direct mail letters set forth in Rule 7.3(c) of the Rules of Professional Conduct.

Inquiry #1:

Rule 7.3(c) allows a lawyer to solicit professional employment from a potential client known to be in need of legal services by written, recorded, or electronic communication provided the statement, in capital letters, "THIS IS AN ADVERTISEMENT FOR LEGAL SERVICES" (the advertising notice) appears on a specified part of the communication. If the solicitation is by letter, Rule 7.3(c)(1) requires the advertising notice to "be printed at the beginning of the body of the letter in a font as large or larger than the lawyer's or law firm's name in the letterhead or masthead." Where must the advertising notice be placed in the letter to be "at the beginning of the body of the letter"?

Opinion #1:

Black's Law Dictionary, 5th Edition (1979), defines "[b]ody of an instrument" as follows: "The main and operative part; the substantive provisions, as distinguished from the recitals, title, jurat, etc." Consistent with this definition, the body of a letter is that part of the letter that appears below the salutation. However, the Rules of Professional Conduct, being rules of reason, should be interpreted and applied in a reasonable manner. Rule 0.2, Scope, cmt. [1]. Therefore, the requirement in Rule 7.3(c) that the advertising notice "be printed at the beginning of the body of the letter" is satisfied if the advertising notice appears anywhere between the top of the page to immediately below the salutation of a direct mail letter.

Inquiry #2:

Rule 7.3(c)(1) requires direct mail letters to potential clients to be placed in an envelope. The advertising notice must be printed on the front of the envelope, in a font that is as large as any other printing on the envelope and the front of the envelope "shall contain no printing other than the name of the lawyer or law firm and return address, the name and address of the recipient, and the advertising notice." Many law firms have designed a distinguishing sign or mark ("insignia") or special border that is used in conjunction with the firm's name wherever and whenever the firm name appears in print on official written communications on behalf of the firm such as letterhead. Examples of such insignia include a stylized version of the scales of justice or the surname initials of the named partners in a distinct enlarged font. May the front of the envelope for a direct mail letter contain an insignia or border connected with the firm name in the return address on the envelope if the insignia is a picture or symbol but does not contain any letters or printing?

Opinion #2:

Yes, if the insignia or border is used consistently by the firm in official communications on behalf of the firm, the insignia or border is considered a part of the firm name and may appear next to the firm name in the return address on the front of the envelope provided the advertising notice remains conspicuous.

Inquiry #3:

May the front of the envelope for a direct mail letter contain an insignia connected with the firm name in the return address on the front of the envelope if the insignia is a design that incorporates the surname initials of the named partners of the firm? If so, do the initials have to be in a font that is the same size or smaller than the advertising notice printed on the front of the envelope?

Opinion #3:

The front of the envelope may contain an insignia with initials that are in a font that is larger than the font used for the advertising notice provided the insignia is used consistently by the firm in official communications on behalf of the firm, the advertising notice is in a font that is the same size or larger than the font used for the firm name, and the advertising notice remains conspicuous.

Inquiry #4:

May an insignia appear on the back of the envelope and, if so, are there any restrictions on the size?

Opinion #4:

The insignia may appear on the back of the envelope subject to the requirements set forth in opinions #2 and #3 above.

Inquiry #5:

ABC Law Firm uses the motto "Attorneys for Injured People" and prints the motto just below its name in all of its official written communications. May the front of the envelope for a direct mail letter contain a motto connected with the law firm name in the return address on the envelope?

Opinion #5:

No. A motto will detract from the conspicuousness of the advertising notice. However, the motto may appear on the back of the envelope subject to the font size requirements in Rule 7.3(c).

Inquiry #6:

May the URL or website address for a law firm appear in the return address on the front of the envelope for a direct mail letter?

Opinion #6:

No. It may appear on the back of the envelope subject to the font size requirements in Rule 7.3(c).

2007 Formal Ethics Opinion 16

January 25, 2008

Cross Examination of Law Enforcement Officer by Criminal Defense Lawyer Who is Also Elected Official

Opinion rules that a lawyer who serves on a city council or board of county commissioners may represent a criminal defendant in a criminal proceeding in which a law enforcement officer employed by the council or board is a witness who will be cross examined by the lawyer provided the city or county has adopted a form of government that limits the lawyer's influence on employment decisions relative to the officer.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney is a criminal defense lawyer in private practice. He is presently a candidate for city council for City M. The city charter of City M provides for the council-manager form of government pursuant to Chapter 160A, Article 7, Part 2, of the General Statutes. In this form of government, the city manager, who is hired by the city council and serves at its pleasure, has the sole authority to hire, fire, promote, or make salary decisions relative to all city officers, department heads, and employees in administrative service (and not elected) except the city attorney. N.C.G.S. 160A-148. The city manager's authority to make employment decisions extends to the chief of police and to all employees of the police department. City M's city charter and local ordinances specify that the city manager, not the city council, is responsible for hiring, firing, and promoting police officers.

RPC 63 and RPC 73 hold that a lawyer who has the potential to influence the salary or employment prospects of a law enforcement officer may not represent criminal defendants in cases in which a law enforcement officer is a witness who must be cross examined by the lawyer. The opinion effectively disqualifies a lawyer who is serving on a governing body, such as the city council, from representing criminal defendants in the judicial district where he serves as a city councilor.

If a lawyer is elected to serve on a city council organized and operated under the council-manager form of government, as described above, in which the lawyer will have no ability directly to influence the salary or employment decisions relative to any law enforcement officer testifying in a criminal case, may the lawyer represent criminal defendants in criminal proceedings in the judicial district where he serves as a city councilor and cross-examine witnesses who are law enforcement officers?

Opinion #1:

Yes. RPC 73 ruled that a lawyer serving on a city council or similar governing board, with authority directly to influence employment decisions relative to government employees, is prohibited from cross-examining law enforcement officers because of "the threat that the law enforcement officer might not feel free to testify truthfully and fully in the face of such an opponent." In the council-manager form of government, the city council and councilors have no direct authority over the salary or employment prospects of any city employee. Therefore, a law enforcement officer's ability to testify truthfully in a criminal case will be unaffected by the defense lawyer's role on the city council.

Inquiry #2:

Chapter 153A, Article 5, Part 2 of the General Statutes provides the counties may adopt the county-manager plan of government in which the county manager is hired by the board of commissioners to serve at its pleasure. Although similar to the council-manager form of government for muncipalities, the county-manager form of government gives the county manager less discretion in employment decisions. The county manager is the chief administrator of county government and appoints, with the approval of the board of commissioners, and suspends or removes all non-elected county officers, employees, and agents. N.C.G.S. 153A-82(1). The county manager is also responsible for preparing position classification and pay plans for county officers and employees for submission to the board of commissioners and for administering the pay plan and any position classification plan in accordance with general policies and directives adopted by the board. N.C.G.S. 153A-92(c).

If a lawyer is elected to serve on a board of commissioners organized and operated under the county manager form of government, as described above, in which the lawyer will have no authority to influence a decision to suspend or remove a law enforcement officer and limited authority to influence the employment and compensation of a law enforcement officer testifying in a criminal case, may the lawyer represent criminal defendants in criminal proceedings in the judicial district where he serves as a county commissioner and cross-examine witnesses who are law enforcement officers?

Opinion #2:

Yes. Although the board of commissioners in a county-manager form of government has more authority over employment decisions including approval of appointments and establishing the pay plan and position classifications, it is doubtful that the limited influence on a law enforcement officer's salary or employment prospects held by the criminal defense lawyer will affect or interfere with the law enforcement officer's duty to testify truthfully.

2008 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

April 25, 2008

Disclosure of Client Alias in Workers' Compensation Action

Opinion rules that lawyer representing an undocumented worker in a workers' compensation action has a duty to correct court documents containing false statements of material fact and is prohibited from introducing evidence in support of the proposition that an alias is the client's legal name.

Inquiry:

In a workers' compensation action, what duties does a lawyer have to the court if the lawyer learns that his client, who is an undocumented worker, has been using an alias and that the court documents have been filed under the alias rather than the client's legal name?

Opinion:

The protection of client confidences is one of the most significant responsibilities imposed on a lawyer. Rule 1.6(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct provides that a lawyer shall not reveal information acquired during the professional relationship with a client unless (1) the client gives informed consent; (2) the disclosure is impliedly authorized; or (3) one of the exceptions set out in Rule 1.6(b) applies. One of the exceptions set out in Rule 1.6(b) allows a lawyer to reveal confidential information to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct. Rule 1.6(b)(1).

Rule 3.3(a)(1) prohibits a lawyer from knowingly making a false statement of material fact to a tribunal and requires a lawyer to correct any false statement of material fact previously made. Whether a lawyer has a duty under Rule 3.3 that would require the lawyer to breach a client's confidences to correct previously filed court documents depends on whether the documents contain false statements of material fact.

If the client's name is an issue of material fact in the workers' compensation action, then the lawyer has a duty to correct the filed court documents. The North Carolina Workers' Compensation Act applies to "every person engaged in an employment under any appointment or contract of hire or apprenticeship, express or implied, oral or written, including aliens, and also minors, whether lawfully or unlawfully employed." N.C.G.S. A7 97-2. Arguably, the fact that the lawyer's client is an undocumented worker would not affect the client's right to compensation under the Act. On the other hand, issues of credibility may affect the client's action. A determination of the materiality of the client's use of an alias in a workers' compensation action is a legal question outside the purview of the Ethics Committee.

Before taking any necessary remedial measures, the lawyer should advise the client of the lawyer's duty of candor to the tribunal and seek the client's cooperation with respect to the correction of the false statements in the filed court documents.

Materiality does not affect the lawyer's duty to refrain from offering false evidence in the future. Rule 3.3(a)(3) provides that a lawyer shall not offer any evidence that the lawyer knows to be false. Therefore, the lawyer would be prohibited from introducing any evidence in support of the proposition that the alias is the client's true name, including the client's own testimony. See RPC 33. If the client cannot agree to the lawyer's proposed terms of the continued representation, the lawyer must seek to withdraw from the action in accordance with Rule 1.16.

2008 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

April 25, 2008

Roles of School Board Lawyers in Administrative Proceedings

Opinion holds that a lawyer is not prohibited from advising a school board sitting in an adjudicative capacity in a disciplinary or employment proceeding while another lawyer from the same firm represents the administration; however, such dual representation is harmful to the public's perception of the fairness of the proceeding and should be avoided.

Inquiry:

A student who is suspended from public school for more than ten days may appeal the suspension to the school board. Similarly, when a certified employee of a school system is dismissed, the employee may appeal the dismissal to the school board. An administrative hearing is held, with the board sitting in a quasi-judicial capacity, to determine whether the decision of the administration should be upheld.

Lawyers with ABC Law Firm have extensive experience and special expertise in education law. School Board retains Law Firm to provide all legal representation to the board and, through the board, to the administration of the school system.

Lawyer A and Lawyer B are both education lawyers employed by ABC Law Firm. May Lawyer A represent the administration in a suspension case against a student in an appeal to the board while Lawyer B advises the board on the legal and procedural issues that arise during the hearing? Similarly, may Lawyer A represent the administration in a dismissal case against an employee in an appeal to the board while Lawyer B advises the board?

Opinion:

This inquiry presents an interesting technical issue of professional responsibility relative to whether there is a conflict of interests created by this form of dual representation. The opinion concludes there is no conflict of interests but that this form of dual representation should be avoided to foster the public's perception of the integrity and fairness of the process.

Rule 1.7(a) provides, in part, that it is a concurrent conflict of interest if the representation of one client will be directly adverse to another client or the representation of one or more clients may be materially limited by the lawyer's professional responsibilities to another client or a former client. Under Rule 1.10, a conflict of interest for one lawyer in a firm is imputed to the other lawyers in the firm unless it is a personal conflict of interest.

It is not a concurrent conflict of interest for one lawyer in a firm to present the administration's position to the school board while another lawyer in the same firm advises the board on the legal and procedural issues that arise during the hearing. Both lawyers, whether acting in the role of prosecutor or the role of advisor, represent the school board and not the student or employee appearing before the board. The arrangement described in the inquiry, therefore, does not present a conflict of interest relative to the student or the employee because no duty of loyalty is owed to them by the lawyers with ABC Law Firm.

Although it is assumed that there is no due process prohibition on the dual representation described in this inquiry and no opinion is expressed on this legal issue, see Hope v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Board of Education, 110 N.C. App. 599 (1993), it is clear that the dual representation creates a perception of unfairness in the minds of students (and their parents) and employees appearing before the board. During the public comment period on this proposed opinion, numerous commentators stated that respondents, upon learning that the board will be advised by a lawyer who works in the same firm as the lawyer who will be presenting the administration's position, conclude that the board will receive legal advice that is biased in favor of the administration and, for this reason, the proceeding cannot be fair and impartial.

In Rule 0.1, Preamble: A Lawyer's Professional Responsibilities, it is observed that "[w]ithin the framework of [the] Rules [of Professional Conduct]..., many difficult issues of professional discretion can arise. Such issues must be resolved through the exercise of sensitive professional moral judgment guided by the basic principles underlying the Rules." One of the basic principles underlying the Rules is the duty of a lawyer, as an officer of the court, to uphold the legal process and to seek improvement in the administration of justice. Rule 0.1, cmts. [5] - [6]. As noted in comment [6] to the Preamble, "a lawyer should further the public's understanding of and confidence in the rule of law and the justice system because legal institutions in constitutional democracy depend on popular participation and support to maintain their authority." This admonition applies to administrative proceedings as well as to judicial proceedings. The dual representation described in this inquiry creates a perception of unfairness that undermines the public's confidence in the rule of law and the fairness of the proceeding. For this reason, lawyers are strongly urged to avoid such dual representation and to recommend that the school board obtain other legal counsel to either advise the board or represent the administration.[1]

Endnote

1. In the event lawyers in the same firm do not heed the admonition of the Ethics Committee to avoid this form of dual representation, it is recommended that the lawyers protect the integrity of the adjudicative process by avoiding communications between themselves about a pending disciplinary or employment proceeding. Screening the lawyers from each other would avoid the appearance that the lawyer presenting the administration's position may influence the lawyer advising the board of education and would be consistent with the prohibitions on improper communications about a pending matter with a judge or other adjudicative official or body in Rule 3.5(a). See Rule 1.0(l) ("'screened' denotes the isolation of a lawyer from any participation in a professional matter through the timely imposition of procedures within a firm that are reasonably adequate under the circumstances to protect information that the isolated lawyer is obligated to protect under these Rules or other law.")

2008 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

January 23, 2009

Assisting a Pro Se Litigant

Opinion rules a lawyer may assist a pro se litigant by drafting pleadings and giving advice without making an appearance in the proceeding and without disclosing or ensuring the disclosure of his assistance to the court unless required to do so by law or court order.

Inquiry:

Without appearing in a proceeding or otherwise disclosing or ensuring the disclosure of his assistance to the court, may a lawyer assist a pro se litigant by giving advice on the content and format of documents to be filed with the court including pleadings, by drafting those documents for the litigant, or by giving advice about what to do in court including which witnesses to call, what evidence to present, and how to make opening and closing arguments?

Opinion:

Yes, a lawyer may assist a pro se litigant without disclosing his participation or ensuring that the litigant discloses his assistance unless the lawyer is required to do so by law or court order. Allowing such assistance is consistent with the duty of confidentiality in Rule 1.6, the authority to limit the scope of representation in Rule 1.2, and the duty to assist individuals who cannot afford legal representation as expressed in the Preamble and Rule 6.5. Remaining undisclosed does not violate the duty of honesty set forth in Rules 1.2(d), 4.1, or 8.4(c) or the duty of candor to the tribunal set forth in Rule 3.3(b) unless there is a court order or a law that requires the lawyer to make the disclosure.

In ABA Comm. on Ethics and Prof'l Responsibility, Formal Op. 07-446 (2007), the ABA Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility held that a lawyer may provide legal assistance to a pro se litigant without disclosing or ensuring the disclosure of the nature or extent of the assistance. With regard to whether it is dishonest or a violation of the duty of candor to the tribunal for the lawyer's assistance to remain undisclosed, the committee wrote that the answer to the question depends on:

> whether the failure to disclose that fact would constitute fraudulent or otherwise dishonest conduct on the part of the client, thereby involving the lawyer in conduct violative of [Model] Rules 1.2(d), 3.3(b), 4.1(b), or 8.4(c). In our opinion, the fact that a litigant submitting papers to a tribunal on a pro se basis has received legal assistance behind the scenes is not material to the merits of the litigation. Litigants ordinarily have the right to proceed without representation and may do so without revealing that they have received legal assistance in the absence of a law or rule requiring disclosure. Id.

The committee added the following on whether it is dishonest for the lawyer's assistance to be undisclosed:

> [the question] turns on whether the court would be misled by failure to disclose such assistance. The lawyer is making no statement at all to the forum regarding the nature or scope of the representation….Absent an affirmative statement by the client, that can be attributed to the lawyer, that the documents were prepared without legal assistance, the lawyer has not been dishonest within the meaning of Rule 8.4(c). For the same reason, we reject the contention that a lawyer who does not appear in the action circumvents court rules requiring the assumption of responsibility for their pleadings. Such rules apply only if a lawyer signs the pleading and thereby makes an affirmative statement to the tribunal concerning the matter. Where a pro se litigant is assisted, no such duty is assumed. Id.

The conclusion that the Model Rules of Professional Conduct do not compel disclosure of a lawyer's background assistance to a pro se litigant is sound and equally applicable to the North Carolina Rules of Professional Conduct.

In response to the decision of a federal magistrate judge in Delso v. Trustees for the Retirement Plan for the Hourly Employees of Merck & Co., Inc., 2007 WL 766349 (D.N.J. 2007), holding that a lawyer violated New Jersey Rule of Professional Conduct 3.3 by "ghostwriting" pleadings for a pro se litigant, the New Jersey Supreme Court Advisory Committee on Professional Ethics issued an ethics opinion that holds that a lawyer who provides drafting assistance to a pro se litigant is not required to notify the court of his role unless "such assistance is a tactic by a lawyer or party to gain advantage in litigation by invoking traditional judicial leniency toward pro se litigants." New Jersey Supreme Court Advisory Committee on Professional Ethics, Op. 713 (2008). However, judicial leniency can not make up for the substantial disadvantage a nonlawyer who appears pro se experiences when the opposing party is represented in court by legal counsel. A lawyer who recommends that a client appear pro se for the sole purpose of gaining the tactical advantage of judicial leniency is providing incompetent legal advice in violation of Rule 1.1 and such conduct is prohibited on this basis regardless of whether there is disclosure to the court of the lawyer's assistance.[1]

A pro se litigant who seeks a lawyer's advice or assistance outside the courtroom is a client of the lawyer although the representation is limited in scope and the individual may not pay for the advice or assistance. Although the lawyer does not appear in court or sign pleadings, the lawyer must obey the Rules of Professional Conduct applicable to the representation of any client. This includes compliance with the prohibition in Rule 3.1 on filing or asserting frivolous pleadings. The duty of confidentiality in Rule 1.6(a) is also applicable and prohibits the lawyer from revealing information acquired in the professional relationship with the client unless the client gives informed consent, the disclosure is impliedly authorized to carry out the representation, or one of the exceptions to the duty of confidentiality in Rule 1.6(b) applies. The only applicable exception allowing disclosure of the lawyer's assistance to a pro se litigant is found in Rule 1.6(b)(1). It allows disclosure of confidential information to comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct, law, or court order. As noted above, the Rules of Professional Conduct do not compel disclosure.

Rule 1.2(c) allows a lawyer to limit the scope of a representation if the limitation is reasonable under the circumstances. As noted in Comment [6] to the rule, "[t]he scope of services to be provided by a lawyer may be limited by agreement with the client or by the terms under which the lawyer's services are made available to the client." Limiting the lawyer's representation to extrajudicial advice and assistance is reasonable when an individual cannot afford to be represented in court. In 2005 FEO 10, the utility of unbundled legal services, or "legal services that are limited in scope and presented as a menu of legal service options from which the client may choose," to clients of limited means was acknowledged. The opinion holds that an internet based law practice may offer unbundled legal services to pro se litigants provided the client gives informed consent to the limited representation and the lawyer makes an independent judgment as to the limited services that can be competently provided under the circumstances. The opinion permits the lawyer to provide assistance to a pro se litigant without entering an appearance in the client's case and without requiring disclosure of the lawyer's behind the scenes assistance.

The Rules of Professional Conduct and prior ethics opinions recognize the importance of providing assistance to individuals who cannot afford representation. The Preamble, Rule 0.1, states that "[t]he basic responsibility for providing legal services for those unable to pay ultimately rests upon the individual lawyer." Rule 6.5, Limited Legal Services Programs, permits a lawyer operating under the auspices of a program sponsored by a non-profit organization or court to provide short term limited legal services to a client without expectation that the lawyer will provide continuing representation to client. These short-term services frequently include advice about the nature and content of pleadings the client should file and advice about what to expect and what to do in court. The rule does not require a participating lawyer to disclose his assistance to the court in which pleadings are filed or to ensure that the client makes the disclosure. The importance of encouraging lawyers to participate in such programs is manifested by the relaxation of the rules on conflicts authorized by Rule 6.5(a)(1) and (b).

Similarly, RPC 114 fosters legal assistance to individuals who cannot afford representation but fall outside the economic or subject matter eligibility requirements of legal services organizations. The opinion confirms that it is ethical for a legal services lawyer to draft a complaint for a pro se litigant's signature, explain how to file the complaint, and review courtroom procedure, including advice about strategy, tactics, or litigation techniques, without listing herself as the attorney of record. There should be no distinction between what a legal services lawyer and a lawyer in private practice may ethically do behind the scene to assist those who cannot afford full representation.

For the public policy reasons set forth above and because disclosure of the lawyer's assistance is not compelled by the Rules of Professional Conduct, a lawyer may assist a pro se litigant without disclosing his assistance to the court and without ensuring that the client discloses the assistance to the court unless the lawyer is compelled to make the disclosure by law or by a court order.[2]

Endnotes

1. Accord ABA Formal Opinion 07-446 (2007)(undisclosed assistance "will not secure unwarranted 'special treatment' for that litigant or otherwise unfairly prejudice other parties to the proceeding. Indeed, many authorities studying ghostwriting in this context have concluded that if the undisclosed lawyer has provided effective assistance, the fact that a lawyer was involved will be evident to the tribunal. If the assistance has been ineffective, the pro se litigant will not have secured an unfair advantage.").
2. Consistent with 32 CFR 776.57, a military lawyer who is licensed in another jurisdiction may provide legal advice and assistance to military personnel. This opinion does not limit or expand that authority.

2008 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

July 18, 2008

Use of Subpoena Power to Obtain Records

Editor's note: To the extent the opinions are in conflict, this opinion overrules RPC 236.

Opinion rules that a lawyer may issue a subpoena in compliance with Rule 45 of the Rules of Civil Procedure which authorizes a subpoena for the production of documents to the lawyer's office without the need to schedule a hearing, deposition or trial.

Inquiry:

Lawyer A represents Lender in pursuing a collection matter pertaining to a certain check. Lawyer A sent a subpoena to the drawee bank, which is not a party to the law suit, requesting a copy of the front and back of the check. Lawyer A provided notice of the subpoena to the other parties in the action. There is no hearing or deposition scheduled. Lawyer B, who represents the bank, believes that Lawyer A may not send a subpoena for documents to a third party unless the subpoena commands the production of the documents at a pending hearing, deposition, or trial.

May Lawyer A issue a subpoena to the bank without scheduling a hearing, deposition, or trial?

Opinion:

Yes. Opinion #3 of RPC 236 states:

> It is deceptive and a violation of the [Rules of Professional Conduct] for a lawyer to use the subpoena process (except in compliance with the Rules of Civil Procedure of the court where the action is pending) to mislead the custodian of documentary evidence as to the lawyer's authority to require the production of such documents. However, a subpoena issued in compliance with the applicable Rules of Civil Procedure may be used by the lawyer.

See Rule 3.1 and Rule 8.4(c). Prior to 2003, North Carolina Rule of Civil Procedure 45 did not permit the issuance of a subpoena separately from a trial, hearing, or deposition. The current rule provides in pertinent part:

> Rule 45. Subpoena.
>
> (a) Form; Issuance.
>
> (1) Every subpoena shall state all of the following:
>
> ...
>
> b. A command to each person to whom it is directed to attend and give testimony or to produce and permit inspection and copying of designated records, books, papers, documents, or tangible things in the possession, custody, or control of that person therein specified.
>
> ...
>
> (2) A command to produce evidence may be joined with a command to appear at trial or hearing or at a deposition, or any subpoena may be issued separately.

Lawyers have an obligation to interpret the Rules of Civil Procedure in good faith and to apply sound legal reasoning to a rule's interpretation and application. The current version of Rule 45 permits the issuance of a subpoena to produce evidence together with a command to appear at a trial, hearing, or deposition or "[a] command to produce evidence may be issued separately."

Lawyer A may, therefore, subpoena a third party to produce records at Lawyer A's office so long as Lawyer A follows all of the requirements set out in Rule 45, including service of the subpoena to each party which affords other parties the opportunity to file objections.

To the extent that this opinion conflicts with RPC 236, that opinion is overruled.

2008 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

July 18, 2008

Web-based Management of Client Records

Opinion rules that client files may be stored on a website accessible by clients via the internet provided the confidentiality of all client information on the website is protected.

Inquiry #1:

Rather than provide clients with hard copies of real estate closing documents, a lawyer would like to upload the files to a secure website and then email a link to his clients with a password so that they can download their files and print them if desired. The lawyer would offer his clients the option of receiving a hard copy of the closing documents rather than access to the website.

Does such a practice comply with the lawyer's responsibilities under the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion #1:

Rule 1.16(d) provides that a lawyer must surrender papers and property to which the client is entitled upon the termination of the representation. Comment [10] to the rule adds that the client it entitled to anything in the file that would be helpful to successor counsel. However, the file documents do not have to be turned over in a paper format. RPC 234 allows lawyers to store client files in an electronic format. With the client's consent, the client's file may be turned over to the client in the form of a computer disk or by emailing a link to the client with a password so that the client can download the files from a website.

If the law firm chooses to use a system that allows clients to access and download their own files at the end of the representation, the confidentiality and security of each client's file must be protected. See Rules 1.6 and 1.15. Therefore, the law firm must enact appropriate measures to ensure that each client only has access to his or her own file. In addition, the law firm must ensure that third parties cannot gain access any client file.

Inquiry #2:

A patent lawyer would like to use a web-based management system that allows both the law firm and corporate clients access to a web-based docketing system. A large part of the lawyer's patent practice is the maintenance of patent dockets. The law firm currently has a docketing system that could be made available to clients via online access. However, the information for all patent clients of the firm is available on the system.

May the patent lawyer protect the confidential information of other clients by contractually obligating the in-house lawyer for a corporate client to view only information specific to his employer? Would the use of a web-based management system be acceptable if the law firm installed a security code access system that allows access only to the specific client's docket information?

Opinion #2:

The use of a web-based management system that allows both the law firm and the client access to the client's docketing information or other information in the client's file is permissible provided the lawyer can fulfill his obligation to protect the confidential information of all clients. A lawyer must take steps to minimize the risk that confidential client information will be disclosed to other clients or to third parties. See RPC 133 and RPC 215. It is not acceptable for one client to have access to another client's information absent client consent. This risk is not cured by an agreement from a client or a client's in-house counsel not to view the confidential information of another client. A security code access procedure that only allows a client to access its own confidential information would be an appropriate measure to protect confidential client information.

If the law firm will be contracting with a third party to maintain the web-based management system, the law firm must ensure that the third party also employs measures which effectively minimize the risk that confidential information might be lost or disclosed. See RPC 133.

2008 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

July 18, 2008

Hiring Nonlawyer Independent Contractor to Organize and Speak at Educational Seminars Related to Estate Planning

Opinion rules that a lawyer may hire a nonlawyer independent contractor to organize and speak at educational seminars so long as the nonlawyer does not give legal advice.

Inquiry #1:

May a lawyer hire a nonlawyer independent contractor to organize and speak at educational seminars at which the nonlawyer will present general information about wills, trusts, and estates?

Opinion #1:

Yes. The giving of legal advice is the practice of law. See N.C.G.S. § 84-1 (2004). A nonlawyer may provide educational information about the law to members of the public, so long as the nonlawyer does not exercise independent legal judgment and does not give legal advice or counsel to attendees as to their legal rights or responsibilities, or the legal rights or responsibilities of others. To avoid assisting in the unauthorized practice of law, the lawyer must exercise the appropriate level of supervision to ensure that the nonlawyer is not giving legal advice. See Rule 5.5(d).

The structure of the educational legal seminars makes it difficult to envision how a lawyer can ensure that the nonlawyer does not give legal advice, unless the lawyer is actually present. Therefore, a lawyer who hires and allows a nonlawyer to conduct an unsupervised educational seminar assumes the risk that he may assist in the unauthorized practice of law.

Inquiry #2:

If the answer to Inquiry #1 is yes, may the nonlawyer respond to questions from members of the seminar audience?

Opinion #2:

No, unless the question can be answered with general information about wills, trusts, and estates. The nonlawyer may not answer questions that require the exercise of independent legal judgment or the giving of specific legal advice. The hiring lawyer assumes the risk that the nonlawyer will cross the line between answering general informational questions and giving legal advice. See Rule 5.5(d).

Inquiry #3:

If the answer to Inquiry # 1 is yes, may the nonlawyer meet individually with seminar attendees, who request such a meeting, and inform the attendees about services that the lawyer provides that are relevant to the attendee's situation?

Opinion #3:

No. The determination of what legal services might benefit an individual attendee requires the exercise of independent legal judgment and is therefore the practice of law. See N.C.G.S. § 84-.1 (2004). The lawyer is prohibited by Rule 5.5(a) from assisting such conduct.

Inquiry #4:

Is the nonlawyer required to disclose to the seminar attendees the name of the lawyer who is paying for him to speak at the seminar?

Opinion #4:

Yes. The nonlawyer must disclose the name of the lawyer sponsoring the seminar in order to avoid misleading the seminar attendees in violation of Rule 7.1(a). However, if a seminar attendee asks the nonlawyer to recommend a lawyer, the nonlawyer should reply that he cannot recommend a specific lawyer. See Rule 7.3(a).

Inquiry #5:

If the answer to Inquiry #1 is yes, may the lawyer compensate the nonlawyer per seminar or per hour?

Opinion #5:

Rule 5.4(a) prohibits a lawyer from sharing legal fees with a nonlawyer except in certain circumstances not relevant to this inquiry. Therefore, it would be inappropriate to compensate the nonlawyer based on the amount of legal fees generated by the nonlawyer's presentation of educational seminars. However, the hiring lawyer may compensate the nonlawyer based either on the number of seminars conducted by the nonlawyer or the number of hours worked by the nonlawyer.

2008 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

July 18, 2008

Lawyer's Obligation to Record or to Disburse Closing Funds

Editor's note: This opinion expands upon 99 Formal Ethics Opinion 9. To the extent that this opinion differs from 99 FEO 9, that opinion is overruled.

Opinion rules that a closing lawyer shall not record and disburse when a seller has delivered the deed to the lawyer but the buyer instructs the lawyer to take no further action to close the transaction.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney represented Small Corporation on the purchase of a residential lot from Development Company. After the closing conference, Attorney deposited the check for the purchase price in his trust account and recorded the deed at the register of deeds. When he returned from the courthouse, he received a telephone call from an official with Small Corporation who stated that Small Corporation did not want to purchase the lot anymore because company officials had just learned that a house with a basement could not be built on the lot. The corporate official instructed Attorney not to disburse any of the closing funds although the deed was already recorded and title vested in Small Corporation. Development Company, the seller, demanded the sale proceed. What should Attorney do?

Opinion #1:

Normally, a client's decision not to proceed with a transaction must be honored by the lawyer and, if necessary, the lawyer must restore the status quo ante by returning documents, property, or funds to the appropriate parties to the transaction. Comment [1] to Rule 1.2 of the Rules of Professional Conduct states, "[t]he client has ultimate authority to determine the purposes to be served by legal representation within the limits imposed by law and the lawyer's professional obligations." However, a closing lawyer must also comply with the conditions placed upon the delivery of the deed by the seller absent fraud. If the seller delivered the executed deed to the lawyer upon the condition that the deed would only be recorded if the purchase price was paid, the lawyer has fiduciary responsibilities to the seller even if the seller is not the lawyer's client. See, e.g., RPC 44 (conditional delivery of loan proceeds). Because title has passed to the buyer, the lawyer must satisfy the conditions of the transfer of the property by disbursing the sale proceeds. The lawyer must notify the buyer and the buyer can then take appropriate legal action to seek to have the sale rescinded. This opinion is applicable to closings on property used or developed for residential purposes.

Inquiry #2:

May Attorney represent Small Corporation in the subsequent action for rescission?

Opinion #2:

No. Rule 3.7(a) prohibits a lawyer from serving as a witness and an advocate in a trial proceeding. Moreover, Attorney's testimony may be detrimental to the interests of Small Corporation. If so, Attorney is also be barred from the representation because of the conflict of interest. Rule 3.7(b).

Inquiry #3:

Would the answer to Inquiry #1 be different if the buyer had instructed the lawyer not to disburse the sales proceeds after the closing conference, but before the deed was recorded?

Opinion #3:

Yes. Unless the real estate contract provides otherwise, or it is otherwise agreed between the parties, closing is presumed to be complete at the date and time of recording. If closing is not complete, upon receiving the buyer's instruction not to close, the lawyer should return the funds to lender and buyer, return the deed to seller, and retain the other closing documents in his file. The lawyer should hold any escrowed funds he received representing the earnest money deposit made at the time of the offer to purchase. If the earnest money was not initially deposited with the lawyer at the time of the offer to purchase, the lawyer shall have the right to return the deposit to the escrow account of the person, firm, or company that initially received the deposit.

Inquiry #4:

Assume that Attorney represents Development Company, the seller of the property. After the closing conference, but prior to recording the deed, Attorney received a telephone call from the seller asking the lawyer not to record the deed. What should attorney do?

Opinion #4

See Opinion #3.

2008 Formal Ethics Opinion 8

October 24, 2008

Division of Fees in Departure Provision of Law Firm's Employment Agreement

Opinion rules that a provision in a law firm employment agreement for dividing legal fees received after a lawyer's departure from a firm must be reasonable and may not penalize or deter the withdrawing lawyer from taking clients with her.

Background:

Rule 5.6(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits a lawyer from participating in, offering, or making "a partnership, shareholders, operating, employment, or other similar type of agreement that restricts the right of a lawyer to practice after termination of the relationship except an agreement concerning benefits upon retirement." This prohibition on restrictive covenants protects the freedom of clients to choose a lawyer and promotes lawyer mobility and professional autonomy. Rule 5.6, cmt. [1]; 2001 FEO 10 (agreement reducing the amount of deferred compensation lawyer receives if the lawyer leaves the firm and engages in private practice within a 50 mile radius of the lawyer's former firm violates Rule 5.6(a)); 2007 FEO 6.

Many law firms include provisions in a partnership, shareholders, or employment agreement (referred to collectively herein as "employment agreement") that address the division of legal fees received by a lawyer after she withdraws from the law firm for the representation of clients who followed the departing lawyer to her new firm. The provisions do not directly prohibit the withdrawing lawyer from engaging in competition with the firm, but may create financial disincentives for the lawyer's continued representation of former clients of the firm. These provisions frequently appear in employment agreements for personal injury law firms that regularly represent clients on a contingent fee basis. The provisions typically require the withdrawing lawyer to pay her former firm a percentage of any contingent fee that she subsequently receives for the representation of a client who left the law firm with her. The provisions may also include a requirement that the withdrawing lawyer reimburse the firm prior to the resolution of the case for costs advanced on behalf of a departing client.

Example provisions from three employment agreements appear below.

Employment Agreement No. 1

Attorney acknowledges that Law Firm will expend a considerable amount of time and money to assist in his education in the assigned practice areas. Additionally, Attorney acknowledges that Law Firm will transfer to him/her current cases which have a significant amount of current work in process and that the firm is NOT prorating or penalizing his bonus program for this work in process. Further, the firm will transfer to Attorney considerable technological information both substantive and operational. Finally, Attorney acknowledges that Law Firm has and will spend considerable sums of money in marketing and advertising the Medico-Legal practice areas. Attorney also acknowledges that under the North Carolina State Bar Rules, a client is free to choose, in the event a lawyer shall leave the employment of a firm, whether the client will stay with the firm or go with the departing lawyer. Attorney specifically agrees to the following should he leave the firm for any reason:

A. Upon a client choosing to have Attorney represent them in the future, Attorney shall, within 30 days, pay to the firm any funds the firm has advanced to the client.

B. Attorney agrees to pay to the firm 70% of the fees he may receive from his continued representation of the client in the matter for which the firm was representing the client at the time of his departure. If this amount is greater than the amount of money that the firm could obtain as a legal fee, then the balance of the monies paid by Attorney to the firm under this provision shall be considered as compensation to the firm for the marketing, advertising, technological, and other information and knowledge provided by the firm to Attorney during his employment at the firm and as consideration for the work in process provided to Attorney on the cases he was assigned to at the beginning of his employment.

Employment Agreement Number 2

Costs and Escrows. At or as soon as is practicable on or after the Transfer Date [date file is transferred], the Firm shall provide departing Associate with a statement of costs for each Transferring Client (which may be in the form of one or more ledgers) showing expenses the Firm has advanced on the matter. Within five (5) days of receipt of such statement of costs, Associate shall pay the Firm the full amount of the costs advanced as reflected in such statement.

Compensation for Services Rendered to a Transferring Client. The parties acknowledge that in a typical Transferring Client matter, the Firm makes a substantial investment of initiative, goodwill, time, money, risk, and effort which the Firm will not ordinarily have been compensated at the time of the Transfer Date. That investment includes, but is not limited to: building the Firm's reputation for skillful, energetic, competent, effective, prompt, and dedicated service on behalf of clients; attracting clients to engage the services of the Firm; fostering the respect of other parties and tribunals for the legal services performed by the Firm and its attorneys; serving the needs of the Firm's clients; utilizing time, skill, and resources in investigation, client and witness interviews, collection and organization of medical and other records; factual and legal research; drafting of pleadings and correspondence; preparation for hearings; and many other tasks, too numerous and varied to mention, relating to a client's particular legal matter. Associate acknowledges that he/she has received or will receive compensation in the form of salary, benefits, and/or other Associate compensation for any work done or services performed by Associate on behalf of a Transferring Client prior to the Transfer Date; Associate understands and agrees that he/she has no right, claim, or interest in remuneration for work performed by Associate and/or the Firm prior to the Transfer Date on behalf of a Transferring Client or a Remaining Client. The parties agree that Associate should receive fair compensation, but no windfall, for work performed by the Associate subsequent to the Transfer Date on behalf of a Transferring Client. Furthermore, the Firm and Associate acknowledge that, with respect to a Transferring Client, any attempt to apportion fair compensation between the Firm and the Associate on a case-by-case basis, and to place a fair value on the Firm's investment (as referred to above), would be extremely complex, time-consuming, difficult, imprecise, uncertain, and debatable. In order to avoid uncertainty and litigation that might arise in connection with fee allocations performed on a case-by-case basis, and to insure that the Firm and Associate will each receive fair and equitable compensation for the value of their contributions and investments, the parties have developed the simple and easily-applied formulas set forth in the following paragraph in order to apportion the relative shares of compensation to which they would be respectively entitled upon consummation of an award, judgment, or settlement in a Transferring Client's case.

Compensation Formulas. For purposes of the formulas below, compensation for services rendered to a Transferring Client shall be allocated between the Firm and Associate as of the date the attorneys' fees or other remuneration or consideration in the matter are fixed (the "Fee Determination Date"). The Fee Determination Date shall be the earlier of (1) the date that payment of such fees, remuneration, or consideration is received or receivable; or (2) the date upon which a final and binding award of attorneys' fees is determined (as, for example, in the case of a fee award from a court or other tribunal) or can readily and positively be determined (e.g., as by applying a contractual contingency fee factor such as one-third to a final and binding award on behalf of the client). In the event that Associate has caused or allowed, or suffered the Fee Determination Date with respect to a matter concerning a Transferring Client to be unnecessarily and unjustifiably delayed, the Fee Determination Date shall be deemed to be the day before the Associate's Termination Date. The Firm and Associate hereby irrevocably agree that such compensation shall in each case concerning a Transferring Client be apportioned between the Firm and Associate in accordance with the formulas below:

Fee Determination

Date	Firm	Associate
On or Before Transfer Date	100%	0%
On or Before First Anniversary of Transfer Date	80%	20%
On or Before Second Anniversary of Transfer Date	60%	40%
After Second Anniversary of Transfer Date	50%	50%

Employment Agreement Number 3

Post Termination Fees. In the event that Employee's employment is terminated for any reason, voluntarily or involuntarily, or the Employee resigns, and a client requests that Employee, rather than Corporation, represent the client after Employee's employment is terminated, Employee shall pay to Corporation immediately out of any settlement, award, or verdict a portion of the attorney fee based on the following formula:

.20 x attorney fee + ((a - b)/a) x attorney fee = amount due to Corporation

- Where .20 or 20% of any such attorney fee shall be paid to Corporation representing the advertising and marketing costs of acquiring the client's case.
- Where "a" represents the total number of months or portion thereof Employee represented the client both before and after Employee's departure up to the date of the settlement, award, or verdict.
- Where "b" represents the number of months or portion thereof Employee represented the client after Employee's departure up to the date of the settlement, award or verdict.

As an example: If the client was represented a total of ten months, two of which were before departure and eight months after departure and the attorneys fee was $10,000, then Corporation would be entitled to 20% of 10,000 (representing market costs) plus 2/10 or 20% of $10,000 (representing time spent while working for Corporation on client's matter) for a total of $4,000.

In the event that clients of Corporation request that Employee continue to represent them after Employee's departure, Employee shall immediately reimburse Corporation for any outstanding expenses which Corporation has incurred as an expense or advanced as a disbursement in its representation of such clients. In the event that Employee is unable to immediately reimburse Corporation for such outstanding expenses, Employee shall give to Corporation a promissory note in the amount of such outstanding expenses payable in ninety (90) days from the date thereof with interest at [bank's] prime rate on the date of said note plus 2%.

Inquiry #1:

May a lawyer participate in the offering or making of an employment or other similar agreement that includes provisions, like those above, requiring a withdrawing or departing lawyer to pay her former firm some portion of any legal fee that she receives for the subsequent representation of a client who leaves the firm with the lawyer?

Opinion #1:

Yes, a lawyer may participate in the offering or making of an employment or other similar agreement that includes a provision for dividing fees following a lawyer's departure from a firm provided the formula or procedure for dividing fees is, at the time the agreement is made, reasonably calculated to compensate the firm for the resources expended by the firm on the representation as of the date of the lawyer's departure and will not discourage a departing lawyer from taking a case and thereby deny the client access to the lawyer of his choice.

In most jurisdictions, a contractual provision that imposes a financial disincentive on a withdrawing lawyer if the lawyer competes with the firm is prohibited because it may have the same effect as a restrictive covenant and prevent or discourage the departing lawyer from the representation of firm clients that want to follow the departing lawyer. ABA/BNA Lawyers' Manual on Professional Conduct, 51:1201- 1214, Restrictions On Right To Practice (51:1205). For example, Ohio (Supreme Court) Ethics Opinion 91-3 (1991), holds that an employment agreement that contains a provision requiring a departing associate to pay the law firm a percentage of fees earned from former firm clients who follow the departing associate is an unethical restriction on the lawyer's right to practice.

Whether a provision in a shareholders agreement constitutes a prohibited financial disincentive on competition after a lawyer leaves a firm was considered in 2007 FEO 6. This opinion examined a provision in shareholders agreement that reduced the repurchase value of a withdrawing lawyer's shares in the event the lawyer took clients with him. In the opinion, it was observed that the provision was > not like the typical covenant not to compete in that it does not have geographical or temporal restrictions; [however] it does tie the decrease in share value to the fact that the departed lawyer represents former clients of the firm. By so doing, the provision provides a disincentive for the departing lawyer to represent clients with whom the lawyer has a prior relationship, penalizes the departing lawyer for representing former clients of the firm, and restricts the lawyer's right to practice.

Although the opinion prohibits financial disincentives on the continued representation of clients, it does not prohibit an agreement for repurchasing the shares of a withdrawing lawyer if the agreement "represents a fair assessment of the forecasted devaluation in the ownership interest in the firm engendered by a lawyer's departure and does not penalize the lawyer for taking clients with him."

Similarly, an agreement on the division of fees after a lawyer's departure from a firm may not be a prohibited restrictive covenant if the agreement seeks merely to compensate the firm for the loss of firm resources invested in the representation of a client who leaves the firm prior to the realization of the fee. As favorably noted in Ethics Decision 2000-6, agreements that resolve the division of contingent fees received after a lawyer leaves a law firm "prevent clients from being put in the middle of a dispute between lawyers." For this reason, lawyers are encouraged to enter into agreements that will resolve such potential disputes fairly and without rancor. Nevertheless, such agreements may not be so financially onerous or punitive as to deter a withdrawing lawyer from continuing to represent a client if the client chooses to be represented by the lawyer after the lawyer's departure from the firm. Any financial disincentive in an employment agreement that deters a lawyer from continuing to represent a client restricts the lawyer's right to practice in violation of Rule 5.6(a); 2007 FEO 6.

Each employment agreement must be analyzed individually to determine whether it violates Rule 5.6(a); however, some general principles can be articulated. The procedure or formula for dividing a fee must be reasonably calculated to protect the economic interests of the law firm while not restricting the right to practice law. It should fairly reflect the firm's investment of resources in the client's representation as of the time of the lawyer's departure and the investment of resources that will be required for the departing lawyer to complete the representation. See Maryland State Bar Ass'n., Op. 89-29 (1989) (approving employment agreement "sliding chart" for dividing fees based upon the time that the law firm worked on the case and the time required for the departed lawyer to resolve the case and collect the fee). The formula may take into account the work performed on the representation prior to the lawyer's departure, nonlawyer resources that the firm allocated to the representation not including costs advanced for the client, firm overhead that can be fairly allocated to the client's representation prior to departure, and the legal work, nonlawyer resources, and overhead that will be required of the withdrawing lawyer to complete the representation.

The provision in Employment Agreement No. 1 above, for example, does not satisfy the reasonableness standard. It requires the departing lawyer to pay 70% of any fee received from the continued representation of a client regardless of whether the departing lawyer provides the majority of the legal representation of the client after the lawyer's departure from the firm. Because it applies a "one size fits all" formula for the allocation of the fees and fails to take into account the amount of work performed and the resources expended on the representation before and after the lawyer's departure, the provision is likely to discourage a lawyer from taking any case that requires substantial additional legal work.

The formula for fee divisions in Employment Agreement No. 2 attempts to take into consideration the resources devoted to the representation of a client by allocating the fee according to the amount of time between the date the lawyer departs taking a case and the date on which the legal fee for the case is "determined" or realized. However, the formula relies on an arbitrary timeframe unrelated to the actual legal work performed within this timeframe and is likely to create a substantial financial disincentive for a lawyer to continue to represent clients. Accord Maryland Ethics Opinion 93-21 (1993) (prohibiting employment agreement requiring lawyer to divide fee with former firm according to arbitrary percentages based on number of days elapsed since client retained firm before leaving with lawyer).

With the exception noted below, the formula for fee division in Employment Agreement No. 3 is the best attempt at allocating the fee based upon the resources that the firm expended on the representation prior to the lawyer's departure. The formula allocates to the firm a percentage of the fee equivalent to the amount of time that the lawyer represented the client while the lawyer was employed by the firm and receiving compensation from the firm. Thus, the departed lawyer will be fully compensated for any work that he performs on a case after he leaves the firm and will not be discouraged from the continued representation of clients who desire her services.

With regard to compensating the law firm for overhead and nonlawyer resources devoted to a case (apart from costs advanced), a reasonable amount of the legal fee may be allocated to the firm for its overhead and nonlawyer expenses including the firm's investment in legal advertising and marketing. However, any such allocation must be reasonably related to the actual cost of such resources or expenses for the particular client. If it is not, the firm will receive a windfall that will deter the departing lawyer from taking cases. For example, the formula in Employment Agreement No. 3 above, which allocates 20% of every fee to the law firm to recover advertising and marketing costs, is not reasonable.

Inquiry #2:

Will any ethical infirmities in an employment agreement be cured by a provision in the agreement that guarantees that the departing lawyer will receive, at a minimum, hourly compensation for the time the lawyer expends on a case after the lawyer leaves the firm? An example of such a minimum compensation provision appears below:

> No Effect in Restricting the Practice of Law. Law Firm and Associate recognize that the client's right to choose counsel takes precedence over the fee division arrangement set forth in this section. The parties agree these provisions do not have the effect of restricting the practice of law or restricting any client's right to choose counsel so long as, for work performed for a Transferring Client, Associate receives hourly compensation at a rate of $150 per hour. To the extent that Associate does not receive compensation for his/her time on any Transferring Client's matter at a rate of at least $150 per hour, the Firm's allocation of fees calculated under paragraph 2.12 will be reduced (but not below zero) in order to increase Associate's compensation to the rate of $150 per hour; provided, however, that Associate shall be required to substantiate his/her time expended on each such matter by verified, contemporaneously maintained time records. In light of this arrangement, Associate will not decline to represent any Transferring Client for any financial reason.

Opinion #2:

Such a provision, by providing a floor below which the departing lawyer's compensation may not fall, may lessen the possibility that the formula or procedure for dividing fees will discourage the lawyer from taking a case after the lawyer leaves the firm. Therefore, such a provision is beneficial but it will not rectify a fee division provision that fails to take into consideration the factors set forth in Opinion #1 above. Moreover, the hourly rate set forth in a minimum compensation provision must be determined in a manner that is reasonable and fair under the circumstances. This means that it must take into consideration the skill, knowledge, and experience of the lawyer at the time that the lawyer leaves the firm, the difficulty of the work to be performed, and the hourly rates paid to lawyers of similar experience in the relevant geographic area.

Inquiry #3:

May the agreement for allocating legal fees include compensation to the law firm for the goodwill that initially induced the client to seek the legal services of the law firm?

Opinion #3:

Yes, if goodwill is valued fairly and reasonably and is not such a significant proportion of the fee that it creates a financial disincentive for the departing lawyer to continue the representation of clients who desire her services.

Inquiry #4:

May the agreement require the departing lawyer to reimburse the firm for the costs advanced (e.g., costs for depositions, expert witnesses, medical records, etc.) on behalf of a client immediately upon the departure of the lawyer or soon thereafter? May the agreement require the departing lawyer to sign a promissory note for the costs advanced?

Opinion #4:

No. The costs advanced for a client are the client's financial responsibility and the departing lawyer may not be made liable for this debt. Such a provision would have a chilling effect on the departing lawyer's willingness to continue the representation of a client. See Ethics Decision 2000-6 (by conditioning departing lawyer's ability to represent client on the satisfaction of client's financial obligation to former firm, provision imposes financial penalty that will discourage continued representation of clients). However, the firm may pursue any legal claim that it has against the client and the employment agreement may require the departing lawyer to protect the firm's interest in receiving reimbursement for costs advanced from any final settlement or judgment received by the client.

Inquiry #5:

Is an employment agreement that divides legal fees between a former law firm and a departed lawyer a violation of the prohibition in Rule 1.5(e) on the division of fees between lawyers who are not in the same firm?

Opinion #5:

No, comment [9] to Rule 1.5 provides that the prohibition on fee divisions in paragraph (e) of the rule does not prohibit or regulate division of fees to be received in the future for work done when lawyers were previously associated in a law firm.

Inquiry #6:

May an employment agreement include a mandatory arbitration or alternative dispute resolution provision in the event the departing lawyer and the former firm cannot amiably resolve disputes over the division of legal fees?

Opinion #6:

Yes. Lawyers are urged to include such provisions in employment agreements to foster early resolution of disputes without litigation and without drawing clients into the disputes. As observed in RPC 107, which approves of a mandatory alternative dispute provision in a fee agreement with a client, "[a]s a matter of professionalism, lawyers should avoid litigation to collect fees wherever possible. In that regard lawyers are encouraged to employ reasonably available alternative forms of dispute resolution." See also RPC 48 (clients should not be drawn into disputes upon dissolution of firm).

2008 Formal Ethics Opinion 10

October 24, 2008

Guidelines for Fees Paid in Advance

Opinion surveys prior ethics opinions on legal fees, sets forth the ethical requirements for the different types of fees paid in advance, authorizes minimum fees earned upon payment, and provides model fee provisions.

Background:

Although there are several ethics opinions on the ethical requirements relative to the different types of legal fees that are charged and collected at the beginning of the representation of a client, the information in these opinions is not gathered in one place and the opinions appear to provide contradictory or inconsistent advice. In addition, the confusion among lawyers as to the ethical requirements for legal fees paid prior to representation has lead to poorly crafted fee agreements. In response to these concerns, this opinion sets forth the key ethical obligations when charging and collecting legal fees, surveys the opinions on legal fees, reconciles the holdings in the opinions, and provides model provisions for fee agreements that satisfy the requirements of the Rules of Professional Conduct and the ethics opinions.

Key Ethical Obligations

Regardless of the type of fee, all legal fees must meet the following standard set forth in Rule 1.5(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct:

A lawyer may not make an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or clearly excessive fee....The factors to be considered in determining whether a fee is clearly excessive include the following:

(1) the time and labor required, the novelty and difficulty of the questions involved, and the skill requisite to perform the legal service properly;
(2) the likelihood, if apparent to the client, that the acceptance of the particular employment will preclude other employment by the lawyer;
(3) the fee customarily charged in the locality for similar legal services;
(4) the amount involved and the results obtained;
(5) the time limitations imposed by the client or by the circumstances;
(6) the nature and length of the professional relationship with the client;
(7) the experience, reputation, and ability of the lawyer or lawyers performing the services; and
(8) whether the fee is fixed or contingent.

It may be difficult to determine whether a legal fee is clearly excessive until the representation is concluded and all of the relevant factors are taken into consideration. At that point, a lawyer may be required to disgorge some portion of a fee that he or she has already collected to insure that the total fee is not clearly excessive. 2000 FEO 5. If the client's funds were deposited in the lawyer's trust account, the money is available to return to the client. If, because of the nature of the fee (see discussion below) the client funds were paid to the lawyer, the lawyer may be required to make a refund to the client using his or her own funds.

In addition to avoiding clearly excessive fees, a lawyer must deposit any funds that belong to a client in the lawyer's trust account. Rule 1.15-2(a). This means that any payment that remains the property of the client until earned, usually by the performance of legal services, must be deposited into the lawyer's trust account and may not be withdrawn without the client's consent until earned. When the lawyer is discharged, any money that remains on deposit in the trust account must be paid back to the client.

Finally, a lawyer must deal honestly and fairly with his or her clients and should give a client sufficient information to make reasonable decisions about the representation including decisions about the fee arrangement. See Rule 1.4 and Rule 8.4(c).

Survey of the Opinions

RPC 50 holds that a lawyer may charge and collect a general retainer as consideration for the exclusive use of the lawyer's services in a particular matter. Such retainers are sometimes referred to as "true retainers" because the money is paid for nothing more than the reservation of the lawyer's time; the legal services provided by the lawyer are separately compensated. The opinion distinguishes the general retainer from an advance payment as follows:

In its truest sense, a retainer is money to which an attorney is immediately entitled and should not be placed in the attorney's trust account. A "retainer" which is actually a deposit by the client of an advance payment of a fee to be billed on an hourly basis is not a payment to which the attorney is immediately entitled. It is really a security deposit and should be placed in the trust account. As the attorney earns the fee, the funds should be withdrawn from the account.

RPC 158 holds that an advance payment to a lawyer for services to be rendered in the future, in the absence of an agreement with the client that the payment is earned immediately, is a deposit securing the payment of a fee which is yet to be earned. As such, it remains the property of the client and must be deposited in the lawyer's trust account. See also 2005 FEO 13 (minimum fee that is collected at the beginning of a representation and will be billed against at a lawyer's regular hourly rate is neither a general retainer nor a flat fee; therefore, minimum fee remains the client's money until earned by the provision of legal services and must remain on deposit in the trust account until earned).

RPC 158 also holds that a lawyer may charge and collect a flat fee for representation on a specific, discrete legal task such as resolution of a traffic infraction. If the client agrees that the money represents a flat fee to which the lawyer is immediately entitled, the lawyer may pay the money to himself or herself or deposit the money in the firm's general operating account rather than the firm trust account. The agreement of the client that the flat fee is earned upon payment is critical. The opinion warns, however,

> [w]hether the fee portion is deposited in the trust account or paid over to the operating account, any portion of the fee which is clearly excessive may be refundable to the client either at the conclusion of the representation or earlier if [the lawyer's] services are terminated before the end of the engagement.

97 FEO 4 amplifies the definitions for the general retainer and the flat fee. Both types of fees may be charged and collected at the beginning of a representation and are considered "presently owed" to the lawyer. The general retainer is "a payment 'for the reservation of the exclusive services of the lawyer which is not used to pay for the legal services provided by the lawyer.'" [Citing and quoting Rule 1.15-1, cmt.[4].] "The true general retainer finds general application in those instances where corporate clients, merchants or businessmen have a specific need to consult the lawyer on a regular or recurring basis." The opinion admonishes that a general retainer, like all other fees, must not be clearly excessive and "[w]hat is customarily charged in similar situations may determine whether a specific true general retainer is clearly excessive."

A flat fee may be earned at the beginning of the representation and is payment "for specified legal services to be completed within a reasonable period of time." "[T]his type of fee provides economic value to the client and the lawyer alike because it enables the client to know, in advance, the expense of the representation and it rewards the lawyer for efficiently handling the matter." A flat fee arrangement is "customarily identified with isolated transactions such as representations on traffic citations, domestic actions, criminal charges, and commercial transactions." The flat fee is collected at the beginning of the representation, treated as money to which the lawyer is immediately entitled, and paid to the lawyer or deposited in the lawyer's general operating account.

The opinion recognizes that a lawyer may charge a client hybrid fees. Such hybrid fees include a payment that is part general retainer or flat fee and part advance to secure the payment of fees yet to be earned. With hybrid fees, one portion of the fee is earned immediately and the other portion remains the client's property and must be deposited in the trust account to be withdrawn as earned. "There should be a clear agreement between the lawyer and the client as to which portion of the payment is a true general retainer, or a flat fee, and which portion of the payment is an advance. Absent such an agreement, the entire payment must be deposited into the trust account and will be considered client funds until earned."

With regard to an advance payment, the opinion reiterates that

> [t]he funds advanced by the client and deposited in the trust account may be withdrawn by the lawyer when earned by the performance of legal services on behalf of the client pursuant to the representation agreement with the client. Revised Rule 1.15-1(d). Should the client terminate the relationship, that portion of the advance fee deposited in the lawyer's trust account which is unearned must be refunded to the client.

2000 FEO 5 prohibits the use of the term "nonrefundable fee" in fee agreements while further elucidating the differences between fees earned at the beginning of a representation and payments that are security for a fee which is yet to be earned. The opinion emphasizes that a lawyer may treat an advance payment as an earned fee (and deposit the money in the firm's operating account) "only if the client agrees that [the] payment may be treated as earned by the lawyer when it is paid." The opinion's most important paragraphs emphasize that there is a duty to refund "any portion of a fee that is clearly excessive regardless of the type of fee that was paid" and, therefore, no fee is truly nonrefundable. "To call such a payment a 'nonrefundable fee' is false and misleading in violation of Rule 7.1." However, a lawyer may agree with a client that "some or all of a fee may be forfeited under certain conditions but only if the amount so forfeited is not clearly excessive in light of the circumstances and all such conditions are reasonable and fair to the client."

Rather than calling a flat fee "nonrefundable," the opinion instructs a lawyer to refer to such a fee as a "prepaid flat fee."

The Types of Fees and Their Characteristics

Based upon the survey of the ethics opinions, these are the types of fees that are paid in advance and their characteristics:

Advance Payment: a deposit by the client of money that will be billed against, usually on an hourly basis, as legal services are provided; not earned until legal services are rendered; deposited in the trust account; unearned portion refunded upon the termination of the client-lawyer relationship.

General Retainer: consideration paid at the beginning of a representation to reserve the exclusive services of a lawyer but not used to pay for actual representation; generally used when corporate or business clients have a specific need to consult a lawyer on a regular basis; earned upon payment; paid to lawyer or deposited in firm operating account; some or all of the retainer is subject to refund if clearly excessive under the circumstances as determined upon the termination of the client-lawyer relationship.

Flat Fee or Prepaid Flat Fee: fee paid at the beginning of a representation for specified legal services on a discrete legal task or isolated transaction to be completed within a reasonable amount of time; fee pays for all legal services regardless of the amount of time the lawyer expends on the matter; if client consents, treated as earned immediately and paid to the lawyer or deposited in the firm operating account; some or all of the flat fee is subject to refund if clearly excessive under the circumstances as determined upon the termination of the client-lawyer relationship.

Hybrid Fee: fee paid at the beginning of a representation that is in part a general retainer or a flat fee and in part an advance payment to secure the payment of fees yet to be earned; one portion of the fee is earned immediately and the other remains the client's property on deposit in the trust account; client must consent and agree to the portion that is a flat fee or a general retainer and earned immediately; unearned portion of the advance payment refunded upon termination of the client-lawyer relationship; flat fee/general retainer portion subject to refund if clearly excessive under the circumstances as determined upon the termination of the client-lawyer relationship.

Reconciling the Opinions

If there is a seeming inconsistency in the ethics opinions it arises from the strict formulation of the general retainer. A lawyer is allowed to charge a general retainer as consideration for the reservation of the lawyer's services and to treat the money as earned immediately. But the client is not given a credit for future legal services up to the value of the retainer. This strikes many lawyers as detrimental to the client's interests and it has lead to the creation of hybrid fees. The strict formulation of the general retainer has been maintained by the Ethics Committee for three important reasons. It avoids the client confusion that is engendered if a client is told that a payment both reserves the lawyer's services and pays for future representation. In addition, requiring general retainers to be separate and distinct from advance fees means that, if an advance fee is charged for future legal services, there is no penalty to the client for deciding to change legal counsel before the advance fee is exhausted and, if a refund is owed to the client because expected services have not been performed, the money is readily available in the trust account.

Upon further reflection, the Ethics Committee has, nevertheless, determined that it is in the client's interest to receive legal services up to the value of a general retainer provided the client fully understands and agrees that the payment the client makes at the beginning of the representation is earned by the lawyer when paid, will not be deposited in a trust account, and is only subject to refund if the charge for reserving the lawyer's services (as opposed to the charge for the legal services performed) is clearly excessive under the circumstances. This newly acknowledged form of fee payment made by a client at the beginning of a representation will be referred to as a minimum fee and have the following characteristics:

Minimum Fee: consideration paid at the beginning of a representation to reserve the exclusive services of a lawyer; lawyer provides legal services up to the value of the minimum fee; earned upon payment; paid to lawyer or deposited in firm operating account; some or all of the minimum fee is subject to refund if clearly excessive under the circumstances as determined upon the termination of the client-lawyer relationship.

To the extent any previous ethics opinion is inconsistent with this opinion, it is overruled.

Model Fee Provisions: Introduction

The Rules of Professional Conduct do not require fee agreements to be in writing unless the fee is contingent on the outcome of the matter. Rule 1.5(c). The fees discussed in this opinion are not contingent and technically a lawyer is not required to put a client's agreement to pay such fees in writing. Nevertheless, given the propensity of clients to misunderstand the purpose of a payment made prior to the commencement of a representation (and whether such a payment will be refunded), a lawyer would be prudent to put in writing any fee agreement that requires a client to make a payment in advance.

In addition to explaining and obtaining the client's consent to charge the specified payments prior to representation, a lawyer's written fee agreement with a client should also contain provisions that fully and clearly explain how fees and expenses are charged including, but not limited to, the following: how billable hours are calculated and the rates charged per hour for the services of the lawyers or staff members who will work on the client's matter; if some other method of billing is used, such as value billing, how the fee will be determined; and the expenses for which the client will be liable and how the cost of those expenses will be determined.

Model Fee Provisions

Note that the following paragraphs contain suggested or recommended language. Lawyers are not required to use these model fee provisions.

Advance Payment

As a condition of the employment of Lawyer, Client agrees to deposit $_____ in the client trust account maintained by Lawyer's firm. This money is a deposit securing payment for the legal work for Client that will be performed by Lawyer and his/her staff. Legal work will be billed on an hourly basis [or other appropriate basis] according to the schedule attached to this agreement. Client specifically authorizes Lawyer to withdraw funds from Client's deposit in the trust account when payment is earned by the performance of legal services for Client. When the deposit is exhausted, Lawyer reserves the right to require further reasonable deposits to secure payment. Lawyer will provide Client with a [monthly, quarterly, etc.] accounting [upon request] for legal services showing the legal fees earned and payment of the fees by withdrawal against Client's deposit in the trust account. Client should notify Lawyer immediately if Client retracts his/her consent to the withdrawal of money from Client's deposit in the trust account to pay for legal services. When Lawyer's representation ends, Lawyer will provide Client with a written accounting of the fees earned and costs incurred, and a refund of any unearned portion of the deposit that remains in the trust account [less expenses associated with the representation].

General Retainer

As a condition of the employment of Lawyer, Client agrees to pay $_____ to Lawyer. This money is a general retainer paid by Client to ensure that Lawyer is available to Client in the event that legal services are needed now or in the future and to insure that Lawyer will not represent anyone else relative to Client's legal matter without Client's consent.

Client understands and specifically agrees that:

- the general retainer is not payment for the legal work to be performed by Lawyer;
- Client will be billed separately for the legal work performed by Lawyer and his/her staff. Legal work will be billed on an hourly basis [or other appropriate basis] according to the schedule attached to this agreement;
- the general retainer will be earned by Lawyer immediately upon payment and will be deposited in Lawyer's business account rather than a client trust account; and
- when Lawyer's representation ends, Client will not be entitled to a refund of any portion of the general retainer unless it can be demonstrated that the general retainer is clearly excessive under the circumstances.

Flat Fee (or Prepaid Flat Fee)

As a condition of the employment of Lawyer, Client agrees to pay $_____ to Lawyer as a flat fee for the following specified legal work to be performed by Lawyer for Client: [description of legal work]

Client understands and specifically agrees that:

- the flat fee is the entire payment for the specified legal work to be performed by Lawyer regardless of the amount of time that it takes Lawyer to perform the legal work;
- the flat fee will be earned by Lawyer immediately upon payment and will be deposited in Lawyer's business account rather than a client trust account; and
- when Lawyer's representation ends, Client will not be entitled to a refund of any portion of the flat fee unless (1) the legal work is not completed, in which event a proportionate refund may be owed, or (2) it can be demonstrated that the flat fee is clearly excessive under the circumstances.

Minimum Fee

As a condition of the employment of Lawyer, Client agrees to pay $_____ to Lawyer. This money is a minimum fee for the reservation of Lawyer's services; to insure that Lawyer will not represent anyone else relative to Client's legal matter without Client's consent; and for legal work to be performed for Client.

Client understands and specifically agrees that:

- the minimum fee will be earned by Lawyer immediately upon payment and will be deposited in Lawyer's business account rather than a client trust account;
- Lawyer will provide legal services to Client on an hourly basis [or other appropriate basis] according to the schedule attached to this agreement until the value of those services is equivalent to the minimum fee; thereafter, Client will be billed for the legal work performed by Lawyer and his/her staff on an hourly basis [or other appropriate basis] according to the schedule attached to this agreement; and
- when Lawyer's representation ends, Client will not be entitled to a refund of any portion of the minimum fee, even if the representation ends before Lawyer has provided legal services equivalent in value to the minimum fee, unless it can be demonstrated that the minimum fee is clearly excessive fee under the circumstances.

2008 Formal Ethics Opinion 11

January 15, 2010

Representation of Beneficiary on Other Matters While Serving as Foreclosure Trustee

Opinion rules that a lawyer may serve as the trustee in a foreclosure proceeding while simultaneously representing the beneficiary of the deed of trust on unrelated matters and that the other lawyers in the firm may also continue to represent the beneficiary on unrelated matters.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A is employed by Law Firm. The lawyers of the firm routinely represent various bank clients including Bank Z. Bank Z is one of the firm's largest clients and all of the lawyers in the firm perform some work for the bank.

Attorney A has been asked to serve as the substitute trustee for the foreclosure of a deed of trust securing a loan (the Loan) made by Bank Z to the grantor (the Borrower) of the deed of trust. Bank Z is the named beneficiary of the deed of trust. The lawyers at the firm did not represent Bank Z on the negotiation or securitization of the Loan. The lawyers have not previously represented the Borrower.

Attorney A and the other lawyers in Law Firm want to continue to represent Bank Z on unrelated legal matters throughout the course of the foreclosure proceeding. Bank Z does not object. Borrower has not been notified that Attorney A and the other lawyers of the firm represent Bank Z on other unrelated matters.

May Attorney A continue to represent Bank Z on matters unrelated to the Loan and serve as substitute trustee for the foreclosure?

Opinion #1:

Attorney A may serve as trustee and continue to represent the bank on other matters because it is unlikely that his impartiality as trustee will be impaired by his duty of loyalty to and advocacy for the bank on other unrelated matters. Even when the proceeding is contested, Attorney A may serve as trustee and continue to represent the bank on other matters.

There are a number of ethics opinions that hold that a lawyer serving as trustee in a contested foreclosure proceeding may not act as the advocate for the beneficiary or the grantor in an adversarial proceeding arising from or connected with the deed of trust because the trustee is a fiduciary and, when exercising his discretion in the foreclosure, must play an impartial role relative to both parties. RPC 3, RPC 64, RPC 82, RPC 90, 04 Formal Ethics Opinion 3. See also N.C. Gen. Stat. 45-21.16(c)(7)b (notice to the debtor must contain a statement that a trustee is "a neutral party and, while holding that position in the foreclosure proceeding, may not advocate for the secured creditor or for the debtor in the foreclosure proceeding"). None of the ethics opinions, however, consider whether a lawyer is disqualified from serving as trustee if he continues to represent the lender on unrelated legal matters.

RPC 3, which rules that a lawyer may serve as a foreclosure trustee after representing the beneficiary of the deed of trust in the negotiation of the loan, explains the basis for prohibiting the lawyer from acting as an advocate in a contested foreclosure proceeding in the following passage:

> [T]he Trustee owes a duty of impartiality to both parties which is inconsistent with representing one of the parties in a contested proceeding...Generally, when an attorney is required to withdraw from representation or from a fiduciary role, it is either because of concerns [for the] confidences of the client under Rule 4 [now Rule 1.6] and its predecessors or because of conflicts of interest under Rule 5.1 [now Rule 1.7] or its predecessors where the attorney would be put in the position of inconsistent roles or obligations at the same time or in the same proceeding. Since neither of those circumstances exist, and the rules do not appear to be directly relevant by their terms or with regard to their purposes, Attorney A is not ethically prohibited from continuing to serve as Trustee in a contested foreclosure matter, despite his prior representation of [beneficiary of the deed of trust], where he does not currently represent [beneficiary] in the foreclosure or related proceedings.

To clarify these earlier opinions, a foreclosure proceeding is contested when the grantor, or anyone else with standing, seeks to enjoin the proceeding or contests any of the following issues at the foreclosure hearing: jurisdiction, service of process, debt, default, notice, power of sale, and, in the case of residential mortgages, certification regarding subprime loans.[1] A borrower's motion to continue the proceeding or request to postpone the sale does not render the foreclosure contested. As with the trustee's own motion for a continuance or decision to postpone, these are procedural matters to which the trustee may respond within his or her discretion without impairing his or her ability to foreclose on the property consistent with the statutory requirements and the deed of trust.

If Attorney A represents Bank Z in other matters and the foreclosure is contested, Attorney A can maintain his impartiality as trustee if the bank represents itself or hires a lawyer to represent it in the foreclosure proceeding. Nevertheless, if Attorney A determines that he cannot protect and advance the interests of the bank in the unrelated matters while remaining impartial in a contested foreclosure proceeding where a substantial interest of the bank is at stake, Attorney A would have a conflict of interest requiring him to decide whether to continue to represent the bank on the unrelated matters and relinquish the trustee role to someone who will not be similarly compromised or to fulfill the role of trustee by withdrawing from the representation of the bank in all other matters. See also Rule 1.7(a)(1)(concurrent conflict of interest exists if representation of one or more clients may be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to a third person).

Inquiry #2:

Perceiving that he has a personal conflict of interest, Attorney A withdraws from the representation of Bank Z on all unrelated matters in order to continue to serve as trustee. Are the other lawyers in Law Firm required to withdraw from the representation of Bank Z on matters unrelated to the Loan if Attorney A serves as the substitute trustee for the contested foreclosure?

Opinion #2:

No, the other lawyers in the firm may continue to represent Bank Z on unrelated matters.

Rule 1.10(a) provides that a disqualification based upon a personal interest of a lawyer that does not present a significant risk of materially limiting the representation of a client by the remaining lawyers in a firm is not imputed to the remaining lawyers in the firm. Comment [3] to Rule 1.10 specifies that "[t]he rule in paragraph (a) does not prohibit representation where neither questions of client loyalty nor protection of confidential information are presented." Serving in the role of trustee does not raise questions of client loyalty or protection of confidential information because the lawyer/trustee does not represent either party in the foreclosure. Therefore, Attorney A's disqualification from the representation of Bank Z to maintain his impartiality is not imputed to the other lawyers in the firm who are representing the bank on matters unrelated to the Loan and the foreclosure.

Inquiry #3:

Attorney B, another lawyer in Law Firm, intends to act as the lawyer for Bank Z in connection with the Loan including representation in the foreclosure proceeding. May Attorney B represent Bank Z on all matters related to the Loan, including the foreclosure, if another lawyer in his firm is serving as the trustee?

Opinion #3:

No, if the foreclosure is contested, Attorney B may not represent Bank Z at the foreclosure proceeding or on any matter related to the Loan. Attorney A's impartiality may be impaired if another lawyer from his firm appears in the foreclosure or related matters on behalf of the bank. To preserve the integrity of the process and the impartiality of the trustee, Attorney A's disqualification from serving as an advocate for one of the parties to a contested foreclosure in any matter related to the Loan is imputed to the other lawyers in the firm. See Rule 1.10(a).

Inquiry #4:

May another lawyer in the firm represent Attorney A in his capacity as trustee for the foreclosure?

Opinion #4:

Yes, and the lawyer may continue to do unrelated legal work for the bank while representing Attorney A as trustee. See Opinion #1 above. However, if Attorney A determines that he has a conflict of interest in serving as the trustee while continuing to represent the bank on unrelated matters and withdraws from the representation of the bank on unrelated matters to continue to serve as trustee, a lawyer representing Attorney A as trustee would be similarly disqualified. See Rule 1.10(a).

Inquiry #5:

Law Firm has set up a separate entity, Firmco, to serve as trustee on deeds of trust. Law Firm or its lawyers have a controlling ownership interest in Firmco. Firmco is substituted as trustee on the deed of trust securing the Loan made by Bank Z. May a lawyer in the firm represent Firmco in its capacity as trustee for the foreclosure? May the lawyer continue to do unrelated legal work for the bank?

Opinion #5:

Yes, the lawyer may represent Firmco as trustee and the lawyer representing Firmco may continue to do unrelated legal work for the bank. See Opinion #4. However, a lawyer for the firm may not simultaneously provide representation to Firmco and advocate for the lender in a contested foreclosure proceeding. See Opinion #1.

Inquiry #6:

Should the Borrower be informed that Attorney A and the other lawyers in Law Firm will continue to represent Bank Z on matters unrelated to the foreclosure?

Opinion #6:

Yes. The role of the trustee in a foreclosure proceeding is similar to the roles of arbitrator or mediator which are addressed in Rule 2.4. Rule 2.4(b) provides that when a lawyer serving as a third-party neutral knows or reasonably should know that a party does not understand the lawyer's role in the matter, the lawyer shall explain the difference between the lawyer's role as a third party neutral and a lawyer's role as one who represents a client. Similarly, explaining the role of the trustee and the role of the other lawyers in the firm (who continue to represent the bank) to a borrower in a foreclosure proceeding will help to avoid confusion and will allow the borrower to pursue his legal remedies to remove the trustee if he objects.

Inquiry #7:

If Borrower informally objects to Attorney A serving as the trustee because Attorney A and the other lawyers in the firm represent Bank Z on unrelated matters, is Attorney A required to withdraw from service as trustee?

Opinion #7:

No, Attorney A is not required to withdraw unless ordered to do so by a court.

Inquiry #8:

Do the responses to any of the preceding inquiries change if Bank Z is not one of the largest clients of Law Firm?

Opinion #8:

No.

Endnote

1. G.S. A745-105 allows the Commissioner of Banks (COB) to delay the time within which a lender can file a foreclosure proceeding on a subprime loan for a period of up to 30 days and to suspend a foreclosure on a subprime loan based upon its review of loan information that the lender must file with the Administrative Office of the Courts pursuant to G.S. A745-103. The clerk of court must find that the loan is not subprime or, if subprime, that the COB has not delayed the time for filing the foreclosure proceeding or suspended the foreclosure based its review of the loan information.

2008 Formal Ethics Opinion 12

April 24, 2009

Prohibition on Initiating Foreclosure on Client's Property While Still Representing Client

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not initiate foreclosure on a deed of trust on a client's property while still representing the client.

Inquiry #1:

Lawyer represents Client in a domestic case. In exchange for Lawyer's services, Client executed a promissory note, which was secured by a deed of trust on property that is not involved in the domestic action. Lawyer sent Client a "Notice of Demand" regarding payment on the note. Soon thereafter, Lawyer initiated foreclosure proceedings in an effort to collect on the deed of trust. Lawyer continues to represent Client in the domestic case.

May Lawyer initiate foreclosure proceedings against Client while continuing to represent Client ?

Opinion #1:

No. Although Lawyer could acquire a deed of trust on the property if he complied with Rule 1.8(a), enforcing the security interest while currently representing the grantor of the interest, even in an unrelated matter, creates a conflict of interest in violation of Rule 1.7(a)(2). Moreover, Rule 8.4(g) provides that it is professional misconduct for a lawyer intentionally to prejudice or damage his or her client during the course of the professional relationship, except as may be required by Rule 3.3. Lawyer should not initiate foreclosure proceedings against Client until the representation is concluded.

As a matter of procedure, comment [16] to Rule 1.8 provides that, prior to initiating a foreclosure on property subject to a lien securing a legal fee, a lawyer must notify a client of the right to require the lawyer to participate in the State Bar's mandatory fee dispute resolution program.

2008 Formal Ethics Opinion 13

July 24, 2009

Audit of Real Estate Trust Account by Title Insurer

Opinion rules that, unless affected clients expressly consent to the disclosure of their confidential information, a lawyer may allow a title insurer to audit the lawyer's real estate trust account and reconciliation reports only if certain written assurances to protect client confidences are obtained from the title insurer, the audited account is only used for real estate closings, and the audit is limited to certain records and to real estate transactions insured by the title insurer.

Inquiry #1:

Under North Carolina law, title insurance policies are issued upon receipt of title certification from a licensed North Carolina lawyer. A title insurer will only issue title assurances to approved lawyers as provided by N.C. Gen. Stat. §58-26.1. In the vast majority of real estate closings, the lender delivers the proceeds of the new loan (for the purchase or refinancing of the real estate) to the approved lawyer to be disbursed from the approved lawyer's trust account upon the closing of the transaction. Lenders and buyers/borrowers in real estate transactions frequently request title insurance coverage in the form of a closing protection letter in which the title insurer agrees to reimburse the lender and/or the buyer/borrower for, among other things, actual loss on account of the fraud or dishonesty of the approved lawyer in handling the lender's funds. Closing protection letters are necessary to facilitate real estate transactions in North Carolina as lenders are unwilling to risk their funds without these assurances from title insurers.

Title insurers are experiencing increasing liability for lawyer defalcations pursuant to closing protection letters and title insurance policies issued in connection with real estate transactions. In addition, parties to real estate transactions who are not covered by title insurance are suffering losses related to the misuse of funds deposited in real estate trust accounts.

To provide the assurances required by lenders and buyer/borrowers, title insurers need a way to assess whether funds from real estate trust accounts are being disbursed and accounted for properly. Real estate lawyers may use outside reconciliation services to reconcile their trust accounts. Title insurers would like to request either an audit of an approved lawyer's trust account and/or review of the lawyer's trust account reconciliation reports to ensure the safety of the funds and protect the interests of those whose funds are placed in the trust account and rely upon the appropriate disbursement of those funds.

Lawyer A is an approved lawyer with Title Insurer. Title Insurer has issued at least one closing protection letter for Lawyer A. May Lawyer A voluntarily permit Title Insurer to audit his trust account?

Opinion #1:

Yes, Lawyer A may voluntarily permit Title Insurer to audit any trust account used solely for real estate closings provided the audit is limited to transactions insured by Title Insurer and, further provided, Lawyer A obtains certain assurances from Title Insurer.

Rule 1.6 requires a lawyer to protect from disclosure all information acquired during the professional relationship including information about a client contained in the lawyer's trust account records. Nevertheless, confidential information may be revealed when the client gives informed consent, disclosure is impliedly authorized to carry out the representation, or a specific exception allowing disclosure set forth in paragraph (b) of Rule 1.6 applies. Although the specific exceptions are not applicable here, the general exception that permits disclosure to carry out the representation is applicable. A self-evident objective of both the lender and the buyer/borrower, the clients in a real estate transaction, is that the loan proceeds will be used for the purpose for which they were intended and not misused or misappropriated by the closing lawyer. Therefore, there is implied consent by real estate clients to disclose such information as may be necessary to prevent defalcations including information necessary for a title insurer to perform an audit of the lawyer's trust account.

It cannot be assumed that non-real estate clients impliedly authorize the disclosure of confidential information about their deposits to a lawyer's general trust account to a title insurance company. Moreover, it cannot be assumed that a real estate client's implied consent extends to title companies that did not insure the client's transaction. Absent the express consent of those clients whose confidential information may be disclosed, a lawyer may only allow an audit that is limited to certain financial records related to a trust account used solely for real estate closings and to certain financial records related to real estate transactions insured by the title insurer. Specifically, the audit must be limited to review of the following records on the trust account: bank statements and deposit tickets for three months (not including copies of checks); reconciliation reports for three months (confidential client information redacted); and the general ledger for six months (names of payees redacted). The audit shall also be limited to the following records of real estate transactions insured by the title insurer: copies of cancelled checks; copies of deposited checks; cash receipts (if any); disbursement receipts; closing instructions; settlement statements (all drafts and final versions); pay-off statements; wiring instructions and wire confirmations; all recorded documents; the client-specific ledger; and the bank statement from any open interest-bearing account used for the transaction.

This opinion can be distinguished from 98 FEO 10 which holds that an insurance defense lawyer may not disclose confidential information about an insured's representation in bills submitted to an independent audit company at the insurance carrier's request unless the insured consents. That opinion provides that a lawyer should not ask for the consent of the insured "[w]hen the insured could be prejudiced by agreeing and gains nothing" such that "a disinterested lawyer would not conclude that the insured should agree in the absence of some special circumstance." 98 FEO 10 presumes that the interests of the insured and the insurance carrier relative to the payment of legal fees are in conflict because the insured wants the best defense money can buy and the insurance carrier wants to limit its expenditures on legal fees. This is not the case with regard to audits of real estate trust accounts where a title insurer's interest in preventing the theft of closing funds by a lawyer can be presumed to be the same as that of the buyer and the seller of the property. Another distinction resides in the type of information that would be obtained in an audit of a bill for legal services and in the audit of trust account records for a real estate closing. The legal bill often contains detailed information about the representation which is clearly confidential and may also be privileged under the law of evidence. Although the limited client information gained in an audit of a real estate trust account is confidential, it is probably not privileged.[1] Therefore, the risk that the privilege will be waived as a consequence of the audit is remote.

To further protect confidential client information during the audit process, prior to an audit, Lawyer A must obtain written assurances from the title insurer of the following: (1) the information disclosed will be used for no other purposes than to confirm the proper use of funds and the lawyer's compliance with the trust accounting requirements in Rule 1.15; (2) the information will not be used by the title insurer for marketing or business purposes other than risk management; (3) access to the information will be limited to those employees of the title insurer who need the information to make risk management decisions; and (4) the disclosed information will not be shared with any third party except the State Bar and, in the event a defalcation is discovered, the information will be disclosed to the State Bar or other appropriate authorities. See Rule 1.15. Regardless of the title insurer's duty to report evidence of a defalcation to the State Bar, any North Carolina lawyer who has such knowledge is also required to report to the State Bar pursuant to Rule 8.3(a).

Although Lawyer A must obtain title insurer's written assurances relative to protecting confidential client information, he is not prohibited from allowing the title insurer's conclusions as a result of the audit to be released to a third party such as another title insurer.

Inquiry #2:

May Lawyer A voluntarily permit Title Insurer to examine and review Lawyer A's reconciliation reports whether generated by Lawyer A and his staff, or generated by an outside reconciliation service employed by Lawyer A?

Opinion #2:

Yes, provided the reconciliation reports are for a trust account that is used solely for real estate closings and the required written assurances from the title insurer set forth in Opinion #1 are obtained. See Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #3:

Title Insurer conditions designation as an approved lawyer on the lawyer's agreement that Title Insurer may audit the lawyer's trust account and review the lawyer's reconciliation reports upon request. May a lawyer seek designation as an approved lawyer for Title Insurer?

Opinion #3:

Yes, provided the audit is limited to trust accounts, or the reconciliation reports therefore, that are used solely for real estate closings and the required written assurances from the auditor and the title insurer set forth in Opinion #1 are obtained. See Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #4:

Would the responses to any of the preceding inquiries be different if multiple lawyers in the same firm use the same real estate trust account?

Opinion #4:

No.

Inquiry #5:

As noted above, many real estate lawyers use outside reconciliation services to reconcile their trust accounts. Is this practice permitted under the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion #5:

Yes, a lawyer may delegate reconciliation to a company or to a nonlawyer who is not employed in the lawyer's firm provided the lawyer makes reasonable efforts to ensure that the person(s) providing the reconciliation services understands the lawyer's professional duties with regard to the management of the trust account under Rule 1.15 and also with regard to the protection of client confidences under Rule 1.6. The lawyer remains professionally responsible for the proper management and reconciliation of the account. See Rule 5.3.

Endnote

1. A privilege exists if (1) the relation of attorney and client existed at the time the communication was made, (2) the communication was made in confidence, (3) the communication relates to a matter about which the attorney is being professionally consulted, (4) the communication was made in the course of giving or seeking legal advice for a proper purpose although litigation need not be contemplated, and (5) the client has not waived the privilege. It is, however, a qualified privilege subject to the general supervisory powers of the trial court. State v. McIntosh, 336 NC 517, 444 S.E.2d 438 (1994).

2008 Formal Ethics Opinion 14

October 23, 2009

Attribution When Using the Written Work of Another

Editor's note: The original version of this opinion was adopted by the State Bar Council on January 23, 2009, and withdrawn by the council on July 24, 2009,

Opinion rules that it is not an ethical violation when a lawyer fails to attribute or obtain consent when incorporating into his own brief, contract, or pleading excerpts from a legal brief, contract, or pleading written by another lawyer.

Inquiry #1:

Lawyer A submitted a brief to the trial court that contained eight pages, verbatim, from an appellate brief previously drafted and filed by Lawyer B in an unrelated case. Lawyer B does not work for Lawyer A's firm. Lawyer A did not credit Lawyer B for the copied portion of the brief, or obtain Lawyer B's permission to incorporate the eight pages, entirely unchanged, into his own brief. Lawyer A added references to additional relevant case law. Lawyer A properly cited all court opinions, legal treatises, and published or copyrighted works upon which he had relied. The only pre-existing writings included within his brief without attribution were the relevant legal arguments submitted by Lawyer B in an earlier appeal.

Did Lawyer A violate any Rule of Professional Conduct through his unattributed use of eight pages of Lawyer B's brief?

Opinion #1:

No. It is not dishonest or unethical for a lawyer to incorporate excerpts from the written work of another lawyer in a brief or other written document without attribution. No opinion is expressed, however, on the legal question of whether a lawyer has intellectual property rights in the lawyer's written works including briefs, pleadings, discovery, and other legal documents.

Lawyers often rely upon and incorporate the work of others when writing a brief, whether that work comes from a law firm brief bank, a client's brief bank, or a brief that the lawyer finds in a law library or posted on a listserv on the Internet. By its nature, the application of the common law is all about precedent, which invites the re-use of arguments that have previously been successful and have been upheld. It would be virtually impossible to determine the origin of the legal argument in many briefs. Moreover, the utilization of the work of others in this context furthers the interests of the client by reducing the amount of time required to prepare a brief and thus reducing the charge to the client. See RPC 190 (1994). It also facilitates the preparation of competent briefs by encouraging lawyers to use the most articulate, carefully researched, and comprehensive legal arguments.

When using the work of another, the lawyer must still provide competent representation. Rule 1.1. This means that the lawyer must verify any citations in the excerpt to insure that the content and interpretation of caselaw, statute, and secondary sources is correct.

Although consent and attribution are not required, if a lawyer uses, verbatim, excerpts from another's brief and the lawyer knows the identity of the author of the excerpt, it is the better, more professional practice, for the lawyer to include a citation to the source.

Inquiry #2:

If Lawyer B, or another lawyer, learns that Lawyer A submitted a brief to the court that contained verbatim portions of a brief previously drafted and filed by Lawyer B, does the lawyer have a duty to report Lawyer A to the State Bar?

Opinion #2:

No. See Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #3:

Lawyer A's law firm maintains a "brief bank," consisting of memoranda of law and briefs previously written by members of the firm and filed with trial or appellate courts. Is it a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct for Lawyer A to use, verbatim, a portion of a memorandum or brief contained in the brief bank without attribution?

Opinion #3:

No. See Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #4:

Is it a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct for Lawyer A to sign his name to a brief, written by an associate at Lawyer A's direction and under Lawyer A's supervision, without including the associate's name on the brief?

Opinion #4:

No, so long as Lawyer A does not charge the client for work he did not perform.

Inquiry #5:

Is it a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct for Lawyer A to copy, verbatim and without attribution, clauses from a contract, pleading, discovery request, or other similar document prepared by someone else for use in a similar document that Lawyer A is preparing for a client?

Opinion #5:

No. It is not dishonest or misleading to incorporate such clauses in similar documents without consent of the author or attribution. See Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #6:

May a law firm distribute a "canned" newsletter to its clients that is obtained from a commercial publishing company without disclosing that the lawyers in the law firm did not actually author the material?

Opinion #6:

No. If the content of a newsletter is portrayed as the original work of the firm's lawyers, the distribution of the newsletter under the law firm's name, without disclosing the true authorship of the material contained in the newsletter, is misleading and a violation of Rule 7.1(a).

2008 Formal Ethics Opinion 15

January 23, 2009

Civil Settlement That Includes Agreement Not to Report to Law Enforcement Authorities

Opinion rules that, provided the agreement does not constitute the criminal offense of compounding a crime and is not otherwise illegal, and does not contemplate the fabrication, concealment, or destruction of evidence, a lawyer may participate in a settlement agreement of a civil claim that includes a non-reporting provision prohibiting the plaintiff from reporting the defendant's conduct to law enforcement authorities.

Inquiry:

Attorney represents Client who has been sued in a civil action for misappropriation of funds under the exercise of a durable power of attorney. The complaint alleges that Client engaged in conduct that is both a civil wrong and a crime. Law enforcement was not contacted by the plaintiff and has never been involved in the matter. A settlement is offered by the plaintiff which includes a condition that the plaintiff will not contact law enforcement to report the alleged crime, but specifies that the plaintiff will cooperate with law enforcement in any investigation that may occur on the authorities' own initiative to the extent required by law (so as not to constitute obstruction of justice). Attorney believes that the settlement agreement is in Client's best interest and would like to recommend to Client that he accept the settlement offer.

May Attorney participate in the negotiation and settlement of the civil suit if the settlement includes the non-reporting condition?

Opinion:

Yes, provided the non-reporting condition does not constitute the criminal offense of compounding a crime and is not otherwise illegal, and the agreement does not contemplate the fabrication, concealment, or destruction of evidence, including witness testimony.

98 FEO 19 provides guidance for a lawyer representing a victim with a civil claim that also constitutes a crime and is analogous to the current inquiry. In 98 FEO 19, the victim's civil claim for fraud was related to the criminal charges of conspiracy to defraud. The opinion rules that if the victim's attorney has a well-founded belief that both the civil claim and the criminal charges are warranted by the law and the facts, and the victim's attorney has not attempted to exert or suggest improper influence over the criminal justice system, the victim's attorney does not violate the Rules of Professional Conduct by proposing that the victim acquiesce to a plea agreement in exchange for a confession of judgment from the defendant in the civil action. A critical component of the opinion is the condition that the proposed settlement of the civil claim may not exceed the amount to which the victim may be entitled under applicable law.

The purpose of the latter condition is to prevent the common law crime of compounding a felony which occurs when one with knowledge that another has committed a felony agrees not to inform the authorities in exchange for something of value. State v. Hodge, 142 N.C. 665, 55 S.E.2d 626 (1906).

98 FEO 19 rules that a lawyer may present, participate in presenting, or threaten to present criminal charges to resolve a civil matter provided the criminal charges are related to the civil matter and the lawyer reasonably believes that the charges are well-grounded in fact and warranted by law and, further provided, the lawyer's conduct does not constitute a crime under the law of North Carolina. The ABA Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility has opined that under these same circumstances, a lawyer is permitted to partipate in a settlement agreement in which his client agrees to refrain from instigating prosecution. See ABA Comm. on Ethics and Professional Responsibility, Formal Op. 363 (1992); see also New York City Op. 1995-13 (lawyer whose client could be charged with both civil and criminal offense may offer a settlement in the civil matter that includes a condition that the opponent not inform law enforcement authorities of the criminal matter). Similarly, the Committee on Legal Ethics of the West Virginia State Bar held that, under limited circumstances, civil litigants should not be prevented from agreeing to forego the filing of criminal charges in exchange for money paid to resolve their civil suits. See Committee on Legal Ethics v. Printz, 416

S.E.2d 720 (1992). The opinion cautioned lawyers, however, that they must be careful not to use the threat of criminal prosecution to obtain more than is owed or have their clients agree not to testify at future criminal trials. ''Seeking payment beyond restitution in exchange for foregoing criminal prosecution or seeking any payments in exchange for not testifying at a criminal trial ... are still clearly prohibited.'' Id. at 727.

Although there is no express prohibition in the Rules of Professional Conduct against such an agreement, a lawyer must be careful to avoid the criminal offense of compounding a crime, which in turn would violate the prohibition in Rule 8.4(b) against "criminal act[s] that reflect adversely on the lawyer's honesty, trustworthiness, or fitness as a lawyer in other respects." This means that the amount paid to settle the civil claim may not exceed the amount to which the plaintiff would be entitled under applicable law; in other words, no compensation may be paid to the plaintiff for the plaintiff's silence. Moreover, the lawyers for both the plaintiff and the defendant must also be careful to avoid any implication that the settlement includes the client's agreement to testify falsely or to evade a subpoena in a criminal proceeding should criminal charges subsequently be brought by the authorities. Such conduct clearly violates the prohibitions in Rule 3.4(a) and (b) on counseling or assisting another to destroy or hide evidence, testify falsely, or avoid serving as a witness. Finally, if there is a legal requirement to report certain conduct to the authorities, as, for example, there is with child abuse and neglect, a lawyer may not participate in a settlement agreement that includes a non-reporting provision that is illegal. See e.g. N.C.G.S. 7B-301.

Provided the settlement agreement does not constitute the criminal offense of compounding a crime, is not otherwise illegal, and does not contemplate the fabrication, concealment, or destruction of evidence (including witness testimony), a lawyer may participate in a settlement agreement of a civil claim that includes a provision that the plaintiff will not report the defendant's conduct to law enforcement authorities.

2008 Formal Ethics Opinion 17

January 23, 2009

Filing a Notice of Appeal in a Court-Appointed Juvenile Case

Opinion rules that a lawyer appointed to represent a parent at the trial of a juvenile case may file a notice of appeal to preserve the client's right to appeal although the lawyer does not believe that the appeal has merit.

Inquiry:

Indigent parents who are parties in abuse, neglect, dependency, and termination of parent rights (TPR) juvenile proceedings are entitled to appointed counsel at both the trial court and the appellate levels. N.C. Gen .Stat. §§7B-602; 7B-1101; 7A-27; 7A-451.

Rule 3A of the North Carolina Rules of Appellate Procedure, N.C. R. App. P. 3A, applies to juvenile cases alleging abuse, neglect, or dependency or in which a TPR was sought. Rule 3A provides, in part,

> ….If the appellant is represented by counsel, both the trial counsel and appellant must sign the notice of appeal,…

The remaining provisions of the rule protect the privacy interests of the juvenile and provide for expedited procedures and calendaring priority.

An indigent parent has the right to appeal the trial court's decision. However, an appointed trial lawyer will, on occasion, decline to sign the notice of appeal, as required by N.C. R. App. P. 3A and as requested by the client, because the lawyer is concerned that the appeal lacks merit and the lawyer may be in violation of Rule 11(a) of the North Carolina Rules of Civil Procedure and Rule 3.1 of the Rules of Professional Conduct. N.C. R. Civ. P. 11(a) provides in part,

> …The signature of an attorney or party constitutes a certificate by him that he has read the pleading, motion, or other paper; that to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief formed after reasonable inquiry it is well-grounded in fact and is warranted by existing law or a good faith argument for the extension, modification, or reversal of existing law, and that it is not interposed for any improper purpose, such as to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or needless increase in the cost of litigation….

An appellate lawyer is appointed by the Office of the Appellate Defender to represent an indigent parent on the appeal. This lawyer reviews the record to determine whether there are justiciable issues. On many occasions, the appellate lawyer finds justiciable issues that the trial lawyer did not identify. However, on some occasions, the appellate lawyer determines that there are no meritorious legal arguments to be made. In juvenile cases, the Supreme Court has ruled that an Anders-type brief may not be filed. In re Harrison, 136 N.C. App. 831, 526 S.E. 2d 502 (2000). Therefore, the appellate lawyer will advise the client that the appeal is without merit and ask the client to withdraw the appeal. If the client refuses to do so, the lawyer files a motion to withdraw from the representation.

In appeals of juvenile cases, when the client has indicated that he or she wants to appeal and is prepared to sign the notice of appeal as required by N.C. R. App. P. 3A, is it unethical for the appointed trial lawyer to sign the notice of appeal to preserve the client's right to appeal even if the trial lawyer has doubts as to the merit of the appeal?

Opinion:

No, it is not unethical for the trial lawyer to sign the notice of appeal to preserve an indigent client's right to appeal in a juvenile case. Whether signing the notice violates Rule 11 of the Rules of Civil Procedure is outside the purview of the Ethics Committee. Nevertheless, the committee can opine on whether the lawyer is in violation of the prohibition in Rule 3.1 of the Rules of Professional Conduct on bringing a proceeding or asserting an issue unless there is a basis in law and fact for doing so that is not frivolous. In TPR and other juvenile cases, the state's interest in ensuring due process for parents is demonstrated by the statutory requirement for court appointed-trial and appellate counsel for indigent parents. In light of this public policy, and when the notice of appeal serves to preserve the client's right to appeal but does not assert a particular legal argument, it is not unethical for the appointed trial lawyer for an indigent parent to sign a notice of appeal although the trial lawyer may not believe that the appeal has merit. Moreover, the trial lawyer may rely upon the court-appointed appellate lawyer's subsequent review of the record to determine whether to pursue the appeal.

2009 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

January 15, 2010

Review and Use of Metadata

Opinion rules that a lawyer must use reasonable care to prevent the disclosure of confidential client information hidden in metadata when transmitting an electronic communication and a lawyer who receives an electronic communication from another party or another party's lawyer must refrain from searching for and using confidential information found in the metadata embedded in the document.

Background

In the representation of clients in all types of legal matters, lawyers routinely send emails and electronic documents, spreadsheets, and PowerPoint presentations to a lawyer for another party (or directly to the party if not represented by counsel). The email and the electronic documents contain metadata[1] or embedded information about the document describing the document's history, tracking and management[2] such as the date and time that the document was created, the computer on which the document was created, the last date and time that a document was saved, "redlined" changes identifying what was changed or deleted in the document, and comments included in the document during the editing process. Pennsylvania Bar Ass'n. Comm. on Legal Ethics and Professional Responsibility, Formal Opinion 2007-500, reconsidered Pennsylvania Formal Op. 2009-100, notes that, although most metadata contains "seemingly harmless information," it may also contain "privileged and/or confidential information, such as previously deleted text, notes, and tracked changes, which may provide information about, e.g., legal issues, legal theories, and other information that was not intended to be disclosed to opposing counsel." This embedded information may be readily revealed by a "right click" with a computer mouse, by clicking on a software icon, or by using software designed to discover and disclose the metadata.[3] On occasion, one software application automatically displays or uses metadata that another software application hides from the user. The sender of the document may be unaware that there is metadata embedded in the document or mistakenly believe that the metadata was deleted from the document prior to transmission. The Ethics Committee is issuing this opinion sua sponte in light of the importance of the ethical issues raised by metadata.

Inquiry #1:

What is the ethical duty of a lawyer who sends an electronic communication to prevent the disclosure of a client's confidential information found in metadata?

Opinion #1:

Rule 1.6(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits a lawyer from revealing information relating to the representation of a client unless the client gives informed consent, the disclosure is impliedly authorized to carry out the representation, or disclosure is permitted by one of the exceptions to the duty of confidentiality set forth in paragraph (b) of the rule. As noted in comment [20] to the rule, "[w]hen transmitting a communication that includes information acquired during the representation of a client, the lawyer must take reasonable precautions to prevent the information from coming into the hands of unintended recipients." Therefore, a lawyer who sends an electronic communication must take reasonable precautions to prevent the disclosure of confidential information, including information in metadata, to unintended recipients.[4]

RPC 215 addressed the preservation of confidential client information when using modern forms of communication including cellular phones and email. The opinion states that the professional obligation to use reasonable care to protect and preserve confidential information extends to the use of communications technology; "[h]owever, this obligation does not require that a lawyer use only infallibly secure methods of communication." Nevertheless, "a lawyer must take steps to minimize the risks that confidential information may be disclosed in a communication."

Lawyers have several options to minimize the risk of disclosing confidential information in an electronic communication. Lawyers should exercise care in using software features that track changes, record notes, allow "fast saves," or save different versions, as these features increase the amount of metadata within a document. Metadata "scrubber" applications remove embedded information from an electronic document and may be used to remove metadata before sending an electronic document to opposing counsel. Finally, lawyers may opt to use an electronic document type that does not contain as much metadata, such as the portable document format (PDF), or may opt to use a hard copy or fax. Both commercial and freeware software solutions exist to help lawyers avoid inadvertently disclosing confidential information in an electronic communication.

What is reasonable depends upon the circumstances including, for example, the sensitivity of the confidential information that may be disclosed, the potential adverse consequences from disclosure, any special instructions or expectations of a client, and the steps that the lawyer takes to prevent the disclosure of metadata. Of course, when electronic communications are produced in response to a subpoena or a formal discovery request in civil litigation, the responding lawyer may not remove or restrict access to the metadata in the communications if doing so would violate any disclosure duties under law, the Rules of Civil Procedure, or court order.

Inquiry #2:

May a lawyer who receives an electronic communication from another party or the party's lawyer search for and use confidential information embedded in the metadata of the communication without the consent of the other party or lawyer?

Opinion #2:

No, a lawyer may not search for confidential information embedded in metadata of an electronic communication from another party or a lawyer for another party. By actively searching for such information, a lawyer interferes with the client-lawyer relationship of another lawyer and undermines the confidentiality that is the bedrock of the relationship. Rule 1.6. Additionally, if a lawyer unintentionally views confidential information within metadata, the lawyer must notify the sender and may not subsequently use the information revealed without the consent of the other lawyer or party.

The New York State Bar was the first to adopt the position that a lawyer should not search metadata for confidential information. The state bars of Alabama, Arizona, Florida, and Maine have followed this position.[5] New York Ethics Opinion 749 holds that, > in light of the strong public policy in favor of preserving confidentiality as the foundation of the lawyer-client relationship, use of technology to surreptitiously obtain information that may be protected by the attorney-client privilege, the work product doctrine, or that may otherwise constitute a "secret" of another lawyer's client would violate the letter and spirit of [the New York] Disciplinary Rules.

Agreeing with the position of the New York State Bar, the Alabama State Bar Disciplinary Commission in Opinion 2007-02 finds that, "[t]he mining of metadata constitutes a knowing and deliberate attempt by the recipient attorney to acquire confidential and privileged information in order to obtain an unfair advantage against an opposing party." Although the ABA Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility, in Formal Opinion 06-442 (2006),[6] takes the position that the Model Rules of Professional Conduct do not prohibit a lawyer from reviewing and using metadata, this position was subsequently rejected by the State Bar of Arizona among others. Arizona Opinion 07-03 observes that under the ABA opinion, which puts "the sending lawyer…at the mercy of the recipient lawyer…, the sending lawyer might conclude that the only ethically safe course of action is to forego the use of electronic document transmission entirely…[this is not] realistic or necessary."

The North Carolina State Bar Ethics Committee agrees that a lawyer may not ethically search for confidential information embedded within an electronic communication from another party or the lawyer for another party. To do so would undermine the protection afforded to confidential information by Rule 1.6 and would interfere with the client-lawyer relationship of another lawyer in violation of Rule 8.4(d), which prohibits conduct that is "prejudicial to the administration of justice."

The Ethics Committee recognizes that it is possible for a lawyer to unintentionally find confidential information upon viewing the contents of an electronic communication. If this occurs, the lawyer must notify the sender and may not subsequently use the information revealed without the consent of the other lawyer or party.

Rule 4.4(b) requires a lawyer who receives a writing relating to the representation of a client that the lawyer knows, or reasonably should know, was inadvertently sent, to promptly notify the sender. Receiving confidential information embedded in the metadata of an electronic communication is analogous to receiving, for example, a faxed pleading that inadvertently includes a page of notes from opposing counsel. Although the receiving lawyer did not seek out the confidential information, the receiving lawyer in either situation has a duty to "promptly notify the sender" under Rule 4.4(b) if the receiving lawyer "knows or reasonably should know that the writing was inadvertently sent." Although the technology involved is different, the Ethics Committee believes that a lawyer who can recognize confidential information inadvertently included in a fax can also recognize confidential information inadvertently included in an electronic document.

Further, a lawyer who intentionally or unintentionally discovers confidential information embedded within the metadata of an electronic communication may not use the information revealed without the consent of the other lawyer or party.

Although the receipt of confidential information embedded in metadata is analogous to the receipt of a page of handwritten notes in a faxed pleading for purposes of notifying the sender under Rule 4.4(b), metadata differs from the readily apparent information contained in a paper communication. Confidential information may inadvertently be included in the metadata of an electronic document despite reasonable efforts by a sender to stay abreast of rapid technological changes and to prevent the transmission of confidential information. The exchange of electronic documents, however, is vital to the functioning of the legal profession in the twenty-first century. Although Rule 4.4(b) does not require a lawyer to return an inadvertently sent paper document or specifically prohibit the use of information contained in such a document, Rule 8.4(d) prohibits conduct that is "prejudicial to the administration of justice." As comment [4] to Rule 8.4 observes, "[t]he phrase 'conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice' in paragraph (d) should be read broadly to proscribe a wide variety of conduct, including conduct that occurs outside the scope of judicial proceedings." Allowing the use of confidential information that is found embedded within metadata would inhibit the efficient functioning of the modern justice system and also undermine the protections for client confidences in the Rules of Professional Conduct and the attorney-client privilege. Therefore, the use of found metadata is "prejudicial to the administration of justice" in violation of Rule 8.4(d) and is prohibited.

In summary, a lawyer may not search for and use confidential information embedded in the metadata of an electronic communication sent to him or her by another lawyer or party unless the lawyer is authorized to do so by law, rule, court order or procedure, or the consent of the other lawyer or party. If a lawyer unintentionally views metadata, the lawyer must notify the sender and may not subsequently use the information revealed without the consent of the other lawyer or party.

Endnotes

1. Metadata is explained in Pennsylvania Bar Ass'n. Comm. on Legal Ethics and Professional Responsibility, Formal Op. 2007-500 (2007), reconsidered Pennsylvania Formal Op. 2009-100 (2009), as follows: "Metadata, which means 'information about data,' is data contained within electronic materials that is not ordinarily visible to those viewing the information. Although most commonly found in documents created in Microsoft Word, metadata is also present in a variety of other formats, including spreadsheets, PowerPoint presentations, and Corel WordPerfect documents."
2. Arizona State Bar Comm. on the Rules of Professional Conduct, Op. 07-03 (2007).
3. Pennsylvania Formal Op. 2007-500 (2007), reconsidered Pennsylvania Formal Op. 2009-100 (2009).
4. This is consensus position among the jurisdictions that have considered the issue as well as the ABA Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility. Alabama State Bar Disciplinary Comm'n, Op. 2007-02 (2007); Arizona State Bar Comm. on the Rules of Professional Conduct, Op. 07-03 (2007); Colorado Bar Ass'n. Ethics Comm., Op. 119 (2008); District of Columbia Legal Ethics Comm., Op. 341 (2007); Florida Professional Ethics Comm., Ethics Op. 06-2 (2006); Maine Bd. of Bar Overseers Professional Ethics Comm'n., Op. 196 (2008); Maryland State Bar Ass'n. Comm. on Ethics, Op. 2007-09 (2006); New York State Ethics Op. 782 (2004); Pennsylvania Formal Op. 2009-100 (2009); ABA Standing Comm. on Ethics and Professional Responsibility, Formal Op. 06-442 (Aug. 5, 2006).
5. Alabama Ethics Op. 2007-02 (2007); Arizona Op. 07-03 (2007); Florida Ethics Op. 06-2 (2006); Maine Op. 196 (Oct. 21, 2008); and New York Ethics Op. 749 (2001). District of Columbia Legal Ethics Comm. Op. 341 (2007) holds that a lawyer may not view metadata if the lawyer has actual knowledge that it was provided inadvertently.
6. ABA Formal Op. 06-442 (2006) concludes that the Model Rules of Professional Conduct permit a lawyer to review and use metadata contained in email and other electronic documents. The Colorado Bar Association, Maryland State Bar Association, and Pennsylvania Bar Association agree with the position expressed in the ABA opinion. Colorado Op. 119 (2008); Maryland Op. 2007-09 (2006); Pennsylvania Op. 2009-100 (2009).

2009 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

April 24, 2009

Responding to Unauthorized Practice of Law in Preparation of a Deed

Opinion rules a closing lawyer who reasonably believes that a title company engaged in the unauthorized practice of law when preparing a deed must report the lawyer who assisted the title company but may close the transaction if client consents and doing so is in the client's interest.

Inquiry #1:

Buyer/borrower's counsel is preparing for closing. The day prior to closing a draft of a deed is forwarded to buyer/borrower's counsel by ABC Title Company. At or near the top of the draft deed it states in writing, "This deed was prepared by ABC Title Company under the supervision of John Doe, attorney at law." ABC Title Company is not a bank or a law firm. John Doe is not employed by ABC Title Company. Buyer/borrower's counsel believes that the deed is actually being prepared by a nonlawyer employee or independent contractor of the ABC Title Company who then forwards the deed to John Doe for his review and approval. John Doe does not directly employ the nonlegal staff person who prepares the deed, nor is that person an independent contractor hired by John Doe for the purpose of assisting John Doe with the legal work he performs on behalf of his clients.

What are the ethical obligations of buyer/borrower's counsel as to John Doe and ABC Title Company?

Opinion #1:

No opinion is expressed on the legal question of whether ABC Title Company is engaged in the unauthorized practice of law. For the purpose of responding to this inquiry, however, it is assumed that buyer/borrower's counsel reasonably believes that ABC is engaged in the unauthorized practice of law.

Rule 8.3(a) requires a lawyer who knows that another lawyer has committed a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct that raises a substantial question as to that lawyer's honesty, trustworthiness, or fitness as a lawyer in other respects, to inform the North Carolina State Bar or a court having jurisdiction over the matter. Rule 8.3 only requires a lawyer to report rule violations of "another lawyer." There is no requirement under Rule 8.3 to report the unauthorized practice of law by a nonlawyer or company. Nevertheless, Rule 5.5(d) of the Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits a lawyer from assisting another person in the unauthorized practice of law.

If buyer/borrower's counsel suspects that John Doe is assisting ABC Title Company in the unauthorized practice of law, he should communicate his concerns to John Doe and advise John Doe that he may wish to contact the State Bar for an ethics opinion as to his future transactions with ABC Title Company. If, after communicating with John Doe, buyer/borrower's counsel reasonably believes that John Doe is knowingly assisting the title company in the unauthorized practice of law, and plans to continue participating in such conduct, buyer/borrower's counsel must report John Doe to the State Bar. Rule 8.3(a).

Inquiry #2:

May buyer/borrower's counsel proceed with the closing?

Opinion #2:

Buyer/borrower's counsel has an obligation to do what is in the best interest of his client while not assisting in the unauthorized practice of law. The lawyer should advise the client of his concerns about ABC's unauthorized practice of law and any harm that such conduct may pose to the client. However, if buyer/borrower's counsel determines that the deed appears to convey marketable title and the client decides to proceed with the closing after receiving his lawyer's advice, buyer/borrower's counsel may close the transaction. See 2007 FEO 3 (lawyer may proceed with representation of city council in quasi-judicial proceeding after advising the council of the legal implications of a nonlawyer appearing before the council in representative capacity). Buyer/borrower's participation in the closing does not further the unauthorized practice of law by ABC Title Company.

2009 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

January 15, 2010

Nonlawyer Employee Contacting Clients of Former Employer

Opinion rules that a lawyer has a professional obligation not to encourage or allow a nonlawyer employee to disclose confidences of a previous employer's clients for purposes of solicitation.

Inquiry:

May a nonlawyer employee of a law firm, who recently changed law firms, write to clients of his/her former employer with whom the nonlawyer had established relationships to inform the clients that the nonlawyer is employed with a new law firm and that the new law firm handles the same type of legal matters?

Opinion:

The Rules of Professional Conduct govern the actions of lawyers, rather than nonlawyers. However, a lawyer having direct supervisory authority over a nonlawyer employee has a duty to make reasonable efforts to ensure that the nonlawyer's conduct is compatible with the professional obligations of the lawyer. Furthermore, the lawyer may be held responsible for conduct of a nonlawyer that would be a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct if engaged in by a lawyer. See Rule 5.3(c).

The protection of client confidences is one of the most significant responsibilities imposed on a lawyer. See Rule 1.6, 1.9. Comment [1] to Rule 5.3 provides that a lawyer must give nonlawyer employees appropriate instruction and supervision concerning the ethical aspects of their employment, particularly regarding the obligation not to disclose information relating to representation of a client. A client's identity, and the fact that the client had previously retained a lawyer for a particular purpose, is confidential information. Rule 1.6 and Rule 1.9 refer to the duty of confidentiality that a lawyer owes to his own current and former clients. However, the deference that the legal profession gives to a lawyer's duty of confidentiality would mandate that a lawyer has a professional obligation not to encourage or allow a nonlawyer employee to disclose confidences of a previous employer's clients for purposes of solicitation.

No opinion is expressed on the legal question of whether a communication with a client of the nonlawyer's former employer constitutes interference with a contract.

2009 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

April 24, 2009

Credit Card Account that Avoids Commingling

Opinion rules that a law firm may establish a credit card account that avoids commingling by depositing unearned fees into the law firm's trust account and earned fees into the law firm's operating account provided the problem of chargebacks is addressed.

Inquiry:

To avoid the commingling of client funds with a lawyer's own funds, Rule 1.15-2 of the Rules of Professional Conduct requires payments of mixed funds, unearned fees, and money advanced for costs to be deposited into a lawyer's trust account, and payments for earned fees and reimbursements for expenses advanced by a lawyer to be deposited into a lawyer's operating account. Although a lawyer may accept payment of legal fees by credit card, if there is no way to distinguish a credit card payment for earned fees or costs advanced from a payment for unearned fees or anticipated expenses, all credit card payments must be initially deposited into the lawyer's trust account. Earned fees and expense reimbursements are then withdrawn promptly from the trust account for deposit into the operating account or payment to the lawyer. CPR 129 and RPC 247.

A bank[1] has developed a credit card account specifically for law firms that separates and deposits payments of unearned and earned client funds into trust and operating accounts as appropriate. Payments for unearned fees (and for anticipated expenses) are deposited directly into the participating law firm's trust account and payments for earned fees (and costs advanced) are deposited directly into the firm's operating account. May a lawyer establish such an account?

Opinion:

Yes, the account satisfies a lawyer's professional responsibility to avoid the commingling of funds. Utilization of such an account does not violate Rule 1.15-2(g) which requires mixed funds (funds belonging to the lawyer received in combination with funds belonging to a client) to be deposited into the lawyer's trust account intact and, after deposit, the funds belonging to the lawyer to be withdrawn. The law firm credit card account described in the inquiry separates the funds prior to their deposit and, therefore, the funds are not mixed when received by the lawyer.

A lawyer may set up such an account only if the lawyer is also able to comply with 97 FEO 9 which addresses credit card agreements that give the processing bank the authority to debit or "charge back" an account in the event a credit charge is disputed. The opinion sets forth the following alternative ways to safeguard client funds in a trust account when the credit card agreement gives the bank the authority to debit the lawyer's trust account for a chargeback by a client without prior notice to the lawyer:

> attempt to negotiate an agreement with the bank that requires the bank to debit an account other than the trust account in the event of a chargeback; maintain a separate demand deposit account in an amount sufficient to cover any chargeback; request that the bank arrange an inter-account transfer such that the lawyer's operating account will be immediately debited in the event of a chargeback against the trust account; or establish a trust account for the sole purpose of receiving advance payments by credit card which will be transferred immediately to the lawyer's primary trust account.

As noted in 97 FEO 9, "[u]nder all circumstances, a lawyer is ethically compelled to arrange for a payment (from his or her own funds or from some other source) to the trust account sufficient to cover the chargeback in the event that a chargeback jeopardizes the funds of other clients on deposit in the account." Therefore, provided the lawyer can comply with the requirements set forth in 97 FEO 9, the lawyer may establish a credit card account that deposits funds into separate accounts.

Endnote

1. One such account is the Law Firm Merchant Account99 which is offered by Affiniscape Merchant Solutions in association with Bank of America, NA.

2009 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

January 22, 2009

Reporting Opposing Party's Citizenship Status to ICE

Opinion rules that a lawyer may serve the opposing party with discovery requests that require the party to reveal her citizenship status, but the lawyer may not report the status to ICE unless required to do so by federal or state law.

Inquiry #1:

Lawyer is defending a medical malpractice lawsuit in which a mother and her child are plaintiffs. The child is a natural born US citizen. Lawyer believes the mother is a Mexican citizen and suspects she is an undocumented alien.

The basis of the suit is injury to the child during birth. Plaintiff's counsel has forecast damages of over $30,000,000. The amount of damages is based in part on the cost of medical care in the United States. The cost of the same medical care in Mexico would be substantially less.

May Lawyer serve plaintiffs with discovery requests that require Mother to reveal her manner of entry into the United States and the status of her citizenship or legal residence?

Opinion #1:

Yes. If the discovery requests are intended to uncover information that is relevant to the defense of the case and which is admissible evidence (or may lead to admissible evidence) and is not for the improper purpose of creating a file to use to threaten the plaintiff with deportation, to harass the plaintiff, or for some other improper purpose, lawyer is not prohibited from engaging in such discovery. See Rule 3.1, Rule 4.4, 2005 FEO 3.

Inquiry #2:

If Lawyer engages in the discovery and determines that Mother is in the country illegally, may Lawyer call the US Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) and report the mother's status?

Opinion #2:

No, unless federal or state law requires Lawyer to report Mother's illegal status to ICE.

Rule 4.4(a) provides that, in representing a client, "a lawyer shall not use means that have no substantial purpose other than to embarrass, delay, or burden a third person." Rule 8.4(d) provides that it is professional misconduct for a lawyer to engage in conduct that is prejudicial to the administration of justice. Comment [4] to Rule 8.4 provides that "paragraph (d) should be read broadly to proscribe a wide variety of conduct, including conduct that occurs outside the scope of judicial proceedings."

It is unlikely that Lawyer's impetus to report Mother to ICE is motivated by any purpose other than those prohibited under these principles. The Ethics Committee has already determined that a lawyer may not threaten to report an opposing party or a witness to immigration officials to gain an advantage in civil settlement negotiations. 2005 FEO 3. Similarly, Lawyer may not report Mother's illegal status to ICE in order to gain an advantage in the underlying medical malpractice action.

Inquiry #3:

Would the answer to either Inquiry #1 or Inquiry #2 change if Mother was not a party to the litigation?

Opinion #3:

No. See Rule 4.4(a).

2009 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

July 24, 2009

Note: This opinion was withdrawn and is superseded by 2009 FEO 16.

2009 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

January 27, 2012

Interviewing an Unrepresented Child Prosecuting Witness in a Criminal Case Alleging Physical or Sexual Abuse of the Child

Opinion rules that a criminal defense lawyer or a prosecutor may not interview an unrepresented child who is the alleged victim in a criminal case alleging physical or sexual abuse if the child is younger than the age of maturity as determined by the General Assembly for the purpose of an in-custody interrogation (currently age 14) unless the lawyer has the consent of a non-accused parent or guardian or a court order allows the lawyer to seek an interview with the child without such consent; a lawyer may interview a child who is this age or older without such consent or authorization provided the lawyer complies with Rule 4.3, reasonably determines that the child is sufficiently mature to understand the lawyer's role and purpose, and avoids any conduct designed to coerce or intimidate the child.

Introduction:[1]

This ethics opinion examines when a criminal defense lawyer or a prosecutor may interview a child who is the prosecuting witness in a criminal case alleging physical or sexual abuse of the child. The opinion is purposefully limited to this factual situation and does not address whether a lawyer may, for example, interview a child who is a witness to a crime but is not the victim of the crime. The absence of an opinion on the latter subject does not, however, mean that the Ethics Committee has concluded that such interviews are permissible without consent or authorization of a parent, guardian or the court. A lawyer should take into consideration the principles articulated in this opinion when considering whether to interview any child who was a witness to a violent crime especially one involving the child's family members.

The opinion addresses a difficult dilemma for a lawyer who has a duty to prepare competently by investigating each case and interviewing key witnesses but who does not wish to cause further harm to a child who may have been traumatized by physical or sexual abuse.In preparing this opinion, the Ethics Committee received input from mental health professionals and child advocates. That input led to the committee's determination that the emotional and intellectual sophistication of a child cannot be determined by a lawyer or established by an opinion of the Ethics Committee. However, the General Assembly has determined that a child at a certain age is legally mature for the analogous purpose of responding to an in-custody interrogation.N.C. Gen. Stat. §7B-2101(b). In the absence of a better benchmark, the committee accepts the General Assembly's policy decision on this issue.

When a lawyer is considering whether to seek the consent or authorization of a parent or guardian or a court order[2] allowing the lawyer to interview a child who is alleged to be the victim of physical or sexual abuse, the lawyer should keep in mind the following information provided to the committee by the experts it consulted.Excessive interviews of child victims lead to additional trauma for the child.A person who is not trained in techniques for forensic interviewing of children often makes grave errors that can taint the interview or add to the child's trauma.It is preferable for the interview to be performed by a professional.To avoid intimidating the child, a support person for the child (family member or other appropriate person) should be present at the interview.In light of the foregoing, a lawyer should investigate whether forensic interviews with the child have already taken place and are available on tape; if a tape of an interview with the child is available, the lawyer should consider forgoing further interviews.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A represents a criminal defendant on a charge of taking indecent liberties with a child.To prepare for trial, Attorney A would like to interview the child who is the victim of the alleged crime.The child is not a party to the criminal action.She does not have a lawyer and a guardian ad litem has not been appointed to represent her interests.May Attorney A interview the child without the consent of the child's parent or legal guardian?

Opinion #1:

Yes, if the child is older than the age of maturity for the purpose of an in-custody interrogation as determined by the General Assembly in N.C. Gen. Stat. §7B-2101(b) which provides that an in-custody admission of a child under the age of 14 is inadmissible if the interrogation was made outside the presence of the child's parent, guardian, custodian or attorney. Below the age designated in the statute, it is presumed that a child cannot understand the purpose of an interview with a lawyer, the lawyer's role, or the child's right to decline the interview or terminate the interview at any time.If the child is this age or older, Attorney A may seek an interview with the child without the consent of the child's parent or legal guardian, provided Attorney A respects the rights of the child and there is no legal requirement that the consent of the parent or legal guardian be obtained.If the General Assembly changes the designated age in N.C. Gen. Stat. §7B-2101(b), or a successor statute, this opinion shall be similarly changed.

It is Attorney A's professional duty to prepare competently and diligently to defend the client; a priori, in most cases this includes interviewing the victim of the alleged crime if the victim will consent to the interview.Nevertheless, a child frequently does not have the emotional or intellectual maturity to make an informed decision about whether to consent to the interview or the emotional or intellectual maturity to understand the role of the lawyer or the purpose of the interview.

Rule 4.3(b) states that, when dealing on behalf of a client with a person who is not represented by counsel, a lawyer shall not > state or imply that the lawyer is disinterested.When the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the unrepresented person misunderstands the lawyer's role in the matter, the lawyer shall make reasonable efforts to correct the misunderstanding.

As noted in comment [1] to Rule 4.3, "[a]n unrepresented person, particularly one not experienced in dealing with legal matters, might assume that a lawyer is disinterested in loyalties or is a disinterested authority on the law even when the lawyer represents a client."

Many children are inexperienced in legal matters and will not understand the role of a lawyer who seeks an interview. Many children will naively defer to the lawyer because he or she is an adult.Many children will be easily misled or subject to the undue influence of an authority figure such as a lawyer.Because of their psychological and emotional immaturity, it is, therefore, presumed that a lawyer may not interview a child who is younger than age 14 without violating Rule 4.3(b) unless the lawyer obtains the prior consent or authorization of the child's (non-accused) parent or legal guardian or obtains an order from a court with jurisdiction.

A child who is age 14 or older may be interviewed without prior consent or authorization of a parent, guardian or the court provided the lawyer who seeks to interview the child reasonably determines that the child is sufficiently mature to understand, when disclosed by the lawyer, (1) the role of the lawyer, (2) who the lawyer represents, (3) that the purpose of the interview is to prepare the case for trial, (4)the right to have an adult present during the interview, and (5) that the child is at liberty to refuse or to terminate the interview.If the lawyer cannot reasonably conclude that the child is sufficiently mature, both emotionally and intellectually, to understand the five disclosures, the lawyer may not interview the child unless a legal guardian or parent consents or a court orders the interview. If the conduct of the legal guardian or the parent toward the child is at issue in the criminal case, consent must be obtained from a guardian ad litem, a court or other appropriate person or entity with authority to give consent. See Opinion #3; see also Rule 7.1 of the General Rules of Practice for the Superior and District Courts (providing procedure for appointment of lawyer to serve as guardian ad litem for minor who is victim or potential witness in a criminal proceeding).

Rule 3.4(b) prohibits a lawyer from counseling or assisting a witness to testify falsely.

This includes making improper suggestions or offering inducements that might lead a naïve and vulnerable child to change or alter his or her testimony. Although a lawyer may reasonably conclude that a child who is age 14 or older is sufficiently mature to consent to the interview, the lawyer may not engage in emotional manipulation or other forms of undue influence, coercion or intimidation that may inhibit or alter the witness's testimony.

Rule 4.2(a) prohibits a lawyer from communicating about the subject of the representation with a person the lawyer knows to be represented by another lawyer in the matter unless the other lawyer consents or the communication is authorized by law or court order.Before interviewing a child, if allowed to do so under this opinion, the lawyer must determine whether the child is represented and, if applicable, follow the requirements of Rule 4.2(a).

Inquiry #2:

May the prosecutor interview the child who is the alleged victim of physical or sexual abuse?

Opinion #2:

Yes, subject to the same constraints set forth in Opinion #1.

This opinion does not impede a prosecutor's fulfillment of the duty under the Crime Victims Rights Act, N.C. Gen. Stat. Chap. 15A, Article 46, to offer a victim the opportunity to consult with the prosecutor to obtain the views of the victim about the disposition of the case.See N.C. Gen. Stat. §15A-832(f).N.C. Gen. Stat. §15A-841 states that, if the victim is mentally or physically incompetent, the victim's rights under the Act may be exercised by the victim's next of kin or legal guardian.A prosecutor may, therefore, fulfill his or her duty under the Act by speaking with the parent or guardian of an alleged victim who is under age of 14.

Inquiry #3:

The defendant is the child's parent or legal guardian and is accused of conduct that, if proven, would constitute abuse or neglect of the child.May the defendant's criminal defense lawyer interview the child subject to the constraints set forth in Opinion #1?

Opinion #3:

In most instances of alleged child abuse or neglect by a parent or guardian, a guardian ad litem (GAL) and, on occasion, an attorney advocate are appointed to represent the child.

RPC 249 prohibits a lawyer from communicating with a child who has been appointed a GAL unless the lawyer obtains the consent of the attorney advocate or, if only a GAL is appointed, the GAL. If a GAL has not been appointed for the child, the lawyer may interview the child subject to the constraints set forth in Opinion #1.

Endnotes

1. This opinion does not address legal issues relating to due process or the confrontation clause.
2. It is contemplated that a lawyer could seek the court's permission to interview the child without obtaining the consent of a parent or guardian.The child would not, of course, be compelled to submit to the interview.

2009 Formal Ethics Opinion 8

January 21, 2011

Service as Commissioner after Representing Party to Partition Proceeding

Opinion provides guidelines for a lawyer for a party to a partition proceeding and rules that the lawyer may subsequently serve as a commissioner for the sale but not as one of the commissioners for the partitioning of the property.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney is retained by a person with an interest in property to represent him in a proceeding to partition the property pursuant to Chapter 46 of the North Carolina General Statutes. N.C. Gen. Stat. §46-6 authorizes the court to appoint a disinterested person to represent any person interested in the property whose name is unknown and who fails to appear in the proceeding. May Attorney represent the existing client and also agree to be appointed to represent any unknown person with interest in the property?

Opinion #1:

No. There is a potential conflict between the interests of the existing client and the interests of the unknown person(s). One of the critical issues in a partition proceeding is whether the property should be sold or partitioned. See, e.g., N.C. Gen. Stat. §46-22(c)(party seeking sale has burden of proving, by a preponderance of the evidence, that actual partition cannot be made without substantial injury to the interested parties). If Attorney has an existing client with a specific interest in the proceeding, Attorney cannot be disinterested as required by N.C. Gen. Stat. §46-6 or exercise independent professional judgment as required by the Rules of Professional Conduct when evaluating and representing the interests of the unknown person(s). The potential conflict cannot be resolved by consent because the unknown person(s) is unavailable to consent. Rule 1.7.

Inquiry #2:

At the conclusion of the proceeding, the clerk of court orders the public sale of the property and, pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat. §§1-399.4 and 46-28, appoints Attorney as the commissioner for the sale.[1]

May Attorney serve as the commissioner and collect a commission from the public sale?

Opinion #2:

Yes, provided Attorney concludes that he can serve fairly and impartially and, further provided, Attorney terminates his representation of any person with an interest in the property.

The role of the commissioner is a neutral one with fiduciary responsibilities to all of the owners of the property. However, a commissioner conducting a public sale has limited discretion because he must follow the specific procedural requirements for judicial sales set forth in Chapter 1, Article 29A of the General Statutes. Attorney may, therefore, serve as commissioner for the sale upon determining that he can fulfill the role impartially, without bias for or against any of the parties to the partition proceeding, and upon terminating his representation of any person with an interest in the property. In the similar situation of a lawyer serving as a trustee on a deed of trust in foreclosure, the ethics opinions also allow the lawyer to relinquish the representation of the lender or the debtor to serve in the impartial fiduciary role of trustee for the foreclosure. See RPC 46, RPC 82, RPC 90.

N.C. Gen. Stat. §46-28.1 permits any party to a partition proceeding to file a petition for revocation of the order confirming the sale provided the petition is filed within 15 days and is based upon grounds that are specified in the statute. Therefore, the client's legal needs may not end with the entry of the order of sale and the appointment of a commissioner. Anticipating that a client might desire additional legal representation after the sale, at the beginning of the representation the lawyer must notify the client of the lawyer's intention to seek to withdraw from the representation upon the entry of an order of sale in order to be appointed by the clerk as commissioner. See Rule 1.4. After the entry of the order of sale and before seeking the permission of the clerk to withdraw from the representation to serve as the commissioner for the sale, the lawyer must obtain the client's informed consent, confirmed in writing, to withdraw from the representation to serve as commissioner. See Rule 1.16.

At the beginning of the representation, if Attorney does not intend to serve as a commissioner for the sale, he does not have to communicate with the client about potential service as a commissioner. If the circumstances change and Attorney subsequently decides to seek the appointment, failure to notify the client at the beginning of the representation will not prohibit Attorney from subsequently asking for the client's informed consent to withdraw to serve as a commissioner.

Inquiry #3:

At the conclusion of the proceeding, the clerk of court orders a private sale of the property pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat. §§46-28 and 1-339.33. May Attorney be designated as the person authorized to make the private sale pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat. §1-339.33(1)?

Opinion #3:

Yes, subject to the conditions set forth in Opinion #2.

Inquiry #4:

If Attorney is appointed the commissioner for a public sale or the person authorized to make the private sale, may Attorney purchase the property at the sale?

Opinion #4:

No. As the appointed commissioner or the person appointed to conduct the private sale, Attorney has a duty to oversee the sale of the property in a fair and impartial manner. Advancing a personal interest by bidding on or making an offer on the property violates this duty. See 2006 FEO 5 (county tax lawyer who is appointed commissioner may not bid at tax foreclosure sale).

Inquiry #5:

At the conclusion of the proceeding, the clerk of court orders the public sale of the property but appoints another person as commissioner for the sale. May

Attorney bid at the sale on his own behalf?

Opinion #5:

No. This would be a conflict of interest between the lawyer's self-interest in purchasing the property at the lowest price and the client's interest in selling the property for the highest price. Rule 1.7(a)(2). However, Attorney may bid on the property if he is doing so on behalf of the client.

Inquiry #6:

At the conclusion of the proceeding, the clerk of court orders the partition of the property. May Attorney agree to be appointed as one of the three commissioners responsible for dividing the property?

Opinion #6:

No. A commissioner for a partitioning must exercise discretion in determining how to divide the property, thus directly affecting the interests of the various parties to the proceeding. Moreover, there remain opportunities for Attorney to advocate for his client's interests in the event the commissioners seek input from the parties or in the event of an appeal. Attorney cannot, therefore, serve as an impartial commissioner. Rule 1.7(a).

Inquiry #7:

Assume that Attorney formerly represented one or more of the parties in a separate but related partition proceeding (i.e., a prior proceeding involving the same property that did not result in partition or sale), but does not represent any of the parties to the current proceeding.

May Attorney serve as one of the commissioners to conduct the sale or to partition the property?

Opinion #7:

Yes, provided Attorney determines that he can act impartially. See Opinion #1 and Rule 1.7.

Inquiry #8:

Assume that Attorney formerly represented one or more of the parties in a separate but related partition proceeding (i.e., a prior proceeding involving the same property that did not result in partition or sale), but does not represent any of the parties to the current proceeding.

May Attorney serve as the court-appointed lawyer for any "unknown owner" pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat. §46-6?

Opinion #8:

Yes, with the informed consent, confirmed in writing, of Attorney's former client(s). Rule 1.9(a) prohibits a lawyer who has formerly represented a client in a matter from representing a new client in the same or a substantially related matter if the interests of the new client are materially adverse to the interests of the former client unless the former client gives informed consent, confirmed in writing.

Inquiry #9:

Assume that Attorney formerly represented one or more of the parties in a separate but related partition proceeding (i.e., a prior proceeding involving the same property that did not result in partition or sale), but does not represent any of the parties to the current proceeding.

May Attorney purchase the property at the sale?

Opinion #9:

Yes, unless Attorney received confidential information from a former client relative to the property that Attorney could use to the former client's disadvantage when bidding on the property. Rule 1.9(c)(1).

If a lawyer no longer represents a former client, the lawyer's only duties to the former client are to avoid adverse representations of others in the same or a substantially related matter and to avoid using confidential client information to the disadvantage of the former client. Although the partition sale may be substantially related to the prior partition proceeding, a lawyer who is purchasing for his own interest is not engaged in the representation of an adverse party and, therefore, the prohibition on representations adverse to a former client in Rule 1.9(a) is inapplicable. However, the prohibition on using the confidential information of a former client to the disadvantage of the former client would apply unless, as Rule 1.9(c)(1) permits, the information has become generally known.

Endnote

1. Although the procedure for judicial sales of property set forth in Chapter 1, Article 29A, of the General Statutes provides for the appointment of only one commissioner, it is still the custom in some judicial districts for the clerk of court to appoint three commissioners. The conditions on service as a commissioner for the public sale of property set forth in this opinion apply equally to a lawyer who is appointed by the clerk to serve on a panel of commissioners.

2009 Formal Ethics Opinion 9

October 23, 2009

Computer-Based Conflict Systems

Opinion describes reasonable procedures for a computer-based conflicts checking system.

Inquiry:

For the past several years Law Firm has maintained information with regard to current and former representations in electronic form on its computer network and used software tools in order to query such data to determine whether prospective engagements would involve a conflict of interest. Law Firm has learned that its current software provider will no longer provide support for the conflict checking system. A new software provider will convert the data to a new, fully supported program for a certain dollar amount per year of data converted. With each additional year that the software provider is required to retrieve the data, the expense of the conversion goes up exponentially. For what period of time is Law Firm required to convert the data necessary for conflict checking purposes?

Opinion:

After termination of a client-lawyer relationship, a lawyer has continuing duties with respect to confidentiality and conflicts of interest. See Rule 1.6; Rule 1.9, cmt. [1]. These duties continue indefinitely, even after a client's death. See RPC 209. For example, in RPC 209, the Ethics Committee determined that, although six years is a reasonable amount of time for maintaining a closed client file, a law firm must indefinitely maintain a record of all destroyed client files. Similarly, the American Bar Association has opined that a lawyer should preserve, "perhaps for an extended time," an index or identification of destroyed client files. ABA Comm. on Ethics and Prof'l Responsibility, Informal Op. 1384 (1977).

Despite the indefinite duration of the duties with respect to confidentiality and conflicts, the requirements for complying with these duties must be reasonable. See Rule 0.2, Preamble: Scope. The Ethics Committee has previously adopted the standard of "reasonable care" in addressing a lawyer's duty to maintain client confidences. See RPC 133, RPC 215. Likewise, comment [3] to Rule 1.7 specifically provides that a law firm should adopt "reasonable procedures" in order to determine whether a conflict of interest exists.

Every law firm must make its own determination as to what conflict checking procedures are reasonable, taking into account such variables as the size of the law firm, the type of practice, the cost of maintaining conflict checking records over a period of time, and the risk of failing to discover an existing conflict of interest. Regardless of the amount of time that conflict checking information is maintained, lawyers have a duty to avoid any known conflicts and to address conflicts made known to them by opposing or third parties.

As a minimum standard for what constitutes reasonable care, the law firm must convert conflict checking data for at least the last six years to the new program. RPC 209. The law firm does not need to convert conflict checking data that is maintained in some other format by the law firm, i.e., index card filing system, so long as the firm has some means of searching the data for conflicts. The law firm should check with its malpractice carrier to determine whether the carrier has different requirements.

2009 Formal Ethics Opinion 10

October 23, 2009

Supervising a Nonlawyer Appearing in an Unemployment Hearing

Opinion rules that a lawyer must provide appropriate supervision to a nonlawyer appearing pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat. A796-17(b) on behalf of a claimant or an employer in an unemployment hearing.

Inquiry #1:

N.C. Gen. Stat. A796-17(b) allows a nonlawyer to represent employers in unemployment hearings provided the nonlawyer is supervised by a North Carolina licensed lawyer. The statute does not require the lawyer to be present at the unemployment hearing:

> (b) Representation - Any claimant or employer who is a party to any proceeding before the [Employment Security] Commission may be represented by (i) an attorney; or (ii) any person who is supervised by an attorney; however, the attorney need not be present at any proceeding before the commission.

Attorney A is contacted by Corporation B, a business entity that would like to have its employees represent employers in unemployment hearings. As stated in a letter to Attorney A, Corporation B is looking for a lawyer to supervise the "corporation, its employees, and agents" in the representation of employers in unemployment hearings in North Carolina. May Attorney A accept and provide Corporation B with a letter of supervision that would indicate that Attorney A is supervising the corporation and its employees in the representation of employers in unemployment hearings?

Opinion #1:

No. N.C. Gen. Stat. A784-5 prohibits the practice of law by a business corporation. Rule 5.5(d) prohibits a lawyer from assisting in the unauthorized practice of law. Attorney A may not agree to supervise Corporation B or its employees and may not provide a letter of supervision to Corporation B.

Inquiry #2:

If Corporation B were not a corporation but another form of business entity, would the answer to Inquiry #1 change?

Opinion #2:

No.

Inquiry #3:

Attorney A is contacted by C, a nonlawyer who would like to act as a claimant's or an employer's representative pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat. A796-17(b). C asks Attorney A to give her a letter of supervision "for any and all unemployment hearings." The requested letter would not be limited to a specific pending unemployment claim, but would be used for any claim upon which C might represent a claimant or an employer in the future. On a periodic basis, C would provide Attorney A with a list of claims upon which she provided representation.

May Attorney A provide the letter of supervision to C?

Opinion #3:

Unless Attorney A will provide appropriate supervision to C in every unemployment hearing in which she appears, Attorney A may not provide the letter of supervision.

Although N.C. Gen. Stat. A796-17(b) does not require the lawyer to be physically present at a hearing, it contemplates that a lawyer will supervise a nonlawyer representative. Moreover, Rule 5.3 requires a lawyer to supervise the conduct of any nonlawyer who is retained or associated with the lawyer. Therefore, the lawyer must provide appropriate supervision under the circumstances. See RPC 216 (lawyer may supervise nonlawyer who is not employee, but lawyer is responsible for work product). Appropriate supervision would include determining the ability and knowledge of the nonlawyer before agreeing that the nonlawyer may appear at a hearing without the lawyer. Tt would also require the lawyer to have specific knowledge of and provide oversight for each claim to be handled by the nonlawyer.

A "letter of supervision" that represents that a lawyer is supervising a nonlawyer must be a truthful communication as required by Rule 7.1. If Attorney A is not going to supervise C with regard to each individual unemployment hearing, then the letter is a sham and Attorney A is assisting C in the unauthorized practice of law.

Inquiry #4:

C asks Attorney A to prepare and sign a letter of representation for C with blank spaces so that C may fill in the blanks with the identifying information for each hearing in which she represents an employer. May Attorney A provide such a letter?

Opinion #4:

See Opinion #3.

2009 Formal Ethics Opinion 11

July 23, 2010

Representing Debtor in Bankruptcy When Lender is Current Client

Opinion rules that a lawyer may undertake the representation of a debtor in a Chapter 13 bankruptcy, although the lender is lawyer's current client, if the lawyer reasonably believes that he will be able to provide competent and diligent representation to both clients and both clients give informed consent.

Inquiry #1:

Lawyer regularly represents Lender in various matters. Lawyer is approached by Client to represent Client in an individual Chapter 13 bankruptcy. Lender has made a loan to Client. To secure the repayment of the loan, Lender holds a first priority deed of trust on Client's residence, a first priority deed of trust on Client's commercial building, and a first priority lien on Client's vehicle. Lawyer currently represents Lender in other matters, but not with regard to the indebtedness of Client to Lender.

As the lawyer for Client in the Chapter 13 bankruptcy, Lawyer will be responsible for reviewing documentation to determine whether Lender and other secured creditors have valid and enforceable security interests in or liens on Client's property. May Lawyer undertake the representation of Client in the Chapter 13 bankruptcy if Lender and Client consent?

Opinion #1:

Lawyer may undertake the representation of Client if Lawyer reasonably believes that he will be able to provide competent and diligent representation to Client in the bankruptcy action, while adequately protecting Lender's interests in those actions or matters where Lawyer represents Lender. Both Client and Lender must give their informed consent to the representation, confirmed in writing.

Because Lawyer currently represents Lender, Lawyer has a concurrent conflict of interest in representing Client in a bankruptcy action in which Lender is a creditor. See Rule 1.7(a). Comment [6] to Rule 1.7 provides that "absent consent, a lawyer may not act as an advocate in one matter against a person the lawyer represents in some other matter, even when the matters are wholly unrelated." Consent is necessary because the client as to whom the representation is adverse may feel betrayed, and the resulting damage to the client-lawyer relationship could impair the lawyer's ability to represent the client effectively. On the other hand, the client on whose behalf the adverse representation is undertaken may fear that the lawyer will pursue that client's case less effectively out of deference to the other client.

For client consent to cure the conflict, the lawyer must have a reasonable basis for believing that he will be able to provide competent and diligent representation to both clients. It is improper to represent one client asserting a claim against another in the same litigation, even with informed consent. See Rule 1.7, cmt. [17]. Also, if a specific rule, statute, or decision forbids dual representation in the particular context, client consent is irrelevant. See Rule 1.7, cmt. [16]. Outside these situations, the lawyer must evaluate objectively whether he will be able to provide competent representation to both clients. The lawyer should consider whether a disinterested lawyer would conclude that the client should not agree to the representation under the circumstances.

In the instant scenario, the interests of the lender and the debtor are adverse. Lender would benefit if Lawyer determines that Lender's deeds of trust and liens are valid and enforceable. Conversely, Debtor would benefit from an opposite finding. However, Lawyer would only be representing the debtor in this particular action. If Lawyer concludes that he would be able to provide competent and diligent representation to Client in the bankruptcy action, while adequately protecting Lender's interests in those actions or matters where Lawyer represents Lender, Lawyer may seek the clients' informed consent to the bankruptcy representation. If Lawyer cannot reasonably conclude that the interests of both clients would be adequately protected if he represents Client in the bankruptcy action, Lawyer must decline the representation. See Rule 1.7(b).

Pursuant to Rule 1.0(f), "informed consent" denotes the "agreement by a person to a proposed course of conduct after the lawyer has communicated adequate information and explanation appropriate to the circumstances." A lawyer must provide enough information for his client to make an informed decision, such as why the interests are adverse, how the representation may be affected, what risks are involved, and what other options are available. The information should be conveyed to each client in a manner consistent with the clients' level of sophistication. When a lawyer is seeking consent from an unsophisticated individual client, more disclosure and explanation will be required. The client's mere knowledge of the existence of the lawyer's other representation will not constitute sufficient disclosure.

Inquiry #2:

Lawyer regularly represents Lender in various matters. Lender has made a loan to Client. To secure the repayment of the loan, Lender holds a first priority deed of trust on Client's residence, a first priority deed of trust on Client's commercial building, and a first priority lien on Client's vehicle. Lawyer currently represents Lender in other matters, but not with regard to the indebtedness of Client to Lender.

Lawyer is approached by Client to represent Client in an individual Chapter 13 bankruptcy. The loan from Lender to Client has matured and Client wants to extend the maturity date of the loan. May Lawyer represent Client in negotiations with Lender?

Opinion #2:

Yes. See Opinion #1.

Inquiry #3:

May Lawyer represent Client as to the extension of the maturity date of the loan if Client and Lender reach an agreement for an extension without Lawyer's involvement? If so, may Lawyer file a motion seeking bankruptcy court approval of a refinancing agreement between Client and Lender in order to extend the maturity date of the loan, and then represent Client at the hearing on the motion?

Opinion #3:

Yes. See Opinion #1.

2009 Formal Ethics Opinion 12

January 15, 2010

Preparation of Documents for Unrepresented Adverse Party

Opinion rules that a lawyer may prepare an affidavit and confession of judgment for an unrepresented adverse party provided the lawyer explains who he represents and does not give the unrepresented party legal advice; however, the lawyer may not prepare a waiver of exemptions for the adverse party.

Background:

Supply Company is owed money by Contractor. Contractor is not represented by counsel. Contractor agrees to enter into an affidavit and confession of judgment in favor of Supply Company. The affidavit and confession of judgment is prepared by Supply Company's lawyer. The affidavit and confession of judgment contains a provision that states that Contractor "waives with prejudice any right it may have to appeal, modify, stay, or vacate the judgment, and it expressly waives the 30-day deadline to appeal the entry of the judgment."

Supply Company's lawyer also prepares a document for Contractor to sign entitled "Waiver of Exemptions." The document provides that Contractor has consulted with counsel, has previously executed a confession of judgment in favor of Supply Company, has been advised by counsel of the right to designate property, and has freely, knowingly, and voluntarily waived any and all exemptions provided by Article 16 of Chapter 1C of the North Carolina General Statutes (Exempt Property) and any and all exemptions afforded by Article X (Homesteads and Exemptions) of the North Carolina Constitution.

Inquiry #1:

May the lawyer for Supply Company include language in the affidavit and confession of judgment waiving Contractor's right to appeal, stay, or vacate the judgment and waiving the 30-day deadline to appeal the entry of the judgment?

Opinion #1:

Yes. However, the language in the affidavit and confession of judgment must be clear enough to put Contractor on notice that it is waiving important rights and must be sufficient to make Contractor's waiver knowing, intelligent, and voluntary.

Rule 4.3(a) provides that, in dealing on behalf of a client with a person who is not represented by counsel, a lawyer shall not give legal advice to the person, other than the advice to secure counsel, if the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the interests of such person are or have a reasonable possibility of being in conflict with the interests of the client.

Comment [2] to Rule 4.3 clarifies that Rule 4.3 does not prohibit a lawyer from negotiating the terms of a transaction or settling a dispute with an unrepresented person. So long as the lawyer has explained that the lawyer represents an adverse party and is not representing the person, the lawyer may inform the person of the terms on which the lawyer's client will enter into an agreement or settle a matter and may prepare documents that require the unrepresented person's signature.

Whether a lawyer may submit documents to an unrepresented person for signature depends upon whether the lawyer's actions are categorized as the rendition of legal advice or mere communication. The Ethics Committee has previously ruled that a lawyer may provide an unrepresented party with a confession of judgment for execution provided the lawyer does not undertake to advise the unrepresented party concerning the meaning or significance of the document or to state or imply that the lawyer is disinterested. See RPC 165. However, it is unethical for a lawyer to provide an unrepresented party with a document that appears solely to represent the position of the adverse party, such as an answer. See CPR 121, CPR 296, RPC 165.

The prohibitions set out in the prior ethics opinions are consistent with Rule 1.7(b)(3), which prohibits a lawyer from representing opposing parties in the same litigation. Providing an opposing party with a response to a complaint, or other responsive pleading, is tantamount to representing that party. Pursuant to RPC 114, when a lawyer gives drafting assistance to a litigant who wishes to proceed pro se, an attorney-client relationship is formed and the Rules of Professional Conduct, particularly those concerning confidentiality and conflict of interest, apply.

The affidavit and confession of judgment is not a responsive pleading and does not solely represent the position of Contractor. Rather, the document represents the terms upon which Supply Company is willing to resolve its claim against Contractor. So long as Supply Company's lawyer has explained that he represents an adverse party and is not representing Contractor, Lawyer for Supply Company may negotiate the terms of the settlement and may prepare the document for Contractor's signature.

Inquiry #2:

The waiver of exemptions provides that Contractor has consulted with counsel, has previously executed a confession of judgment in favor of Supply Company, has been advised by counsel of the right to designate property, and has freely, knowingly, and voluntarily waived any and all statutory and constitutional exemptions. May Lawyer for Supply Company prepare the waiver of exemptions to be signed by Contractor and thereafter filed with the court?

Opinion #2:

No. First, the waiver of exemptions may not state that Contractor has consulted with counsel and has been advised by counsel of the right to designate property unless Contractor has actually received such counsel and advice. If Contractor is unrepresented in the matter, the statement cannot be included in the waiver of exemptions.

Second, Lawyer must determine whether a waiver of either the constitutional or statutory exemptions is legally permissible. Statutory and constitutional exemptions may be waived only under specific circumstances as set forth in the statutes and case law. To the extent that any such waiver is not recognized under the law, Lawyer may not insert such a waiver provision in the documents presented to the unrepresented party.

Finally, if Contractor is unrepresented, it is difficult to imagine how Contractor made a "knowing" waiver of all statutory and constitutional exemptions.

2009 Formal Ethics Opinion 14

October 29, 2010

Placing Client's Title Insurance in Agency in Which Lawyer's Spouse Has an Ownership Interest

Opinion rules that a lawyer participating in a real estate transaction may not in such transaction place his client's title insurance in a title insurance agency in which the lawyer's spouse has any ownership interest.

Inquiry:

May Lawyer participating in a real estate transaction place his client's title insurance with a title insurance agency in which Lawyer's spouse has an ownership interest?

Opinion:

No. Rule 1.7 provides that a lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation involves a concurrent conflict of interest. A concurrent conflict of interest exists if the representation of one or more clients may be materially limited by a personal interest of the lawyer. Rule 1.7(a)(2).

The Ethics Committee has previously examined personal conflicts of interest between title insurance agencies and real estate closing lawyers. In CPR 101 (1977), the Ethics Committee concluded that it is unethical for a lawyer who owns a substantial interest, directly or indirectly, in a title insurance agency, and who acts as a lawyer in a real estate transaction insured by the title insurance agency, to receive any compensation or benefit from the title insurance agency regardless of whether the ownership interest is disclosed to the client.

In RPC 185 (1994), the Ethics Committee determined that even an insubstantial interest in a title insurance agency could materially impair the judgment of the closing lawyer. The opinion provides that if a title agency, and, therefore, indirectly a closing lawyer who owns an interest in the title agency, will receive compensation from the client as a result of the closing of the transaction, the lawyer's personal interest in having the title insurance agency receive its compensation could conflict with the lawyer's duty to close the transaction only if it is in the client's best interest. The opinion held that the conflict of interest is too great to be allowed even if the client wishes to consent.

In an unpublished ethics decision, ED 97-6 (1998), the Ethics Committee examined a fact scenario substantially similar to the one currently presented and determined that it is a conflict of interest for a lawyer to perform title work and place the title insurance with a title insurance agency operated by the lawyer's spouse.

The instant scenario presents a personal conflict of interest. The lawyer's personal interest in having his spouse's title insurance agency receive its compensation may conflict with the lawyer's duty to close the transaction only if it is in the client's best interest. In addition, the lawyer's personal relationship with the owner of the title insurance company will influence the lawyer's choice of the spouse's company as the insurer, as well as the vigorousness of the lawyer's negotiations with the title company on his client's behalf. Issues of title insurance coverage may have to be negotiated between the closing lawyer and the insurer. The lawyer's client and the insurer will necessarily have competing interests as to the extent of the coverage and the amount of the premium.

The conflict of interest is too great to be allowed, even with the client's informed consent. A closing lawyer must be able to make an independent recommendation of a title insurance company to his client, unbiased by any personal interest. In addition, a lawyer opining on title to property should be independent from the title insurance agency issuing the title insurance in reliance upon that opinion. This is consistent with the emphasis that the North Carolina legislature has placed on the professional and financial independence of the closing lawyer from the title insurance agency. See, e.g. N.C.G.S. § 58-26-1(a)(title insurance company may not issue insurance as to North Carolina real property unless the company has obtained the opinion of a North Carolina licensed attorney who is not an employee or agent of the company) and N.C.G.S. § 58-27-5(a) (lawyer who performs legal services incident to a real estate sale may not receive any payment, directly or indirectly, in connection with the issuance of title insurance for any real property which is a part of such sale).

This scenario differs from RPC 188, in which the Ethics Committee concluded that a lawyer may represent the buyer and/or lender in a real estate transaction brokered by the lawyer's spouse. RPC 188 provides that, although there is a conflict, clients may consent to the representation. RPC 188 can be distinguished because the lawyer did not choose the real estate broker for his client and was not involved in negotiations with the real estate broker as to the terms of the real estate sales contract.

2009 Formal Ethics Opinion 15

January 15, 2010

Dismissal of DWI Charge by Prosecutor When Insufficient Evidence Due to Suppression Order

Opinion rules that a prosecutor must dismiss a DWI charge when the prosecutor fails to appeal a court order suppressing evidence from the traffic stop thereby eliminating the evidence necessary to prove the charge.

Inquiry:

In a Driving While Impaired (DWI) case in district court, a defendant makes a pretrial motion to suppress all evidence obtained from the stop of his vehicle pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat. A720-38.6(a). After considering the evidence offered at the pretrial hearing, the district court judge enters an order pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat. A720-38.6(f) indicating his/her preliminary inclination to grant the defendant's pretrial motion because the stop was unconstitutional in violation of the Fourth Amendment. The prosecutor does not appeal this preliminary ruling to superior court and the district court judge's decision becomes a final judgment pursuant to the statute. The district court judge enters a final order suppressing the evidence from the vehicle stop. The evidence from the vehicle stop was the only evidence of the alleged crime. The case is re-calendared.

May the prosecutor call the case for trial, arraign the defendant (who pleads not guilty), call no witnesses or otherwise offer evidence, and rest the case, thus requiring the judge to dismiss the case; or does the prosecutor have an ethical duty to dismiss the case after all evidence of guilt is suppressed pursuant to the pretrial motion?

Opinion:

A lawyer has an ethical duty, under Rule 3.1, not to bring a proceeding unless there is a basis in law and in fact for doing so that is not frivolous. In light of this duty, a prosecutor who knows that she has no admissible evidence supporting a DWI charge to present at trial must dismiss the charge prior to calling the case for trial.

2009 Formal Ethics Opinion 16

July 23, 2010

Including Information on Verdicts, Settlements, and Memberships on a Website

Opinion rules that a website may include a case summary section showcasing successful verdicts and settlements if the section contains factually accurate information accompanied by an appropriate disclaimer and that any reference on the website to membership in an organization with a self-laudatory name must comply with the requirements of 2003 FEO 3.

Editor's Note: Upon adoption of this proposed opinion by the State Bar Council, 2000 FEO 1 will be overruled to the extent it is inconsistent and the Ethics Committee will recommend that the council withdrawal 2009 FEO 6.

Inquiry #1:

Is it possible for a law firm to include on its firm website a section showcasing successful verdicts and settlements without violating Rule 7.1(a)(2)?

Opinion #1:

Yes. Rule 7.1 provides that a lawyer "shall not make a false or misleading communication about the lawyer or the lawyer's services." The rule further provides that a communication is false or misleading if it "is likely to create an unjustified expectation about results the lawyer can achieve." Rule 7.1(a)(2). At issue is whether a law firm can provide information on its past successes without creating unjustified expectations.

Lawyer advertising is commercial speech that is protected by the First Amendment. Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, 433 U.S. 350 (1977). However, lawyer advertisements may not be deceptive or misleading. Id. The United States Supreme Court has noted that advertising by professionals poses special risks of deception because the public lacks sophistication concerning legal services. In re R.M.J., 455 U.S.191 (1982). Accordingly, warnings or disclaimers might be appropriately required in lawyer advertisements to dissipate the possibility of consumer confusion or deception. Zauderer v. Ohio Disciplinary Counsel, 471 U.S. 626 (1985).

Consumers of legal services benefit from the dissemination of accurate information in choosing legal representation. See DC Legal Ethics Comm., Op. 335 (2006). Lawyers also benefit from the dissemination of accurate information when seeking to enlist the aid of co-counsel in a particular matter. A consumer researching law firms on the internet expects a law firm's website to include information about the firm's past successes, and many firm websites currently include a "verdict and settlements" section. The law firm's duty is to provide that information to the consumer without creating an unjustified expectation about the results the lawyer can achieve. Comment [3] to Rule 7.1 provides that an advertisement that truthfully reports a lawyer's achievements may be misleading "if presented so as to lead a reasonable person to form an unjustified expectation that the same results could be obtained for other clients in similar matters without reference to the specific factual and legal circumstances of each client's case."

Previously, the Ethics Committee determined that statements about a lawyer's or a law firm's record in obtaining favorable verdicts was permissible on a firm's website if the information was provided in a certain context. See 2000 FEO 1. According to the opinion, the context would have to include the following:

> disclosure of the lawyer's or firm's history of obtaining unfavorable, as well as favorable, verdicts and settlements; the lawyer's or firm's success in actually collecting favorable verdicts; the types of cases handled and their complexity; whether liability and/or damages were contested; and whether the opposing party or parties were represented by legal counsel. In addition, the verdict record must disclose the period of time examined. Finally, the communication must include a statement that the outcome of a particular case cannot be predicated upon a lawyer's or a law firm's past results.

2000 FEO 1. The requirements set out in 2000 FEO 1 may not be applicable in every scenario and may be so burdensome that they discourage lawyers from providing any information about verdicts and settlements and thereby effectively prevent consumers from getting helpful information.

In considering lawyer advertising, the Oklahoma Bar Association has concluded that a lawyer may advertise specific jury verdicts and settlement amounts if certain requirements are met. The advertisement must be factually accurate; must include an appropriate disclaimer displayed in the same manner and with the same emphasis as the results; must not suggest that the lawyer is promising the same results; must state that settlements are the result of private negotiations between the parties involved that may be affected by factors other than the legal merits of a particular case; and must not violate the lawyer's duty of confidentiality. Oklahoma Ethics Opinion 320 (10/15/04).

By way of example, the Oklahoma Bar opines that a statement in a printed advertisement about the results in a particular case would not violate Rule 7.1 if the statement is accompanied by an equally prominent statement to the effect that each case is different and that prior results should not create an expectation about future results in an individual case. According to the Oklahoma Ethics Committee, such a disclaimer would be "equally prominent" if the disclaimer is presented in the same manner and with the same emphasis as the statements themselves, and if its import is not obscured or minimized by other language or materials in the advertisement. For example, such a disclaimer in a printed advertisement should use the same font and at least the same size print as the statements themselves.

New York has also considered the use of disclaimers in lawyer advertising. The New York State Bar Association Committee on Professional Ethics opined that if client testimonials and reports of past results are misleading, a disclaimer may cure the otherwise misleading information if the disclaimer is sufficiently tailored to address the information that is misleading, and if the disclaimer's placement on the website is such that it is reasonable to expect that anyone who reads the testimonials and reports of past results will read the disclaimer. NY State Bar Assoc. Comm. on Prof'l Ethics, Op. 771 (2003). The committee further opined that the lawyer should "consider the size of the text and the proximity of the disclaimer to the client testimonials or report of past results. If the disclaimer is in a link, the lawyer should also consider the size and placement of the text signaling the reader to access the link and whether this signal sufficiently informs the reader that reviewing the linked disclaimer is material to any assessment of the information conveyed in the advertisement."

We agree with the reasoning of the New York and Oklahoma bars and conclude that a website may include a case summary section showcasing successful verdicts and settlements if the section contains factually accurate information accompanied by an appropriate disclaimer. The disclaimer must be sufficiently tailored to address the information presented in the case summary section. The disclaimer must be displayed on the website in such a manner that it is reasonable to expect that anyone who reads the case summary section will also read the disclaimer. Depending on the information contained in the case summary section, an appropriate disclaimer should point out that the cases mentioned on the site are illustrative of the matters handled by the firm; that case results depend upon a variety of factors unique to each case; that not all results are provided; and that prior results do not guarantee a similar outcome.

Providing a prominently displayed disclaimer that is specifically tailored to the information presented on a webpage regarding a lawyer or law firm's achievements precludes a finding that the webpage is likely to lead a reasonable person to form an unjustified expectation that the same results could be obtained for other clients in similar matters.

Inquiry #2:

Would the following types of information be permitted on a firm website:

A lawyer's biography referencing a single trial victory in a well-known case or the successful handling of a specific matter;

A lawyer's biography providing a list of his reported cases, but not including unfavorable reported cases; or

A lawyer's biography listing "representative matters handled," "recent cases," "recent experience," or the like but only including matters that were favorably resolved for the lawyer's clients?

Opinion #2:

Yes. See Opinion #1.

Inquiry #3:

Would the following types of information be permitted on a firm website:

A lawyer's biography stating that the lawyer has successfully represented numerous corporations or individuals;

A lawyer's biography stating that the lawyer has argued and won numerous cases before the North Carolina appellate courts without stating that he has also lost cases before the appellate courts; or

A lawyer's biography stating that the lawyer has successfully handled cases in a specific area of the law without stating that he has also been unsuccessful on cases in that area of the law?

Opinion #3:

Yes. See Opinion #1.

Inquiry #4:

2003 FEO 3 states that a lawyer may only advertise his membership or participation in an organization with a self-laudatory name or designation if certain conditions are satisfied. Does 2003 FEO 3 apply to a lawyer's individual biography on his firm's website?

Opinion #4:

Yes. 2003 FEO 3 states that a lawyer may only advertise his membership or participation in an organization with a self-laudatory name or designation if the following conditions are satisfied: (1) the organization has strict, objective standards for admission that are verifiable and would be recognized by a reasonable lawyer as establishing a legitimate basis for determining whether the lawyer has the knowledge, skill, experience, or expertise indicated by the designated membership; (2) the standards for membership are explained in the advertisement or information on how to obtain the membership standards is provided in the advertisement; (3) the organization has no financial interest in promoting the particular lawyer; and (4) the organization charges the lawyer only reasonable membership fees. The opinion also provides that when the membership information may create unjustified expectations, such as the expectation that a lawyer obtains a million dollar verdict in every case, a disclaimer must be included in the advertisement.

Any reference to membership in such an organization must comply with the requirements of 2003 FEO 3. See also 2007 FEO 14 (allowing lawyer to advertise his inclusion in the North Carolina Super Lawyers list but not to claim that he is a "super lawyer").

Inquiry #5:

Does 2003 FEO 3 apply to a firm's general reference to such membership on its website, such as "ten of our lawyers were included in the Legal Elite"?

Opinion #5:

Yes. See Opinion #4.

2000 FEO 1 is hereby overruled to the extent it is inconsistent with this opinion.

2009 Formal Ethics Opinion 17

October 29, 2010

Tacking as Question of Standard of Care

Opinion rules that whether a lawyer rendering a title opinion to a title insurer should tack to an owner's policy of title insurance or a mortgagee's (lender's) policy is a question of standard of care and outside the purview of the Ethics Committee

Inquiry:

RPC 99 holds that the Rules of Professional Conduct do not require personal inspection of all documents in the chain of title so long as a lawyer rendering an opinion on title for real property fully discloses to the client the precise nature and extent of the service being rendered. The opinion further states, "Since title insurers frequently omit exceptions in mortgagees' policies that would appear in owners' policies, tacking should be limited to tacking onto owners' policies."

May a lawyer render a title opinion to a title insurance company by tacking to a mortgagee's (lender's) title insurance policy?

Opinion:

This issue of the appropriate standard of care for rendering a title opinion is outside the purview of the Ethics Committee. To the extent that RPC 99 appeared to opine on the standard of care relative to tacking to an owner's policy versus a mortgagee's (lender's) policy for the purpose of rendering a title opinion, that part of the opinion is withdrawn.

Whether tacking to an owner's policy or a mortgagee's policy, a lawyer's duty is to provide competent representation to his client, consistent with Rule 1.1, and to reasonably consult with the client about the means used to accomplish the client's objectives. Rule 1.4(a)(2). The lawyer must consult with the client before using a method of rendering a title opinion that might present additional risk for the client.

2010 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

April 16, 2010

Representation of Insurance Carrier after Insured Disappears

Opinion rules that a lawyer retained by an insurance carrier to represent an insured whose whereabouts are unknown and with whom the lawyer has no contact may not appear as the lawyer for the insured absent authorization by law or court order.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney was retained by Insurance Carrier to defend Insured in a negligence lawsuit based upon an automobile accident. Insured cannot be located and his whereabouts are unknown. Service by publication was required. May Attorney proceed with the representation, file pleadings on behalf of Insured, and appear in court to defend the case on behalf of Insured?

Opinion #1:

No. To respond to this inquiry, the question of whether a client-lawyer relationship is created between Attorney and Insured must be addressed. Comment [4] of Rule 0.2, Scope, provides that "for purposes of determining the lawyer's authority and responsibility, principles of substantive law external to these Rules determine whether a client-lawyer relationship exists." In most instances, the Ethics Committee declines to offer an opinion that hinges upon a question of law. Nevertheless, the determination of whether a client-lawyer relationship exists is often essential to the committee's interpretation and application of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Moreover, the relevant North Carolina case law is clear. In Dunkley v. Shoemate, 350 N.C. 573, 515 S.E. 2d 442 (1999), the Supreme Court held that where a law firm had no contact with the defendant and was not authorized by the defendant to undertake his representation, no lawyer-client relationship existed between the defendant and the lawyers seeking to represent him pursuant to the insurance trust fund for the defendant's employer. The Dunkley opinion cites favorably the following statement from Johnson v. Amethyst Corp., 120 N.C. App. 529, 463 S.E. 2d 397 (1995): "[n]o person has the right to appear as another's attorney without the authority to do so, granted by the party for which he [or she] is appearing." Id. at 577, 515 S.E. 2d at 444 [quoting Amethyst Corp. 120 N.C. App. at 532, 463 S.E. 2d at 400]. The Court also concurred with the statement in Amethyst Corp. that, "North Carolina law has long recognized that an attorney-client relationship is based upon principles of agency," and "[t]wo factors are essential in establishing an agency relationship: (1) The agent must be authorized to act for the principal; and (2) The principal must exercise control over the agent.'" Id. [quoting Amethyst Corp., 120 N.C. App. at 533-534, 463 S.E. 2d at 400].

Therefore, unless allowed by statute, court order, or subsequent case law, a lawyer may not appear in court for a party who has not authorized the representation and with whom the lawyer has not established a client-lawyer relationship.

Inquiry #2:

Would the response to Inquiry #1 be different if the insurance contract with Insured specifies that Insurance Carrier has the authority to choose legal counsel for Insured and to decide whether to settle the case?

Opinion #2:

No.

Inquiry #3:

Would the response to Inquiry #1 be different if Insured received actual notice of the lawsuit and contacted Insurance Carrier before disappearing?

Opinion #3:

Whether such contact with Insurance Carrier is sufficient to create a client-lawyer relationship with a lawyer selected by Insurance Carrier is a question of fact and law not resolved by the existing case law. However, the Ethics Committee doubts that the two factors required to establish an agency relationship exist in this situation. See also Dunkley, 350 N.C. at 578, 515 S.E. 2d at 445 ("RPC 223, Rule 1.2(a), and Amethyst Corp. correctly emphasize the principle that a lawyer cannot properly represent a client with whom he has no contact.").

Inquiry #4:

Would the response to Inquiry #1 be different if Insured received notice of the lawsuit and specifically authorized the representation before disappearing?

Opinion #4:

Yes, Attorney may appear in the lawsuit on behalf of Insured if Insured has authorized the representation. However, if Insured cannot thereafter be located, Attorney may not mislead the court about Insured's absence. Rule 3.3(a)(1). Moreover, in the event Insured is not present to participate in the representation, Attorney may have to file a motion to withdraw. Rule 1.2, cmt. [1] (Client has "the ultimate authority to determine the purposes to be served by legal representation85."); Rule 1.16; RPC 223; 03 FEO 16; see also Dunkley, 350 N.C. at 578, 515 S.E. 2d at 445 ("a lawyer cannot properly represent a client with whom he has no contact.").

Inquiry #5:

Would the response to Inquiry #1 be different if the insurance contract contained a provision granting Insurance Carrier the express authority to proceed with the representation on behalf of and in the name of the Insured in the event contact with Insured is lost?

Opinion #5:

This is a question of law that is not resolved by the existing case law and is outside the purview of the Ethics Committee.

Inquiry #6:

Attorney is retained by Insurance Carrier to defend a "John Doe" defendant in an automobile accident case. May Attorney represent "John Doe" in the court proceedings?

Opinion #6:

If the designation of a certain person as "John Doe" is necessary to effect service of process and Attorney concludes that he is able to identify the intended person (e.g., an employee of an insured defendant company), Attorney may work with Insurance Carrier and the defendant company to identify the individual and, once identified, may appear in the lawsuit on behalf of the individual if authorized to do so by the individual. If the identity of "John Doe" cannot be ascertained by Attorney, Insurance Carrier, or another client, whether Attorney may represent "John Doe" in the court proceedings is a question of law outside the purview of the Ethics Committee.

2010 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

April 16, 2010

Obtaining Medical Records From Out of State Health Care Providers

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not serve an out of state health care provider with an unenforceable North Carolina subpoena and may not use documents produced pursuant to such a subpoena.

Inquiry #1:

Lawyer represents the Department of Social Services in a county that borders another state. In a particular case, the relevant hospital records are located out of state. Is it ethical for Lawyer to subpoena the medical records under the authority of N.C. R. Civ. P. 45 knowing that the North Carolina subpoena is unenforceable?

Opinion #1:

No. If the North Carolina subpoena is not enforceable out of state, the lawyer may not misrepresent to the out of state health care provider that it must comply with the subpoena. RPC 236 provides that it is unethical for a lawyer to use the subpoena process to mislead the custodian of documentary evidence as to the lawyer's authority to require the production of such documents. See also Rule 8.4(c) (professional misconduct for a lawyer to engage in conduct involving dishonesty, fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation).

Inquiry #2:

If the records are subpoenaed and the health care provider complies with the subpoena, may Lawyer utilize the medical records?

Opinion #2:

No. Lawyer may not use documents that were produced in reliance on Lawyer's misrepresentation as to Lawyer's authority to require the production of such documents.

2010 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

January 21, 2011

Cross-examining Current and Former Clients

Opinion provides guidance on the cross-examination of current and former clients.

Inquiry #1:

Lawyer is a criminal defense lawyer who represents persons charged with various criminal and traffic offenses. Lawyer also represents police officers responding to investigations by internal affairs departments. In these matters, the officers are threatened with professional discipline, including possible termination, for alleged conduct involving moral turpitude, dishonesty, or police department policy violations. In such matters, Lawyer represents the police officer individually and does not represent the police department.

Lawyer currently represents Officer in an internal affairs investigation in which Officer may be disciplined or lose his job.

Defendant would like to retain Lawyer to represent him in a criminal matter. Officer is one of the prosecuting witnesses in Defendant's criminal matter. May Lawyer represent Defendant in the criminal matter if Officer is a prosecuting witness?

Opinion #1:

Rule 1.7(a) states that, except as provided in Rule 1.7(b), a lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation involves a concurrent conflict of interest. Pursuant to Rule 1.7(a)(1), a concurrent conflict of interest exists if the representation of one client will be directly adverse to another client. The prohibition against simultaneous representation of adverse interests is based primarily on the duty of loyalty that lawyers owe their clients. See Rule 1.7, cmt. [1]. If a lawyer opposes a client, even in an unrelated matter, the client may feel betrayed and the lawyer-client relationship may be damaged. Another consideration under Rule 1.7 is a lawyer's obligation to use independent professional judgment in providing competent and diligent representation to all clients. Rule 1.7(a)(2) provides that a concurrent conflict of interest exists if the representation of one client may be materially limited by the lawyer's duties to another client.

If Lawyer must cross-examine Officer in Defendant's criminal matter, Lawyer has a concurrent conflict of interest. Comment [6] to Rule 1.7 specifically provides that a directly adverse conflict may arise when a lawyer is required to cross-examine a client who appears as a witness in a lawsuit involving another client, as when the testimony will be damaging to the client who is represented in the lawsuit. Any attempt to discredit Officer's credibility through cross-examination would violate Lawyer's duty of loyalty to Officer. Conversely, the failure to challenge Officer's damaging testimony through rigorous cross-examination would violate Lawyer's duty to competently and diligently represent Defendant. Lawyer cannot cross-examine Officer without the risk of either jeopardizing Defendant's case by foregoing a line of aggressive questioning or breaching a duty of loyalty and/or confidentiality owed to Officer.

An additional function of the prohibition set out in Rule 1.7 is to protect client confidences. If Lawyer has confidential information of Officer that is relevant and material to the cross-examination, the representation of one or both of Lawyer's clients could be materially limited by Lawyer's duties to the other client and Lawyer has a concurrent conflict of interest. A vigorous cross-examination of Officer may compromise Lawyer's duty of confidentiality to Officer. Alternatively, Lawyer could fail to cross-examine Officer fully, for fear of misusing the confidential information, which would breach Lawyer's duty to competently and diligently represent Defendant.

If Lawyer must cross-examine Officer in Defendant's criminal matter, the resultant conflict of interest is nonconsentable. Generally, if a lawyer with a conflict reasonably believes that he will be able to provide competent and diligent representation to both clients, he may take on the representation so long as he obtains both clients' informed written consent. See Rule 1.7(b). However, certain conflicts are nonconsentable, "meaning that the lawyer involved cannot properly ask for such agreement or provide representation on the basis of the client's consent." Rule 1.7, cmt. [14].

Consentability is determined by considering whether the interests of the clients will be adequately protected if the clients are permitted to give their informed consent to the representation, given the conflict of interest. Consent cannot be sought if the lawyer cannot reasonably conclude that the lawyer will be able to provide competent and diligent representation to each client. See Rule 1.7, cmt. [15].

In the given fact scenario, Lawyer cannot reasonably conclude that he can protect the interests of each client, or competently and diligently represent each client, if Lawyer must cross-examine Officer in Defendant's criminal matter.

Inquiry #2:

Would it matter if Defendant was charged only with a minor traffic violation?

Opinion #2:

If Officer's testimony relates only to an uncontested issue and Lawyer reasonably concludes that he can forgo cross examination of Officer without affecting the competent defense of the case, Lawyer may represent Defendant, provided he obtains the informed written consent of Defendant. See Rule 1.7(b).

Inquiry #3:

Does it matter if Officer's personnel files are generally not subject to subpoena and may not be used for cross examination?

Opinion #3:

No. The fact that Officer's personnel files may not be used for cross-examination may appear to alleviate the concern as to Lawyer's duty of confidentiality to Officer. However, Lawyer remains aware of confidential information relative to Officer that could inspire questions for cross examination. In addition, Lawyer owes Officer the duty of loyalty, which prevents Lawyer from cross-examining Officer.

Inquiry #4:

Would it make any difference if the Fraternal Order of Police or a similar organization arranged for or retained Lawyer to represent Officer?

Opinion #4:

No. Regardless of who retains Lawyer to represent Officer, Lawyer still owes Officer the same duties of confidentiality and loyalty. See Rule 1.8(f). Also, Lawyer's pecuniary interest in obtaining further business from the hiring organization may create an additional personal conflict of interest for Lawyer, in that he would want to avoid a rigorous cross examination of a police officer to remain in the good graces of the organization. See Rule 1.7(a)(2).

Inquiry #5:

What if Officer is a former client at the time of the representation of Defendant? Is Lawyer required to disclose the former lawyer-client relationship with Officer to Defendant at the outset so that Defendant can make an informed decision about representation?

Opinion #5:

If Lawyer obtained confidential information from Officer that is relevant to Officer's cross-examination and Lawyer needs to use that confidential information to effectively cross-examine Officer, then Lawyer may not represent Defendant. See Rule 1.9(c); 2003 FEO 14.

An exception to Rule 1.9(c) provides that a lawyer may use confidential information of a former client to the disadvantage of the former client when the information has become "generally known." Rule 1.9(c)(1). If certain information as to the internal affairs investigation is generally known, that information may be used to cross-examine Officer without obtaining the consent of Officer. See Rule 1.9, cmt. [8].

If Lawyer determines that he does not need to use any confidential information that is not generally known to effectively cross-examine Officer, Lawyer must still disclose the former lawyer-client relationship with Officer to Defendant so that Defendant can make an informed decision about Lawyer's representation.

2010 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

October 29, 2010

Lawyer Participating in Barter Exchange

Opinion provides guidelines for participation in a barter exchange.

Inquiry:

Lawyer would like to participate in a trade or "barter" exchange that is an association of businesses that exchange goods or services. Members of the barter exchange are paid in barter dollars that can be used to pay other members for their services. For example, a lawyer who is a member prepares a will for a member who is a landscaper and receives barter dollars that can then be used by the lawyer to purchase a variety of services from other members, not solely landscaping services. The barter exchange manager publishes a directory of members and may advertise to members the goods or services available from other members. In addition to an entrance fee and a monthly administrative fee, the exchange manager requires members to pay a cash transaction fee of 10% on the gross value of each purchase from a member through the exchange. For example, if a lawyer provides $500 in services to another member, in addition to the fee paid to the lawyer, the recipient pays a $50 fee to the manager of the exchange for a total payment of $550 (barter dollars and cash) for the legal services.

The barter exchange lists all participating businesses in the "trading network." From this list, a member who would like to buy services or goods selects a business. A "buyer" who needs legal services would select a lawyer from the list of lawyers available in the trading network. Members are encouraged to call the exchange manager to get linked with other members when in need of particular goods or services. Trades between participating businesses are voluntary and the provision of goods or services is between the two participating businesses without interference from the barter exchange or its manager. Members are not under any obligation to use the barter exchange for goods or services and, if a member cannot find a suitable business in the trading network with which to do business, the member may pay cash for goods or services to a business that is not a member of the exchange. Similarly, a member of the exchange is not required to do business with an exchange member who requests goods or services.

The Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 (TEFRA), Pub. L. No. 97-248, 96 Stat. 324 (1982), recognized the barter exchange manager as the third-party record keeper and clearinghouse for barter transactions among the members of an exchange and also recognized "trade" or "barter" dollars as legal, taxable dollars that may be used as an alternative payment method. Under TEFRA, all trade revenue is treated as taxable income and must be reported using Form 1099-B.

May Lawyer participate in the barter exchange?

Opinion:

Yes, as long as the lawyer's professional judgment is not compromised by participation in the exchange, the lawyer ensures that listings and advertisements of the exchange comply with the requirements for legal advertising, there is full disclosure of the states in which the lawyer is licensed, and clients do not use barter dollars to pay in advance for litigation or other expenses of representation.

This inquiry raises the following questions: (1) whether a lawyer may accept payment for services in a form other than money; (2) whether a barter exchange is a lawyer referral service and, therefore, subject to the restrictions on lawyer referral services; (3) whether a participating lawyer can comply with the advertising and solicitation limitations in the Rules of Professional Conduct; (4) whether payments to the barter exchange violate the prohibition on sharing legal fees with a nonlawyer; and (5) whether clients may pay litigation expenses in barter dollars. Each of these questions is addressed below.

A lawyer may accept payment for legal services in a form other than money. See Rule 1.5, cmt. [4]. Therefore, there is no prohibition on accepting barter dollars as payment for legal services.

With regard to lawyer referral services, Rule 7.2(b) provides as follows:

> A lawyer shall not give anything of value to a person for recommending the lawyer's services except that a lawyer may
>
> (1) pay the reasonable costs of advertisements or communications permitted by this Rule; [and]
>
> (2) pay the usual charges of a not-for-profit lawyer referral service that complies with Rule 7.2....

A lawyer referral service is a service that purports to screen the lawyers who participate and to match prospective clients with suitable participating lawyers. See 04 FEO 1 (online matching service not subject to nonprofit limitation on lawyer referral services). Comment [6] to Rule 7.2 adds that a lawyer referral service:

> is any organization that holds itself out to the public as a lawyer referral service. Such referral services are understood by laypersons to be consumer-oriented organizations that provide unbiased referrals to lawyers with appropriate experience in the subject matter of the representation and afford other client protections, such as complaint procedures or malpractice insurance requirements.

A barter exchange that provides a complete, impartial list of all participating lawyers, does not purport to recommend or select a lawyer for an exchange member seeking legal services, and does not restrict the number of participating lawyers is not a lawyer referral service.

The next question is whether a participating lawyer can comply with the limitations on lawyer advertising and solicitation in the Rules of Professional Conduct. A lawyer participating in a barter exchange will be responsible for the content of all advertising about the lawyer's services to other members. Rule 7.1(a) allows advertising that is not false or misleading. As long as the trading network list or directory of members and any other advertisement to members of the barter exchange does not include information about a participating lawyer that is false or misleading, a lawyer may be included in the list, directory, or advertisement. In addition, to avoid unauthorized practice of law, the participating lawyer must ensure that all exchange listings, directories, or advertisements identify the states in which the lawyer is licensed.

Rule 7.3(a) prohibits in-person solicitation of prospective clients either by a lawyer or by an agent of a lawyer. If the manager of the exchange, or a third party such as a broker, engages in in-person solicitation of exchange members on behalf of other exchange members, a lawyer who is an exchange member may not allow such solicitation to occur on the lawyer's behalf. If participation in the in-person solicitation or brokerage of services is a condition of membership in the exchange, a lawyer may not be a member of the exchange.

The next question is whether the fee structure for the barter exchange violates the prohibition on sharing legal fees with a nonlawyer in Rule 5.4(a). The manager of the barter exchange charges a cash transaction fee of 10% on the gross value of each purchase from a member through the exchange. The transaction fee is paid by the recipient of the services; the lawyer is not required to give 10% of his fee to the exchange manager. Although prohibited in the context of compensating nonlawyer employees (see RPC 147), paying for services of a nonlawyer based upon a percentage of a legal fee is not per se fee sharing. The use of credit cards to pay for legal services has long been allowed, although credit card banks routinely charge a "discount fee" that is a percentage of the legal fee charged to the credit card. See CPR 129 (lawyers may accept payment of legal fees by credit card). Paying a percentage fee to a barter exchange manager is no different than paying a discount fee to a credit card bank. The fee is a surcharge on the transaction and is not fee sharing with a nonlawyer. See ABA Formal Opinion 88-356 (1988)(lawyer placement agency's fee based on the amount of the legal fee is not fee splitting).

We agree with the following conclusion of the New York State Bar Association Committee on Professional Ethics in N. Y. State Bar Ass'n. Comm. on Prof'l. Ethics Op. 665 (1994), which allows a lawyer to participate in a barter exchange:

> There are a number of rationales for the prohibition against sharing legal fees with nonlawyers: (1) to avoid the possibility of a nonlawyer interfering with the exercise of the lawyer's professional judgment in representing a client, (2) to ensure that the total fee paid by the client is not unreasonably high, and (3) to ensure that the nonlawyer is not motivated to engage in improper solicitation of business for the lawyer. [Citations omitted.] We do not believe that the proposed barter exchange implicates these concerns so long as the barter exchange exercises no influence over the professional judgment of the lawyer, the lawyer's legal fee complies with [the reasonableness requirement of] DR 2-106(A) of the [New York] Code [of Professional Responsibility], and the exchange sponsor does not engage in in-person solicitation of customers or use written advertising materials that the lawyer/participant could not use.

The last question is whether a member of the barter exchange who contracts with a lawyer may pay in advance for litigation expenses or other expenses of representation by advancing barter dollars to the lawyer. Rule 1.15 requires a lawyer to account for funds entrusted to the lawyer for payment of third parties by depositing those funds into a trust account. Because barter dollars cannot be deposited into a trust account, all advance payments of litigation expenses by a barter exchange client must be paid in cash or by check or credit card.

In summary, a lawyer may participate in a barter exchange as long as the exchange exercises no influence over the professional judgment of the lawyer; the listing and advertisements of the exchange are truthful, not misleading, and identify the states in which the lawyer is licensed; there is no in-person solicitation of members by the barter exchange manager or a broker on behalf of the lawyer; and advance payments of litigation expenses or other expenses of representation are not in barter dollars.

2010 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

April 16, 2010

Client-Lawyer Relationship in Child Support Enforcement Actions

Opinion rules that the lawyer for a child support enforcement program that brings an action for child support on behalf of the government does not have a client-lawyer relationship with the custodian of the children.

Inquiry #1:

Title IV-D of the Social Security Act, 42 U.S.C.S. 651 et seq., requires each state to establish a child support enforcement (CSE) agency to provide services for the establishment and collection of child support for dependent children who are recipients of public assistance. The act also requires the CSE agency to provide assistance in the collection of child support to a custodian of a dependent child not receiving public assistance if the custodian applies to the agency for such assistance. The Child Welfare Act, Chap. 110, Art. 9, of the N.C. General Statutes, enacts the requirements of Title IV-D. The CSE program established by the North Carolina act is administered by the Child Support Enforcement Agency, a branch of the North Carolina Department of Health and Human Services. The programis usually administered at the county level; the local CSE program administrator hires a lawyer to institute the child support proceeding against the non-custodial, responsible parent. The proceeding is instituted in the name and on behalf of the government at the instigation of the custodian of the child who is named ex relatione (e.g., County of Durham DSS ex rel. Stevons v. Charles, 182 N.C. App. 505, 642 S.E. 2d 482 (2007)).

Lawyer A is defending a non-custodial parent in a child support action brought by the lawyer for the child support enforcement (CSE) program for the county. Does the CSE lawyer represent the custodian of the children?

Opinion #1:

The lawyer representing the CSE program does not represent the custodian of the children; the lawyer represents the government agency bringing the action. As previously observed in Ethics Decisions 279 and 2007-3, the purpose of the CSE program is to provide financial support to dependent children regardless of who currently has custody of a dependent child and regardless of who may currently owe support payments. "It would defeat the purpose of [CSE] legislation if a client-lawyer relationship were automatically created between the [CSE] lawyer and the custodian of the children because the lawyer would be unable to pursue any future child support action against such custodian should support and custody obligations switch." ED 279.

Nevertheless, if the CSE lawyer makes statements to the parent that would lead a reasonable person to believe that the lawyer is representing him or her personally, a client-lawyer relationship may be inferred. To avoid misleading the custodian as to the relationship, in any private conference with a custodian (outside of court proceedings), "the [CSE] lawyer should explain that he or she is not the custodian's lawyer; that their conversations are not protected by the duty of confidentiality; and that if the interests of the government and the custodian of the children diverge, the lawyer will represent the interests of the government." ED 279.

Inquiry #2:

Lawyer A wants to serve discovery on the custodian of the children. Should the discovery be served on the lawyer for the CSE program or on the custodian of the children?

Opinion #2:

This is a question of civil procedure and trial strategy that is outside of the purview of the Ethics Committee. However, if Lawyer A decides to seek information directly from the custodian, it would not violate Rule 4.2 unless the custodian is represented by his or her own lawyer in the matter.

During the representation of a client, Rule 4.2 prohibits a lawyer from communicating with a person that the lawyer knows is represented in the matter unless the lawyer has the consent of the other lawyer or is authorized by law or court order to communicate with the person. Lawyer A's direct communications with the custodian will not violate Rule 4.2 because the CSE lawyer does not represent the parent. ED 2007-3 (lawyer appointed to represent defendant/non-custodial parent in child support case may communicate directly with custodial parent).

Inquiry #3:

Lawyer A wants to depose the custodian. The CSE lawyer informed Lawyer A that he would not attend the deposition. May Lawyer A proceed with the deposition?

Opinion #3:

Yes. If the custodian was properly served with notice of the deposition, there is no prohibition on proceeding with the deposition although the CSE lawyer fails to appear. Even when a deponent is represented by a lawyer in a matter, if the deposition is properly noticed and the lawyer for the deponent fails or refuses to appear, the lawyer noticing the deposition may proceed. Such communications are "authorized by law" and, therefore, not prohibited by Rule 4.2.

Inquiry #4:

In a case involving international child support enforcement issues, the CSE lawyer, who works in the North Carolina Attorney General's Office, would like to call another lawyer from the attorney general's staff to testify as an expert.

Does this violate the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion #4:

No. Rule 3.7(a) prohibits a lawyer from acting as an advocate at a trial in which the lawyer is likely to be a necessary witness. However, this disqualification is not imputed to the other lawyers in same firm or organization unless the lawyer's testimony would be adverse to the interests of the firm or organization's client. Rule 3.7(b).

2010 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

January 21, 2011

Advertising for Legal Employment in Non-practicing Areas

Opinion rules that a lawyer may place an advertisement for employment in practice areas in which the lawyer does not have experience only if the lawyer intends to provide competent representation either by promptly obtaining competence through study and investigation or by associating a lawyer who is competent in those particular areas of law. If, at the time the advertisement is placed, it is likely the lawyer will associate more experienced lawyers to handle the resulting cases, that fact should be disclosed to the public in the advertisement.

Inquiry #1:

Lawyer would like to advertise for legal employment in several areas of negligence law including products liability, pharmaceutical, and medical malpractice. Lawyer does not, however, have practice experience in these legal areas. For cases involving these areas of practice, Lawyer plans to associate another lawyer who is qualified in the particular area of law.

May Lawyer advertise for legal employment in an area of practice in which Lawyer lacks experience?

Opinion #1:

Yes, but only if Lawyer intends to promptly become competent in such representation by study and investigation in the advertised area of law or intends to associate an experienced lawyer to competently handle the resulting cases.

Lawyer advertising represents commercial speech protected as a constitutional right. Central Hudson Gas & Electric Corp. v. Public Service Commission, 447 U.S. 557 (1980). Such commercial expression serves not only the interests of lawyers, but also assists consumers and furthers the societal interest in the fullest possible dissemination of information. Id. at 561-62. The rights of lawyers to advertise, however, are not unlimited. Legal advertisements may not be false or misleading. See Rule 7.1.

Pursuant to Rule 7.1(a)(1), a communication is misleading if it contains a material misrepresentation of fact or omits a fact necessary to make the statement considered as a whole not materially misleading. For example, in RPC 217, the Ethics Committee determined that it was misleading for a law firm to include in its advertisements remote call forwarding telephone numbers under the names of towns in which the law firm did not have an office. The opinion provides that listing what appears to be a local telephone number in an advertisement circulated in communities where the law firm does not have an actual presence, without including an explanation in the advertisement that the number is not a local telephone number and that there is no law office in that community, will mislead readers as to the actual location of the offices.

To avoid misleading the public, lawyers should be competent, or intend to promptly obtain competence, in the areas of law in which they advertise. Rule 1.1 addresses the subject of lawyer competence:

A lawyer shall not handle a legal matter that the lawyer knows or should know he or she is not competent to handle without associating with a lawyer who is competent to handle the matter. Competent representation requires the legal knowledge, skill, thoroughness, and preparation reasonably necessary for the representation.

In advertising, lawyers should not claim to have experience in areas of law in which they lack experience. Such claims are false and misleading. Competence in particular areas of law primarily arises from experience. In addition to experience, lawyer competence may be gained from study and investigation. Rule 1.1 acknowledges that lawyers can obtain competence in a particular area of law by associating a lawyer experienced in that area of law to work with them in representing a client. When a member of the public sees a lawyer's advertisement, however, that person could reasonably expect that the advertising lawyer has or will have, at the time of the representation, personally obtained the competence necessary to handle the legal matter that is the subject of the advertisement. If this is not the case, and the lawyer instead intends to associate another lawyer to provide the competent representation, members of the public could be misled by the advertisement. Thus, if at the time the advertisement is placed it is likely that the lawyer will later associate more experienced lawyers to handle the resulting cases, that fact should be disclosed to the public in the form of a disclaimer in the advertisement. See Co. Bar Assoc. Ethics Comm. Op. 76 (1987).

Previous ethics opinions have determined that an appropriate disclaimer may cure an otherwise misleading advertisement. See, e.g., 2003 FEO 3 (lawyer may advertise membership in organization with self-laudatory title, but when the membership information may create unjustified expectations, a disclaimer must be included in the advertisement); see also Rule 7.1(b) (communication by lawyer that contains dramatization depicting fictional situation is misleading unless it contains statement explaining that communication contains a dramatization and does not depict actual events or real persons). Likewise, an appropriate disclaimer will preclude a finding that Lawyer's proposed advertisements are likely to mislead prospective clients. If, at the time an advertisement is placed, it is likely that Lawyer will associate a more experienced lawyer to handle the resulting cases, that fact must be disclosed to the public in a disclaimer in the advertisement.

Inquiry #2:

If Lawyer associates another law firm in connection with a legal matter, may Lawyer accept a portion of the legal fees?

Opinion #2:

Yes. Rule 1.5(e) allows for the division of a legal fee between lawyers who are not in the same firm. Lawyer may receive a portion of the legal fees associated with the referred matter so long as the client agrees to the arrangement in writing, the total fee is reasonable, and the fee division is in proportion to the services performed by each lawyer or each lawyer assumes joint responsibility for the representation. Rule 1.5(e).

The assumption of joint responsibility is an alternative to a division of fees in proportion to the services performed. Comment [8] to Rule 1.5 explains that "[j]oint responsibility for the representation entails financial and ethical responsibility for the representation as if the lawyers were associated in a partnership." Therefore, a lawyer who agrees to share legal fees must make reasonable efforts to ensure that the other lawyers who are parties to the arrangement comply with the ethics rules. See Rule 5.1. As stated in RPC 205, "whenever a lawyer accepts a fee for referring a case to another lawyer, the lawyer remains responsible for the competent and ethical handling of the matter."

The ABA Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility has opined that joint responsibility does not require substantial services to be performed by the lawyer. ABA Comm. on Ethics and Prof'l Responsibility, Informal Op. 85-1514 (1985). However, joint responsibility does include the same financial and ethical responsibility and the same responsibility to ensure adequate representation and communication as one partner would have for another partner's client in similar circumstances. Id.

Lawyer may receive a fee in proportion to the services he performs in the matter or he may receive a fee based on his assumption of joint responsibility for the representation. See Rule 1.5(e).

Inquiry #3:

If Lawyer is entitled to receive a portion of the legal fees, what amount/proportion of the legal fee is reasonable?

Opinion #3:

Apart from the requirements that the total fee be reasonable, that the client consent to the fee division, and that each law firm assume joint responsibility for the representation, the Ethics Committee declines to opine on the division of fees between lawyers or law firms.

2010 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

Subscribing to Software as a Service While Fulfilling the Duties of Confidentiality and Preservation of Client Property

Opinion was adopted as 2011 Formal Ethics Opinion 6. No opinion will be issued as 2010 Formal Ethics Opinion 7.

2010 Formal Ethics Opinion 8

July 23, 2010

Consultation with Lawyer as Prospective Mediator

Opinion rules that a lawyer who consults with both parties to a dispute relative to the lawyer's prospective service as a mediator may not subsequently represent one of the parties to the dispute.

Inquiry:

Lawyer consulted with Husband on two occasions about separating from Wife. During both meetings, only questions about mediating the marital dissolution were discussed.

Wife attended the third consultation with Lawyer. At the meeting, Lawyer disclosed the prior two meetings with Husband. He also advised Wife that he would remain "neutral" during the meeting with her; would not give either party legal advice; and would only discuss the mediation process. Wife informed Lawyer that she was represented by her own lawyer. Lawyer told Wife that he was willing to serve as the mediator for the marital dispute/dissolution if her lawyer advised her to agree. Lawyer also told Wife that he had discussed his potential roles as either advocate or mediator with Husband in the prior meetings and that, for the present, Husband chose to keep Lawyer "neutral."

At their request, Lawyer subsequently sent a separation checklist to both Husband and Wife. The checklist gives information about the issues a separation agreement should address. It does not provide substantive advice.

Wife consulted with her lawyer and decided not to pursue mediation. Husband would now like to employ Lawyer as his advocate in the equitable distribution action filed by Wife. May Lawyer represent Husband in the equitable distribution action?

Opinion:

No. If Lawyer was acting in the role of a mediator when he consulted with Wife, Rule 1.12(a), Former Judge, Arbitrator, Mediator, or Other Third-Party Neutral, prohibits him from representing anyone in connection with a matter in which he participated personally and substantially as a mediator unless all of the parties to the proceeding give informed consent confirmed in writing. Although the mediation never occurred, Lawyer still held himself out to be a neutral and had substantive discussions with Wife about the mediation process. Therefore, he participated substantially in the mediation process and, to protect the integrity of the neutral role of mediators, he is disqualified from representing Husband without the consent of Wife.

2010 Formal Ethics Opinion 9

July 23, 2010

Using Stock Photographs in Advertising

Opinion rules that a dramatization disclaimer is not required when using a stock photograph in an advertisement so long as, in the context of the advertisement, the stock photograph is not materially misleading.

Inquiry:

Are dramatization disclaimers required when using stock photographs in a print or video advertisement for legal services?

Opinion:

No. Rule 7.1, Communications Concerning a Lawyer's Services, sets forth the essential requirements for all advertising by lawyers. Rule 7.1(a) states that a lawyer shall not make a false or misleading communication about the lawyer or the lawyer's services. Rule 7.1(b) provides that a communication by a lawyer that contains a dramatization depicting a fictional situation is misleading unless it contains a conspicuous statement at the beginning and end of the communication "explaining that the communication contains a dramatization and does not depict actual events or real persons."

Dramatizations of fictional cases in video advertisements ("commercial dramatizations") are potentially misleading. See RPC 164. Therefore, such advertisements require the dramatization disclaimer. See Rule 7.1(b). "Stock photographs" are professional photographs of common places, events, or people that can be used and reused for advertising. Like commercial dramatizations, stock photographs do not depict actual events or actual clients. However, unlike commercial dramatizations, stock photographs, because they are static, do not have the same tendency to mislead a consumer of legal services. Unless in the context of the advertisement or marketing document, the stock photograph creates a material misrepresentation of fact, a stock photograph may be included in legal advertisement without a dramatization disclaimer. See Rule 7.1(a)(1).

2010 Formal Ethics Opinion 10

January 21, 2011

Charging Client for Out-of-Office Consultations

Opinion rules that a law firm may charge a client for the expenses associated with an out-of-office consultation so long as advertisements referencing the service indicate that the client will be charged for the service and the client consents to the charge prior to the visit.

Inquiry #1:

A personal injury law firm (Firm) advertises that it will provide home/hospital visits to potential clients. Firm also advertises that it works on a contingency fee basis and that consultations are free. The fee agreement recites a contingency fee, and further states that costs will be billed separately and in addition to the contingency fee.

May Firm charge a client for the actual cost of the out-of-office consultation (mileage) in addition to the contingency fee?

Opinion #1:

Yes. A lawyer may enter into a fee agreement with a client that requires the client to pay court costs and expenses of litigation in addition to a contingent fee on any amount recovered for the client. See Rule 1.5(c); RPC 235; 2004 FEO 8. However, the fee and expenses that are ultimately charged and collected from the client must not be clearly excessive in violation of Rule 1.5(a).

Inquiry #2:

May Firm charge a flat fee for the out-of-office consultation irrespective of the actual costs of meeting with the client? For example, may Firm charge a $200 flat fee for any client that requests an out-of-office visit?

Opinion #2:

A distinction must be made between charges for expenses versus fees for legal services. Firm may not charge a set amount for an expense irrespective of the actual cost to Firm. Rule 1.5(a) provides that a lawyer shall not "charge or collect a clearly excessive amount for expenses." If a lawyer travels only a short distance to visit a prospective client, it would be clearly excessive for Firm to charge the client $200 as a mileage expense.

However, lawyers may charge flat fees for providing legal services provided the requirements set out in 2008 FEO 10 are met. Lawyer at Firm may charge a flat fee for an initial consultation so long as the client understands and agrees that the flat fee is the entire payment for the specified legal work to be performed by the lawyer, regardless of the amount of time that it takes the lawyer to perform the legal work; the flat fee will be earned by the lawyer immediately upon payment; and when the lawyer's representation ends, the client will not be entitled to a refund of any portion of the flat fee unless the legal work is not completed or it can be demonstrated that the flat fee is clearly excessive under the circumstances. Id.

If Firm advertises that consultations are free, the $200 charge necessarily must be a charge for expenses rather than legal fees. Firm may not charge $200 for every out-of-office consultation, irrespective of the actual expense Firm incurred.

Inquiry #3:

If the answer to Inquires #1 or #2 is "yes," must Firm disclose the charge for the out-of-office consultation prior to meeting with a client?

Opinion #3:

Yes. Firm must specifically disclose the charge for the out-of-office visit, and get the client's consent to the deduction of the expense from any recovery, prior to making such a visit.

In addition, Firm must clearly disclose any charges associated with out-of-office consultations in advertisements stating that Firm will provide out-of-office consultations and that consultations are free. Rule 7.1 provides that a lawyer shall not make a false or misleading communication about the lawyer or the lawyer's services. It is misleading for Firm to advertise that it will provide out-of-office consultations, and that consultations are free if Firm intends to charge clients for expenses related to the out-of-office visit. See 2004 FEO 8 (unless lawyer invariably makes the repayment of costs advanced contingent upon the outcome of each matter, advertisement for legal services that states that there is no fee unless there is a recovery must also state that costs advanced must be repaid at the conclusion of the matter).

Inquiry #4:

If the answer to Inquiries #1 or #2 is "yes," must Firm disclose the charge for the offsite visit in its contingent fee agreement?

Opinion #4:

Yes. Rule 1.5(c) provides that a contingent fee agreement must be in writing and must state the method by which the fee is to be determined, including litigation and other expenses to be deducted from the recovery. Firm must disclose in the contingent fee agreement the charge for the offsite visit as an expense to be deducted from the recovery.

2010 Formal Ethics Opinion 11

January 21, 2011

Letterhead Listing Membership in Organization with Self-Laudatory Name

Opinion rules that a lawyer may list membership in Million Dollar Advocates Forum, or another organization with a self-laudatory name, on his letterhead only if a disclaimer of similar results and information about the criteria for membership also appears on the letterhead.

Inquiry #1:

2003 FEO 3 considered whether a lawyer may advertise membership in the Million Dollar Advocates Forum. The opinion explained that this membership information may create unjustified expectations about the results the lawyer can achieve, such as the expectation that the lawyer obtains a million-dollar verdict in every case. Along with requirements relative to the legitimacy of the membership credential, the opinion stated that the communication must include both a disclaimer providing notice that similar results are not guaranteed, that each case is different and must be evaluated separately, and an explanation of the standards for membership or information on how to obtain the membership standards in order for the communication to avoid violating Rule 7.1(a)(2). Attorney A wants to list membership in the Million Dollar Advocates Forum on his letterhead.

Is letterhead a communication about the lawyer's services?

Opinion #1:

Yes, letterhead is a communication about the lawyer's services. Letterhead contains a myriad of information. The name of the lawyer or law firm on the letterhead communicates by whom or through what entity services are being offered and identifies the nature of those services as legal services. Inclusion of the name of a founding lawyer who has passed away communicates history about and affiliations of the law firm. Listing memberships or certifications of a lawyer on letterhead communicates information about the lawyer's focus, activities, and accomplishments. The address communicates information about the community in which the lawyer or law firm offers services. Similarly, information about the states in which the firm lawyers are licensed helps a consumer to determine whether a lawyer may provide legal services in a particular jurisdiction. Accordingly, Rule 7.5(a) requires letterhead to comply with Rule 7.1, the rule on communications concerning a lawyer's services. This is consistent with the approach taken by the United States Supreme Court in cases in which the Supreme Court analyzed letterhead as commercial speech. See, e.g., Ibanez v. Florida Department of Business and Professional Regulation, Board of Accountancy, 512 U.S. 136 (1994); Peel v. Attorney Registration and Disciplinary Commission of Illinois, 496 U.S. 91 (1990).

Inquiry #2:

May Attorney A list membership in the Million Dollar Advocates Forum on letterhead sent to prospective clients? Is a disclaimer required?

Opinion #2:

Yes, Attorney A may list membership in an organization with a self-laudatory name or designation, such as Million Dollar Advocates Forum, on letterhead sent to prospective clients if the following conditions are satisfied: (1) the organization must satisfy the requirements set forth in 2003 FEO 3 and 2007 FEO 14; (2) the letter must contain information on how to obtain the membership standards for the Million Dollar Advocates Forum; and (3) the letter must include a disclaimer to avoid creating unjustified expectations about the results the lawyer can achieve. The disclaimer must at a minimum explain that each case is different, each case must be evaluated separately, and that no representation is made that similar results will be achieved in the recipient's case.

Inquiry 3:

May Attorney A list membership in the Million Dollar Advocates Forum on letterhead used generally in the course of Attorney A's legal practice—letterhead not sent to prospective clients but instead sent to existing clients, unrepresented opposing parties, other laypersons, lawyers, and/or judges? Is a disclaimer required?

Opinion 3:

Yes, Attorney A may list membership in the Million Dollar Advocates Forum on such letterhead, provided the conditions and disclaimer requirement set out in Opinion #2 are satisfied. A letter communicates to all who see it, not just the intended recipient. Accordingly, letterhead must be accurate and not misleading, regardless of the intended recipient.[1] Prospective clients are not the only individuals at risk for being misled by information that creates unjustified expectations, such as a claim of membership in the Million Dollar Advocates Forum or other self-laudatory organization. Current clients are at risk, particularly those who retain the lawyer without having seen a prospective client letter that includes the disclaimer. Unrepresented opposing parties are at risk of being unduly influenced by the membership information, absent explanation. Furthermore, the lawyer sending a letter cannot guarantee that only the intended recipient will see the letter. Even if an intended recipient might have sufficient legal education and training to evaluate the claimed credential and therefore might not be susceptible to unjustified expectations, others seeing the letter—for example, nonlawyer assistants—may not. Providing the additional information set out in Opinion #2 and as previously required in 2003 FEO 3 and 2007 FEO 14 will ameliorate any risk of creation of unjustified expectations from inclusion of membership information in a self-laudatory organization on letterhead.

Endnote

1. This opinion is consistent with the manner in which the United States Supreme Court addressed letterhead with certification information in the case of Peel, infra. The letter at the genesis of that case was a letter sent to the Attorney Registration and Disciplinary Commission of Illinois (the body that investigates and prosecutes cases of lawyer misconduct in Illinois). The Supreme Court's discussion of whether the letterhead was misleading did not limit its consideration to whether the letterhead was misleading to the intended recipient—the commission—but analyzed generally whether the letterhead was misleading.

2010 Formal Ethics Opinion 12

January 21, 2011

Providing Conflicts Information to Hiring Law Firm

Opinion rules that a hiring law firm may ask an incoming law school graduate to provide sufficient information as to his prior legal experience so that the hiring law firm can identify potential conflicts of interest.

After his second year of law school, a law student worked as a summer clerk for Law Firm A in Raleigh. One of the many projects Law Firm A assigned to the law student was legal research that was part of Law Firm A's preparation of Lawsuit X.

After the law student graduated from law school, Law Firm B hired the now law graduate as an associate in its Chicago office. After the law graduate left Law Firm A, but before he joined Law Firm B, Law Firm A filed Lawsuit X. After Lawsuit X was filed, lawyers in the Charlotte office of Law Firm B were retained to defend the case.

The law graduate was unaware that Lawsuit X had been filed, or that Law Firm B had been retained to defend it. Before the law graduate joined Law Firm B, the firm asked him to provide information about the identity of the client matters he worked on at Law Firm A so that potential conflicts could be addressed. The law graduate contacted Law Firm A, which directed him not to disclose any information about matters he had worked on or clients for whom he had worked.

Law Firm A learned that law graduate was associated with Law Firm B in Chicago and moved to disqualify Law Firm B from Lawsuit X. Law Firm B established a screen immediately upon learning that law graduate had worked on Lawsuit X.

Inquiry #1:

Does law graduate have a conflict of interest that is imputed to the other lawyers in Law Firm B, disqualifying those lawyers from the representation of the defendant in Lawsuit X?

Opinion #1:

No. A law firm may hire a law graduate although the law firm is representing a client in a matter on which the law graduate previously worked for the opposing party while clerking at another law firm. Conflicts of interest created by work performed as a law clerk are not imputed to other members of a law firm under Rule 1.10. See Rule 1.10, cmt. [4]. Nevertheless, the law graduate should be screened from any participation in the matter. Id. (Note that Rule 1.10(c) allows a law firm to hire a lawyer who previously worked for the opposing party while employed at another law firm so long as the lawyer is timely screened from any participation in the matter and written notice is given to any affected former client.)

Inquiry #2:

Will a Rule 1.0(1) screen of the law graduate from Lawsuit X implemented when Law Firm B learned of law graduate's involvement in Lawsuit X be deemed "timely" and protect the lawyers of Law Firm B from disqualification?

Opinion #2:

In order to be effective, screening measures must be implemented as soon as practical after a law firm knows or reasonably should know that there is a need for screening. Rule 1.0, cmt. [10]. The purpose of screening is to assure the affected parties that confidential information known by the disqualified individual remains protected. Rule 1.0, cmt. [9]. If the screen is implemented prior to any participation by the law graduate in the matter and prior to the communication of any confidential information, the purpose for the screening procedure will have been effectuated.

Inquiry #3:

Is it improper for a law firm to ask law graduates or graduates not yet admitted to the practice of law, who have worked as law clerks, to identify client matters on which they worked as law clerks so that the hiring law firm can identify potential conflicts of interest?

Opinion #3:

No. When a new law school graduate, or any new lawyer, joins a firm, the hiring firm has an obligation to protect their clients against harm from conflicts of interest. See Rule 1.7. Comment [3] to Rule 1.7 provides that, to determine whether a conflict of interest exists, a lawyer should adopt reasonable procedures to determine in both litigation and non-litigation matters the persons and issues involved. However, the identity of the persons and issues involved in a matter are protected client information under Rule 1.6(a).

Rule 1.6(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct provides that a lawyer shall not reveal information acquired during the professional relationship with a client unless (1) the client gives informed consent; (2) the disclosure is impliedly authorized; or (3) one of the exceptions set out in Rule 1.6(b) applies. One of the exceptions set out in Rule 1.6(b) provides that a lawyer may reveal confidential information to comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct. Rule 1.6(b)(1).

The ABA Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility recently opined that lawyers moving between firms should be permitted to disclose the persons and issues involved in a matter because the prohibition of such disclosure would preclude lawyers from conforming with the conflicts rules. ABA Comm. on Ethics and Prof'l Responsibility, Formal Op. 09-455 (2009). Similarly, it is appropriate for a law firm to ask an incoming law school graduate to provide sufficient information so that the hiring law firm can identify potential conflicts of interest.

However, as noted in the ABA opinion, "any disclosure of conflict information should be no greater than reasonably necessary to accomplish the purpose of detecting and resolving conflicts and must not compromise the attorney-client privilege or otherwise prejudice a client or former client." Id. In addition, a lawyer or law firm receiving conflict information may not reveal such information or use it for purposes other than detecting and resolving conflicts of interest.

Inquiry #4:

Is a law firm that a law graduate worked for permitted to disclose to a different law firm the identity of clients and matters that the law graduate worked on at the law firm so that the hiring firm can identify potential conflicts of interest?

Opinion #4:

Yes. See Opinion #3.

2010 Formal Ethics Opinion 13

January 21, 2011

Receiving Fee or Commission for Financial Services and Products Provided to Legal Clients

Opinion rules that a lawyer may receive a fee or commission in exchange for providing financial services and products to a legal client so long as the lawyer complies with the ethical rules pertaining to the provision of law-related services, business transactions with clients, and conflicts of interest.

Inquiry:

Lawyer would like to establish an ancillary business that provides financial services to clients and non-clients. Services would include assistance in the selection, purchase, and disposition of securities, life insurance, and annuities. Lawyer would be compensated through consulting fees, investment advisory fees, and commissions. The ancillary services would be provided by an entity separate and distinct from the lawyer's legal practice.

May Lawyer offer financial services to his legal clients and receive a fee or commission based on the provision of the financial services and the sale of financial products?

Opinion:

Yes. The ethical responsibilities for a lawyer who provides law-related services are set out in Rule 5.7. When law-related services are provided under circumstances that are not distinct from the provision of legal services, the law firm will be subject to all of the Rules of Professional Conduct with respect to the provision of the law-related services. If the law-related services are provided by a separate entity, the law firm will still be subject to the Rules of Professional Conduct unless the law firms takes "reasonable measures" to ensure that a person obtaining the law-related services knows that the services are not legal services and that the protections of the lawyer-client relationship do not exist. See Rule 5.7(a)(2).

Even when a lawyer provides law-related services through a separate entity, and takes the necessary measures to ensure that the consumer of the law-related services knows that the services are not legal services, the lawyer is still bound by the Rules of Professional Conduct as to the referral of his legal clients to the ancillary business. Comment [6] to Rule 5.7 provides that when a client-lawyer relationship exists with a person who is referred by a lawyer to an ancillary business controlled by the lawyer, the lawyer must comply with Rule 1.8(a) pertaining to business transactions with clients. See also Rule 1.8, cmt. [1]. Pursuant to Rule 1.8(a) a lawyer may only enter into a business transaction with a client if: (1) the transaction and terms are fair and reasonable to the client and are fully disclosed and transmitted in writing in a manner that can be reasonably understood by the client; (2) the client is advised in writing of the desirability of seeking and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of independent legal counsel on the transaction; and (3) the client gives informed consent, in writing signed by the client, to the essential terms of the transaction and the lawyer's role in the transaction. Accordingly, a lawyer must make these disclosures and secure the requisite consent before providing financial services and products to a client.

Prior to the 2003 amendments to the Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 1.8(b) provided that "during or subsequent to legal representation of a client, a lawyer shall not enter a business transaction with a client for which a fee or commission will be charged in lieu of, or in addition to, a legal fee if the business transaction is related to the subject matter of the legal representation, any financial proceeds from the representation, or any information, confidential or otherwise, acquired by the lawyer during the course of the representation." The current version of Rule 1.8(b) states only that a lawyer "shall not use information relating to representation of a client to the disadvantage of the client unless the client gives informed consent, except as permitted or required by these Rules."

Although the previous prohibition on receiving fees or commissions for ancillary business transactions related to legal representation has been eliminated, when dealing with his legal clients, Lawyer has an ethical duty to avoid conflicts created by his own personal interests. See Rule 1.7(a)(2). Rule 1.7(b) provides that a lawyer shall not represent a client with respect to a matter if the lawyer's professional judgment on behalf of the client may be materially limited by the lawyer's own personal interest. Comment [10] to Rule 1.7 specifically states that a lawyer may not allow related business interests to affect representation, "for example, by referring clients to an enterprise in which the lawyer has an undisclosed financial interest." The lawyer's self-interest in promoting his financial services company must not distort his independent professional judgment in the provision of legal services to the client, including referring a client to the lawyer's own ancillary business. Rule 1.7; Rule 2.1.

Although a conflict of interest exists in providing financial products to legal clients, the potential problems and risks can be avoided in most transactions if the lawyer makes the disclosures required by Rules 1.8(a) and 1.7(b), and obtains the client's informed written consent. Rule 1.7(b) allows a lawyer to represent a client despite a conflicting personal interest if the lawyer reasonably believes his representation of the client will not be affected and the client gives written consent after disclosure of the existence and nature of the possible conflict and the possible adverse consequences of the representation. Prior to entering into a business transaction with a client, Rule 1.8(a) requires the lawyer to fully disclose the terms of the transaction to the client, including the lawyer's role in the transaction, in a manner that can be reasonably understood by the client. In such circumstances, a client should have sufficient information from which to decide whether to enter into an ancillary business transaction with the client's lawyer. Each transaction should be evaluated in accordance with its individual circumstances.

In recommending financial products to an estate-planning client, the Oklahoma Bar Association recommends that the lawyer include elements such as the following in a written disclosure to the client: (a) that the lawyer has a business and financial relationship with the financial services company; (b) whether the lawyer will receive a commission, fee, or other compensation from the sale of the financial product; (c) that the interests of the client and the interests of the financial services company and the lawyer, as an agent for the company, may be different and may conflict; (d) whether the lawyer or the financial services company is licensed to sell only certain types of financial products and, if so, why the lawyer is recommending the proposed product instead of other products in which he or she does not have a financial interest; (e) that if the client authorizes the lawyer to disclose confidential information in the course of obtaining the financial product, such disclosure may constitute a waiver of the client's right to confidentiality based upon the lawyer-client relationship; (f) whether the financial services company is also the lawyer's client; (g) that in the event a claim or controversy arises, the lawyer could be disqualified in representation of both the client and the company; and (h) that the client should consider seeking the opinion of independent counsel concerning the proposed transaction. See OK Bar Ass'n Ethics Op. 316 (2001).

Assuming that the financial services are provided under circumstances that are distinct from the provision of legal services, and Lawyer ensures that the consumer of the financial services knows that the services are not legal services, Lawyer may offer his financial services to his legal clients and receive payment for the services so long as he complies with the requirements set out in 1.8 and 1.7.

Lawyer must first determine that his professional judgment on behalf of the client will not be adversely affected by his personal interest in making a profit. If Lawyer cannot reasonably make such a determination, then the lawyer should not refer the client to his financial services company. See Rule 1.7(b)(1). Lawyer then must make an independent professional determination that the financial products and services offered by his company would best serve his client's interests. Prior to recommending his financial services and products to the client, Lawyer must make full disclosure of his personal interest in the financial services company, as required by Rule 1.7(b) and Rule 1.8(a) so that the client can make a fully informed choice.

To the extent this opinion differs from RPC 238, 2000 FEO 9, 2001 FEO 9, those opinions are overruled.

2010 Formal Ethics Opinion 14

April 27, 2012

Use of Search Engine Company's Keyword Advertisements

Opinion rules that it is a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct for a lawyer to select another lawyer's name as a keyword for use in an Internet search engine company's search-based advertising program.

Inquiry:

Attorney A participates in an Internet search engine company's search-based advertising program. The program allows advertisers to select specific words or phrases that should trigger their advertisements. An advertiser does not purchase the exclusive rights to specific words or phrases. Specific words or phrases can be selected by any number of advertisers.

One of the keywords selected by Attorney A for use in the search-based advertising program was the name of Attorney B, a competing lawyer in Attorney A's town with a similar practice. Attorney A's keyword advertisement caused a link to his website to be displayed on the search engine's search results page any time an Internet user searched for the term "Attorney B" using the search engine. Attorney A's advertisement may appear to the side of or above the unpaid search results, in an area designated for "ads" or "sponsored links."

Attorney B never authorized Attorney A's use of his name in connection with Attorney A's keyword advertisement, and the two lawyers have never formed any type of partnership or engaged in joint representation in any case.

Does Attorney A's selection of a competitor's name as a keyword for use in a search engine company's search-based advertising program violate the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion:

Yes. It is professional misconduct for a lawyer to engage in conduct involving dishonesty, fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation. Rule 8.4(c). Dishonest conduct includes conduct that shows a lack of fairness or straightforwardness. See In the Matter of Shorter, 570 A.2d 760, 767-68 (DC App. 1990). The intentional purchase of the recognition associated with one lawyer's name to direct consumers to a competing lawyer's website is neither fair nor straightforward. Therefore, it is a violation of Rule 8.4(c) for a lawyer to select another lawyer's name to be used in his own keyword advertising.

2011 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

April 22, 2011

Lawyer as Advocate and Witness

Opinion provides guidelines for the application of the prohibition in Rule 3.7 on a lawyer serving as both advocate and witness when the lawyer is the litigant.

Inquiry #1:

Rule 3.7(a) prohibits a lawyer from acting as an advocate at a trial in which the lawyer is "likely to be a necessary witness" unless the testimony will concern uncontested issues, the nature or value of legal services, or disqualification will work a substantial hardship on the client. Therefore, a lawyer who is identified as a witness has a professional responsibility, pursuant to Rule 3.7, to determine whether he or she is "likely to be a necessary witness" and, as such, is disqualified from acting as an advocate at the trial. When is a lawyer a "necessary witness" and at what point prior to trial must this determination be made?

Opinion #1:

Rule 3.7 prohibits a lawyer from serving as both an advocate and a witness in a trial to eliminate the confusion that may result for the trier of fact when a lawyer serves in both roles. The comment to the rule describes this as "the ambiguities of the dual role" and observes, "[a] witness is required to testify on the basis of personal knowledge, while an advocate is expected to explain and comment on evidence given by others. It may not be clear whether a statement by an advocate-witness should be taken as proof or as an analysis of the proof." Rule 3.7, cmts. [2] and [3]. However, to protect the client's choice of counsel and prevent abuse of the rule by an opponent as a litigation tactic, disqualification is limited to situations where the lawyer's testimony is "necessary." It is generally agreed that when the anticipated testimony is relevant, material, and unobtainable by other means, the lawyer's testimony is "necessary." See Ann. Model Rules of Prof'l. Conduct (6th ed. 2007), p. 361 (citing cases).

A lawyer who is named as a witness by an opposing party must evaluate his knowledge of the facts in controversy and make a good faith determination as to whether his testimony will be relevant, material, and unobtainable elsewhere. This evaluation must be ongoing as the case moves toward trial, contested issues are identified, and discovery discloses additional witnesses and information about the case. However, to avoid prejudicing a client due to a last-minute change of trial counsel, a lawyer should withdraw from representation in the trial if the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that he is a necessary witness. Failure to withdraw in a timely manner is a violation of Rule 3.7.

Inquiry #2:

Does the prohibition on serving as an advocate and a witness apply to pretrial work, settlement negotiations, or assisting with the trial strategy?

Opinion #2:

No. The underlying reason for the prohibition—confusion of the trier of fact relative to the lawyer's role—does not apply when the lawyer's advocacy is limited to activities outside the courtroom. See Ann. Model Rules of Prof'l. Conduct (6th ed. 2007), p. 364 (citing cases including Cunningham v. Sams, 161 N.C. App. 295, 588 S.E. 2d 484 (2003)(reversing portion of disqualification order prohibiting representation in pretrial activities)).

Although a lawyer may continue to provide representation outside the courtroom, the lawyer should not use this as an excuse to delay withdrawal from representation in the litigation if the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that he is a necessary witness. See Opinion #1 above.

Inquiry #3:

Is a lawyer who is a litigant and who is likely to be a necessary witness prohibited by Rule 3.7 from representing himself at the trial?

Opinion #3:

No. The underlying reason for the prohibition—confusion regarding the lawyer's role—does not apply when the lawyer is also a litigant. See Ann. Model Rules of Prof'l Conduct (6th ed. 2007), p. 366 (citing cases). The Ethics Committee observes, however, that it is the sole prerogative of a court to determine advocate/witness issues when raised in a motion to disqualify. This ethics opinion merely holds that a lawyer/litigant is not required to find alternative counsel prior to a court's ruling on a motion to disqualify.

2011 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

April 22, 2011

Former Client's Failure to Object to Conflict

Opinion sets forth the factors to be taken into consideration when determining whether a former client's delay in objecting to a conflict constitutes a waiver.

Inquiry:

In April 2002, Wife and Husband separate. Wife meets with Attorney A for a consultation and pays Attorney A $100. Attorney A is not hired by Wife, does not open a file, and has no further contact with Wife.[1] Wife hires Attorney B. Husband and Wife sign a separation contract in July 2003. Husband is not represented.

In May 2007, Husband signs a quitclaim deed relinquishing his rights in the marital residence. Husband is not represented; Wife is represented by Attorney B.

In July 2009, Husband hires Attorney A to file for an uncontested divorce. Attorney A has no record or memory of a prior consultation with Wife. The following month, Husband, represented by Attorney A, files for divorce. Wife, represented by Attorney B, files an answer and counterclaim seeking divorce and equitable distribution.

In October 2009, the divorce action is heard and a judgment of absolute divorce is entered. Both parties are present at the hearing and are represented by their respective lawyers. In the succeeding months, the parties, through their lawyers, consent to and designate a mediator; file equitable distribution affidavits; and participate in mediation with both parties and both lawyers present. The mediation results in an impasse.

Subsequent to the mediation, and for the first time in the proceedings, Attorney B notifies Attorney A that Wife objects to Attorney A's representation of Husband because Attorney A previously represented Wife in the same matter.

A lawyer must obtain the informed consent of a former client, pursuant to Rule 1.9(a), prior to representing a party who is adverse to the former client in the same or a substantially related matter. On occasion, however, a lawyer will fail to identify a former client conflict and will unintentionally represent an adverse party without obtaining the consent of the former client. If a former client delays lodging her objection to the representation of the adverse party by her former lawyer, does the former client's subsequent objection to the representation require the lawyer's withdrawal pursuant to Rule 1.9(a)?

Opinion:

Rule 1.9, the former client conflict rule, does not address this question and the comment to the rule, unfortunately, provides no guidance. In this situation, the Ethics Committee must interpret the Rules of Professional Conduct in a manner that is consistent with principles and values promoted by the rules. Rule 1.9(a) enforces the duties of loyalty and confidentiality that continue after the termination of the client-lawyer relationship. A lawyer has a continuing duty to maintain a reliable, comprehensive system for identifying conflicts arising from both present and former representations.[2] Rule 1.7, cmt. [3]. A lawyer should never accept a representation knowing that it presents a prohibited conflict under Rule 1.9, and even a good faith and unintentional failure to identify a conflict of interest does not excuse it. Moreover, because of the importance of protecting confidentiality and promoting loyalty, mere delay on the part of a former client to object to a new representation does not constitute tacit consent. Nevertheless, the right to legal counsel of one's choice and the prevention of substantial hardship on a client due to a lawyer's disqualification are other policies recognized and promoted by the Rules. See Rule 1.10(c)(allowing screening of disqualified lawyer); Rule 1.18(c)(limiting disqualification of lawyer who consulted with prospective client); and Rule 3.7 (lawyer who is necessary witness is not disqualified if works substantial hardship on the client).

Although delay will not be sufficient to constitute waiver in most cases, the following factors should be taken into consideration when evaluating whether a former client's failure timely to object to a new, adverse representation should constitute a de facto waiver of the right to object: (1) whether the lawyer's failure to identify the conflict of interest and bring it to the attention of the former client was unintentional; (2) whether the former client knew of the new representation and the adverse interest entailed; (3) the length of the delay in lodging an objection; (4) whether there was an opportunity to lodge an objection; (5) whether the former client was represented by counsel during the delay; (6) the reason the delay occurred; and (7) whether disqualification will result in substantial hardship for the new client. See Laws. Man. on Prof. Conduct (ABA/BNA) 51:234 (2002) (setting forth factors considered by courts when deciding whether to grant a delayed motion to disqualify).

In the present situation, Attorney A's failure to identify the conflict was unintentional. Wife, the former client, however, was fully aware of the new, adverse representation by Attorney A; had numerous opportunities to object to the new representation at earlier stages in the proceedings; and had legal counsel to advise her during the delay. Moreover, there does not appear to be a justification for Wife's delay in lodging her objection other than to gain a tactical advantage by waiting until disqualification would work a substantial hardship on Husband. Under these circumstances, Attorney A is not required to withdraw from the representation of Husband when Wife raised her objection. Nevertheless, the courts have concurrent jurisdiction over the conduct of the lawyers appearing before them. The Ethics Committee recognizes the discretion of a court to decide any motion to disqualify.

Endnotes

1. Pursuant to 2006 FEO 14, the acceptance of a fee by Attorney A rendered Wife a client (as opposed to a prospective client under Rule 1.18) to whom the duties of loyalty and confidentiality are owed.
2. This opinion does not condone or justify sloppy systems for recording and checking conflicts of interest. Even a prospective client consultation, where no fee is paid and no further representation provided, should be entered into a law firm's conflicts checking system.

2011 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

April 22, 2011

Advising a Criminal Defendant Who is an Undocumented Alien

Opinion rules that a criminal defense lawyer may advise an undocumented alien that deportation may result in avoidance of a criminal conviction and may file a notice of appeal to superior court although there is a possibility that the client will be deported.

Inquiry #1:

Client A is arrested for driving while impaired. The magistrate sets a secured bond of $2000, schedules the trial for district court and notifies U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) that Client A may be in the country illegally. Client A is taken to the county jail to wait for trial. At Client A's first appearance, the judge appoints Attorney A to defend him.

ICE determines that Client A is an undocumented alien and gives the jail notice that it should be advised when Client A is released. Once Client A's bond is paid, Client A will be held in the jail for an additional 48 hours to give ICE the opportunity to begin proceedings. If ICE does not serve Client A with a notice to appear within this time period, the jail will release him.

Client A tells Attorney A that he wants to be deported as soon as possible and does not want a conviction on his record. Attorney A discusses Client A's options with him. If Client A pays the bond, ICE will probably come to the jail, transport him to a federal holding facility and begin removal proceedings within 48 hours of paying the bond. Once Client A is deported, the State might dismiss Client A's DWI charge. Attorney A knows that, should Client A someday choose to re-enter the United States legally, a DWI conviction would be detrimental to an immigration application or an application for a work permit.

Attorney A is aware that the existence of an ICE detainer is only an indication that Client A might be removed before the resolution of the case. ICE may choose not to pick Client A up; it may serve him and then release him pending a removal hearing; it may offer him an immigration bond which can be posted so that he can secure his release during immigration proceedings; or he may be eligible for a remedy, such as cancellation of removal, which would allow him to receive permanent residency in the United States.

Did Attorney A violate the Rules of Professional Conduct by advising Client A of his legal option to pay the bond?

Opinion #1:

No. Although a lawyer may not assist a client in conduct that the lawyer knows is criminal or fraudulent, a lawyer "may discuss the legal consequences of any proposed course of conduct with a client". Rule 1.2(d).. Advising Client A of his legal option to pay the bond and face possible deportation is appropriate advice for a competent lawyer to give to a client under these circumstances.

Inquiry #2:

May Attorney A move for a continuance of the trial to give Client A more time to pay the bond?

Opinion #2:

Yes. See Opinion #1.

Inquiry #3:

Client A and Attorney A decide that Client A will plead guilty to DWI in district court because Client A has been unable to raise the money necessary to pay the bond. Client A is sentenced to time served. The jail immediately notifies ICE that it has 48 hours to pick up Client A before he is released. ICE takes custody of Client A and transports him to a federal holding facility. Attorney A knows that Client A has the right to appeal for a trial de novo in superior court. Attorney A also knows that the superior court may dismiss the case if Client A is deported.

May Attorney A enter a notice of appeal knowing that Client A's pending deportation may result in the dismissal of the superior court case?

Opinion #3:

Rule 3.1 prohibits a lawyer from advancing frivolous or meritless proceedings or arguments but permits a lawyer in a criminal proceeding that may result in incarceration the leeway to "so defend the proceeding as to require that every element of the case be established." Comment [1] to the rule observes that "[t]he advocate has a duty to use legal procedure for the fullest benefit of the client's cause, but also a duty not to abuse legal procedure." Rule 3.2 requires a lawyer to make reasonable efforts to expedite litigation "consistent with the interests of the client". However, comment [1] to this rule adds, "[t]he question is whether a competent lawyer acting in good faith would regard the course of action as having some substantial purpose other than delay."

Filing a notice of appeal for Client A is not, in itself, frivolous or meritless because Client A has a constitutional right to a trial de novo in superior court before a jury. The question is whether the pleading is interposed for an improper purpose which would violate not only Rule 3.1 but also the prohibition on conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice set forth in Rule 8.4(d).

Rule 3.3(a)(1) prohibits a lawyer from knowingly making a false statement of material fact to a court. This prohibition applies to statements in pleadings as well as to statements in open court. Rule 3.3, cmt. [3]. Comment [3] to the rule adds that "[t]here are circumstances where failure to make a disclosure is the equivalent of an affirmative misrepresentation."

Although Attorney A believes that Client A may not be available for trial in superior court, a client's presence is not always necessary to resolve a case in superior court. If a trial is necessary, it can be done by written waiver if the court permits. Moreover, by the time the case is reached for trial, the client may, in fact, be available. Lastly, it is unlikely that the State will actually dismiss the charges simply because the defendant has been removed. Therefore, filing a notice of appeal for Client A does not violate the rules.

2011 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

April 27, 2012

Participation in Referral Arrangement

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not agree to procure title insurance exclusively from a particular title insurance agency on every transaction referred to the lawyer by a person associated with the agency.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney has developed a good working relationship with Referring Party who, over time, has referred real estate closings to Attorney's office. Referring Party has some affiliation with Title Insurance Agency. Attorney desires to maintain this working relationship with Referring Party. As a condition of receiving further referrals, Referring Party asks that Attorney agree to procure title insurance exclusively from Title Insurance Agency on every transaction referred to Attorney by Referring Party. May Attorney agree to such a referral arrangement with Title Insurance Agency?

Opinion #1:

No. The ethical duties set forth in the Rules of Professional Conduct prohibit a lawyer from entering into an exclusive reciprocal referral agreement with any service provider. Such an arrangement impairs the lawyer's ability to provide independent professional judgment in violation of Rules 2.1 and 5.4(c). In addition, the arrangement amounts to improper compensation for referrals in violation of Rule 7.2(b). Finally, such an arrangement creates a nonconsentable conflict of interest between the lawyer and the client. See Rule 1.7.

In most real estate transactions, the client delegates the choice of title insurer to the lawyer, who is charged with acting in the best interest of the client. In determining what is in the best interests of the client, it is appropriate for the lawyer to consider among other things the fees charged for title insurance, the financial stability of the insurer and/or title insurance underwriter, the willingness of the title insurer to provide coverage regarding title matters, and the ability of the insurer to meet the needs of the client with regard to the transaction.

The lawyer may also consider the lawyer's working relationship with a specific title insurer, particularly where the relationship may prove beneficial to the client. This is true even where the client has been referred to the lawyer by someone affiliated with the specific title insurer. The lawyer may, and should, strive to cultivate the types of business relationships and provide the quality of legal services that will encourage clients and other professionals to recommend the lawyer's services. What a lawyer cannot do, however, is permit a person who recommends the lawyer's services to direct or regulate the lawyer's professional judgment in rendering the legal services. See Rule 5.4(c).

If the client indicates a preference as to a particular title insurance company that the lawyer does not believe is the best selection for the client, the lawyer's role is to counsel the client so that the client may make an informed decision.

Ultimately, the choice of the title insurer in a real estate transaction is in the province of the client acting in consultation with the lawyer.

Inquiry #2:

Upon becoming aware that another lawyer has agreed to procure title insurance exclusively from a title insurance agency on every transaction referred to the lawyer by someone associated with the title insurance company, is Attorney under an ethical obligation to report and refer the other lawyer's conduct to the State Bar?

Opinion #2:

Rule 8.3(a) requires a lawyer to inform the State Bar if the lawyer knows that another lawyer has committed a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct that raises a substantial question as to that lawyer's honesty, trustworthiness, or fitness as a lawyer. Attorney should communicate his concerns to the other lawyer and recommend that the lawyer contact the State Bar for an ethics opinion as to his continuing participation in what appears to be an improper referral arrangement. After this communication, if Attorney has knowledge that the lawyer has continued his participation in an improper referral arrangement, Attorney must report the lawyer to the State Bar.

2011 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

July 15, 2011

Representation of Lender in Contested Foreclosure When Corporate Trustee Is Owned by Spouse and Paralegal

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not represent the beneficiary of the deed of trust in a contested foreclosure if the lawyer's spouse and paralegal own an interest in the closely-held corporate trustee.

Inquiry:

Attorney A forms Corporation X in order that the corporation might be appointed substitute trustee on a deed of trust when a lender asks Attorney A to handle the foreclosure. Attorney A's wife and paralegal each own stock in Corporation X.

If Attorney A's wife and paralegal own any interest in Corporation X, may Attorney A represent the beneficiary/lender in a contested foreclosure proceeding if Corporation X is appointed substitute trustee?

Opinion:

No. As noted in N.C. Gen. Stat. §45-21.16(c), a trustee on a deed of trust is "a neutral party and, while holding that position in the foreclosure proceeding, may not advocate for the secured creditor or for the debtor in the foreclosure proceeding." Because of the conflict between the neutral, fiduciary role of trustee and the role of advocate, a number of ethics opinions also hold that a lawyer serving as a trustee in a contested foreclosure proceeding may not represent the beneficiary or the grantor in the proceeding. 2008 FEO 11 (listing opinions). Attorney A's indirect financial interest in Corporation X creates the appearance, if not the reality, that the corporation is the alter ego of Attorney A. Therefore, if Corporation X is appointed substitute trustee in a contested foreclosure, the neutrality of the trustee will be improperly impaired unless Attorney A is prohibited from representing the beneficiary or the lender in the proceeding. Id. (Lawyer may represent corporation partially owned by firm in its capacity as trustee but may not advocate for lender in contested foreclosure.) For an explanation of a contested foreclosure proceeding, see 2008 FEO 11.

If the corporate trustee is a publicly traded corporation in which Attorney A's wife and paralegal own non-controlling interests, the perceived neutrality of the corporate trustee is not impaired and Attorney A may represent the lender in a contested foreclosure proceeding. See, e.g., RPC 83 and RPC 185.

2011 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

January 27, 2012

Subscribing to Software as a Service While Fulfilling the Duties of Confidentiality and Preservation of Client Property

Opinion rules that a lawyer may contract with a vendor of software as a service provided the lawyer uses reasonable care to safeguard confidential client information.

Inquiry #1:

Much of software development, including the specialized software used by lawyers for case or practice management, document management, and billing/financial management, is moving to the "software as a service" (SaaS) model. The American Bar Association's Legal Technology Resource Center explains SaaS as follows:

> SaaS is distinguished from traditional software in several ways. Rather than installing the software to your computer or the firm's server, SaaS is accessed via a web browser (like Internet Explorer or FireFox) over the internet. Data is stored in the vendor's data center rather than on the firm's computers. Upgrades and updates, both major and minor, are rolled out continuously…SaaS is usually sold on a subscription model, meaning that users pay a monthly fee rather than purchasing a license up front.[1]

Instances of SaaS software extend beyond the practice management sphere addressed above, and can include technologies as far-ranging as web-based email programs, online legal research software, online backup and storage, text messaging/SMS (short message service), voicemail on mobile or VoIP phones, online communication over social media, and beyond.

SaaS for law firms may involve the storage of a law firm's data, including client files, billing information, and work product, on remote servers rather than on the law firm's own computer and, therefore, outside the direct control of the firm's lawyers. Lawyers have duties to safeguard confidential client information, including protecting that information from unauthorized disclosure, and to protect client property from destruction, degradation, or loss (whether from system failure, natural disaster, or dissolution of a vendor's business). Lawyers also have a continuing need to retrieve client data in a form that is usable outside of a vendor's product.[2]

Given these duties and needs, may a law firm use SaaS?

Opinion #1:

Yes, provided steps are taken to minimize the risk of inadvertent or unauthorized disclosure of confidential client information and to protect client property, including the information in a client's file, from risk of loss.

The use of the internet to transmit and store client information presents significant challenges. In this complex and technical environment, a lawyer must be able to fulfill the fiduciary obligations to protect confidential client information and property from risk of disclosure and loss. The lawyer must protect against security weaknesses unique to the internet, particularly "end-user" vulnerabilities found in the lawyer's own law office. The lawyer must also engage in periodic education about ever-changing security risks presented by the internet.

Rule 1.6 of the Rules of Professional Conduct states that a lawyer may not reveal information acquired during the professional relationship with a client unless the client gives informed consent or the disclosure is impliedly authorized to carry out the representation. Comment [17] explains, "A lawyer must act competently to safeguard information relating to the representation of a client against inadvertent or unauthorized disclosure by the lawyer or other persons who are participating in the representation of the client or who are subject to the lawyer's supervision." Comment [18] adds that, when transmitting confidential client information, a lawyer must take "reasonable precautions to prevent the information from coming into the hands of unintended recipients."

Rule 1.15 requires a lawyer to preserve client property, including information in a client's file such as client documents and lawyer work product, from risk of loss due to destruction, degradation, or loss. See also RPC 209 (noting the "general fiduciary duty to safeguard the property of a client"), RPC 234 (requiring the storage of a client's original documents with legal significance in a safe place or their return to the client), and 98 FEO 15 (requiring exercise of lawyer's "due care" when selecting depository bank for trust account).

Although a lawyer has a professional obligation to protect confidential information from unauthorized disclosure, the Ethics Committee has long held that this duty does not compel any particular mode of handling confidential information nor does it prohibit the employment of vendors whose services may involve the handling of documents or data containing client information. See RPC 133 (stating there is no requirement that firm's waste paper be shredded if lawyer ascertains that persons or entities responsible for the disposal employ procedures that effectively minimize the risk of inadvertent or unauthorized disclosure of confidential information). Moreover, while the duty of confidentiality applies to lawyers who choose to use technology to communicate, "this obligation does not require that a lawyer use only infallibly secure methods of communication." RPC 215. Rather, the lawyer must use reasonable care to select a mode of communication that, in light of the circumstances, will best protect confidential client information and the lawyer must advise effected parties if there is reason to believe that the chosen communications technology presents an unreasonable risk to confidentiality. Id.

Furthermore, in 2008 FEO 5, the committee held that the use of a web-based document management system that allows both the law firm and the client access to the client's file is permissible:

> provided the lawyer can fulfill his obligation to protect the confidential information of all clients. A lawyer must take steps to minimize the risk that confidential client information will be disclosed to other clients or to third parties. See RPC 133 and RPC 215…. A security code access procedure that only allows a client to access its own confidential information would be an appropriate measure to protect confidential client information…. If the law firm will be contracting with a third party to maintain the web-based management system, the law firm must ensure that the third party also employs measures which effectively minimize the risk that confidential information might be lost or disclosed. See RPC 133.

In a recent ethics opinion, the Arizona State Bar's Committee on the Rules of Professional Conduct concurred with the interpretation set forth in North Carolina's 2008 FEO 5 by holding that an Arizona law firm may use an online file storage and retrieval system that allows clients to access their files over the internet provided the firm takes reasonable precautions to protect the security and confidentiality of client documents and information.[3]

In light of the above, the Ethics Committee concludes that a law firm may use SaaS if reasonable care is taken to minimize the risks of inadvertent disclosure of confidential information and to protect the security of client information and client files. A lawyer must fulfill the duties to protect confidential client information and to safeguard client files by applying the same diligence and competency to manage the risks of SaaS that the lawyer is required to apply when representing clients.

No opinion is expressed on the business question of whether SaaS is suitable for a particular law firm.

Inquiry #2:

Are there measures that a lawyer or law firm should consider when assessing a SaaS vendor or seeking to minimize the security risks of SaaS?

Opinion #2:

This opinion does not set forth specific security requirements because mandatory security measures would create a false sense of security in an environment where the risks are continually changing. Instead, due diligence and frequent and regular education are required.

Although a lawyer may use nonlawyers outside of the firm to assist in rendering legal services to clients, Rule 5.3(a) requires the lawyer to make reasonable efforts to ensure that the services are provided in a manner that is compatible with the professional obligations of the lawyer. The extent of this obligation when using a SaaS vendor to store and manipulate confidential client information will depend upon the experience, stability, and reputation of the vendor. Given the rapidity with which computer technology changes, law firms are encouraged to consult periodically with professionals competent in the area of online security. Some recommended security measures are listed below.

- Inclusion in the SaaS vendor's Terms of Service or Service Level Agreement, or in a separate agreement between the SaaS vendor and the lawyer or law firm, of an agreement on how the vendor will handle confidential client information in keeping with the lawyer's professional responsibilities.
- If the lawyer terminates use of the SaaS product, the SaaS vendor goes out of business, or the service otherwise has a break in continuity, the law firm will have a method for retrieving the data, the data will be available in a non-proprietary format that the law firm can access, or the firm will have access to the vendor's software or source code. The SaaS vendor is contractually required to return or destroy the hosted data promptly at the request of the law firm.
- Careful review of the terms of the law firm's user or license agreement with the SaaS vendor including the security policy.
- Evaluation of the SaaS vendor's (or any third party data hosting company's) measures for safeguarding the security and confidentiality of stored data including, but not limited to, firewalls, encryption techniques, socket security features, and intrusion-detection systems.[4]
- Evaluation of the extent to which the SaaS vendor backs up hosted data.

Endnotes

1. FYI: Software as a Service (SaaS) for Lawyers, ABA Legal Technology Resource Center at abanet.org/tech/ ltrc/fyidocs/saas.html.
2. Id.
3. Paraphrasing the description of a lawyer's duties in Arizona State Bar Committee on Rules of Professional Conduct, Opinion 09-04 (Dec. 9, 2009).
4. A firewall is a system (which may consist of hardware, software, or both) that protects the resources of a private network from users of other networks. Encryption techniques are methods for ciphering messages into a foreign format that can only be deciphered using keys and reverse encryption algorithms. A socket security feature is a commonly-used protocol for managing the security of message transmission on the internet. An intrusion detection system is a system (which may consist of hardware, software, or both) that monitors network and/or system activities for malicious activities and produces reports for management.

2011 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

January 27, 2012

Using Online Banking to Manage a Trust Account

Opinion rules that a law firm may use online banking to manage its trust accounts provided the firm's managing lawyers are regularly educated on the security risks and actively maintain end-user security.

Inquiry:

Most banks and savings and loans provide "online banking" which allows customers to access accounts and conduct financial transactions over the internet on a secure website operated by the bank or savings and loan. Transactions that may be conducted via on-line banking include account-to-account transfers, payments to third parties, wire transfers, and applications for loans and new accounts. Online banking permits users to view recent transactions and view and/or download cleared check images and bank statements. Additional services may include account management software.

Financial transactions conducted over the internet are subject to the risk of theft by hackers and other computer criminals. Given the duty to safeguard client property, particularly the funds that a client deposits in a lawyer's trust account, may a law firm use online banking to manage a trust account?

Opinion:

Yes, provided the lawyers use reasonable care to minimize the risk of loss or theft of client property specifically including the regular education of the firm's managing lawyers on the ever-changing security risks of online banking and the active maintenance of end-user security.

As noted in 2011 FEO 6, Subscribing to Software as a Service While Fulfilling the Duties of Confidentiality and Preservation of Client Property, the use of the internet to transmit and store client data (or, in this instance, data about client property) presents significant challenges. In this complex and technical environment, a lawyer must be able to fulfill the fiduciary obligations to protect confidential client information and property from risk of disclosure and loss. The lawyer must protect against security weaknesses unique to the internet, particularly "end-user" vulnerabilities found in the lawyer's own law office. The lawyer must also engage in frequent and regular education about the security risks presented by the internet.

Rule 1.15 requires a lawyer to preserve client property, to deposit client funds entrusted to the lawyer in a separate trust account, and to manage that trust account according to strict recordkeeping and procedural requirements. See also RPC 209 (noting the "general fiduciary duty to safeguard the property of a client") and 98 FEO 15 (requiring a lawyer to exercise "due care" when selecting depository bank for trust account). The rule is silent, however, about online banking.

Nevertheless, online banking may be used to manage a client trust account if the recordkeeping and fiduciary obligations in Rule 1.15 can be fulfilled. The recordkeeping requirements for trust accounts are set forth in Rule 1.15-3. Rule 1.15-3(b)(3) specifically requires a lawyer to maintain the following records relative to the transfer of funds from the trust account:

> all instructions or authorizations to transfer, disburse, or withdraw funds from the trust account (including electronic transfers or debits), or a written or electronic record of any such transfer, disbursement, or withdrawal showing the amount, date, and recipient of the transfer or disbursement, and, in the case of a general trust account, also showing the name of the client or other person to whom the funds belong;

If the online banking software does not provide a method for making an official bank record of the required information when money is transferred from the trust account to another account, such transfers must be handled by a method that provides the required records.

To fulfill the fiduciary obligations in Rule 1.15, a lawyer managing a trust account must use reasonable care to minimize the risks to client funds on deposit in the trust account by remaining educated as to the dynamic risks involved in online banking and insuring that the law firm invests in proper protection and multiple layers of security to address those risks. See [Proposed] 2011 FEO 6.

A lawyer who is managing a trust account has affirmative duties to regularly educate himself as to the security risks of online banking; to actively maintain end-user security at the law firm through safety practices such as strong password policies and procedures, the use of encryption, and security software, and the hiring of an information technology consultant to advise the lawyer or firm employees; and to insure that all staff members who assist with the management of the trust account receive training on and abide by the security measures adopted by the firm. Understanding the contract with the depository bank and the use of the resources and expertise available from the bank are good first steps toward fulfilling the lawyer's fiduciary obligations.

This opinion does not set forth specific security requirements because mandatory security measures would create a false sense of security in an environment where the risks are continually changing. Instead, due diligence and frequent and regular education are required. A lawyer must fulfill his fiduciary obligation to safeguard client funds by applying the same diligence and competency to manage the risks of on-line banking that a lawyer is required to apply when representing clients.

2011 Formal Ethics Opinion 8

July 15, 2011

Utilizing Live Chat Support Service on Law Firm Website

Opinion provides guidelines for the use of live chat support services on law firm websites.

Inquiry:

A law firm would like to utilize a live chat support service on its website. Typically, such a service requires the law firm to download a software program to the firm website. After the software is downloaded, a "button" is displayed on the website which reads something like "Click Here to Chat Live." The button is often accompanied by a picture of a person with a headset. Once a visitor clicks on the button to request a live chat, the visitor will be able to have a typed out conversation in real-time with an agent identified as perhaps a "law firm staff member" or an "operator." The agent will guide the visitor through a series of screening questions through the use of a script. Typically, the agent will learn about the facts of the potential case. The agent will also obtain contact information for the visitor. The agent then emails a transcript of the "chat" to the law firm. In some instances, the law firm pays only for the transcripts of "chats" in which the visitor provides a way for the law firm to contact him or her.

Depending on the software program purchased, in addition to the live chat "button" being displayed on the website, a pop-up window may also appear on the screen specifically asking visitors if they would like "live help." The window may contain a picture of a person with a headset and reads something like, "Hi, you may just be browsing but we are here to answer your questions. Please click 'yes' for live help." The pop-up window is software-generated. It is only after the visitor clicks on the button that the live agent is engaged.

In another form of the live chat support service, the "button" and pop-up window showing a picture of a person with a headset is displayed on the website and a voice says something like, "Hi, we are here to answer your questions. Please click 'yes' for live help." These statements are presumably software-generated. It is only after the visitor clicks on the "yes" button that the live agent is engaged.

Is the utilization of these types of live chat support services a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion:

No. Rule 7.3(a) provides that a lawyer shall not by "in-person, live telephone, or real-time electronic contact" solicit professional employment from a potential client unless the person contacted is a lawyer or has a family, close personal, or prior professional relationship with the lawyer. Instant messaging, chat rooms, and other similar types of conversational computer-accessed communication are considered to be real-time or interactive communication. The interactive typed conversation with a live agent provided by the live chat support service described above constitutes a real-time electronic contact.

It is important to note that the prohibition in Rule 7.3(a) applies only to lawyer-initiated contact. Rule 7.3 does not prohibit real-time electronic contact that is initiated by a potential client. In each of the instances described above, the website visitor has made the initial contact with the firm. The visitor has chosen to visit the law firm's website, indicating that they have some interest in the website's content. It is appropriate at this juncture for the law firm to offer the website visitor live assistance.

In addition to the fact that the potential client has initiated the contact with the law firm, the circumstances surrounding this type of real-time electronic contact do not trigger the concerns necessitating the prohibition set out in Rule 7.3. Comment [1] to Rule 7.3 explains the policy considerations behind the prohibition:

> There is a potential for abuse inherent in direct in-person, live telephone, or real-time electronic contact by a lawyer with a prospective client known to need legal services. These forms of contact between a lawyer and a prospective client subject the layperson to the private importuning of the trained advocate in a direct interpersonal encounter. The prospective client, who may already feel overwhelmed by the circumstances giving rise to the need for legal services, may find it difficult fully to evaluate all available alternatives with reasoned judgment and appropriate self-interest in the face of the lawyer's presence and insistence upon being retained immediately. The situation is fraught with the possibility of undue influence, intimidation, and over-reaching.

The use of a live chat support service does not subject the website visitor to undue influence or intimidation. The visitor has the ability to ignore the live chat button or to indicate with a click that he or she does not wish to participate in a live chat session.

The Philadelphia Bar Association recently issued an opinion that allows certain real-time electronic communications, including communications through blogs, chat rooms, and other social media. Philadelphia Bar Ass'n Prof'l. Guidance Comm., Op. 2010-6 (2010). The opinion states that Rule 7.3 does not bar the use of social media for solicitation where a prospective client to whom the lawyer's communication is directed has the ability "to 'turn off' the soliciting lawyer and respond or not as he or she sees fit." The Philadelphia Bar Association opined that "with the increasing sophistication and ubiquity of social media, it has become readily apparent to everyone that they need not respond instantaneously to electronic overtures, and that everyone realizes that—like targeted mail—emails, blogs, and chat room comments can be readily ignored, or not, as the recipient wishes."

Although the use of this type of technology is permissible, the practice is not without its risks, and a law firm utilizing this service must exercise certain precautions. The law firm must ensure that visitors who elect to participate in a live chat session are not misled to believe that they are conversing with a lawyer if such is not the case. While the use of the term "operator" seems appropriate for a nonlawyer, a designation such as "staff member," or something similar, would require an affirmative disclaimer that a nonlawyer staff member is not an attorney. The law firm must ensure that the nonlawyer agent does not give any legal advice.

The law firm should be wary of creating an "inadvertent" lawyer-client relationship. In addition, the law firm should exercise care in obtaining information from potential clients and be mindful of the potential consequences/duties resulting from the electronic communications. Rule 1.18 provides that a person who discusses with a lawyer the possibility of forming a client-lawyer relationship with respect to a matter is a prospective client and that, even when no client-lawyer relationship ensues, a lawyer who has had discussions with a prospective client may generally not use or reveal information learned in the consultation. Furthermore, Rule 1.18(c) prohibits a lawyer from representing a client with interests materially adverse to those of a prospective client in the same or a substantially related matter if the lawyer received information from the prospective client that could be significantly harmful to that person in the matter. Therefore, acquiring information from a prospective client via the live chat service could create a conflict of interest with a current client that would require withdrawal.

2011 Formal Ethics Opinion 9

July 15, 2011

Use of Letterhead by Person Who is Not Employed or Affiliated with Firm

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not allow a person who is not employed by or affiliated with the lawyer's firm to use firm letterhead.

Inquiry #1:

May a lawyer allow a person who is not employed by the lawyer's firm and who is not subject to the supervision or control of any lawyer with the firm to use the firm's letterhead?

Opinion #1:

No. It is professional misconduct for a lawyer to violate the Rules of Professional Conduct through the acts of another. Rule 8.4(a). The Rules prohibit false or misleading communications by a lawyer about the lawyer or the lawyer's services. Rule 7.1(a). They also prohibit conduct involving dishonesty, fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation. Rule 8.4(c). A recipient of a letter on a law firm's letterhead assumes that the letter was written by a firm lawyer or by an employee or affiliate[1] of the firm who is acting under the authority, supervision, and control of a firm lawyer. If a person who is not employed or formally affiliated with the firm sends a letter on firm letterhead, it creates the false impression that the person has the authority to act on behalf of the law firm and is being supervised by a firm lawyer. In the worst case, the recipient may falsely assume that the sender is a lawyer with the firm. A lawyer may not participate actively or passively in this deception. If a lawyer learns that someone who is not employed or affiliated with the firm is using firm letterhead to write to third parties, the lawyer must take steps to stop the misuse of the letterhead.

A lawyer may, however, allow a client to draft a letter to be printed on letterhead if the lawyer reviews and assumes responsibility for the content of the letter by signing it.

Inquiry #2:

A client would like to use the letterhead of his lawyer's firm for activities that do not constitute the practice of law. For example, when negotiating the terms of a loan with a third party, the client wants to write the terms on the firm letterhead and have the third party sign the document. The client and the lawyer anticipate that the loan will subsequently be closed by the lawyer. May a lawyer allow a client to use his firm's letterhead in this manner? May a lawyer agree to such use if the lawyer supervises or controls the content of the document?

Opinion #2:

No, because the third party may falsely believe that the client is acting with the authority of the law firm. See Opinion #1. In addition, it may create the false impression that the law firm is verifying or endorsing the transaction.

Endnote

1. A person who is not an employee but who is formally affiliated with a firm, such as a contract lawyer or paralegal, may use firm letterhead if the person is authorized to act on the firm's behalf and the affiliation is set forth on the letterhead or otherwise in the letter. See, e.g., RPC 126.

2011 Formal Ethics Opinion 10

October 21, 2011

Lawyer Advertising on Deal of the Day or Group Coupon Website

Opinion rules that a lawyer may advertise on a website that offers daily discounts to consumers where the website company's compensation is a percentage of the amount paid to the lawyer if certain disclosures are made and certain conditions are satisfied.

Inquiry:

Lawyer would like to advertise on a "deal of the day" or "group coupon" website. To utilize such a website, a consumer registers his email address and city of residence on the website. The website company then emails local "daily deals" or coupons for discounts on services to registered consumers. The daily deals are usually for services such as spa treatments, tourist attractions, restaurants, photography, house cleaning, etc. The daily deals can represent a significant reduction off the regular price of the offered service. Consumers who wish to participate in the "deal of the day" purchase the deal online using a credit card that is billed.

The website company negotiates the discounts with businesses on a case-by-case basis; however, the company's fee is always a percentage of each "daily deal" or coupon sold. Therefore, the revenue received by the business offering the daily deal is reduced by the percentage of the revenue paid to the website company.

May a lawyer advertise on a group coupon website and offer a "daily deal" to users of the website subject to the website company's fees without violating the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion:

Yes. Although the website company's fee is deducted from the amount paid by a purchaser for the anticipated legal service, it is paid regardless of whether the purchaser actually claims the discounted service and the lawyer earns the fee by providing the legal services to the purchaser. Therefore, the fee retained by the website company is the cost of advertising on the website and does not violate Rule 5.4(a) which prohibits, with a few exceptions, the sharing of legal fees with nonlawyers. The purpose for the fee-splitting prohibition is not confounded by this arrangement. As noted in Comment [1] to the rule, the traditional limitations on sharing fees prevent interference in the independent professional judgment of a lawyer by a nonlawyer. There is no interaction between the website company and the lawyer relative to the legal representation of purchasers at any time after the fee is paid on-line other than the transfer of the proceeds of the "daily deal" to the lawyer. Rule 7.2(b)(1) allows a lawyer to pay the reasonable cost of advertisements. As long as the percentage charged against the revenues generated is reasonable compensation for the advertising service, a lawyer may participate. Cf. 2010 FEO 4 (permitting participation in a barter exchange program in which members pay a cash transaction fee of ten percent on the gross value of each purchase of goods or services). There are, however, professional responsibilities that are impacted by this type of advertising.

First, a lawyer may not engage in misleading advertising. Rule 7.1. Therefore, the advertised discount may not be illusory: the lawyer must have an established, standard fee for the service that is being offered at a discount. Moreover, the lawyer's advertisement on the website must include certain disclosures. Clients should not make decisions about legal representation in a hasty manner. The advertisement must explain that the decision to hire a lawyer is an important one that should be considered carefully and made only after investigation into the lawyer's credentials. In addition, the advertisement must state that a conflict of interest or a determination by the lawyer that the legal service being offered is not appropriate for a particular purchaser may prevent the lawyer from providing the service and, if so, the purchaser's money will be refunded (see below for explanation of the duty to refund).

Second, a lawyer must deposit entrusted funds in a trust account. Rule 1.15-2(b). The payments received by the lawyer from the website company are advance payments[1] of legal fees that must be deposited in the lawyer's trust account and may not be paid to the lawyer or transferred to the law firm operating account until earned by the provision of legal services.

Third, a professional relationship with a purchaser of the discounted legal service is established once the payment is made and this relationship must be honored. The lawyer has offered his services on condition that there is no conflict of interest and the service is appropriate for the purchaser, and the purchaser has accepted the offer. At a minimum, the purchaser must be considered a prospective client entitled to the protections afforded to prospective clients under Rule 1.18.

Fourth, a lawyer may not retain a clearly excessive fee. Rule 1.5(a). If a prospective client fails to claim the discounted legal service within the designated time (before the "expiration date"), one might consider the advance payment forfeited. Even if it is assumed that this is a risk that is generally known to consumers, however, it does not justify the receipt of a windfall by the lawyer. As a fiduciary, a lawyer places the interests of his clients above his own and may not accept a legal fee for doing nothing. Such a fee is inherently excessive. Therefore, if a prospective client does not claim the discounted service within the designated time, the lawyer must refund the advance payment on deposit in the trust account for the prospective client or, if the prospective client still desires the legal service, the lawyer may charge his actual rate at the time the service is provided but must give the prospective client credit for the advance payment on deposit in the trust account.

Last, a lawyer has a duty of competent representation pursuant to Rule 1.1. The lawyer must consult with each prospective client to determine what service the prospective client actually requires. If competent representation requires the lawyer to expend more time than anticipated to satisfy the advertised service, the lawyer must do so without additional charge. Similarly, if upon consulting with a prospective client the lawyer determines that the prospective client does not need the legal service or that a conflict of interest prohibits the representation, the lawyer must refund the prospective client's entire advance payment, including the amount retained by the website company, to make the prospective client whole.

Endnote

1. In light of the many uncertainties of a legal representation arranged in the manner proposed, a lawyer may not condition the offer of discounted services upon the purchaser's agreement that the money paid will be a flat fee or a minimum fee that is earned by the lawyer upon payment. See 2008 FEO 10.

2011 Formal Ethics Opinion 12

October 21, 2011

Disclosing Clerk's Error to Court

Opinion rules that a lawyer must notify the court when a clerk of court mistakenly dismisses a client's charges.

Inquiry:

Lawyer has a client in custody who has numerous cases pending in district court. Lawyer negotiates a plea agreement with the assistant district attorney (ADA) whereby all but two of the charges will be dismissed. Lawyer asks for the client to be brought into the courtroom to enter his plea. At that time, Lawyer is informed that the client has already been taken back to the jail. Lawyer and the ADA agree to continue the case to the next business day. When Lawyer subsequently goes to visit his client in jail, he is told that the client was released because all of his charges were dismissed.

Upon investigation, Lawyer confirms that all of the client's charges had been voluntarily dismissed. The dismissals are clearly the result of an error by the clerk of court and do not reflect the plea agreement entered into by Lawyer and the ADA.

Must lawyer inform the clerk of court of the error?

Opinion:

Yes. The preamble to the Rules of Professional Conduct provides that as a member of the legal profession, a lawyer is an "officer of the legal system." Rule 0.1. Rule 8.4(d) states that it is professional misconduct for a lawyer to "engage in conduct that is prejudicial to the administration of justice." Similarly, Comment [2] to Rule 3.3 (Candor Toward the Tribunal) refers to the special duties of lawyers as officers of the court to "avoid conduct that undermines the integrity of the adjudicative process."

Under Rule 3.3, for example, a lawyer has a duty to disclose a client's false testimony even though it may have grave consequences for the client, where the alternative is that the lawyer cooperate in deceiving the court thereby subverting the truth-finding process which the adversary system is designed to implement. Rule 3.3, Cmt. [11]. Thus, if a conflict arises between a lawyer's duty to his client and his duties as an officer of the court, the lawyer's duty to the court must prevail.

This inquiry differs from that addressed in 98 FEO 5, which provides that a defense lawyer does not have a duty to inform the court of an inaccurate driving record presented by the prosecutor. In the situation addressed in 98 FEO 5, both advocates are present in court and each is expected to present evidence and carry his burden of proof. The opinion states that the burden of proof is on the state to show that the defendant's driving record justifies a more restrictive sentencing level and that the defense lawyer is not required to volunteer adverse facts when the prosecutor fails to bring them forward.

In the instant inquiry, Lawyer knows that his client's charges were dismissed in error and that "justice" (in the form of a negotiated plea to which Lawyer and the client agreed) was not carried out. Therefore, Lawyer has an obligation to inform the court or the clerk of court of the apparent error. Accord Wis. Formal Ethics Op. E-84-7 (1984)(defense attorney has obligation to inform the court or the court's staff of clerk of court's error).

2011 Formal Ethics Opinion 13

October 21, 2011

Editor's note: This opinion is not intended to imply that a lawyer for an estate is required to petition the clerk for approval of the lawyer's fee; however, a personal representative's commission may be reduced if the clerk of court does not approve the lawyer's fee in advance.

Retaining Funds in Trust Account to Pay Disputed Legal Fee

Opinion rules that client funds or the funds of a third party that are placed in the lawyer's control for the purpose of being safeguarded, managed, or disbursed in connection with a transaction, but which were not designated or identified as funds for the payment of legal fees, may not be retained in the trust account, pursuant to Rule 1.15-2(g), as disputed funds to which the lawyer may be entitled.

Inquiry:

Attorney agreed to represent the Estate of E. E was a North Carolina lawyer who conducted his practice through a professional limited liability company (PLLC), in which he was the sole member. Attorney's representation included collecting the assets and paying the claims of the PLLC with the intention that the PLLC would eventually be dissolved and any remaining assets of the PLLC would be distributed to the estate.

The funds of the estate, approximately $3,000, were deposited in the general trust account for Attorney's law firm and a ledger card for the estate was established. The funds of the PLLC, in excess of $100,000, were also deposited in the trust account and a separate ledger for the PLLC was established. Attorney billed his work for the PLLC separately from his work for the estate in order that the legal fees for the resolution of the PLLC issues would be paid from funds of the PLLC.

Administrator recently terminated the representation and demanded return of the remaining funds of the estate (approximately $2,500) and of the PLLC (approximately $100,000) held in the general trust account of Attorney's law firm.

Attorney contends that his firm is owed $29,000 in legal fees for the representation of the PLLC. Administrator contests these legal fees and did not authorize Attorney to pay the fees from any of the money held in trust.

Rule 1.15-2(g) states:

> [w]hen funds belonging to the lawyer are received in combination with funds belonging to the client or other persons, all of the funds shall be deposited intact. The amounts currently or conditionally belonging to the lawyer shall be identified on the deposit slip or other record. After the deposit has been finally credited to the account, the lawyer may withdraw the amounts to which the lawyer is or becomes entitled. If the lawyer's entitlement is disputed, the disputed amounts shall remain in the trust account or fiduciary account until the dispute is resolved.

May Attorney retain $29,000 in his firm's trust account and transfer only the difference to Administrator until the dispute over the legal fees is resolved?

Opinion:

No, the funds must be returned to Administrator and Attorney may file a claim with the Estate for payment for his legal services.

Rule 1.15-2(g) permits a lawyer to withhold only funds to which the lawyer has a claim to entitlement such as funds deposited as a client's advance payment of a legal fee or funds from a settlement negotiated by the lawyer that, by prior agreement, include a contingent fee. However, client funds or the funds of a third party that are placed in the lawyer's control for the purpose of being safeguarded, managed, or disbursed in connection with a transaction, but which were not otherwise designated or identified as funds for the payment of legal fees, may not be retained in the trust account as disputed funds pursuant to Rule 1.15-2(g). As explained in Comment [14] to Rule 1.15, "[a] lawyer is not required to remit to the client funds that the lawyer reasonably believes represent fees owed. However, a lawyer may not hold funds to coerce a client into accepting the lawyer's contention."

Regardless of whether the funds are identified as funds of the Estate of E or funds of the PLLC, the funds in this inquiry are the property of the Estate of E[1] and were delivered to Attorney for the purpose of being managed by Attorney as a part of his legal services to the estate. The funds are subject to legal requirements to pay the claims of the creditors of the PLLC and of the estate.[2] Moreover, payment of administrative expenses of an estate from estate assets, including attorney's fees, is only permitted on the issuance of an order of the clerk of superior court and requires the clerk to exercise judicial discretion in such matters.[3] A personal representative must file a petition seeking an order from the clerk enabling the payment of attorney's fees by an estate.[4] These legal restrictions on the assets of an estate demonstrate that Attorney had no claim of entitlement to the funds. Therefore, when the representation ended, Attorney was obliged to deliver all of the funds as directed by Administrator. Rule 1.15-2(m)(a lawyer shall promptly pay or deliver to the client, or to third persons as directed by the client, any entrusted property belonging to the client and to which the client is currently entitled).

Rather than deposit the funds of an estate in a general trust account, estate funds should, in most instances, be deposited in a fiduciary account maintained solely for the deposit of fiduciary funds or other entrusted property of a particular person or entity. Rule 1.15-1(e)(defining "fiduciary account"). In a fiduciary account, the funds can be invested as usually required for prudent management of fiduciary funds. The comment to Rule 1.15 explains that:

> [c]lient funds must be deposited in a general trust account if there is no duty to invest on behalf of the client. Generally speaking, if a reasonably prudent person would conclude that the funds in question, either because they are nominal in amount or are to be held for a short time, could probably not earn sufficient interest to justify the cost of investing, the funds should be deposited in the general trust account. In determining whether there is a duty to invest, a lawyer shall exercise his or her professional judgment in good faith and shall consider the following:
>
> a) The amount of the funds to be deposited;
>
> b) The expected duration of the deposit, including the likelihood of delay in the matter for which the funds are held;
>
> c) The rates of interest or yield at financial institutions where the funds are to be deposited;
>
> d) The cost of establishing and administering dedicated accounts for the client's benefit, including the service charges, the costs of the lawyer's services, and the costs of preparing any tax reports required for income accruing to the client's benefit;
>
> e) The capability of financial institutions, lawyers, or law firms to calculate and pay income to individual clients;
>
> f) Any other circumstances that affect the ability of the client's funds to earn a net return for the client.

Generally, the funds of an estate are of sufficient quantity or will be held for a sufficiently long period of time that deposit in a fiduciary account is required.

Endnotes

1. N.C. Gen. Stat. §57C-6-01(4) provides that E's PLLC dissolved by statute on the 90th day following E's death. E's PLLC and all of its assets are assets of the estate.
2. See N.C. Gen. Stat. §57C-6-05(1) and N.C. Gen. Stat. §28A-19-6.
3. See Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. v. Waddell, 237 N.C. 342, 75 S.E. 2d 151 (1953).
4. See In re Estate of Longest, 74 N.C. App. 386, 328 S.E. 2d 804, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 314 N.C. 330, 333 S.E. 2d 488 (1985).

2011 Formal Ethics Opinion 14

April 27, 2012

Outsourcing Clerical or Administrative Tasks

Opinion rules that a lawyer must obtain client consent, confirmed in writing, before outsourcing its transcription and typing needs to a company located in a foreign jurisdiction.

Inquiry:

Law Firm would like to outsource its transcription and typing needs to a company located in a foreign jurisdiction. Specifically, voice files would be sent via email and some documents would be scanned to the company via email. The communications would, in turn, be transcribed to paper. The files would include information about client matters and work product regarding client matters. Law Firm investigated the security measures the company utilizes and found them to be extensive.

Is Law Firm required to disclose the outsourcing of these clerical tasks to its clients and obtain their informed written consent as contemplated by 2007 FEO 12?

Opinion:

Yes. 2007 FEO 12 provides that a lawyer must disclose the outsourcing of support services to an assistant in another country and obtain the client's informed written consent to the outsourcing. 2007 FEO 12 does not differentiate between the outsourcing of administrative as opposed to legal support services. Similarly, ABA Formal Opinion 08-451 (2008) provides that "where the relationship between the firm and the individuals performing the services is attenuated, as in a typical outsourcing relationship, no information protected by Rule 1.6 may be revealed without the client's informed consent." (Emphasis added). The bar associations of New York and Ohio have reached similar conclusions. N.Y. State Bar Ass'n. Comm. on Prof'l Ethics, Op. 2006-3 (2006); Ohio Ethics Op. 2009-6 (2009).

The ABA opinion notes the existence of unique risk factors that must be evaluated when client information is outsourced to a foreign vendor. As noted in the ABA opinion:

> [c]onsideration . . . should be given to the legal landscape of the nation to which the services are being outsourced, particularly the extent that personal property, including documents, may be susceptible to seizure in judicial or administrative proceedings notwithstanding claims of client confidentiality . Similarly, the judicial system of the country in question should be evaluated to assess the risk of loss of client information or disruption of the project in the event that a dispute arises between the service provider and the lawyer and the courts do not provide prompt and effective remedies to avert prejudice to the client.

The protection of client confidences is one of the most significant responsibilities imposed on a lawyer. Given the risk that a foreign jurisdiction may provide less protection for confidential client information than that provided domestically, the outsourcing of any task to another country that involves the disclosure of confidential client information requires disclosure and client consent confirmed in writing.[1] Consent "confirmed in writing" denotes consent that is given in writing by the person or a writing that a lawyer promptly transmits to the person confirming an oral informed consent. See Rule 1.0(c). The client's consent to the outsourcing may be incorporated into the employment agreement.

Endnote

1. Client consent is not required in 2011 FEO 6 although the opinion allows confidential client information to be transmitted over the internet and stored using servers that may be located in another country. The instant opinion can be distinguished because outsourcing requires disclosure of client information to third parties.

2011 Formal Ethics Opinion 15

October 21, 2011

Communication with Adverse Party to Request Public Records

Opinion rules that, pursuant to the North Carolina Public Records Act, a lawyer may communicate with a government official for the purpose of identifying a custodian of public records and with the custodian of public records to make a request to examine public records related to the representation although the custodian is an adverse party, or an employee of an adverse party, whose lawyer does not consent to the communication.

Inquiry #1:

Adopted in 1995, RPC 219 rules that a lawyer may communicate with a custodian of public records, pursuant to the North Carolina Public Records Act, N.C. Gen. Stat. Chap. 132, for the purpose of making a request to examine public records related to a representation although the custodian and the government entity employing the custodian are adverse parties and the lawyer for the custodian and the government entity does not consent to the communication.

Has the ruling in this opinion changed in light of the comprehensive revisions to the Rules of Professional Conduct in 1997 and 2003?

Opinion #1:

No. RPC 219 relies upon Rule 7.4(a), the "anti-contact rule"[1] at that time, and specifically applies the provision in the rule that allows a lawyer to communicate with a represented opposing party without the consent of opposing counsel if the communication is authorized by law. Rule 7.4(1) provided at that time:

> [d]uring the course of his or her representation of a client, a lawyer shall not (1) communicate or cause another to communicate about the subject of the representation with a party the lawyer knows to be represented by another lawyer in the matter unless the lawyer has the consent of the other lawyer or is authorized by law to do so.

The essential provisions of the anti-contact rule were not changed when the Rules were revised and renumbered in 1997 and again revised in 2003. The current version of the rule, Rule 4.2(a), provides:

> [d]uring the representation of a client, a lawyer shall not communicate about the subject of the representation with a person the lawyer knows to be represented by another lawyer in the matter, unless the lawyer has the consent of the other lawyer or is authorized to do so by law or a court order. It is not a violation of this rule for a lawyer to encourage his or her client to discuss the subject of the representation with the opposing party in a good-faith attempt to resolve the controversy.

ABA Formal Ethics Opinion 95-396 (1995) observes that Model Rule 4.2's exception permitting a communication "authorized by law" is satisfied by "a constitutional provision, statute, or court rule, having the force and effect of law, that expressly allows a particular communication to occur in the absence of counsel."

N.C. Gen. Stat. §132-6(a) requires that:

> [e]very custodian of public records shall permit any record in the custodian's custody to be inspected and examined at reasonable times and under reasonable supervision by any person, and shall, as promptly as possible, furnish copies thereof upon payment of any fees as may be prescribed by law.

The statute authorizes direct communication with a custodian of public records for the purpose of inspecting and furnishing copies of public records and remains an exception to the communications prohibited in current Rule 4.2(a).

Inquiry #2:

RPC 219 does not examine whether there are limitations on the content of the communications with the public records custodian. Apart from communications for the purposes of submitting a request for public records, arranging a convenient time to inspect the records, and inspecting the records, may the lawyer communicate with the custodian for the purpose of identifying the documents sought or for any other purpose related to the representation?

Opinion #2:

A lawyer may communicate with a custodian of public records for the purposes set forth in N.C. Gen. Stat. §132-6(a), to inspect, examine, or obtain copies of public records. To the extent that the lawyer must communicate with the custodian to identify the records to be inspected, examined, or copied, the communication is in furtherance of the purpose of the Public Records Act[2] to facilitate access to public records and is allowed without obtaining the consent of opposing counsel. Such communications should be limited to the identification of records and should not be used by the lawyer as an opportunity to engage in communications about the substance of the disputed matter.

Inquiry #3:

The identity of the custodian of public records may vary depending upon the nature of the records sought and the organization of the government entity. RPC 219 does not examine any limitations on the lawyer's inquiries of government employees or officials for the purpose of determining the identity of the custodian. May the lawyer speak to government employees for this purpose without the consent of the lawyer for the government?

Opinion #3:

N.C. Gen. Stat. §132-2 provides that:

> [t]he public official in charge of an office having public records shall be the custodian thereof.

A lawyer may communicate with government employees, without obtaining the consent of the government's lawyer, for the purpose of identifying the public official in charge of an office and therefore the custodian of the records of that office.

Endnote

1. This term is used frequently by the ABA and others to refer to the rule that restricts lawyers from communicating directly with represented persons. See e.g., ABA Formal Ethics Opinion 95-396 (1995).
2. The public policy for the Public Records Act is set forth in N.C. Gen. Stat. §132-1(b):
   > The public records and public information compiled by the agencies of North Carolina government or its subdivisions are the property of the people. Therefore, it is the policy of this state that the people may obtain copies of their public records and public information free or at minimal cost unless otherwise specifically provided by law. As used herein, "minimal cost" shall mean the actual cost of reproducing the public record or public information.

2011 Formal Ethics Opinion 16

January 27, 2012

Responding to Ineffective Assistance of Counsel Claim Questioning Representation

Opinion rules that a criminal defense lawyer accused of ineffective assistance of counsel by a former client may share confidential client information with prosecutors to help establish a defense to the claim so long as the lawyer reasonably believes a response is necessary and the response is narrowly tailored to respond to the allegations.

Inquiry #1:

The ABA recently issued Formal Opinion 10-456, which holds that a criminal defense lawyer accused of ineffective assistance of counsel by a former client cannot share confidential information with prosecutors to help establish a defense to the former client's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel unless the disclosure is made in a court-supervised setting.

Our Rule 1.6(b)(6) provides that a lawyer may reveal information protected from disclosure by Rule 1.6(a) to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary:

> to establish a claim or defense on behalf of the lawyer in a controversy between the lawyer and the client; to establish a defense to a criminal charge or civil claim against the lawyer based upon conduct in which the client was involved; or to respond to allegations in any proceeding concerning the lawyer's representation of the client.

This exception, also found in ABA Model Rule 1.6, allows a lawyer to reveal confidential information to respond to claims of ineffective assistance of counsel, provided the lawyer narrowly tailors the disclosure to that which is reasonably necessary to respond to the facts of the specific claim.

Under the ABA opinion, however, a lawyer would not be permitted to make such limited disclosure outside of a "court-supervised setting." The opinion provides that disclosure may not occur until a court directs the lawyer to disclose, presumably after considering any objections or claims of privilege raised by the former client. The opinion states:

> Although an ineffective assistance of counsel claim ordinarily waives the attorney-client privilege with regard to some otherwise privileged information, that information still is protected by [Model] Rule 1.6(a) unless the defendant gives informed consent to its disclosure or an exception to the confidentiality rule applies. Under [Model] Rule 1.6(b)(5), a lawyer may disclose information protected by the rule only if the lawyer "reasonably believes [it is] necessary" to do so in the lawyer's self-defense. The lawyer may have a reasonable need to disclose relevant client information in a judicial proceeding to prevent harm to the lawyer that may result from a finding of ineffective assistance of counsel. However, it is highly unlikely that a disclosure in response to a prosecution request, prior to a court-supervised response by way of testimony or otherwise, will be justifiable.

Outside of the court-supervised setting contemplated by the ABA opinion, may a North Carolina lawyer accused of ineffective assistance of counsel disclose information about the former representation to the extent that lawyer believes it is reasonably necessary to establish a defense to the accusation? For example, in response to prosecutors' inquiries, but before a court has ordered the lawyer to do so, may the lawyer disclose information about the representation of a former client that the lawyer believes is reasonably necessary to respond to a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel in the former client's post-conviction motion for appropriate relief?

Opinion #1:

Yes. We decline to adopt ABA Formal Op. 10-456 (2010).

Rule 1.6(b)(6), which applies to state and federal criminal representations, specifically provides that a lawyer may reveal confidential information protected from disclosure by Rule 1.6(a) to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to respond to allegations concerning the lawyer's representation of the client. Rule 1.6(b)(6) also affords the lawyer discretion to determine what information is reasonably necessary to disclose, and there is no requirement that the lawyer exercise that discretion only in a "court-supervised setting."

We take additional guidance from the North Carolina General Assembly in reaching this conclusion. Regarding state court post-conviction actions, N.C. Gen. Stat. § 15A-1415(e) provides that where a defendant alleges ineffective assistance of prior trial or appellate counsel as a ground for the illegality of his conviction or sentence, the client "shall be deemed to waive the attorney-client privilege with respect to both oral and written communications between such counsel and the defendant to the extent the defendant's prior counsel reasonably believes such communications are necessary to defend against the allegations of ineffectiveness." The statute further provides that the waiver of the attorney-client privilege "shall be automatic upon the filing of the motion for appropriate relief alleging ineffective assistance of prior counsel, and the superior court need not enter an order waiving the privilege."

Adoption of the ABA opinion would contradict the legislature's determination that lawyers should have the discretion, without court direction or supervision, to disclose privileged information in response to such claims in the narrowly-tailored fashion contemplated by Rule 1.6(b)(6). Adoption of the opinion would also contradict the language of Rule 1.6(b)(6) itself, which does not require a court-supervised setting to make a narrowly-tailored disclosure of confidential information in response to such claims. We decline to adopt an opinion that contradicts existing state law and rules governing disclosure of otherwise confidential and privileged information under these limited circumstances.

In reaching this conclusion, however, we are also relying on the fact that both N.C. Gen. Stat. § 15A-1415(e) and Rule 1.6(b)(6) clearly admonish lawyers who choose to respond to claims of ineffective assistance of counsel, regardless of the setting, to respond in a manner that is narrowly tailored to address the specific facts underlying the specific claim. Simply put, the pursuit of an ineffective assistance of counsel claim by a former client does not give the lawyer carte blanche to disclose all information contained in a former client's file. Comment [15] to Rule 1.6 emphasizes that Rule 1.6(b) permits disclosure only to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to accomplish one of the purposes specified in the exceptions set out in paragraph (b). Disclosure should be no greater than what is reasonably necessary to accomplish the purpose. Therefore, once a lawyer has determined that disclosure of confidential or privileged information is necessary to respond to a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, and once the lawyer has decided to make that disclosure, the lawyer still has a duty to avoid the disclosure of information that is not responsive to the specific claim. In the same vein, a prosecutor requesting information from defense counsel in relation to an ineffective assistance of counsel claim must limit his request to information relevant to the defendant's specific allegations of ineffective assistance. See Rule 3.8; Rule 4.4.

2012 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

July 20, 2012

Use of Client Testimonials in Advertising

Opinion rules that testimonials that discuss characteristics of a lawyer's client service may be used in lawyer advertising without the use of a disclaimer. Testimonials that refer generally to results may be used so long as the testimonial is accompanied by an appropriate disclaimer. The reference to specific dollar amounts in client testimonials is prohibited.

Inquiry #1:

Are testimonials that merely imply positive results but do not state specific results considered "soft" endorsements under 2007 FEO 4? Some examples are, "the attorney did a great job for me," "I was pleased with the outcome of my case," or "I can get my life back on track now."

Are testimonials that do not include any specific monetary amounts but do indicate a favorable result considered soft endorsements? Some examples of these types of testimonials are, "He was able to get my case settled to my satisfaction," "the charges against me were dropped/dismissed," "my medical bills were covered/paid," or "I was able to get Social Security/workers' compensation benefits."

If these kinds of testimonials are not considered soft endorsements, are they still permissible in legal advertising? Do they require disclaimer language similar to language required by 2009 FEO 16?

Opinion #1:

Testimonials that discuss characteristics of a lawyer's client service may be used in lawyer advertising without the use of a disclaimer. Testimonials that refer generally to results may be used so long as the testimonial is accompanied by an appropriate disclaimer. The reference to specific dollar amounts in client testimonials is prohibited.

Rule 7.1 provides that a lawyer shall not make a false or misleading communication about the lawyer or the lawyer's services. A communication that is likely to create an unjustified expectation about results the lawyer can achieve is misleading. Rule 7.1(a)(2). Depending upon their content, client testimonials have the potential to create unjustified expectations.

A distinction can be drawn between "hard" and "soft" testimonials. A "hard" testimonial goes to the outcome of a case or matter. A "soft" testimonial does not go to the outcome of the case or matter, but rather focuses on shared values or characteristics of the lawyer's client service.

The Ethics Committee has concluded that a lawyer may incorporate "soft" client endorsements in their advertising materials without violating Rule 7.1. See 2007 FEO 4. A lawyer may use client testimonials stating that a lawyer handled a case efficiently, always acted in a professional manner, was considerate of the client's particular needs, etc. Examples of other soft endorsements include:

- "The lawyer was very knowledgeable."
- "The service provided by the law firm was excellent."
- "The attorney was very patient."
- "We were very impressed and pleased with the commitment to service."
- "My experience was one of courtesy and I found myself at ease at all times."

See Conn. Informal Op. 01-07 (2001). These statements are permissible under Rule 7.1 because they do not refer to the outcome of a particular matter and do not create unjustified expectations about the results the lawyer can achieve in any case.

"Hard" testimonials, or testimonials that indicate a particular favorable result in a case, have the potential to mislead a potential client to form an unjustified expectation that the same results can be obtained on his or her behalf. Examples of such statements include:

- "The charges against me were dropped/dismissed."
- "My medical bills were covered/paid."
- "I was able to get Social Security/workers' compensation benefits."
- "My lawyer settled my case for "$500,000."

Comment [3] to Rule 7.1 states that the creation of unjustified expectations may be prevented by the use of an appropriate disclaimer. In that regard, the Ethics Committee previously approved the use of disclaimers to cure the potentially misleading nature of case summary sections on a law firm's website. See 2009 FEO 16. The New York State Bar has applied the same rationale to client testimonials. See NY State Bar Assoc. Comm. on Prof'l Ethics, Op. 771 (2003).

We similarly conclude that a lawyer may include in marketing materials client testimonials that refer generally to the outcome of a specific matter, so long as the testimonials are accompanied by an appropriate and effective disclaimer. The reference to specific dollar amounts in client testimonials is prohibited.

The disclaimer must comply with the requirements set out in Rule 7.1(b) pertaining to communications containing dramatizations. Pursuant to Rule 7.1(b), the disclaimer may be oral or written. The disclaimer must appear or be spoken at the beginning and the end of the communication and must be conspicuous. For example, any written disclaimer accompanying a written testimonial must be printed in the same font size and color as the font size and color used for the testimonial. Any oral disclaimer accompanying an oral testimonial must be spoken at the same volume as the testimonial and must be spoken at a conversational speed that is easily understood.

A written disclaimer accompanying an oral testimonial on a television advertisement must appear on the screen in a conspicuous font size and color and must appear for a sufficient amount of time that a lawyer can reasonably conclude that a reasonably competent individual viewing the advertisement has the time to read the disclaimer.

For video testimonials embedded in a law firm website, the video may contain the written or oral disclaimer as described above. Alternatively, the webpage containing the link to the testimonial video may display a conspicuous written disclaimer directly above or below the link to the video containing the testimonial.

Inquiry #2:

Are the requirements under the Rules of Professional Conduct for client testimonials in television, radio advertisements, billboards, or video clips on websites different than the requirements for testimonials in written or printed materials?

Opinion #2:

No. However, certain mediums would not allow for a disclaimer that would meet the requirements set out above. For example, it is not reasonable to expect a driver to have time to read a disclaimer on a roadside billboard.

2012 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

January 25, 2013

Lawyer-Mediator's Preparation of Contract for Pro Se Parties to Mediation

Opinion rules that a lawyer-mediator may not draft a business contract for pro se parties to mediation.

Inquiry:

May a mediator, who is also a lawyer, draft a business contract for two business proprietors at the conclusion of a successful mediation concerning a matter that is not currently the subject of litigation when neither party is represented by individual counsel?

Opinion:

No. It is a non-consentable conflict of interest.

Rule 1.12(a) allows a lawyer to represent a party in connection with a matter in which the lawyer participated personally and substantially as a mediator if all parties to the proceeding give informed consent, confirmed in writing. However, under Rule 1.7(a), joint representation of two parties to an agreement presents a concurrent conflict of interest even if the lawyer-mediator has their consent.

Although Rule 1.7(b) provides for circumstances under which a lawyer may represent joint clients, an analysis of the risks associated with the proposed joint representation leads to the conclusion that such representation is not appropriate. Therefore, the lawyer-mediator should not draft the business contract.

When contemplating joint representation, a lawyer must consider whether the interests of the parties will be adequately protected if they are permitted to give their informed consent to the representation, and whether an independent lawyer would advise the parties to consent to the conflict of interest. Representation is prohibited if the lawyer cannot reasonably conclude that he will be able to provide competent and diligent representation to all clients. See Rule 1.7, cmt. [15]. As stated in comment [29] to Rule 1.7, the representation of multiple clients "is improper when it is unlikely that impartiality can be maintained."

The complex issues that must be addressed when crafting a comprehensive business contract may result in adverse interests. Even if the parties agree on the broad outlines of a business contract at the conclusion of the mediation, a disinterested lawyer will not be able to conclude that the interests of each party can be completely represented. With respect to the terms on which there appear to be agreement, one or both parties may benefit from a disinterested lawyer's advice as to whether the agreement meets with the party's legitimate objectives, and what other procedural alternatives may be available to achieve more favorable terms. In the instant inquiry, neither party is represented by individual counsel.

Joint representation could lead to questions about the integrity of the mediation process. The lawyer's duty to provide each client with necessary and appropriate advice might require informing one party that they made a "bad deal" during the mediation process. It is untenable for a lawyer to counsel a client that an agreement the lawyer-mediator has assisted him to reach in mediation may not be in that client's best interests. If the ultimate agreement turns out to be one-sided and unfavorable to one party, the lawyer-mediator's role could be closely scrutinized.

Finally there is the risk that the proposed joint representation will fail or that the business contract will be the subject of future litigation between the two parties. In either event, the parties will have to retain new lawyers for the subsequent litigation.

For the reasons cited above, the lawyer-mediator in the facts presented may not jointly represent both parties by drafting their new business contract.

Regardless of the above analysis, the lawyer-mediator will be governed by the Supreme Court's Standards of Professional Conduct for Mediators, which may also prohibit the lawyer's representation of one or more of the parties following the mediation.

This opinion does not prohibit a lawyer-mediator from assisting the parties in preparing a written summary reflecting the parties' mutually acceptable understanding of the issues resolved in the mediation, as long as the lawyer-mediator does not represent to the pro se parties that the summary is being prepared as a legally enforceable document.

2012 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

July 20, 2012

Imposition of Finance Charges on Delinquent Client Account in Absence of Advance Agreement

Opinion rules that a lawyer may charge interest on a delinquent client account, without an advance agreement with the client, to the extent and in the manner permitted by law.

Inquiry:

A law firm would like to impose finance charges on delinquent client accounts pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat. § 24-11. N.C. Gen. Stat. § 24-11(a) provides in part:

On the extension of credit under an open-end credit or similar plan...under which no service charge shall be imposed upon the consumer or debtor if the account is paid within 25 days from the billing date, there may be charged and collected interest, finance charges, or other fees at a rate in the aggregate not to exceed one and one-half percent (1 1/2%) per month on the unpaid balance of the previous month...

May the law firm impose finance charges pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat. § 24-11 although a client has not agreed to such finance charges in advance?

Opinion:

Yes. 98 FEO 3 provides that if a lawyer wants to charge up to one and one-half percent per month interest on the unpaid portion of a client's balance from the previous month, the lawyer must comply with N.C. Gen. Stat. §24-11, conform his conduct as a creditor to the requirements of any other applicable consumer credit laws, and have an agreement to this effect with the client.

In contrast to 98 FEO 3, case law has interpreted N.C. Gen. Stat. § 24-11 to allow a service provider to impose a monthly finance charge upon an overdue open-credit account without an advance agreement so long as the service provider gives advance notice of the intention to impose the finance charges. See, e.g., Hydes Ins. Agency Inc. v. Nolan, 30 N.C. App. 503 (1976), 227 S.E.2d 169; Inco v. Planters Oil Mill, 63 N.C. App. 374, 304 S.E.2d 782 (1983); Hedgecock Builders Supply Co. v. White, 92 N.C. App. 535, 375 S.E.2d 164 (1989). The finance charges may only be collected on amounts that become due after initial notice by the creditor that it is going to collect the charges.

Case law further provides that such notification is sufficient if it occurs at the time the credit is initially extended, or if it occurs at any point prior to the time when the amounts on which the finance charges are applied become due. Hedgecock Builders Supply Co. v. White, 92 N.C. App. 535, 375 S.E.2d 164 (1989); Harrell Oil Co. v. Case, 543 S.E.2d 522 (2001). N.C. Gen. Stat. §24-11 requires that a bill for the balance due on an account must be mailed to the customer at least 14 days prior to the date specified in the statement as being the date by which payment of the new balance must be made to avoid the imposition of any finance charge. N.C. Gen. Stat. §24-11(d).

The Ethics Committee has concluded that the notice required by law is sufficient to protect the interests of clients with delinquent accounts. Therefore, a lawyer may charge interest on unpaid balances for legal services to the extent and in the manner permitted by law. To the extent that the case law on the issue of notice is unclear, the Ethics Committee requires that any such notice must be in writing. See Rule 1.5 (recommending written fee agreements).

98 FEO 3 is overruled to the extent that it conflicts with this opinion.

2012 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

January 25, 2013

Screening Lateral Hire Who Formerly Represented Adverse Organization

Opinion rules that a lawyer who represented an organization while employed with another firm must be screened from participation in any matter, or any matter substantially related thereto, in which she previously represented the organization, and from any matter against the organization if she acquired confidential information of the organization that is relevant to the matter and which has not become generally known.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney J was employed with Law Firm H where she did workers' compensation defense work. During this time, Attorney J handled many such cases for Large Manufacturer and its insurer. In addition, Attorney J was privy to Large Manufacturer's workers' compensation policies and procedures, litigation strategies, and system for case preparation. Attorney J participated in workers' compensation strategy meetings with representatives of Large Manufacturer as well as with defense counsel from Law Firm Y, another firm providing workers' compensation defense representation to Large Manufacturer.

Attorney J resigned from Law Firm H to work for Law Firm S, a plaintiffs' personal injury firm that routinely handles workers' compensation cases against Large Manufacturer.

May Attorney J work at Law Firm S?

Opinion #1:

Yes, if Attorney J is properly screened from participation in (1) any matter in which Attorney J represented Large Manufacturer or any other adverse party; (2) any matter that is substantially related to a matter in which Attorney J represented Large Manufacturer; and (3) any matter in which a lawyer with Law Firm H represents or represented Large Manufacturer or any other adverse party and about which Attorney J acquired material confidential information while she was employed with Law Firm H. Written notice of the screen must be given to Large Manufacturer and any other affected former client.

Rule 1.9(a) prohibits a lawyer who has formerly represented a client in a matter from thereafter representing an adverse party in the same or a substantially related matter unless the former client gives informed consent. This provision of the rule prohibits Attorney J from representing any workers' compensation claimant on a claim for which she formerly defended Large Manufacturer and from representing any claimant on a claim that is substantially related to a matter upon which Attorney J formerly represented Large Manufacturer.

Comment [3] to Rule 1. 9 provides the following explanation of disqualification because of substantial relationship:

> [m]atters are "substantially related" for purposes of this Rule if they involve the same transaction or legal dispute or if there otherwise is a substantial risk that information as would normally have been obtained in the prior representation would materially advance the client's position in the subsequent matter... Information that has been disclosed to the public or to other parties adverse to the former client ordinarily will not be disqualifying. Information acquired in a prior representation may have been rendered obsolete by the passage of time, a circumstance that may be relevant in determining whether two representations are substantially related. In the case of an organizational client, general knowledge of the client's policies and practices ordinarily will not preclude a subsequent representation; on the other hand, knowledge of specific facts gained in a prior representation that are relevant to the matter in question ordinarily will preclude such a representation.

The substantial relationship test serves as a proxy for requiring a former client to disclose confidential information to demonstrate that the lawyer has a conflict of interest:

> A former client is not required to reveal the information learned by the lawyer to establish a substantial risk that the lawyer has information to use in the subsequent matter. A conclusion about the possession of such information may be based on the nature of the services the lawyer provided the former client and information that would in ordinary practice be learned by a lawyer providing such services.

Rule 1.9, cmt. [3].

Rule 1.9(b) prohibits a lawyer from representing anyone in the same or a substantially related matter in which a firm with which the lawyer was formerly associated had previously represented the adverse party and about whom the lawyer acquired confidential, material information, unless the former client gives informed consent. This provision of the rule prohibits Attorney J from representing a workers' compensation claimant in a matter in which one of the other lawyers at Law Firm H defended Large Manufacturer and about which Attorney J acquired confidential information that is material to the matter.

If Attorney J is disqualified under any provision of Rule 1.9, Rule 1.10(c) permits screening of Attorney J to avoid imputing her disqualification to the other lawyers in her new firm. The rule provides:

> [w]hen a lawyer becomes associated with a firm, no lawyer associated in the firm shall knowingly represent a person in a matter in which that lawyer is disqualified under Rule 1.9 unless:
>
> (1) the personally disqualified lawyer is timely screened from any participation in the matter; and
>
> (2) written notice is promptly given to any affected former client to enable it to ascertain compliance with the provisions of this Rule.

Comment [4] to Rule 1.9, which relates to lawyers moving between firms, elucidates the policy considerations justifying the use of screens in this situation:

> [w]hen lawyers have been associated within a firm but then end their association, the question of whether a lawyer should undertake representation is more complicated. There are several competing considerations. First, the client previously represented by the former firm must be reasonably assured that the principle of loyalty to the client is not compromised. Second, the rule should not be so broadly cast as to preclude other persons from having reasonable choice of legal counsel. Third, the rule should not unreasonably hamper lawyers from forming new associations and taking on new clients after having left a previous association. In this connection, it should be recognized that today many lawyers practice in firms, that many lawyers to some degree limit their practice to one field or another, and that many move from one association to another several times in their careers. If the concept of imputation were applied with unqualified rigor, the result would be radical curtailment of the opportunity of lawyers to move from one practice setting to another and of the opportunity of clients to change counsel.

As long as a screen is implemented to isolate Attorney J from participation in these matters, the consent of Large Manufacturer to the representation of the claimants by a lawyer with Law Firm S is not required. See Rule 1.0(l) and 2003 FEO 8 (setting forth screening procedures).

Inquiry #2:

Large Manufacturer contends that any new workers' compensation claims against Large Manufacturer that Attorney J handles at Law Firm S will be substantially related to her prior representation of Large Manufacturer because Attorney J was privy to information about Large Manufacturer's defense of workers' compensation cases and this information will materially advance the interests of any client with a workers' compensation claim against Large Manufacturer.

May Attorney J represent claimants on new workers' compensation cases against Large Manufacturer if the claimant did not seek representation from Law Firm S until after Attorney J's employment?

Opinion #2:

It depends. If a new matter is not the same or substantially related to Attorney J's prior representations of Large Manufacturer, she is not disqualified from the representation unless, during her prior employment with Law Firm H, she acquired confidential information of Large Manufacturer that is material or relevant to the representation of the new client, may be used to the disadvantage of Large Manufacturer, and is not generally known. Attorney J has a continuing duty under paragraphs (a) and (b) of Rule 1.9 to monitor any new matter involving Large Manufacturer to determine whether it is substantially related to her prior representation of her former client or she acquired confidential information from Large Manufacturer that is material to the matter. If so, she is personally disqualified and must be screened. See Opinion #1.

Even if the matters are not substantially related, however, Attorney J has a continuing duty under paragraph (c) of Rule 1.9 to ensure that the representation will not result in the misuse of confidential information of Large Manufacturer. Rule 1.9(c) prohibits a lawyer who has formerly represented a client in a matter or whose former firm has formerly represented a client in a matter from thereafter using confidential information relating to the representation to the disadvantage of the former client except as allowed by the Rules or when the information has become "generally known." A screen must be promptly implemented to isolate Attorney J from participation in any such case. See Opinion #1.

Comment [8] to Rule 1.9 explains the exception for information that is "generally known" as follows:

> ...the fact that a lawyer has once served a client does not preclude the lawyer from using generally known information about that client when later representing another client. Whether information is "generally known" depends in part upon how the information was obtained and in part upon the former client's reasonable expectations. The mere fact that information is accessible through the public record or has become known to some other persons does not necessarily deprive the information of its confidential nature. If the information is known or readily available to a relevant sector of the public, such as the parties involved in the matter, then the information is probably considered "generally known."

Similarly, the Restatement (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyers adopts an access approach to the determination of what information is "generally known":

> Whether information is generally known depends on all circumstances relevant in obtaining the information. Information contained in books or records in public libraries, public-record depositaries such as government offices, or in publicly accessible electronic-data storage is generally known if the particular information is obtainable through publicly available indexes and similar methods of access. Information is not generally known when a person interested in knowing the information could obtain it only by means of special knowledge or substantial difficulty or expense. Special knowledge includes information about the whereabouts or identity of a person or other source from which the information can be acquired if those facts are not themselves generally known.

Restatement (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyer, §59, cmt. d.

Attorney J's general knowledge of Large Manufacturer's workers' compensation case management, settlement, and litigation policies and practices may be sufficient in some matters to disqualify her. As observed in the discussion of "substantial relationship" in comment [3] to Rule 1.9, "[i]n the case of an organizational client, general knowledge of the client's policies and practices ordinarily will not preclude a subsequent representation; on the other hand, knowledge of specific facts gained in a prior representation that are relevant to the matter in question ordinarily will preclude such a representation."

When evaluating whether a representation is substantially related to a prior representation of an organizational client or whether a lawyer acquired confidential information of a former organizational client that is substantially relevant to the representation of a client and may be used to the disadvantage of the former client, the following factors, among others, should be considered: the length of time that the lawyer represented the former client; the lawyer's role in representing the former client, including the lawyer's presence at strategy and decision-making sessions for the former client; the relative authority of the lawyer to make decisions about the representation of the former client; the passage of time since the lawyer represented the former client;[1] the extent to which there are material factual and legal similarities between former and present representations; and the substantial relevance of the former client's litigation policies, strategies, and practices to the new matter.

Inquiry #3:

May the other lawyers in Law Firm S represent claimants on new workers' compensation cases against Large Manufacturer?

Opinion #3:

Yes, if Attorney J is screened from those matters for which she acquired confidential information of Large Manufacturer that is disqualifying. See Opinion #2.

Inquiry #4:

Should Attorney J be screened from participation in workers' compensation cases against Large Manufacturer that were defended by lawyers from Law Firm Y while Attorney J was employed by Law Firm H?

Opinion #4:

Yes, if she acquired confidential information of Large Manufacturer that is disqualifying. See Opinion #2.

Inquiry #5:

Large Manufacturer has many long-term employees who over time may file multiple workers' compensation claims against Large Manufacturer. If Lawyer J or another lawyer with Law Firm H defended Large Manufacturer against a particular employee while Attorney J was employed by the firm, it is contended that there is a substantial risk that Attorney J will have specific confidential information of Large Manufacturer that would be relevant and useful to the representation of the particular claimant. For example, a manager's thoughts and opinions regarding the claimant could be information that would not be generally known and which might be used to the disadvantage of Large Manufacturer.

May Attorney J represent a claimant on a new workers' compensation case against Large Manufacturer if the claimant had previously filed a workers' compensation case against Large Manufacturer that was defended by a lawyer from Law Firm H while Attorney J was employed by the firm?

Opinion #5:

As stated in Opinion #2, Attorney J has a continuing duty to monitor any matter involving Large Manufacturer to be sure that the representation will not result in the use of confidential information of Large Manufacturer that has not become generally known to the disadvantage of Large Manufacturer in violation of Rule 1.9(c). A screen must be promptly implemented to isolate Attorney J from participation in any such matter.

Endnote

1. For an example of a timeframe deemed to be sufficient to manage post-employment conflicts of interest for federal government employees, see the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, 18 U.S.C.§207(c).

2012 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

October 26, 2012

Reviewing Employee's Email Communications with Counsel Using Employer's Business Email System

Opinion rules that a lawyer representing an employer must evaluate whether email messages an employee sent to and received from the employee's lawyer using the employer's business email system are protected by the attorney-client privilege and, if so, decline to review or use the messages unless a court determines that the messages are not privileged.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney A represents Employer on various matters including legal disputes with its employees. Employer has a business email system that is available to all employees and that is used for transacting Employer's business. Employer's personnel policy states that Employer may monitor emails sent or received using Employer's email system, specifically including email sent or received on any employee's business email account.

Employee is in a legal dispute with Employer. Employee has used his business email account on Employer's email system to send emails to his lawyer and he has received emails from his lawyer on his business email account on Employer's email system.

Does a lawyer have a duty to avoid communicating with a client over the email system of the client's employer?

Opinion #1:

A lawyer must avoid communications with a client over an employer's email system if there is a risk that the employer will find and read the emails. The duty of confidentiality, set forth in Rule 1.6 of the Rules of Professional Conduct, requires a lawyer "to act competently to safeguard information relating to the representation of a client against inadvertent or unauthorized disclosure by the lawyer…." Rule 1.6, cmt. [17]. Comment [18] to the rule adds that, when transmitting confidential client information, a lawyer must take "reasonable precautions to prevent the information from coming into the hands of unintended recipients."

Where a lawyer knows or reasonably should know that a client is using an employer's email system to communicate with the lawyer, the lawyer should seek to avoid the use of the employer's system regardless of whether the legal matter is unrelated to the client's employment and regardless of whether there is a legal argument that use of the system does not waive the attorney-client privilege. The duty of confidentiality is more expansive than the attorney-client privilege. It requires a lawyer to protect confidential information from disclosure to "any unintended recipient." The lawyer should explore with the client alternative methods of communicating including use of the employee's personal email system, telephone, and texting.

Inquiry #2:

May Attorney A tell Employer to review the records for its email system to retrieve any personal email messages sent or received by Employee on Employee's business email account?

Opinion #2:

Attorney A should research the law relating to the recovery, identification and production of employee email, including the law on attorney-client privilege, and advise Employer as to its rights and responsibilities under the law. See Rule 4.4(a)("In representing a client, a lawyer shall not...use methods of obtaining evidence that violate the legal rights of…a person.")

Inquiry #3:

Employer reviews the records of its email system and discovers email messages between Employee and his lawyer. The emails from the lawyer contain the statement "Attorney-Client Confidential Communication." Employer informs Attorney A that it has copies of these messages.

May Attorney A review the email messages?

Opinion #3:

In the absence of a Rule of Professional Conduct or prior ethics opinion on point, the Ethics Committee was guided by the case law on the application of the attorney-client privilege to communications between a client and his lawyer over an employer's email system. The attorney-client privilege is fundamental to the client-lawyer relationship and the trust that underpins that relationship. As such, the bar must protect the privilege and seek to limit incursions upon the privilege that are not warranted by law.

Case law from many jurisdictions,[1] including North Carolina,[2] indicates that whether the privilege applies to email exchanges between an employee and his lawyer that occurred over an employer's email system depends upon whether the employee had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the email communications. This in turn requires an investigation into a myriad of factors, including whether the employer has a clear, unambiguous policy regarding email usage and monitoring; whether that policy is effectively communicated to employees; whether the policy is adhered to by the employer; whether third parties have access to the employee's email account on the employer's system; when/where the communication occurred (at home or the office; during work or leisure hours); and whether the employee took affirmative steps to preserve the privacy of the communication. See, e.g., In re Asia Global Crossing, Ltd., 322 B.R. 247, 258 (S.D.N.Y. 2005)(in considering whether employee has objectively reasonable expectation of privacy in emails sent to the employee's attorney over the employer's computer systems, court should consider (1) does the corporation maintain a policy banning personal or other objectionable use, (2) does the company monitor the use of the employee's computer or email, (3) do third parties have a right of access to the computer or emails, and (4) did the corporation notify the employee, or was the employee aware, of the use and monitoring policies).

Therefore, whether Attorney A may read the email messages recovered by Employer will depend upon an analysis of the case law and the factors set forth therein to determine whether Employee had a reasonable expectation of privacy or, lacking that, waived the privilege when communicating with his lawyer using Employer's email system. If Attorney A is able to conclude, confidently and in good faith, that the privilege was waived, he may read the emails and use them to represent his client. However, in deference to the bar's interest in protecting the attorney-client privilege, Attorney A should err on the side of recognizing the privilege whenever an analysis of the facts and case law is inconclusive. If a matter is in litigation, Attorney A may seek the court's determination of the waiver issue.

Inquiry #4:

Does Attorney A have to notify Employee's lawyer that Employer has copies of the email messages?

Opinion #4:

No. Rule 4.4(b) is not applicable in this situation. The rule states that "[a] lawyer who receives a writing relating to the representation of the lawyer's client and knows or reasonably should know that the writing was inadvertently sent shall promptly notify the sender." Employee and his lawyer sent the email messages knowingly using Employer's email system. Therefore, the email was not "inadvertently sent" and no duty to notify arises under this rule. See ABA Formal Opinion 11-460 (2011).

2009 FEO 1 (2010) can be distinguished. The opinion rules that a lawyer must notify the sender upon finding confidential information embedded in metadata transmitted in an electronic communication. The transmission of metadata, which is not disclosed on the face of an electronic document, is held to be inadvertent on the part of the sending lawyer, thus triggering a duty to notify for the receiving lawyer under Rule 4.4(b). However, in the instant situation, the substance of the communications between the employee and his lawyer are disclosed on the face of the emails and use of the employer's system was intentional. Therefore, the emails were not "inadvertently sent."

In the absence of a duty to notify, the fact that Employer has copies of the email messages is confidential client information that Attorney A may not disclose unless one of the exceptions to the duty of confidentiality applies or the client gives informed consent to disclosure. Rule 1.6(a). In the current situation, Rule 1.6(b)(1) only allows the lawyer to disclose confidential client information to comply with the law, a court order, or the discovery requirements under the Rules of Civil Procedure.

The ABA Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility (the Standing Committee) addressed a similar inquiry in ABA Formal Opinion 11-460 (2011), and found that notification is only allowed with client consent in the absence of a law authorizing disclosure. As observed by the Standing Committee,

> [I]f no law can reasonably be read as establishing a reporting obligation, then the decision whether to give notice must be made by the employer-client. Even when there is no clear notification obligation, it often will be in the employer-client's best interest to give notice and obtain a judicial ruling as to the admissibility of the employee's attorney-client communications before attempting to use them and, if possible, before the employer's lawyer reviews them. This course minimizes the risk of disqualification or other sanction if the court ultimately concludes that the opposing party's communications with counsel are privileged and inadmissible. The employer's lawyer must explain these and other implications of disclosure, and the available alternatives, as necessary to enable the employer to make an informed decision.

Inquiry #5:

Employee has a personal email account with a commercial email service (such as Gmail, Hotmail, or Road Runner) that is not a part of Employer's business email system. However, the personal email account can be accessed via Employee's office computer. The personal email account is password protected. Employer can access the email messages on this personal email account by changing the password to the account.

May Attorney A advise Employer to change the password to access Employee's email messages on his personal email account?

Opinion #5:

No. To advise a client to change the password to a personal email account violates Rule 1.2(d), which prohibits a lawyer from counseling a client to engage in criminal or fraudulent conduct, and Rule 8.4(c), which prohibits a lawyer from engaging in conduct involving dishonesty, fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation. Again, obtaining a judicial ruling allowing Employer to access the email messages would authorize the Employer to proceed and avoid any professional misconduct by Attorney A.

Inquiry #6:

On its own initiative, Employer changes the password on Employee's personal email account and gains access to emails on the account including email messages between Employee and his lawyer.

May Attorney A review the email messages? Should Attorney A notify Employee's lawyer that Employer has copies of the email messages?

Opinion #6:

No. Attorney A may not review the email messages unless allowed to do so by court order. To hold otherwise would be to permit a lawyer to assist a client in fraudulent conduct in violation of Rule 1.2(d) and Rule 8.4(c).

Attorney A may not notify Employee's lawyer that Employer has copies of the email messages unless he has the informed consent of Employer or if Attorney A believes that notification is reasonably necessary to comply with law or a court order. Rule 1.6(a) and (b)(1). As noted above, it may be in Employer's best interest to obtain a judicial ruling on the admissibility of the email messages and this should be explained to Employer to obtain consent to disclose.

Inquiry #7:

Lawyers who are employed by government agencies that are subject to public records laws frequently are required to review emails of government employees to ascertain whether the emails are public records and must be produced pursuant to a public records request. Because all emails are subject to review to comply with the public records law, emails between a government employee and his lawyer would be subject to the same review. May a government lawyer participate in such a review?

Opinion #7:

Yes. The review is required by law and it is in the best interests of the government and the public that the review be performed by lawyers. However, if emails between a government employee and his lawyer are evaluated and held not to be public records, the government lawyer must further determine whether the attorney-client privilege for the communications was waived by the employee by the use of the government's email system. See Opinion #2 above. If the lawyer determines that the privilege was not waived or the lawyer cannot confidently and in good faith make that determination, the lawyer should recognize the privilege and take steps to protect the communications from further disclosure or distribution unless authorized by court order.

Endnotes

1. The Ethics Committee is grateful to the North Carolina Bar Association Labor and Employment Law Section Council for the following list of relevant cases: Convertino v. US DOJ, 674 F. Supp. 2d 97 (D.D.C. 2009); Curto v. Medical World Comms. Inc., 2006 US Dist. LEXIS 29387 (EDNY 2006); Curto v. Medical World Comms. Inc., 2006 US Dist. LEXIS 29387 (EDNY 2006); Garrity v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., No. 00-12143-RWZ, 2002 US Dist. LEXIS 8343 (D. Mass. May 7, 2002); Haynes v. Office of the Attorney General, 298 F.Supp.2d 1154 (D. Kan. 2003); Holmes v. Petrovich Dev. Co., LLC, 191 Cal. App.4th 1047, 119 Cal.Rptr.3d 878 (2011); Kaufman v. Sungard Inv. Sys., No. 05-CV-1236, 2006 US Dist. LEXIS 28149 (DNJ 2006) (unpub.); Leor Exploration & Prod'n LLC v. Aguiar, No. 09-60136-CIV, 2009 US Dist. LEXIS 87323 (SD Fla. Sept. 23, 2009); Leventhal v. Knapek, 266 F.3d 64 (2d Cir. 2001); Muick v. Glenayre Elecs., 280 F.3d 741 (7th Cir. 2002); Restuccia v. Burk Tech., 5 Mass.L.Rep. 712, 1996 Mass. Super. LEXIS 367 (Mass. Super. Ct. 1996); Scott v. Beth Israel Medical Center, Inc., 17 Misc.3d 934, 847 N.Y.S.2d 436 (NY Sup. Ct. 2007; Sims v. Lakeside School, No. CO6-1412RSM, 2007 US Dist. LEXIS 69568 (Sept. 20, 2007); Hygeson v. US Bancorp Equip. Fin'g, Inc., No. CV-03-467-ST, 2004 US Dist. LEXIS 18863 (D.Or. Sept. 15, 2004); United States v. Simons, 205 F.3d 392 (4th Cir. 2000).
2. Mason v. ILS Techs., LLC, No. 3:04-CV-139, 2008 US Dist. LEXIS 28905 (W.D.N.C. 2008) (attorney-client privilege was not waived where the employee testified that he did not know of the employer's policy on monitoring of personal emails transmitted on the employer's email system and employer failed to prove otherwise).

2012 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

October 26, 2012

Use of Leased Time-Shared Office Address or Post Office Address on Letterhead and Advertising

Opinion rules that a law firm may use a leased time-shared office address or a post office address to satisfy the address disclosure requirement for advertising communications in Rule 7.2(c) so long as certain requirements are met.

Inquiry #1:

ABC Company offers to lease office space to law firms. The office lease is a time-sharing arrangement in which lawyers use meeting rooms by appointment. Depending upon the lease, ABC Company may also provide mail forwarding and personalized call answering. ABC Company advertises that it provides businesses with "prestigious addresses" that can be utilized on business cards and stationary.

May a law firm enter into a lease with ABC Company and use the leased office address as the law firm's address on letterhead and advertising?

Opinion #1:

Yes, subject to certain requirements.

Rule 7.2(c) provides that a lawyer's advertisements must include the name and office address of at least one lawyer or law firm responsible for its content. Rule 7.1(a) provides that a lawyer shall not make a false or misleading communication about the lawyer or the lawyer's services. "It is a misleading communication for a law firm to infer that it has an office or a lawyer located in a community when, in fact, there is no law office or lawyer for the firm present in the community." RPC 217. In RPC 217, the Ethics Committee concluded that listing what appears to be a local telephone number in an advertisement in a particular community, without including an explanation that the number is not a local telephone number and that there is no law office in that community, is misleading as to the actual location of the law firm.

Similarly, it would be misleading for a law firm to use a leased time-shared office address on letterhead or in advertising to infer that the law firm has an office or a lawyer located in a community when the law firm's only connection with the community is the lease arrangement that allows a lawyer to use meeting rooms in that community on an "as needed" basis.

However, the use of a leased time-shared office address in communications may not be misleading depending upon the law firm's connection to the community or the disclosures included in the communication. Whether such a communication is misleading must be determined on a case-by-case basis.

A lawyer who does not wish to meet clients at his home, or to list his home address on letterhead and advertisements, does not mislead the public by using a time-shared leased office address on letterhead and advertisements when the lawyer actually lives in the community associated with the leased address and uses the leased office to meet with clients on a regular basis.

In addition, it is not misleading for a law firm to list a time-shared leased office address on letterhead or in advertising so long as the communication contains an explanation that accurately reflects the law firm's presence at the address (i.e.,"by appointment only").

Inquiry #2:

Lawyer operates a "virtual law firm" from an office located in her home. She communicates with her clients online and by the telephone. She does not meet with clients in person except on rare occasions at locations outside of her home. Rule 7.2(c) of the Rules of Professional Conduct requires a lawyer to include "the name and office address of at least one lawyer or law firm" on every advertisement. Lawyer would like to advertise her virtual law firm, but she does not want to include her home address in the advertisements because she is concerned about her safety and privacy. She is considering using a leased office address in her community, as described in Inquiry #1, to circumvent this problem, but would prefer not to incur this expense.

May Lawyer list her post office address, which is the address listed for her on the membership records of the North Carolina State Bar, on advertising to comply with Rule 7.2(c)?

Opinion #2:

Previously, the Ethics Committee interpreted the "office address" requirement in Rule 7.2(c) to mean a street address. However, requiring a street address in all legal advertising has proved problematic, particularly as the number of lawyers working from home offices or operating virtual law practices has increased. The requirement is no longer practical or necessary to avoid misleading the public or to insure that a lawyer responsible for the advertisement can be located by the State Bar. Moreover, the membership department of the North Carolina State Bar accepts post office addresses as a lawyer's address.

Therefore, a post office address qualifies as an "office address" for purposes of Rule 7.2(c) provided the post office address is on file as the lawyer's current mailing address in the lawyer's membership record with the North Carolina State Bar.

2012 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

October 25, 2013

Copying Represented Persons on Electronic Communications

Opinion provides that consent from the lawyer for a represented person must be obtained before copying that person on electronic communications; however, the consent required by Rule 4.2 may be implied by the facts and circumstances surrounding the communication.

Inquiry #1:

When Lawyer A sends an electronic communication, such as an email, to opposing counsel, Lawyer B, may Lawyer A "copy" Lawyer B's client on the electronic communication?

Opinion #1:

No, unless Lawyer B has consented to the communication. Rule 4.2(a), often called the "no contact rule," provides that, during the representation of a client, "a lawyer shall not communicate about the subject of the representation with a person the lawyer knows to be represented by another lawyer in the matter, unless the lawyer has the consent of the other lawyer or is authorized to do so by law or a court order." Copying the opposing party on a communication—whether electronic communication or conventional mail—to opposing counsel is a communication under Rule 4.2(a) and prohibited unless there is consent or other legal authorization.

Inquiry #2:

Would the answer change if Lawyer A is replying to an electronic communication from Lawyer B in which Lawyer B copied her own client? Does the fact that Lawyer B copied her own client on the electronic communication constitute implied consent to a "reply to all" responsive electronic communication from Lawyer A?

Opinion #2:

The fact that Lawyer B copies her own client on the electronic communication to which Lawyer A is replying, standing alone, does not permit Lawyer A to "reply all." While Rule 4.2(a) does not specifically provide that the consent of the other lawyer must be "expressly" given, the prudent practice is to obtain express consent. Whether consent may be "implied" by the circumstances requires an evaluation of all of the facts and circumstances surrounding the representation, the legal issues involved, and the prior communications between the lawyers and their clients.

The Restatement of the Law Governing Lawyers provides that an opposing lawyer's consent to communication with his client "may be implied rather than express." Rest. (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyers § 99 cmt. J. The Association of the Bar of the City of New York Committee on Professional and Judicial Ethics ("New York Committee") and the California Standing Committee on Professional Responsibility & Conduct ("California Committee") have examined this issue. Both committees concluded that, while consent to "reply to all" communications may sometimes be inferred from the facts and circumstances presented, the prudent practice is to secure express consent from opposing counsel. Ass'n of the Bar of the City of NY Comm. on Prof'l and Judicial Ethics, Formal Op. 2009-1; CA Standing Comm. on Prof'l Responsibility & Conduct, Formal Op. 2011-181.

There are scenarios where the necessary consent may be implied by the totality of the facts and circumstances. However, the fact that a lawyer copies his own client on an electronic communication does not, in and of itself, constitute implied consent to a "reply to all" responsive electronic communication. Other factors need to be considered before a lawyer can reasonably rely on implied consent. These factors include, but are not limited to: (1) how the communication is initiated; (2) the nature of the matter (transactional or adversarial); (3) the prior course of conduct of the lawyers and their clients; and (4) the extent to which the communication might interfere with the client-lawyer relationship. These factors need to be considered in conjunction with the purposes behind Rule 4.2. Comment [1] to Rule 4.2 provides:

> [Rule 4.2] contributes to the proper functioning of the legal system by protecting a person who has chosen to be represented by a lawyer in a matter against possible overreaching by other lawyers who are participating in the matter, interference by those lawyers with the client-lawyer relationship, and the uncounselled disclosure of information relating to the representation.

After considering each of these factors, and the intent of Rule 4.2, Lawyer A must make a good faith determination whether Lawyer B has manifested implied consent to a "reply to all" responsive electronic communication from Lawyer A.

Caution should especially be taken if Lawyer B's client responds to a "group" electronic communication by using the "reply to all" function. Lawyer A may need to reevaluate the above factors before responding further. Under no circumstances may Lawyer A respond solely to Lawyer B's client.

Because of the ease with which "reply to all" electronic communications may be sent, the potential for interference with the attorney-client relationship, and the potential for inadvertent waiver by the client of the client-lawyer privilege, it is advisable that a lawyer sending an electronic communication, who wants to ensure that his client does not receive any electronic communication responses from the receiving lawyer or parties, should forward the electronic communication separately to his client, blind copy the client on the original electronic communication, or expressly state to the recipients of the electronic communication, including opposing counsel, that consent is not granted to copy the client on a responsive electronic communication.

To avoid a possible incorrect assumption of implied consent, the prudent practice is for all counsel involved in a matter to establish at the outset a procedure for determining whether it is acceptable to "reply to all" when a represented party is copied on an electronic communication.

2012 Formal Ethics Opinion 8

October 26, 2012

Lawyer's Acceptance of Recommendations on Professional Networking Website

Opinion rules that a lawyer may ask a former client for a recommendation to be posted on the lawyer's profile on a professional networking website and may accept a recommendation if certain conditions are met.

Inquiry #1:

Lawyer has a profile listing on a professional social networking website, such as LinkedIn. The networking website has a feature that allows members to write recommendations for each other. A member of the networking website may request a recommendation from another member, or a member may send a recommendation to another member without being asked. In either event, the member receiving the recommendation has the opportunity to review the recommendation and decide whether to "accept" the recommendation. For a recommendation to be published on the member's online profile, it has to "accepted."

May a lawyer with a professional profile on the networking website accept a recommendation from a current or former client?

Opinion #1:

Yes. When a lawyer has control over the content of postings on his or her profile on the networking website, the lawyer may accept a recommendation from a current or former client subject to certain conditions. The lawyer may only "accept" recommendations that comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct that pertain to advertising. Rule 7.1 provides that a lawyer shall not make a false or misleading communication about the lawyer or the lawyer's services. A communication that is likely to create an unjustified expectation about results the lawyer can achieve is misleading. Rule 7.1(a)(2).

A recommendation posted on the networking website is essentially a client testimonial. Depending upon content, a client testimonial has the potential to create unjustified expectations. The Ethics Committee recently established guidelines under which a lawyer may use certain client testimonials in advertising. See 2012 FEO 1. A lawyer may only accept a recommendation from a current or former client if the recommendation complies with 2012 FEO 1.

Pursuant to 2012 FEO 1, a lawyer may accept a client recommendation that is limited to a discussion of the characteristics of a lawyer's client service. If the recommendation includes general references to the results the lawyer obtained for the client, the lawyer may accept the recommendation if it can be accompanied by an appropriate disclaimer. The lawyer may not accept a recommendation that refers to a settlement or verdict of a specific dollar amount. In addition, the lawyer must review the recommendation for any confidential information that the lawyer believes should not be published online. Therefore, it may be necessary for the lawyer to ask the client to add disclaiming language or to delete certain content.

Inquiry #2:

May a lawyer with a professional profile on the networking website send a recommendation request to a current or former client?

Opinion #2:

Yes, subject to certain conditions. A lawyer may ask a current or former client for a recommendation that consists of comments indicating the client's level of satisfaction with certain aspects of the lawyer-client relationship. See 2007 FEO 4.

The lawyer's duty of confidentiality to the client requires that the lawyer advise the client, at the time of the request, that the recommendation may be published on the member's online profile, and the lawyer must obtain the client's consent to publication.

The lawyer's duties as to a recommendation received pursuant to the request are set out in Opinion #1 above.

2012 Formal Ethics Opinion 9

January 25, 2013

Identifying the Roles and Responsibilities of a Lawyer Appointed to Represent a Child or the Child's Best Interests in a Contested Custody or Visitation Case

Opinion holds that a lawyer asked to represent a child in a contested custody or visitation case should decline the appointment unless the order of appointment identifies the lawyer's role and specifies the responsibilities of the lawyer.

Introduction:

This opinion is limited to an examination of the role of a lawyer appointed to represent a child in a contested custody or visitation proceeding. It does not examine other contexts in which a lawyer may be appointed to represent a child[1] such as when a child is alleged to be abused or neglected or is a party in civil litigation. To avoid confusion, the label "guardian ad litem" will not be used in this opinion when referring to a lawyer appointed to represent a child in a contested custody or visitation proceeding although a court may choose to apply this label. This opinion does not address or seek to question the authority of a court to appoint a lawyer to represent a child in a contested custody proceeding. It seeks only to assist the lawyer and the court to clarify the responsibilities of a lawyer serving in such a role.

In a contested custody or visitation proceeding—especially a "high conflict" proceeding—the court will, on occasion, appoint a lawyer to represent the child or children whose custody is at stake. Although the authority for such appointments is not clear[2] and may reside with the court's inherent authority to administer justice, such appointments are becoming more common as seen in recent inquiries to the Ethics Committee.[3] The appointment presents a number of difficult issues of professional responsibility for the appointed lawyer. These issues cannot be resolved unless the lawyer's role is clearly designated and understood by all of the parties to the proceeding, especially the appointed lawyer and the court.

This opinion identifies the possible roles that a lawyer appointed in a contested custody case may play and recommends that the order of appointment specify the role and responsibilities of the appointed lawyer. The opinion also addresses some specific issues of professional responsibility that arise from those roles. Although there are limited references to the Rules of Professional Conduct in this opinion, identification of the client and of the lawyer's role relative to that client is fundamental to the application of the Rules.

Inquiry #1:

What are the roles for a lawyer who is appointed to represent a child in a contested custody or visitation proceeding?

Opinion #1:

Two distinct roles for a lawyer for a child are recognized: (1) "Child's Attorney" and (2) "Best Interests Attorney."[4] As described in the American Bar Association, Section of Family Law Standards of Practice for Lawyers Representing Children in Custody Cases (2003)("ABA Standards"), the Child's Attorney "provides independent legal representation in a traditional attorney-client relationship, giving the child a strong voice in the proceedings"; the Best Interests Attorney, on the other hand, "independently investigates, assesses, and advocates the child's best interests as a lawyer."[5] The former role is "client directed" in which the lawyer serves as the traditional advocate for the objectives articulated by the child and owes the child "the same duties of undivided loyalty, confidentiality, and competent representation as are due to an adult client."[6] The latter role is "advocate directed,"[7] where the advocate's judgment is substituted for that of the child with "the purpose of protecting a child's best interests without being bound by the child's directives or objectives."[8]

Because the differences in the two roles are fundamental—particularly with regard to the lawyer's relationship to the child and responsibilities to the court—a lawyer who is appointed to represent a child in a contested custody proceeding must be sure that she knows which role she has been appointed to perform.

There is another possible role for a lawyer to play. The court may appoint a nonlawyer or a lawyer to be an advisor ("court-appointed advisor") to assist the court by investigating and reporting information to the court or by providing the court with an opinion on some matter.[9] The lawyer in such a role is not acting as an advocate or serving as counsel for either the child or the child's interests. As an advisor to the court, the lawyer may become a witness who is subject to examination by the parties. The lawyer appointed to serve in this function should also take steps to insure that the order of appointment specifies this role and its duties.

Inquiry #2:

What are the professional responsibilities of a Child's Attorney?

Opinion #2:

A Child's Attorney serves in the traditional role of counsel for the child and must fulfill that role in accordance with the Rules of Professional Conduct. The lawyer must ascertain the child's objectives for the representation and then seek to obtain those objectives within the bounds of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Rule 1.2. The lawyer owes the duty of confidentiality to the child and her communications with the child are protected by the attorney-client privilege. See Rule 1.6. If the lawyer is appointed to represent more than one child of the dissolving marriage, the lawyer must monitor the representation for potential conflicts of interest between the children's differing objectives for the representation. See Rule 1.7. If a conflict evolves that cannot be managed, the lawyer may have to decline the representation or withdraw.[10]

A lawyer who is appointed a Child's Attorney must determine whether the child is sufficiently mature and articulate to participate meaningfully in the client-lawyer relationship. As permitted by Rule 1.14(a), when a client's capacity to make adequately considered decisions is diminished "because of minority," the lawyer "shall, as far as reasonably possible, maintain a normal client-lawyer relationship with the client." However, if a child is too young to articulate his or her objectives for the representation or to make decisions about the representation, the lawyer should recommend to the court that the lawyer be appointed to serve as a Best Interests Attorney rather than a Child's Attorney.

Inquiry #3:

What are the professional responsibilities of a Best Interests Attorney?

Opinion #3:

A Best Interests Attorney is bound by the Rules of Professional Conduct "except as dictated by the absence of a traditional attorney-client relationship with the child and the particular requirements of [her] appointed tasks."[11] The lawyer must determine the child's best interests based upon objective criteria "as set forth in the law related to the purposes of the proceedings."[12] Any objectives or preferences expressed by the child are but one factor to be taken into consideration when determining the best interests of the child.

The child's communications with the Best Interests Attorney are subject to Rule 1.6, the confidentiality rule, except that "the lawyer may use the child's confidences for the purposes of the representation without disclosing them."[13] This means that the lawyer may use confidential information received from a child to develop other evidence. The example provided in the ABA Standards is of the child who discloses a parent's drug use to the Best Interests Attorney. The lawyer may not disclose the source of the information but she may investigate and present evidence of the drug use.[14]

Representation of multiple children does not create a conflict of interest for a Best Interests Attorney because the lawyer is not bound, as in a traditional client-lawyer relationship, to advocate for a client's objectives. As explained in the ABA Standards, "[a] Best Interests Attorney in such a case should report the relevant views of all the children...and advocate the children's best interests..."[15]

Inquiry #4:

What are the professional responsibilities of a court-appointed advisor?

Opinion #4:

The court-appointed advisor is not acting as a lawyer; he is not an advocate and does not represent a client or a particular interest. Rather, the advisor serves as an investigator for the court and owes the court the duty to investigate thoroughly and impartially and to report back to the court.

As an investigator who is responsible only to the court, the lawyer has no duty of confidentiality or loyalty to any of the parties or witnesses. Moreover, it is unlikely that the attorney-client privilege will attach to the lawyer/advisor's communications with parties or witnesses. When a lawyer is serving in this role, he must disclose the capacity in which he is acting to anyone who may misunderstand his role. See, e.g., Rule 4.3(b). It is not a conflict of interest for a lawyer to serve as a court-appointed advisor if he does not represent any person appearing in the matter and he does not mislead others about his role. In particular, the lawyer must explain that communications will not be held in confidence and may be reported to the court. Since the lawyer is not representing a client in the matter, the prohibition on contact with a represented person in Rule 4.2 does not apply to his communications with represented persons. However, it is recommended that the lawyer/advisor inform the other lawyer prior to speaking to his client.

Non-lawyers, such as social workers and psychologists, who are more appropriately trained to investigate and offer opinions on issues of child welfare, may be better suited to serve in the role of court-appointed advisor. At the time of appointment, a lawyer should consider whether a nonlawyer would fulfill the role better than the lawyer and, if so, the lawyer should express this opinion to the court.

Inquiry #5:

How does an appointed lawyer know which role he is being appointed to perform?

Opinion #5:

Ideally, the order of appointment will specify which role the lawyer is to perform.[16] However, because confusion about the roles is not uncommon, a lawyer who is asked to serve must help the court to articulate the lawyer's role. Standard 1.3 of the Standards for Attorneys for Children in Custody or Visitation Proceedings of the American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers ("AAML Standards") is instructive:

> Whenever a court assigns counsel for a child, the court should specify in writing the scope of the assignment and the tasks expected, preferably in the form of an order. In the event that the court does not specify these tasks at the time of appointment, the counsel's first action should be to seek clarification from the court of the tasks expected of him or her.[17]

Similarly, the ABA Standards state:

> The lawyer should accept an appointment only with full understanding of the issues and the functions to be performed. If the appointed lawyer considers parts of the appointment order confusing or incompatible with his or her ethical duties, the lawyer should (1) decline the appointment, (2) inform the court of the conflict and ask the court to clarify or change the terms of the order, or (3) both.[18]

If the order fails to identify the role and the lawyer's accompanying responsibilities, the lawyer should first request clarification. In particular, the lawyer should ask that the order articulate whether the lawyer is to be a Child's Attorney, a Best Interests Attorney (as those roles are defined above), or a court-appointed advisor. If the court indicates that the lawyer is to be a Best Interests Attorney, the lawyer should request that the order specify the duties that accompany this role. If the court indicates that the lawyer is a Child's Attorney, the lawyer should confirm that the child is capable of making decisions about important matters sufficient to establish the goals of the representation.[19] If the court indicates that the lawyer is a court-appointed advisor, the lawyer should consider whether a nonlawyer would better fulfill this role and, if so, make this recommendation to the court.

To assist with the clarification of the scope of the assignment and the tasks expected, the following questions should be answered at the time of appointment (the list is not exhaustive):

Identifying the Role

• Am I being appointed to provide independent legal representation to the child in a traditional client-lawyer relationship (the Child's Attorney role)?

- or to investigate, assess, and advocate for the child's best interests (the Best Interests Attorney role)?

- or to assist the court by investigating and reporting information to the court, or by providing the court with an opinion on some matter (the court-appointed advisor)?

Child's Attorney's Assignment and Tasks

• If appointed to be the Child's Attorney, has the child's capacity to direct the representation been established?

• If appointed to be the Child's Attorney, does the court agree

- the child will be my client;

- I will owe the child the professional responsibilities owed to any client including the protection of confidences from unauthorized disclosure and the preservation of the attorney-client privilege; and

- in accordance with Rule 3.7, it would be inappropriate in most instances for me to serve as both advocate and witness?

• If appointed to be the Child's Attorney, will I be permitted/expected to do any of the following: make an opening or closing statement, introduce evidence including witnesses, examine witnesses for any party, subpoena records or witnesses, or participate on behalf of the child/client in consent agreements between the parties?

Best Interests Attorney's Assignment and Tasks

• If appointed to be the Best Interests Attorney, what duty do I have to investigate and report to the court?

• If appointed to be the Best Interests Attorney, will my communications with the child be confidential but I may use the confidential information to develop other evidence?

• If appointed to be the Best Interests Attorney, does the court agree that, in accordance with Rule 3.7, it would be inappropriate in most instances for me to serve as both advocate (for the child's best interests) and witness?

- If the court expects me to testify, does the court understand that this may subject the child's confidences to disclosure and may jeopardize my ability to gain the trust of the child and of witnesses necessary to my investigation?

• If appointed to be the Best Interests Attorney, will I be permitted/expected to do any of the following: make an opening or closing statement, introduce evidence including witnesses, examine witnesses for any party, subpoena records or witnesses, or participate in consent agreements between the parties?

Court Appointed Advisor's Assignment and Tasks

• If appointed to assist the court by investigating and reporting information to the court or by providing the court with an opinion on some matter, does the court agree that I will not be serving as a lawyer and I will owe no duties of representation to any party or other person involved in the proceeding?

• If appointed to be an advisor to the court, does the court agree that I may communicate with represented persons without the consent of their lawyers as would be otherwise required by Rule 4.2?

• If appointed to be an advisor to the court, what tasks will I perform?

- Will I submit an oral or a written report to the court?

- Will I limit my role to investigator and report only my factual findings, or will I provide the court with an opinion on some matter?

- Will I be a witness in the proceeding subject to testimonial examination?

Because of the potential for the roles to be confused, regardless of the specificity of the order, the judge should be reminded at the beginning of each hearing of the role of the appointed lawyer.[20]

Inquiry #6:

Should a lawyer appointed as the Child's Attorney or a Best Interests Attorney agree to investigate and present evidence? To testify or present a written or oral report or recommendation to the court?

Opinion #6:

Regardless of the role, the appointed lawyer, like any lawyer advocating a position, should conduct independent discovery and investigation of the facts.[21] At hearings, it is preferable that the lawyer have the authority to present and cross-examine witnesses and offer exhibits.[22] However, the standards of numerous organizations agree that "[n]either kind of lawyer is a witness."[23] As noted in the ABA Standards, "[a] court seeking expert or lay opinion testimony, written reports, or other non-traditional services should appoint an individual for that purpose, and make clear that the person is not serving as a lawyer, and is not a party."[24] The AAML Standards are even more adamant on this issue:

> Courts may choose to appoint someone to investigate and report information to the court. When they do so, these professionals should be called "court-appointed advisors." Courts may choose to appoint someone in an expert capacity to provide the court with an opinion about some contested matter. When they do so, these professionals should be called "experts." Courts may choose to appoint someone to protect children from the harms associated with the contested litigation. When they do so, these professionals should be called "protectors." There may be other reasons courts may choose to add a professional to the case.
>
> Language matters, however. We believe that assigning any of these tasks to someone who is called counsel is unnecessary, needlessly confusing, and misleading. Whatever these professionals are called, and whether or not they happen to be members of the bar, these professionals should never be mistaken for being counsel for the child or serving in any kind of attorney role.[25]

The potential harm from testifying as a witness is evident. If the Child's Attorney cannot assure her client that their communications are confidential and the Best Interests Attorney cannot assure the child or other witnesses of the same, the ability of a lawyer to perform in either role will be undermined.

At the time of the appointment, unless the lawyer is specifically appointed as an advisor to the court with no other role, the lawyer should recommend to the court that she not make a written or oral report to the court or testify as to her findings, particularly if the lawyer is appointed as the Child's Attorney. If the court insists that the lawyer perform these functions, the lawyer may decline the appointment.

Conclusion:

Serving as a Child's Attorney or a Best Interests Attorney in a contested custody or visitation case requires special skills, training, and experience. So much so that the AAML Standard 1.2 requires, "[t]o be eligible for appointment as counsel for a child in a custody or visitation proceeding, a person should be specially trained and designated by the local jurisdiction as competent to perform the assignment" and the comment adds, "[a]t a minimum, counsel for children must know how to communicate effectively with children and understand children's mental and emotional states at different ages and stages of their lives."[26]

This opinion does not attempt to address all of the professional responsibilities or obligations of a lawyer appointed as a Child's Attorney, a Best Interests Attorney, or a court-appointed advisor. A lawyer who is asked to serve in any of these roles should understand the requirements of each role. Familiarity with the ABA Standards and the AAML Standards is recommended.

Endnotes

1. For example, a lawyer may be appointed, pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat. §7B-601(a), to be an attorney-guardian ad litem for a child who is alleged to be abused, neglected, or dependent; a lawyer may be appointed guardian ad litem for a minor who is a party in civil litigation pursuant to Rule 17 of the NC Rules of Civil Procedure (see infra note 2); or a lawyer may be appointed for a minor child in a domestic violence action pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat. §50B-3(a1)(3)h.
2. The NC Rules of Civil Procedure authorize the appointment of a guardian ad litem (GAL) to appear on behalf of a minor plaintiff or defendant in civil litigation. N.C. R. Civ. P. 17(b)(1) and (2). The General Rules of Practice for the Superior and District Courts provide for the appointment of a lawyer to serve as GAL for a minor who is the victim or potential witness in a criminal proceeding. N.C. Gen. R. Prac. Super. & Dist. Ct. 7.1. Neither rule authorizes the appointment of a lawyer or a GAL for a child who is a non-party to a civil proceeding.
3. The increasing call for the appointment of lawyers to represent the children in custody cases is also noted in Representing Children: Standards for Attorneys for Children in Custody or Visitation Proceedings of the American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyer, p. 2, (2011) [hereinafter "AAML Standards"].
4. The terms are found in American Bar Association, Section of Family Law Standards of Practice for Lawyers Representing Children in Custody Cases (2003)[hereinafter "ABA Standards"]. However, the distinction is recognized in other writings. See AAML Standards; National Association of Counsel for Children Recommendations for Representation of Children in Abuse and Neglect Cases (2001)[hereinafter "NACC Recommendations"]; New York State Bar Assn. Committee on Children and the Law: Standards for Attorneys Representing Children in Custody, Visitation and Guardianship Proceedings (2008)[hereinafter "NYSBA Standards"].
5. ABA Standards, supra note 3, at 1.
6. ABA Standards, supra note 3, at 2.
7. NACC Recommendations, supra note 3, at 4.
8. ABA Standards, supra note 3, at 2.
9. AAML Standards, supra note 2, at 26-27.
10. See ABA Standards, supra note 3, at 9.
11. ABA Standards, supra note 3, at 15.
12. ABA Standards, supra note 3, at 17.
13. Id.
14. Id.
15. Id.
16. The lawyer should urge the court to avoid the use of the designation "guardian ad litem" which adds to the confusion about the lawyer's role because of its affiliation with Rule 17 and abuse/neglect appointments. See ABA Standards, supra note 3, at 2 ("The role of 'guardian ad litem' has become too muddled through different usages in different states, with varying connotations.")
17. AAML Standards, supra note 2, at 14.
18. ABA Standards, supra note 3, at 3.
19. Standard 2.1 of the AAML Standards states: "Court-appointed counsel must decide, on a case-by-case basis, whether their child clients possess the capacity to direct their representation. In the event that the court seeks to appoint counsel for children who lack capacity to direct their representation, the lawyer should strive to refuse the appointment." AAML Standards, supra note 2 at15.
20. ABA Standards, supra note 3, at 7.
21. ABA Standards, supra note 3, at 5.
22. Id. at 6.
23. Id. at 2; see generally, Standard 3 of the AAML Standards, supra note 2 at 25; NACC Recommendations, supra note 3 at 10.
24. ABA Standards, supra note 3, at 2-3.
25. AAML Standards, supra note 2, at 26-27.
26. AAML Standards, supra note 2 at 13.

2012 Formal Ethics Opinion 10

January 25, 2013

Participation as a "Network" Lawyer for Company Providing Litigation or Administrative Support Services

Opinion rules a lawyer may not participate as a network lawyer for a company providing litigation or administrative support services for clients with a particular legal/business problem unless certain conditions are satisfied.

Introduction:

This opinion explores whether a lawyer may participate as a "network" lawyer for a company, usually offering its services via the Internet, that provides litigation or administrative support services to clients with a particular type of legal/business problem.

For example, ABC Services offers to assist mortgage holders and mortgage loan servicers (ABC clients) with the nationwide management of "mortgage defaults." ABC maintains a national network of lawyers who have entered into a "network agreement" with ABC to use administrative and litigation support services provided by ABC, including default management application software, and to accept referrals from ABC. The agreement establishes the legal fees that a network lawyer may charge to an ABC client as well as the "administrative fees" the lawyer must pay to ABC for the support services provided by ABC. An ABC client is considered the mutual client of both ABC and the network lawyer with ABC functioning as the agent of the ABC client while providing litigation and administrative support services to the network lawyer. When a mortgage holder or servicer becomes an ABC client, it is provided with a list of network lawyers. The ABC client may choose to retain one of the network lawyers to provide legal services in connection with a default, or it may ask ABC to invite a lawyer or firm of the client's choosing to become a network lawyer and subsequently to provide legal services to the client. The network lawyer invoices the client for the legal services provided by the lawyer. ABC separately invoices the network lawyer for the administrative services it provided in support of the representation of the ABC client.

Another example of this business model is an Internet-based company, XYZ Company, which offers "an online eviction processing system that connects landlords and property managers with real estate attorneys." The eviction services are provided using software accessed via XYZ's website and a network of lawyers who are licensed by XYZ to use the software. A lawyer who wishes to participate in XYZ's network signs a licensing agreement for the use of the eviction software. The licensing fee is determined by the size of the market in which the lawyer will be providing eviction services. The website states that its system provides lawyers "with the technology necessary to: [e]lectronically receive information necessary to file eviction requests from clients; [c]ommunicate with clients through a message center; [p]rint county-specific forms necessary for eviction filing with the court, completed with pre-populated information from the client; [p]rovide automated updates to client on the status of the case." A landlord who signs up for the service is given the names of network lawyers who have contracted with XYZ to handle eviction cases within the relevant jurisdiction. The selected or assigned lawyer (in the case of single-lawyer jurisdictions) prosecutes the eviction through the court system. The lawyer logs actions taken into XYZ's software, which creates periodic case status reports that are automatically emailed to the landlord. The website claims that these status reports virtually eliminate the need for direct communications between the landlord and the lawyer. The legal fee for each eviction is determined by the lawyer providing the service. The fee is billed and collected by XYZ and then forwarded to the lawyer.

Inquiry #1:

May a North Carolina lawyer or law firm enter into an agreement to participate in a "network" of lawyers for a company using this business model?

Opinion #1:

No, unless the following conditions are satisfied.

Unauthorized Practice of Law

N.C. Gen. Stat. §84-5 makes it unlawful for any corporation to practice law or "hold itself out in any manner as being entitled to do [so]...." Moreover, a lawyer is prohibited by Rule 5.5(d) from assisting another person in the unauthorized practice of law. Neither a lawyer nor a law firm may become a member of a "network" for a company using this business model if the company is providing legal services or holding itself out as a provider of legal services as opposed to a provider of support services to lawyers and clients and a method for identifying lawyers who will use those services to represent the client.

Lawyer Referral Service

A lawyer may not participate in the network if payments are made to the company for referrals or if the company is a for-profit lawyer referral service. Rule 7.2(b) prohibits a lawyer from giving anything of value to a person for recommending a lawyer's services except a lawyer may pay the reasonable cost of advertising. Rule 7.2(d) prohibits participation in a lawyer referral service unless the service is not operated for profit and the service satisfies other conditions not relevant here. Comment [6] to Rule 7.2 defines a lawyer referral service as "any organization that holds itself out to the public as a lawyer referral service. Such referral services are understood by laypersons to be consumer-oriented organizations that provide unbiased referrals to lawyers with appropriate experience in the subject matter of the representation...."

Despite the prohibition on participation in a for-profit referral service, 2004 FEO 1 holds that a lawyer may participate in an on-line service that is similar to both a lawyer referral service and a legal directory, provided there is no fee sharing with the service and all communications about the lawyer and the service are truthful. In 2004 FEO 1, the online service solicited lawyers to participate and then charged participating lawyers a registration fee and an annual fee for administrative, system, and advertising expenses. The amount of the annual fee varied by lawyer based upon a number of factors including the lawyer's current rates, areas of practice, geographic location, and number of years in practice. The opinion noted that the online service had aspects of both a lawyer referral service and a legal directory:

> [o]n the one hand, the online service is like a lawyer referral service because the company purports to screen lawyers before allowing them to participate and to match a prospective client with suitable lawyers. On the other hand, it is like a legal directory because it provides a prospective client with the names of lawyers who are interested in handling his matter together with information about the lawyers' qualifications. The prospective client may do further research on the lawyers who send him offer messages. Using this information, the prospective client decides which lawyer to contact about representation.

If a litigation support company provides a prospective client with the names and qualifications of the lawyers in its network who will provide representation in the jurisdiction where the client's case is located but does not specify the employment of one particular lawyer, it is not a prohibited lawyer referral service. Similarly, if at the client's request, a lawyer or law firm is invited to participate in the network, the company is not operating a for-profit lawyer referral service. As stated in 2004 FEO 1, "the potential harm to the consumer [of a for-profit referral service] is avoided because the company does not decide which lawyer is right for the client."

Independent Professional Judgment and Communication with the Client

While a client is entitled to hire an agent to manage its legal affairs, Rule 5.4(c) specifically prohibits a lawyer from permitting a person who recommends, engages, or pays the lawyer to render legal services for another to direct or regulate the lawyer's professional judgment in rendering such legal services. See also Rule 1.8(f)(compensation from a third party is prohibited unless there is no interference in the client-lawyer relationship). A lawyer has a duty to communicate with the client about the objectives of the representation and to explain the law to the client to permit the client to make an informed decision about those objectives. Rules 1.2 and 1.4. There can be no interference with the lawyer's communications with the client or with the lawyer's independent professional judgment as to which legal services are required to achieve the client's objectives. See Rule 1.2(a)("a lawyer shall abide by a client's decisions concerning the objectives of representation and...consult with the client as to the means by which they are to be pursued"). The interference in a network lawyer's professional judgment is improper if the company dictates what legal services the lawyer is to provide to a client, the company is the sole source of information about the client and its legal needs, or access to the client is restricted by the company. A law firm or lawyer participating in a network must establish the professional relationship with the client and maintain control of the relationship through direct communications as needed to establish the objectives for the representation and to determine the means to achieve them. See Rule 1.2.

Competent Representation

Although a lawyer may use the company's services or software, including the forms generated by that software, the lawyer remains professionally responsible for the competent representation of the client including the appropriate determination of the legal services needed to achieve the client's objectives and the quality of any work product that is used in the representation of the client. Rule 1.1 and Rule 1.2. If the lawyer determines that a form or pleading generated by the company's software is not appropriate for a particular client, the lawyer must competently prepare the appropriate form or pleading and, if additional information from the client is required, the lawyer must communicate with the client to obtain the information.

Confidential Information

The confidentiality of the communications between the client and the lawyer, including email communications using the company's website or software, must be assured or, in the alternative, informed consent of the client to the sharing of its communications with the company must be obtained, in advance, after disclosure of the risks of such disclosure. Rule 1.6. The risk that the attorney-client privilege for those communications may be forfeited must be specifically disclosed to the client to obtain informed consent.

Fee Sharing with Nonlawyer

Independent, professional judgment is maintained, in part, by the prohibition on sharing legal fees with a nonlawyer found in Rule 5.4(a). The prohibition helps to avoid nonlawyer interference with the exercise of a lawyer's professional judgment, ensures that the total fee paid by the client is not unreasonably high, and discourages the nonlawyer from engaging in improper solicitation of business for the lawyer. See 2010 FEO 4. If a network lawyer must pay the company an "administrative fee" for every legal service the lawyer provides to the client regardless of the administrative or litigation support services provided by the company, the arrangement violates the rule. Any payment to the company for administrative and litigation support services, including payment for access to the company's litigation support software, must be reasonable in light of the services provided. See Rule 1.5(a).

Advertising and Solicitation

The information that a participating lawyer provides to the company for distribution to prospective clients must be accurate. Rule 7.1(a) (prohibiting false or misleading communications about the lawyer or the lawyer's services). If false or misleading statements about the lawyer or his services are subsequently made by the company on its website or in other advertising for the company's services, the lawyer must demand that the statements be corrected or deleted. See RPC 241 (lawyer who participates in a joint advertising venture or a legal directory is professionally responsible for content of the advertisement even if written or prepared by another). If this does not occur, the lawyer must withdraw from the network.

Rule 7.2(b) prohibits a lawyer from giving anything of value to a person for recommending a lawyer's services except a lawyer may pay the reasonable cost of advertising. Therefore, participation as a network lawyer is prohibited if payments are made to the company for referrals. However, if the payments are for litigation support or administrative services provided to the client or to the lawyer to assist in the rendering of the legal services to the client, and the charge for those services is reasonable in light of the service received, the payments do not violate the rule.

Rule 7.3(a) prohibits a lawyer from engaging in in-person, telephone, or real-time electronic solicitation (collectively, in-person solicitation) for professional employment when a significant motive for such conduct is the lawyer's pecuniary gain unless the lawyer has a prior professional relationship with the potential client (there are other exceptions not relevant to this inquiry). A lawyer may not do through an agent that which he is prohibited from doing by the Rules of Professional Conduct. Rule 8.4(a). Therefore, if the company engages in in-person solicitation of potential clients that do not have a prior professional relationship with a network lawyer or law firm, and the company's motive for doing so is to solicit clients for legal services to be provided by a network lawyer or law firm, participation in the network arrangement is prohibited.

Written Agreement

Although this opinion does not require a lawyer to have a written agreement with the company, a written agreement addressing the conditions set forth above is strongly recommended. The lawyer may not rely upon a written agreement alone, however, but must monitor the practices of the company on a continuing basis and discontinue the relationship if the lawyer cannot insure compliance with the conditions set forth above.

Inquiry #2:

A participating network lawyer enters into an exclusive arrangement with the company whereby no other network lawyer will provide legal services to participating clients in a designated territory or jurisdiction. This means that a prospective client with a legal matter in this territory or jurisdiction will be automatically referred to the lawyer with the exclusive arrangement.

May a lawyer enter into such an agreement?

Opinion #2:

No, this is essentially a for-profit lawyer referral service, which is prohibited by Rule 7.2(d). See also Opinion #1.

Inquiry #3:

After the company enters into a network agreement with a lawyer for a particular territory or jurisdiction, all lawyers who subsequently apply to become network lawyers for the same territory or jurisdiction are charged substantially higher fees. This has the effect of discouraging other lawyers from seeking to become network lawyers for the same territory or jurisdiction and will potentially create de facto exclusive territories or jurisdictions.

May a lawyer enter an agreement with the company under these circumstances?

Opinion #3:

No. See Opinion #2.

Inquiry #4:

The network agreement specifies that any information submitted by a client using the company's website shall become the exclusive property of the company.

May a lawyer enter into an agreement with such a provision?

Opinion #4:

No. A lawyer cannot agree that his or her confidential communications with a client will become the property of a third party. Such an agreement will interfere not only with the lawyer's duty to protect confidential client communications from unauthorized disclosure, but also with other duties including, but not limited to, the duty of competent representation, the recordkeeping duty for trust account funds, and the duty to avoid future conflicts of interest. See Rules 1.1, 1.6, 1.9, and 1.15-3.

Inquiry #5:

The network agreement contains a provision that restricts the lawyer from soliciting any "customer" of the company for the purpose of providing services that compete with the services of the company.

May a lawyer enter into a network agreement with such a provision?

Opinion #5:

No, unless the agreement specifies that the lawyer is not agreeing to restrict his or her right to practice law in violation of Rule 5.6. Presumably, the company does not provide legal services because it is prohibited by law from doing so. See Opinion #1 above. The provision in the licensing agreement must specify the non-legal services provided by the company to which the non-compete would apply.

Inquiry #6:

The network agreement requires the lawyer to provide the company with his or her client list.

May a lawyer enter into a network agreement with such a provision?

Opinion #6:

No. This would only be permissible if the lawyer obtained the informed consent of every client whose name will be disclosed to the company. Rule 1.6(a). To obtain informed consent, the lawyer must inform each client of the likelihood that the disclosure would result in a business solicitation from the company.

Inquiry #7:

In the past, lack of sufficient oversight of the ABC employees responsible for preparing affidavits for use by network firms in foreclosure proceedings lead to instances of "robo-signing" in which an ABC employee signed a foreclosure affidavit without conducting a review of the client's file on the matter or possessing the knowledge to which the employee attested in the affidavit. Such affidavits were executed in a manner contrary to the notary's acknowledgement and verification of the documents.[1] The affidavits were then forwarded to the lawyer for use in the foreclosure proceedings.

What is a network lawyer's duty relative to the documents and pleadings provided by ABC?

Opinion #7:

This inquiry demonstrates the potential problems that can result from interference in the autonomy and independent professional judgment of a lawyer by a third party. A lawyer should not participate in the network or a similar service that includes support from a third party if the lawyer's ability to communicate with the client is so restricted that the lawyer cannot determine whether the documents and information he receives via the third party are reliable.

If a network lawyer obtains a document, such as an affidavit, from ABC for use in the representation of a client and the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that ABC has engaged in preparation of erroneous, false, or seemingly false documents or affidavits in similar matters in the past, the lawyer may not use the documents until he has assured himself, through review of the client's own files or direct communication with the client, that the documents are reliable. See Rule 5.4(c). Particularly with regard to sworn statements, a lawyer's duty of candor requires the lawyer to avoid offering false evidence. See Rule 3.3(a)(3). Nevertheless, if a client or an agent of the client is not otherwise known to be unreliable or to provide erroneous or false information, a lawyer may rely upon information provided to her to represent the client.

Endnote

1. Such conduct is the subject of the National Mortgage Settlement. nationalmortgagesettlement.com.

2012 Formal Ethics Opinion 11

July 19, 2013

Use of Nonlawyer Field Representatives to Obtain Representation Contracts

Opinion rules that a law firm may send a nonlawyer field representative to meet with a prospective client and obtain a representation contract if a lawyer at the firm has reviewed sufficient information from the prospective client to determine that an offer of representation is appropriate.

Inquiry #1:

ABC law firm employs a large staff of nonlawyers, including paralegals, assistants, and others. Among the nonlawyer staff are employees called "field representatives." When a prospective client contacts ABC, the firm sends a field representative to the prospective client's home or other location chosen by the prospective client. The field representative provides information about the firm in an effort to convince the prospective client to choose firm ABC for representation. If the prospective client agrees, the field representative provides a representation contract and obtains the client's signature on the contract. The field representation also obtains information from the prospective client concerning the representation.

No lawyer with the firm consults with the prospective client before the field representative meets with the person. No lawyer with the firm reviews the information obtained by the field representative before the field representative obtains the client's signature on the representation contract. Is ABC's use of field representatives in this manner permissible under the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion #1:

No. A law firm may not send a nonlawyer field representative to meet with a prospective client and obtain a representation contract when no lawyer with the firm has reviewed the prospective client's relevant facts and circumstances to make an initial determination that an offer of legal services is appropriate.

Inquiry #2:

If a lawyer at the firm has reviewed sufficient information from the prospective client to determine that an offer of representation is appropriate, may a firm employ a field representative to meet with the prospective client and obtain a representation contract?

Opinion #2:

The Ethics Committee has previously determined that a lawyer may delegate certain tasks to nonlawyer assistants. See, e.g., RPC 70, RPC 216, 99 FEO 6, 2002 FEO 9. Pursuant to RPC 216, when a lawyer delegates a task to a nonlawyer, the lawyer has a duty under the Rules of Professional Conduct to take reasonable steps to ascertain that the nonlawyer assistant is competent; to provide the nonlawyer assistant with appropriate supervision and instruction; and to continue to use the lawyer's own independent professional judgment, competence, and personal knowledge in the representation of the client. See also Rule 1.1, Rule 5.3, Rule 5.5.

In 2002 FEO 9 the Ethics Committee specifically determined that a nonlawyer may oversee the execution of real estate closing documents and the disbursement of the proceeds even though the lawyer is not physically present at the closing. 2002 FEO 9 states that, in any situation where a lawyer delegates a task to a nonlawyer assistant, the lawyer must determine that delegation is appropriate after having evaluated the complexity of the transaction, the degree of difficulty of the task, the training and ability of the nonlawyer, the client's sophistication and expectations, and the course of dealing with the client. The opinion holds that the lawyer is still responsible for providing competent representation and adequate supervision of the nonlawyer.

Similarly, under certain circumstances, a nonlawyer field representative may oversee the execution of a representation contract. The firm lawyer must consider the factors set out in 2002 FEO 9 and determine whether such delegation is appropriate.

The lawyer must also take precautions to avoid assisting the unauthorized practice of law. See Rule 5.5(d). The lawyer must instruct the field representative to disclose to the prospective client that he is not a lawyer and that he cannot answer any legal question. The lawyer must also admonish the field representative not to provide legal advice and to contact the lawyer should a legal question arise. Likewise, the lawyer must be available by some means to consult with and answer any legal questions the prospective client may have.

2012 Formal Ethics Opinion 12

January 25, 2013

Agreement for Division of Fees Entered Upon Lawyer's Departure from Firm

Opinion rules that an agreement for a departing lawyer to pay his former firm a percentage of any legal fee subsequently recovered from the continued representation of a contingent fee client by the departing lawyer does not violate Rule 5.6 if the agreement was negotiated by the departing lawyer and the firm after the departing lawyer announced his departure from the firm and the specific percentage is a reasonable resolution of the dispute over the division of future fees.

Inquiry:

Attorney B, an associate in Attorney A's firm, resigned from the firm effective February 28, 2005. At the time of his resignation, Attorney B signed an agreement with the firm. The agreement provided that Attorney B would take all of the active client files for which the clients had indicated a desire for Attorney B to continue to represent them. The agreement also contained the following provision:

> With respect to those files in which the client chooses Attorney B to conclude his or her active claim, upon recovery made by Attorney B on each such file, Attorney B shall forward to Attorney A, at the time of disbursement, 50% of the attorney's fee collected on each settlement. This will include medical payments fees as well. Attorney B will also pay to Attorney A upon recovery the total amount of expenses due to Attorney A in accordance with [a computer expense printout provided by Attorney A]. Finally, Attorney B will forward to Attorney A a copy of the settlement sheet signed by the client reflecting the disbursements on each such file. All settlements negotiated by Attorney B through February 28, 2005, will be handled through Attorney A's trust account.

Client entered into an agreement for representation on a personal injury claim with Attorney A's firm on December 16, 2004, while Attorney B was still with the firm. When Attorney B left the firm in February 2005, Client chose to continue to be represented by Attorney B. The case was concluded in May 2010, with a deputy commissioner's award to Client.

There is currently an "attorney-attorney" fee arbitration between Attorney A's firm and Attorney B pending before the fee dispute committee of the local judicial district bar. The distribution of the legal fee from the resolution of Client's worker's compensation case is in dispute. The judicial district bar's bylaws relating to the arbitration of such disputes provides: "The committee shall neither have nor exercise jurisdiction regarding disputes…which involve services that may constitute a violation of The North Carolina State Bar Rules of Professional Conduct, as now in effect or may be hereafter amended." The presiding arbitrator has requested an opinion from the North Carolina State Bar on the following issue: Does the provision of the agreement quoted above comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion:

Rule 5.6(a) prohibits a lawyer from participating in offering or making a partnership, shareholders, operating, employment, or similar type of agreement that restricts the right of a lawyer to practice after termination of the relationship except an agreement concerning benefits upon retirement. This prohibition on restrictive covenants protects the freedom of clients to choose a lawyer and promotes lawyer mobility and professional autonomy. Rule 5.6, cmt. [1].

2008 FEO 8 examined provisions in three employment agreements to determine whether the agreements complied with Rule 5.6. Although the opinion ruled that all three agreements violated Rule 5.6, the opinion, nevertheless, encouraged lawyers to enter into agreements that will help to resolve potential disputes about the division of fees. While cautioning that "such agreements may not be so financially onerous or punitive as to deter a withdrawing lawyer from continuing to represent a client if the client chooses to be represented by the lawyer after the lawyer's departure from the firm," the opinion held that a lawyer may participate in the offering or making of an agreement that includes a provision for dividing legal fees received after a lawyer's departure from a firm.

> ...provided the formula or procedure for dividing fees is, at the time the agreement is made, reasonably calculated to compensate the firm for the resources expended by the firm on the representation as of the date of the lawyer's departure and will not discourage a departing lawyer from taking a case and thereby deny the client access to the lawyer of his choice.

Thus, the circumstances and timing of the execution of an agreement are important to the analysis of whether the agreement runs afoul of Rule 5.6.

In the current inquiry, the agreement was negotiated and entered into after Attorney B announced that he was leaving Attorney A's firm. The agreement was, apparently, part of a global settlement of all issues relative to Attorney B's departure. It was not entered into as a condition of continued employment, as were the agreements analyzed in 2008 FEO 8. It did not deter Attorney B from leaving the firm or from continuing to represent clients who chose to follow him to his new firm. In fact, the agreement specifically contemplated that Attorney B would continue to represent those clients. In light of the various stages of his cases at the time of his departure, a 50% split of the contingent fees to be earned on the cases cannot be viewed as "onerous" or "punitive." Such a division of fees would favor Attorney B in some cases and disfavor him in others.

A division of fees based upon a fixed percentage that fairly allocates, over the range of cases, the value of the time and work expended before and after a lawyer leaves a firm is a reasonable means of achieving an efficient, equitable resolution of the fee division issues between a departing lawyer and the firm. Provided the lawyers deal fairly and honestly with each other without intimidation, threats, or misrepresentation, this type of agreement should be encouraged.

The provision of the agreement addressing costs advanced is consistent with 2008 FEO 8, which provides that the agreement "may require the departing lawyer to protect the firm's interest in receiving reimbursement for costs advanced from any final settlement or judgment received by the client."

Rule 1.5(e) requires a client's written consent to the division of a fee between lawyers who are not in the same firm. This rule, however, does not apply to the current situation because the fee agreement with the client preceded Attorney B's departure from the firm. Rule 1.5, cmt. [9].

2012 Formal Ethics Opinion 13

July 19, 2013

Duty to Safekeep Client Files upon Suspension, Disbarment, Disappearance, or Death of Firm Lawyer

Opinion rules that the partners and managerial lawyers remaining in a firm are responsible for the safekeeping and proper disposition of both the active and closed files of a suspended, disbarred, missing, or deceased member of the firm.

Inquiry #1:

The law firm A & B, PA, was formed as a professional corporation in 1992. Lawyer A and Lawyer B were the initial shareholders in the firm. In 1993, Lawyer C joined the firm and became a shareholder. The professional corporation's articles of incorporation were amended to change the professional corporation's name to A, B & C, PA.

In 1998 Lawyer C closed a real estate transaction for a client of the firm. The file was placed among the firm's inventory of client files.

In 2008 Lawyer A and Lawyer B learned that Lawyer C had committed numerous embezzlements from the firm's trust account in a cumulative amount exceeding $1,000,000. Lawyer C (hereinafter, "C") was ousted from the firm and was subsequently disbarred. The firm's articles of incorporation were amended to change the professional corporation's name back to A & B, PA. When C was ousted from the firm, Lawyer A and Lawyer B reviewed the files for the clients of the firm whose legal services had been provided by C. When their review was completed, Lawyer A and Lawyer B instructed or allowed C to take possession of those client files. Since 2008, paper client files have been in a storage facility to which C's lawyer has the key, and electronic client files, to the extent that there were any, have been stored in a password-protected manner by C's lawyer.

The client whose transaction was closed by C in 1998 is now seeking her file, which is believed to be in the storage facility. C is in prison. C's lawyer cannot access the storage facility due to physical infirmity. However, C's lawyer is willing to give Lawyer A and Lawyer B the key to the storage facility, and to authorize them to access and retrieve the client files. Lawyer A and Lawyer B assert that they are not obligated to help the client obtain her file.

When a lawyer leaves a firm and is subsequently disbarred, what is the professional responsibility of the lawyers remaining with the firm relative to the safekeeping and proper disposition of the files of the clients of the disbarred lawyer?

Opinion #1:

The remaining lawyers in the firm are responsible for the safekeeping and proper disposition of both the active and closed files of the disbarred lawyer in their custody. As used in this opinion, "files" applies to both electronic and paper files unless otherwise indicated. Because of the risk of loss, closed files may not be relinquished to a disbarred lawyer who is no longer subject to the regulation of the North Carolina State Bar and no longer required to comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct.

Rule 1.15 requires a lawyer to preserve client property, including information in a client's file such as client documents and lawyer work product, from risk of loss due to destruction, degradation, or disappearance. See also RPC 209 (noting the "general fiduciary duty to safeguard the property of a client"); RPC 234 (requiring the storage of a client's original documents with legal significance in a safe place or their return to the client); 98 FEO 15 (requiring exercise of lawyer's "due care" when selecting depository bank for trust account); and 2011 FEO 6 (allowing law firm to use "cloud computing" if reasonable care is taken to protect the security of electronic client files).

If a lawyer practices in a law firm with other lawyers, the responsibility to preserve a client's property, including the client's file, is not solely the responsibility of the lawyer providing the legal services to the client. Rule 5.1(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct requires the partners in a law firm and all lawyers with comparable managerial authority to make "reasonable efforts to ensure that the firm…has in effect measures giving reasonable assurance that all lawyers in the firm…conform to the Rules of Professional Conduct."

The professional responsibilities of the partners and the lawyers with managerial authority relative to the files of the firm are the same, regardless of whether the lawyer has departed the firm because of suspension, disbarment, disappearance, or death.[1] The lawyers are responsible for (1) ensuring that any open client matter is promptly and properly transitioned to the lawyer of the client's choice, and (2) retaining possession of and safekeeping closed client files of the departed lawyer until the requirements for disposition of closed files set forth in RPC 209 can be fulfilled. See, e.g., RPC 48 (explaining duties upon firm dissolution including continuity of service to clients and right of clients to counsel of their choice).

All firms should recognize the possibility of suspension, disbarment, disappearance, or death of a firm lawyer. Law firms should plan for and include in their operating procedures a means or method to access and secure all client files for which the firm would be responsible if such an event were to occur.

Inquiry #2:

Do Lawyer A and Lawyer B have a duty to help a former client of the firm obtain the file relating to the legal services provided to her by C when C was a member of the firm?

Opinion #2:

Yes, when the location of a file is known, the lawyers have a duty to take reasonable measures to assist a client to obtain the file. See Opinion #1 and RPC 209.

Endnote

1. This opinion does not address the professional responsibilities of the firm lawyers when a lawyer leaves the firm to practice elsewhere.

2012 Formal Ethics Opinion 14

January 25, 2013

Advertising Content on Gift or Promotional Items

Opinion rules that the advertising content displayed on certain gift or promotional items does not have to include an office address.

Inquiry:

Lawyer would like to put her firm name on a non-state issued license plate to be placed on the front of her automobile. The graphics on the license plate would consist only of the firm name. No other content would appear on the plate. Is Lawyer required to include an office address on the license plate?

Opinion:

No. Rule 7.2(c) provides that any advertisement for legal services must include the "name and office address of at least one lawyer or law firm responsible for [the advertisement's] content." The purpose of the rule is to facilitate the identification and location of a responsible lawyer or firm in order to hold that lawyer or firm accountable for the content of the advertisement. However, we conclude that where a gift/promotional item displays only the name or logo of the lawyer or law firm, and the items are used/disseminated by the lawyer or law firm in a manner otherwise permissible under the Rules of Professional Conduct, the gift/promotion item does not have to display an office address.

Examples of such items would include pens, pencils, hats, or coffee mugs bearing the name or logo of a law firm or lawyer. A non-state issued license plate displaying a law firm's name is also exempt from the address requirement.

2012 Formal Ethics Opinion 15

January 25, 2013

Editor's Note: See 2011 FEO 1 for additional guidance.

Lawyer as Witness

Opinion rules that whether a lawyer is a "necessary witness" and thereby disqualified from acting as a client's advocate at a trial is an issue left up to the discretion of the tribunal.

Inquiry:

Based on allegations by A, Defendant B was arrested and charged with cruelty to animals. B's lawyer wrote to A and asked him to withdraw the charges. B's lawyer advised A that B had not harmed the animals and advised A that he could be sued civilly for maliciously instituting charges against B without probable cause. Eventually, B's motion for a directed verdict was granted in the matter.

Lawyer, on behalf of B, filed a malicious prosecution suit against A. The pleadings contained an allegation that Lawyer had contacted A, assured A that B had not harmed his animals, asked A to withdraw the charges, and advised A that "persons who maliciously institute charges without probable cause could be held liable for damages." The pleading then alleges that A "maliciously refused to contact the relevant law enforcement authorities to inform them of the true facts."

The trial court questions whether Lawyer had made himself a witness by virtue of his inclusion of the above-referenced factual allegations.

Opinion:

Rule 3.7(a) provides that a lawyer shall not act as advocate at a trial in which "the lawyer is likely to be a necessary witness" unless: (1) the testimony relates to an uncontested issue; (2) the testimony relates to the nature and value of legal services rendered in the case; or (3) disqualification of the lawyer would work substantial hardship on the client.

A lawyer should be disqualified under Rule 3.7 only upon a showing of "compelling circumstances." State v. Schmitt, 102 P.3d 856, 859 (Wash. Ct. App. 2004). Disqualification is limited to situations where the lawyer's testimony is "necessary." It is generally agreed that when the anticipated testimony is relevant, material, and unobtainable by other means, the lawyer's testimony is "necessary." See Ann. Model Rules of Prof'l. Conduct (6th ed. 2007), p. 361 (citing cases).

The issue of whether a lawyer is a "necessary witness" and thereby disqualified from acting as a client's advocate at a trial is an issue best left to the discretion of the tribunal. Determining whether a lawyer is likely to be a necessary witness "involves a consideration of the nature of the case, with emphasis on the subject of the lawyer's testimony, the weight the testimony might have in resolving disputed issues, and the availability of other witnesses or documentary evidence which might independently establish the relevant issues." Fognani v. Young, 115 P.3d 1268 (Colo. 2005).

2013 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

October 15, 2013

Release/Dismissal Agreement Offered by Prosecutor to Convicted Person

Opinion rules that, subject to conditions, a prosecutor may enter into an agreement to consent to vacating a conviction upon the convicted person's release of civil claims against the prosecutor, law enforcement authorities, or other public officials or entities.

Inquiry:

Defendant was convicted of a crime in a North Carolina state court and sentenced to the North Carolina prison system. Ten years later, the parties learned of exculpatory evidence. Defendant, with the advice of two defense counsel, signed a release that provided, in pertinent part, as follows:

> [Defendant] for and in consideration of release from the North Carolina Department of Corrections, do[es] hereby voluntarily agree without any threat, coercion, or prosecutorial misconduct, that he will never...bring legal action of any kind against the State of North Carolina, the County of..., the...County Sheriff's Department, Detective...of the...County Sheriff's Department, any and all members and employees of the...County District Attorney's Office.... This Release is given and executed with due knowledge [and] cognizance of the Supreme Court's recognition of the validity and enforceability of Releases of this nature in the case of Town of Newton v. Rumery, 480 US 386 (1987).

May a state or federal prosecutor prepare, offer, negotiate, or execute an agreement (a "release/dismissal agreement") that conditions the prosecutor's agreement not to object to or contest a motion for appropriate relief initiated by the convicted person upon the convicted person's agreement to release civil claims against public officials or entities arising from the convicted person's arrest, prosecution, or imprisonment?

Opinion:

Yes, but the prosecutor must take great care not to transgress existing ethical rules.

A per se ethical rule against prosecutors negotiating post-conviction release/dismissal agreements[1] would effectively prohibit a defense lawyer from offering on behalf of his or her client a waiver of potential civil claims to persuade a prosecutor to support the prisoner's motion to vacate the conviction. Some defense lawyers wish to have this option available when the extent to which new exculpatory evidence casts doubt on the defendant's guilt is debatable.

In negotiating such an agreement, however, a prosecutor must be mindful of his or her ethical obligations. For instance, if recently discovered exculpatory evidence shows that the prisoner was innocent of the charge(s) for which he is currently incarcerated and he files a legally meritorious motion with the appropriate court to vacate his conviction, the prosecutor may not make his or her consent to the motion contingent on the prisoner waiving potential civil claims arising from his wrongful conviction. Rule 3.1 ("A lawyer shall not... defend a proceeding...or...controvert an issue therein, unless there is a basis in law and fact for doing so that is not frivolous..."). See also Rule 3.8, Special Responsibilities of a Prosecutor, cmt. [1] (responsibility as minister of justice carries with it specific obligations to see that defendant is accorded procedural justice and that guilt is decided upon sufficient evidence).

In the fact pattern giving rise to this inquiry, the prisoner was represented by counsel in the negotiation of the release-dismissal agreement. A prosecutor should not negotiate such an agreement with an unrepresented prisoner unless the prisoner insists upon proceeding pro se. Cf. Rule 3.8(c) (prosecutor shall not seek to obtain from an unrepresented accused a waiver of important pretrial rights). Before negotiating such an agreement with a pro se prisoner, judicial approval of the pro se representation should be obtained. Cf. Rule 3.8, cmt. [3].

Even if the ethical concerns identified above have been addressed, a prosecutor may only negotiate an agreement that includes a waiver of the prisoner's potential civil claims against the sovereign or public officials if the prosecutor has the legal authority to represent the interests of the sovereign or those officials with respect to such civil claims. It would be unethical for the prosecutor explicitly or implicitly to misrepresent the scope of the prosecutor's authority to negotiate with respect to such civil claims. Rule 4.1; Rule 8.4(c).

In communicating with the court regarding the prosecution's position on whether the conviction should be vacated, the prosecutor should disclose the existence of any agreement conditioning the prosecutor's position on the prisoner's agreement to waive potential civil claims. Cf. RPC 152 (prosecutor must ensure that all material terms of negotiated plea are disclosed in response to direct questions).

Endnote

1. There is no general legal prohibition against a prosecutor negotiating or entering into a "release-dismissal agreement" in the pre-conviction context. See Town of Newton v. Rumery, 480 US 386, 395-97 (1987) (rejecting the assumption "that all–or even a significant number–of release-dismissal agreements stem from prosecutors abandoning 'the independence of judgment required by [their] public trust'" and concluding that a per se rule of invalidity of such agreements would fail to credit other relevant public interests and improperly assume prosecutorial misconduct). See also Rodriguez v. Smithfield Packing Co., 338 F.3d 348, 353-54 & n.3 (4th Cir. 2003) (applying Rumery to enforce a release-dismissal agreement and noting that such agreements serve the legitimate public interest of avoiding future litigation); and Senator v. Baltimore County, 917 F.2d 1302, 1990 WL 173827 (4th Cir. 1990) (unpub.) ("the release agreement serves the public interest").

2013 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

October 24, 2014

Providing Incarcerated Defendant with Opportunity to Review Discovery Materials

Opinion rules that if, after providing an incarcerated criminal client with a summary/explanation of the discovery materials in the client's file, the client requests access to any of the discovery materials, the lawyer must afford the client the opportunity to meaningfully review relevant discovery materials unless certain conditions exist.

Inquiry #1:

Lawyer represents Defendant in a criminal case. The state has provided Lawyer with discovery as PDF files. The state has also given Lawyer DVDs containing copies of the video recordings of interrogations of Defendant and a codefendant; surveillance videotapes; and audio recordings of calls made by Defendant and the codefendant from the jail.

Lawyer reviewed the discovery and provided Defendant with a summary of the evidence. Defendant demands that he be provided a copy of the entire 1,200 pages of discovery and be allowed to view/listen to the 17 hours of video and audio recordings.

Does Lawyer have an ethical duty to comply with the client's demand?

Opinion #1:

As a matter of professional responsibility, Rule 1.4 requires a lawyer to "keep a client reasonably informed about the status of a matter" and "promptly comply with reasonable requests for information." As stated in comment [5] to Rule 1.4:

> The client should have sufficient information to participate intelligently in decisions concerning the objectives of the representation and the means by which they are to be pursued...The guiding principle is that the lawyer should fulfill reasonable client expectations for information consistent with the duty to act in the client's best interests, and the client's overall requirements as to the character of representation.

The duties set out in Rule 1.4 are similar to those found in ABA Standards for Criminal Justice, Defense Functions, Standard 4-3.8 (3d ed. 1993) which provides:

> (a) Defense counsel should keep the client informed of the developments in the case and the progress of preparing the defense and should promptly comply with reasonable requests for information.
>
> (b) Defense counsel should explain developments in the case to the extent reasonably necessary to permit the client to make informed decisions regarding the representation.

Under Rule 1.2(a)(1), the client in a criminal case has the authority to decide, "after consultation with the lawyer, as to a plea to be entered, whether to waive a jury trial, and whether the client will testify." During the course of the representation, a criminal defense lawyer complies with the requirements of Rule 1.4 to keep a client "reasonably informed" by providing the client with sufficient information to make informed decisions about these important issues. This obligation is fulfilled by providing the client with a summary of the discovery materials and consulting with the client as to the relevance of the materials to the client's case. If the lawyer has provided the client with a summary/explanation of the discovery materials and the client, nonetheless, requests copies of or asks to review any of the file materials, the duty to comply with reasonable requests for information requires the lawyer to afford the client the opportunity to meaningfully review relevant discovery material unless one or more of the following conditions exist: (1) the lawyer believes it is in the best interest of the client's legal defense to deny the request; (2) a protective order or court rule limiting the discovery materials that may be shown to the defendant or taken to a jail or prison is in effect; (3) such review is prohibited by the specific terms of a discovery agreement[1] between the prosecution and the defense lawyer; (4) because of circumstances beyond the defense counsel's control, such review is not feasible in light of the volume of discovery materials and the time remaining before trial or before a decision must be made by the client on a plea offer; or (5) disclosure of the discovery materials will endanger the safety or welfare of the client or others.

In determining what discovery materials are relevant, and what disclosure is in the best interest of the client's legal defense, the lawyer must exercise his or her independent professional judgment in the context of the decisions that the defendant must make about what plea to enter, whether to waive jury trial, and whether to testify. See Rule 1.2(a)(1). As noted above: "The guiding principle is that the lawyer should fulfill reasonable client expectations for information consistent with the duty to act in the client's best interests, and the client's overall requirements as to the character of representation." Rule 1.4, cmt. [5]. However, as stated in comment [7] to Rule 1.4, a lawyer "may not withhold information to serve the lawyer's own interest or convenience or the interest or convenience of another person." Therefore, the lawyer may not deny the request due to issues of expense or inconvenience.

Regardless of whether the lawyer determines that the client should have an opportunity to review some or all of the discovery materials, the lawyer is not required to provide the client with a physical copy of the discovery materials during the course of the representation.

Inquiry #2:

If Lawyer provides Defendant with a copy of, or access to, discovery materials, may Lawyer redact or otherwise remove private information of a third person, such as the address of a witness or pictures of an alleged rape victim?

Opinion #2:

The lawyer may redact or otherwise remove information that the lawyer determines, in his professional judgment, should not be disclosed to the client, including information that would endanger the safety and welfare of the client or is subject to a protective order, court rule, or agreement prohibiting disclosure. See Rule 1.4, cmt. [7].

Endnote

1. Discovery agreements between the prosecution and the defense may present other ethical concerns not addressed in this opinion.

2013 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

April 19, 2013

Safekeeping Funds Collected from Client to Pay Expenses

Opinion examines a lawyer's responsibilities when charging and collecting from a client for the expenses of representation.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney hires a court reporter to take a deposition in Client's case. The court reporter transcribes the deposition and delivers the transcript and an invoice to Attorney. Attorney bills Client for the court reporter's services in the amount shown on the invoice. Client gives Attorney the funds to pay the court reporter's invoice. Attorney has not previously paid the court reporter.

May Attorney deposit the funds from Client into Attorney's operating account and write a check on the operating account to pay the court reporter?

Opinion #1:

No. The funds collected from Client were collected for the purpose of paying a third party in connection with the performance of legal services and are, therefore, "entrusted funds." Entrusted funds are funds belonging to someone other than the lawyer which are in the lawyer's possession or control in connection with the performance of legal services or professional fiduciary services. Rule 1.15-1(d). Entrusted funds must be maintained separately from the property of Attorney and deposited in Attorney's trust account in accordance with Rule 1.15-2(b).

Attorney may direct Client to write a check for the court reporter's fee payable directly to the court reporter. Attorney would then forward the check to the court reporter without depositing the check in Attorney's trust account. Rule 1.15 does not prohibit a lawyer who receives a check belonging wholly to a third party from delivering the check to the appropriate recipient without first depositing the check in the lawyer's trust account. Rule 1.15, cmt. [5].

Inquiry #2:

Would the answer to Inquiry #1 change if Attorney considers payment of a court reporter to be the lawyer's obligation?

Opinion #2:

No. It does not matter who has the obligation to pay the court reporter. If a lawyer receives funds from a client for the purpose of paying a third party, the funds are entrusted funds and must be maintained separately from the property of the lawyer in a trust account.

Inquiry #3:

Would the answer to Inquiry #1 change if Attorney is contractually obligated to pay the court reporter's fee regardless of whether Client pays Attorney for this expense?

Opinion #3:

No. Attorney's contractual obligations do not change the fact that Attorney is receiving entrusted funds from a client for the specific purpose of paying a third party.

Inquiry #4:

Would the answer to Inquiry #1 change if Attorney has already paid the court reporter from either his operating account or personal funds prior to receipt of Client's funds?

Opinion #4:

Yes. Attorney has advanced the funds to pay the expenses of representation and Attorney is entitled to reimbursement from the client. Rule 1.8, cmt. [10]. The money paid by Client is not entrusted to Attorney but is owed to him. To avoid commingling client funds with the lawyer's funds as required by Rule 1.15-2(f), Attorney must deposit Client's payment into his operating or personal account.

Inquiry #5:

In the field of patent law, the services of patent lawyers or agents in foreign countries ("foreign agents") are sometimes required in the course of applying for international patents for US clients. On behalf of Client, Patent Attorney arranges for foreign agent services. The foreign agent performs the required services and sends an invoice to Patent Attorney. Patent Attorney bills Client for the foreign agent's services in the amount shown on the invoice. Client sends Patent Attorney the funds to pay the foreign agent's invoice. Patent Attorney has not previously paid the foreign agent.

Do the answers to Inquiries #1-4 change if the funds at issue are funds received from the client to pay for the services of a foreign agent?

Opinion #5:

No.

Inquiry #6

Patent Attorney and a foreign agent routinely provide services to clients of the other lawyer upon request. The foreign agent and Patent Attorney invoice each other per client matter. The foreign agent and Patent Attorney also have a practice of arranging offsets, such that the total amount due to the foreign agent is reduced by the amount due to Patent Attorney.

When Patent Attorney receives an invoice from the foreign agent for services performed by the foreign agent for one of Patent Attorney's clients, Patent Attorney invoices the client for the amount due for the foreign agent's fee and collects the funds from the client.

Do these additional facts change the answer to Inquiry #5?

Opinion #6:

No.

Inquiry #7:

Under the facts in Inquiry #6, Patent Attorney collects the funds from the client for the foreign agent's fee but does not use that money to pay the foreign agent's fee. Instead Attorney settles the obligation to the foreign agent through offsets or, if no offset agreement can be reached, by payment from Patent Attorney.

Is this permissible?

Opinion #7:

No. If a lawyer collects money from a client for a specific purpose, the lawyer must either (1) use the money received from the client to make the payment for which the money was collected, (2) return the funds to the client, or (3) obtain the client's consent to hold the funds in trust until earned by provision of legal services or used to pay other expenses. Rule 1.15-2.

Inquiry #8:

Under the facts in Inquiry #6, is it permissible for Patent Attorney to offset a client expense with a fee due to Patent Attorney in an unrelated matter?

Opinion #8:

Yes, provided Attorney provides Client with a full accounting and explanation of the cost of the foreign agent's services, the offsets applied to the foreign agent's invoice, and the amount still owed to the foreign agent or owed to Attorney by Client. If a lawyer invoices a client for a specific amount to pay a designated expense, the lawyer must use the money received from the client to pay that expense, return the funds to the client, or obtain the client's consent to deposit the funds in the trust account. See Opinion #7. If an expense was already paid by the lawyer through offsets or the advancing of the lawyer's funds, the lawyer may use the money received from the client to reimburse the lawyer. See Opinion #4. However, offset agreements may never be used by a lawyer to earn a profit on the expenses of representation. See Rule 1.5(a)(prohibiting the charging or collecting of an excess amount for expenses).

Inquiry #9

Would the answers to Inquiries #6-8 change if Patent Attorney considers the obligation to pay a foreign agent to be the lawyer's obligation?

Opinion #9:

No.

Inquiry #10:

Would the answers to Inquiries #6-8 change if Patent Attorney is contractually obligated to pay for the services of the foreign agent regardless of whether Client pays Patent Attorney for those services?

Opinion #10:

No.

Inquiry #11:

Client pays Patent Attorney for the foreign agent's fee after the foreign agent has performed services and invoiced Patent Attorney. Client terminates Patent Attorney's representation and retains Patent Attorney #2. At the time of termination, Patent Attorney has not paid the foreign agent or used offsets to satisfy the obligation to the foreign agent. The foreign agent invoices Patent Attorney #2 for the services provided in Client's matter. Do these additional facts or the potential for this to occur change the answers to Inquiries #5-10?

Opinion #11:

No. Patent Attorney must maintain Client's entrusted funds in Patent Attorney's trust account until returned to Client or until receipt of instructions for disposition from Client or Client's new lawyer. If Client or Patent Attorney

#2 instructs Patent Attorney to pay the foreign agent, Patent Attorney must do so promptly. See Rule 1.5-2(m). Similarly, if instructed to do so, Patent Attorney must transfer Client's funds to Patent Attorney #2 for deposit in Patent Attorney #2's trust account where they will be available to pay the foreign agent.

2013 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

July 19, 2013

Editor's note: This opinion supplements and clarifies 2006 FEO 3.

Representation in Purchase of Foreclosed Property

Opinion examines the ethical duties of a lawyer representing both the buyer and the seller on the purchase of a foreclosure property and the lawyer's duties when the representation is limited to the seller.

Inquiry #1:

Bank A foreclosed its deed of trust on real property and was the highest bidder at the sale. Bank A listed the property for sale. Buyer entered into a contract to purchase the property.

An addendum to the Offer to Purchase and Contract ("Contract") signed by the parties states that the closing shall be held in Seller's lawyer's office by a date certain and that Seller, Bank A, "shall only pay those closing costs and fees associated with the transfer of the Property that local custom or practice clearly allocates to Seller ... and the Buyer shall pay all remaining fees and costs." Bank B is providing financing for the transaction.

Seller chose Law Firm X to close the residential real estate transaction. Law Firm X did not participate in the foreclosure of the property prior to the sale; however, Law Firm X regularly does closings for properties sold by Bank A.

Law Firm X proposes to send Buyer a letter advising Buyer that it has been chosen as settlement agent and advising Buyer that it will be representing both parties in the transaction. Law Firm X will charge Buyer $425 for the closing.

May Lawyer at Law Firm X participate in the joint representation of Buyer and Seller as contemplated by the Contract?

Opinion #1:

If a lawyer is named as the closing agent for a residential real estate transaction pursuant to an agreement such as the one set out above, the lawyer has a duty to ensure that he can comply with Rule 1.7 prior to accepting joint representation of the buyer and seller. When contemplating joint representation, a lawyer must consider whether the interests of the parties will be adequately protected if they are permitted to give their informed consent to the representation, and whether an independent lawyer would advise the parties to consent to the conflict of interest. Representation is prohibited if the lawyer cannot reasonably conclude that he will be able to provide competent and diligent representation to all clients. See Rule 1.7, cmt. [15]. As stated in comment [29] to Rule 1.7, the representation of multiple clients "is improper when it is unlikely that impartiality can be maintained."

The Ethics Committee has previously concluded that, under certain circumstances, it may be acceptable for a lawyer to represent the borrower, the lender, and the seller in the closing of a residential real estate transaction. See, e.g., CPR 100, RPC 210. Joint representation may be permissible in a residential real estate closing because, in the usual transaction, the contract to purchase is entered into by the buyer and seller prior to the engagement of a lawyer. Therefore, the lawyer has no obligation to bargain for either party. Similarly, the buyer and the lender have agreed to the basic terms of the mortgage loan prior to the engagement of the closing lawyer. However, in CPR 100, the Ethics Committee specifically stated that:

> [a] lawyer having a continuing professional relationship with any party to the usual residential transaction, whether the seller, the lender, or the borrower, should be particularly alert to determine in his own mind whether or not there is any obstacle to his loyal representation of other parties to the transaction, and if he finds that there is, or if there is any doubt in his mind about it, he should promptly decline to represent any other party to the transaction.

In addition to the above determination, Rule 1.7 requires that the lawyer obtain any affected client's informed consent to the joint representation and to confirm that consent in writing. Rule 1.7.

Comment [6] to Rule 1.0 (Terminology) provides that, to obtain "informed consent," a lawyer must "make reasonable efforts to ensure that the client or other person possesses information reasonably adequate to make an informed decision." Comment [6] clarifies that, ordinarily, this will require: (1) communication that includes a disclosure of the facts and circumstances giving rise to the situation; (2) any explanation reasonably necessary to inform the individual of the material advantages and disadvantages of the proposed course of conduct; and (3) a discussion of the individual's options and alternatives.

To obtain Buyer's "informed" consent in the instant scenario, Lawyer must: (1) explain the proposed scope of the lawyer's representation; (2) disclose Lawyer's prior relationship with Seller; (3) explain the advantages and risks of common representation; and (4) discuss the options/alternatives Buyer has under the Contract, such as hiring his own lawyer at his own expense. See Rule 1.0, 97 FEO 8, 2006 FEO 3.

If the above requirements are met, Lawyer may proceed with the common representation. If Lawyer subsequently determines that he can no longer exercise his independent professional judgment on behalf of both clients, he must withdraw from the representation of both clients.

If Lawyer determines at the outset that the common representation will be adverse to the interests of either Buyer or Seller, or that his judgment will be impaired by loyalty to Seller, Lawyer may not represent both parties. Similarly, if Buyer does not consent to the joint representation, Lawyer may not represent both parties.

Inquiry #2:

Buyer notifies Lawyer at Law Firm X that he wants to have his own lawyer represent him at the closing. Therefore, Law Firm X intends to limit its representation to Seller. To clarify its role in the transaction, Lawyer sends Buyer an Independently Represented Buyer Acknowledgement to sign agreeing that, although Law Firm X was providing services necessary and incidental to effectuating a settlement of the transaction, including providing an opinion of title for the Buyer's policy to the title insurance company chosen by and affiliated with Bank A, there will be no attorney-client relationship between Law Firm X and Buyer. Law Firm X informs Buyer that the charge for the closing will be reduced to $325.

May Law Firm X limit its representation to Seller and charge Buyer $325 for closing the real estate transaction?

Opinion #2:

Upon notice that Buyer wants to have his own lawyer represent him at the closing, Lawyer must first determine whether Buyer desires Law Firm X to continue to represent his interests in conjunction with his own lawyer. If Buyer desires Law Firm X to continue to represent his interests in the closing, then Law Firm X may continue to advise Buyer and the firm would not be required to adjust its fee.

If Buyer does not consent to the joint representation, Lawyer may limit his representation to Seller in the absence of a conflict of interest. Under the circumstances, it is incumbent upon Lawyer to clarify its role to Buyer. 2006 FEO 3 specifically holds that a lawyer may represent only the seller's interests in a transaction and provide services as a title and closing agent, as required by the contract of sale. There must, however, be certain robust and thorough disclosures to the buyer.

Pursuant to 2006 FEO 3, Lawyer must "fully disclose to Buyer that Seller is his sole client, he does not represent the interests of Buyer, the closing documents will be prepared consistent with the specifications in the contract to purchase and, in the absence of such specifications, he will prepare the documents in a manner that will protect the interests of his client, Seller, and, therefore, Buyer may wish to obtain his own lawyer." 2006 FEO 3.

If Lawyer limits his representation to Seller, Lawyer may not perform any legal services for Buyer. At the conclusion of the representation, Lawyer needs to consider the factors set out in Rule 1.5(a) and determine whether the fee of $325 is clearly excessive for the services performed for Seller.

Whether the contract to purchase the property requires Buyer to pay Lawyer's fee for representation of Seller is a legal question outside the purview of the Ethics Committee. However, a lawyer may be paid by a third party, including an opposing party, provided the lawyer complies with Rule 1.8(f) and the fee is not illegal or clearly excessive in violation of Rule 1.5(a). See RPC 196.

Similarly, Buyer's authority to renegotiate the terms of the Contract pertaining to the selection of the closing lawyer, and/or the payment of the closing costs and fees associated with the closing, are outside the purview of the Ethics Committee.

Inquiry #3:

May Lawyer provide an opinion of title to the title insurance company for Buyer's title insurance policy under the circumstances described in Inquiry #2?

Opinion #3:

In representing Seller, Law Firm X may provide an opinion on title to the title insurer sufficient and necessary to satisfy the requirements of the Contract and facilitate completion of the transaction on behalf of Seller. See CPR 100, RPC 210, 2006 FEO 3.

CPR 100 and RPC 210 provide that a lawyer who is representing the buyer, the lender, and the seller (or any one or more of them) may provide the title insurer with an opinion on title sufficient to issue a mortgagee title insurance policy, when the premium is paid by the buyer. CPR 100 further recommends that, because a buyer-borrower is usually inexperienced in the purchase of real estate and the securing of loans thereon, "any lawyer involved in the transaction, even though not representing the borrower, should be alert to inform the borrower of the availability of an owner's title insurance policy which is usually available to the borrower up to the amount of the loan at little or no expense to the borrower, and assist the borrower in obtaining an owner's title insurance policy."

2013 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

July 19, 2013

Disclosure of Confidential Information to Lawyer Serving as Foreclosure Trustee

Opinion rules that a lawyer/trustee must explain his role in a foreclosure proceeding to any unrepresented party that is an unsophisticated consumer of legal services; if he fails to do so and that party discloses material confidential information, the lawyer may not represent the other party in a subsequent, related adversarial proceeding unless there is informed consent.

Inquiry:

Lender requests that Lawyer's Firm serve as the substitute trustee under a note and deed of trust to commence foreclosure proceedings based on an alleged event of default. Borrower under the note and deed of trust is a limited liability company. While Firm is acting as substitute trustee, Borrower's member-manager meets with Lawyer and explains to Lawyer why he believes Borrower is not in default. Borrower is a small business and its member-manager is inexperienced in matters requiring legal representation.

During the meeting with the member-manager, Lawyer did not explain the role of the trustee or the trustee's relationship to the borrower and lender in a foreclosure. The member-manager informed Lawyer that Borrower's theory is that the note required the subject property to be cleaned and cleared, and Borrower does not believe this condition was met. Borrower's member-manager shows Lawyer pictures and other documents supporting Borrower's theory of the case during this meeting.

The foreclosure proceeding is subsequently dismissed and superior court litigation between Borrower and Lender ensues. A new substitute trustee is appointed under the deed of trust. The primary issue in the lawsuit is the same issue Lawyer and the member-manager of Borrower discussed at their meeting while Firm was substitute trustee, i.e. whether Lender fulfilled its obligations under the note to clean and clear the property.

Now that Firm is no longer the substitute trustee, may Lawyer represent Lender in the lawsuit?

Opinion:

RPC 90 provides that a lawyer who as trustee initiated a foreclosure proceeding may resign as trustee after the foreclosure is contested and act as lender's counsel. The opinion notes that former service as a trustee does not disqualify a lawyer from subsequently assuming a partisan role in regard to foreclosure under a deed of trust or related litigation. See also RPC 64 (lawyer who served as trustee may after foreclosure sue the former debtor on behalf of the purchaser).

The facts of RPC 90 contemplate that the trustee resigns "when it becomes apparent that the foreclosure will be contested." In the instant matter, it appears that Lawyer continued to participate as trustee in the foreclosure after he knew that it was contested. Lawyer met with the member-manager of Borrower and discussed Borrower's theory as to the issue of default. Lawyer obtained information from the member-manager specifically related to the issue in controversy.

The responsibilities and limitations of a lawyer acting as trustee on a deed of trust arise primarily from the lawyer's fiduciary duties as trustee as opposed to any client-lawyer relationship. RPC 82. As a fiduciary, a lawyer/trustee has a duty to act impartially as between the parties and to ensure that the foreclosure is prosecuted in accordance with the law and the terms of the deed of trust. See RPC 82. However, the trustee's role may be unclear to an unsophisticated consumer of legal services who is unrepresented in the foreclosure. This may lead this party to make uncounseled disclosures to the lawyer/trustee on the erroneous assumption that the lawyer represents the party and has a duty of confidentiality to the party. Therefore, it is the lawyer/trustee's duty to explain the following to any party to a foreclosure that is unrepresented by counsel and inexperienced in the employment of lawyers or the mechanics of a foreclosure proceeding:

- the trustee's role is to ensure that the correct procedures are impartially followed in the prosecution of the foreclosure proceeding;
- the trustee does not represent either the lender or the borrower; and
- communications made by the lender or the borrower to the trustee will not be held in confidence and may be used or disclosed in subsequent actions between the lender and the borrower.

Lawyer failed to explain these limitations on the trustee's role to the member-manager of the LLC, which was unrepresented and apparently inexperienced in the mechanics of a foreclosure proceeding. The member-manager reasonably assumed that the disclosures he made to Lawyer would be held in confidence. Because Lawyer, in his fiduciary capacity, encouraged or allowed Borrower to confide in him without explaining the trustee's role or warning Borrower that the information could be disclosed or used, Lawyer may not subsequently represent Lender in a subsequent substantially related matter if the information Lawyer received from Borrower is material to the matter. Such a practice would constitute conduct that is prejudicial to the administration of justice. See Rule 8.4(d). However, Borrower's informed consent, confirmed in writing, would permit Lawyer to proceed with the representation. See Rule 1.7(b).

A lawyer/trustee may represent a lender against a borrower in a subsequent proceeding if the lawyer resigns as trustee upon recognizing that the foreclosure will be contested and the lawyer has not received information that may be used to the disadvantage of Borrower in the subsequent matter.

2013 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

July 19, 2013

State Prosecutor Seeking Order for Arrest for Failure to Appear When Defendant is Detained by ICE

Opinion rules that a state prosecutor does not violate the Rules of Professional Conduct by asking the court to enter an order for arrest when a defendant detained by ICE fails to appear in court on the defendant's scheduled court date.

Inquiry #1:

A defendant is an undocumented alien who is arrested for a crime. He is given a secured bond by the magistrate, placed in custody in the jail, and served with a US Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) detainer. The defendant hires a bondsman to pay the secured bond and the bondsman does so. ICE comes to the jail and takes the defendant into custody, transporting him to a federal holding facility. The defendant's court-appointed lawyer brings verification of the defendant's detention by ICE to the prosecutor handling the case. Later, the defendant's lawyer appears in court on the defendant's court date and explains to the court that the defendant is in the custody of ICE. The defense lawyer asks the state to have the defendant brought to trial, enter a voluntary dismissal, or dismiss the case with leave pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat.§15A-932.

The prosecutor asks the judge to call the defendant for failure to appear and to issue an order for his arrest pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat.§15A-305(b)(2) which provides that "[a]n order for arrest may be issued when:...[a] defendant who has been arrested and released from custody pursuant to Article 26 of this Chapter, Bail, fails to appear as required."

The court enters a forfeiture of the bond pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat.§15A-544.3(a), which provides that when a defendant who was released upon execution of a bail bond fails to appear before the court as required, the court shall enter a forfeiture for the amount of the bail bond in favor of the state and against the defendant and the surety on the bail bond. Nevertheless, N.C. Gen. Stat.§15A-544.3(b)(9) provides that a forfeiture of a bail bond will be set aside if, on or before the final judgment date, "satisfactory evidence is presented to the court" that one of a number of listed "events" has occurred. That list includes the following "event" at subparagraph (vii):

> the defendant was incarcerated in a local, state, or federal detention center, jail, or prison located anywhere within the borders of the United States at the time of the failure to appear, and the district attorney for the county in which the charges are pending was notified of the defendant's incarceration while the defendant was still incarcerated and the defendant remains incarcerated for a period of 10 days following the district attorney's receipt of notice, as evidenced by a copy of the written notice served on the district attorney via hand delivery or certified mail and written documentation of date upon which the defendant was released from incarceration, if the defendant was released prior to the time the motion to set aside was filed.

N.C. Gen. Stat.§15A-544.3(b)(9); accord N.C. Gen. Stat.§15A-544.5(b)(7).

If ICE decides to release the defendant from custody and there is an outstanding order for his arrest from a North Carolina court, ICE will detain the defendant until he can be released to the custody of the State.[1] See N.C. Gen. Stat.§15A-761.

Is the prosecutor's conduct a violation of Rule 3.8 or any other Rule of Professional Conduct?

Opinion #1:

No. Rule 3.8, on the special responsibilities of a prosecutor, prohibits a prosecutor from prosecuting a charge that the prosecutor knows is not supported by probable cause. The comment to the rule, moreover, emphasizes the prosecutor's duty to seek justice. However, there is no legal requirement that a defendant's failure to appear in court be willful. In the instant inquiry, the legal requirements for requesting an order of arrest were satisfied and there was a procedural reason for seeking the order of arrest. Therefore, although the prosecutor knows that the defendant's failure to appear is not willful, the prosecutor's exercise of his professional discretion within the requirements of the law does not violate the Rules of Professional Conduct.

Inquiry #2:

Did the judge violate the Rules of Professional Conduct or the Code of Judicial Conduct by issuing the order for arrest and forfeiting the bond?

Opinion #2:

Opining on the professional conduct of judicial officers is outside the purview of the Ethics Committee. Therefore, no opinion will be offered in response to this question.

Endnote

1. As a practical matter, however, a person who is detained by ICE is rarely released. Deportation or federal incarceration is more likely.

2013 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

July 19, 2013

Sharing Fee from Tax Appeal with Nonlawyer

Opinion rules that a law firm may not share a fee from a tax appeal with a nonlawyer tax representative unless such nonlawyer representatives are legally permitted by the tax authorities to represent claimants and to be awarded fees for such representation.

Inquiry:

A is a nonlawyer independent tax representative who has worked with Company B in seeking to achieve a reduction in the county assessment of Company B's property for ad valorem taxes. Under A's contract with Company B, if A is successful in achieving a reduction in the assessment, he is entitled to receive a percentage of Company B's tax savings. It is assumed that A is limiting his representation to activities that do not constitute the practice of law.

Pursuant to the contract with Company B, A is authorized to obtain counsel provided it does not increase the amount Company B is required to pay for representation.

A and Company B want to appeal to the North Carolina Property Tax Commission seeking a reduction in the assessment. A licensed lawyer is required to pursue the appeal.

With Company B's consent, may A retain Lawyer to represent Company B on the appeal and pay Lawyer a percentage of A's share of any tax savings for Company B? May Lawyer be paid out of A's share on an hourly basis?

Opinion:

Rule 5.4(a) regulates the distribution of fees that, because of the prohibition on the unauthorized practice of law, may only be earned by a lawyer. See 2005 FEO 6. The purpose of the prohibition, as noted in comment [1] to the rule, is to protect the lawyer's professional independence of judgment from interference from a nonlawyer. The prohibition also prevents solicitation of cases by lawyers and discourages nonlawyers from engaging in the unauthorized practice of law. See 2003 FEO 10.

Unless nonlawyers are legally permitted to represent taxpayer/claimants before any taxing authority, and to be awarded fees for such representation, the proposed arrangement constitutes improper fee sharing in violation of Rule 5.4(a).

The instant scenario can be distinguished from those addressed previously by the Ethics Committee in 2003 FEO 10 and 2005 FEO 6. The two prior opinions apply to nonlawyer representatives of disability claimants before the Social Security Administration (SSA). 2003 FEO 10 holds that a Social Security lawyer may agree to compensate a nonlawyer representative for the prior representation of a disability claimant before the SSA. 2005 FEO 6 provides that the compensation of a nonlawyer law firm employee who represents Social Security disability claimants before the SSA may be based upon the income generated by such representation. However, nonlawyers are legally permitted to represent disability claimants before the SSA and to be awarded fees for such representation. See 42 U.S.C. § 406. When generated by a nonlawyer as authorized by law, such a fee cannot be designated a "legal fee" subject to the limitations of Rule 5.4(a). See 2005 FEO 6.

Lawyer should negotiate his fee directly with Company B.

2013 Formal Ethics Opinion 8

July 25, 2014

Responding to the Mental Impairment of Firm Lawyer

Opinion analyzes the responsibilities of the partners and supervisory lawyers in a firm when another firm lawyer has a mental impairment.

Introduction:

As the lawyers from the "Baby Boomer" generation advance in years, there will be more instances of lawyers who suffer from mental impairment or diminished capacity due to age. In addition, lawyers suffer from depression and substance abuse at approximately twice the rate of the general population.[1] This opinion examines the obligations of lawyers in a firm who learn that another firm lawyer suffers from a mental condition that impairs the lawyer's ability to practice law or has resulted in a violation of a Rule of Professional Conduct. This opinion relies upon ABA Commission on Ethics and Professional Responsibility, Formal Opinion 03-429 (2003) [hereinafter ABA Formal Op. 03-429] for its approach to the issues raised by the mental impairment of a lawyer in a firm. For further guidance, readers are encouraged to refer to the ABA opinion.

Inquiry #1:

Attorney X has been practicing law successfully for over 40 years and is a prominent lawyer in his community. In recent years, his ability to remember has diminished and he has become confused on occasion. The other lawyers in his firm are concerned that he may be suffering from the early stages of Alzheimer's disease or dementia.

What are the professional responsibilities[2] of the other lawyers in the firm?[3]

Opinion #1:

The partners[4] in the firm must make reasonable efforts to ensure that

Attorney X does not violate the Rules of Professional Conduct.

Mental impairment may lead to inability to competently represent a client as required by Rule 1.1, inability to complete tasks in a diligent manner as required by Rule 1.3, and inability to communicate with clients about their representation as required by Rule 1.4. Although a consequence of the lawyer's impairment, these are violations of the Rules of Professional Conduct nonetheless. As noted in ABA Formal Op. 03-429, "[i]mpaired lawyers have the same obligations under the [Rules of Professional Conduct] as other lawyers. Simply stated, mental impairment does not lessen a lawyer's obligation to provide clients with competent representation." Under Rule 1.16(a)(2), a lawyer is prohibited from representing a client and, where representation has commenced, required to withdraw if "the lawyer's physical or mental condition materially impairs the lawyer's ability to represent the client." Unfortunately, an impaired lawyer may not be aware or may deny that his impairment is negatively impacting his ability to represent clients. ABA Formal Op. 03-429.

Rule 5.1(a) requires partners in a firm and all lawyers with comparable managerial authority in the firm to "make reasonable efforts to ensure that the firm or the organization has in effect measures giving reasonable assurance that all lawyers in the firm or the organization conform to the Rules of Professional Conduct." Similarly, Rule 5.1(b) requires a lawyer having direct supervisory authority over another lawyer to "make reasonable efforts to ensure that the other lawyer conforms to the Rules of Professional Conduct." Taken together, these provisions require a managerial or supervisory lawyer who suspects or knows that a lawyer is impaired to closely supervise[5] the conduct of the impaired lawyer because of the risk that the impairment will result in violations of the Rules.

When deciding what should be done in response to a lawyer's apparent mental impairment, it may be helpful to partners and supervising lawyers to consult a mental health professional for advice about identifying mental impairment and assistance for the impaired lawyer. Id. As observed in ABA Formal Op. 03-429,

> [t]he firm's paramount obligation is to take steps to protect the interest of its clients. The first step may be to confront the impaired lawyer with the facts of his impairment and insist upon steps to assure that clients are represented appropriately notwithstanding the lawyer's impairment. Other steps include forcefully urging the impaired lawyer to accept assistance to prevent future violations or limiting the ability of the impaired lawyer to handle legal matters or deal with clients.

Id. If the lawyer's mental impairment can be accommodated by changing the lawyer's work environment or the type of work that the lawyer performs, such steps also should be taken.[6] "Depending on the nature, severity, and permanence (or likelihood of periodic recurrence) of the lawyer's impairment, management of the firm has an obligation to supervise the legal services performed by the lawyer and, in an appropriate case, prevent the lawyer from rendering legal services to clients of the firm." Id. Making a confidential report to the State Bar's Lawyer Assistance Program (LAP) (or to another lawyers assistance program approved by the State Bar[7]) would also be an appropriate step. The LAP can provide the impaired lawyer with confidential advice, referrals, and other assistance.

Inquiry #2:

Attorney X's mental capacity continues to diminish. Apparently as a consequence of mental impairment, Attorney X failed to deliver client funds to the office manager for deposit in the trust account. It is believed that he converted the funds to his own use. In addition, Attorney X failed to complete discovery for a number of clients although he declined assistance from the other lawyers in the firm. Some clients may face court sanctions as a consequence. Although Attorney X is engaging and articulate when he meets with clients, he no longer seems able to prepare for litigation and, on more than one occasion, Attorney X's presentation in court was muddled, meandering, and confused.

What are the professional responsibilities of the other lawyers in the firm?

Opinion #2:

Attorney X has violated Rule 1.15 by failing to place entrusted funds in the firm trust account. He has also violated Rule 1.1 and Rule 1.3 by providing incompetent representation and by failing to act with reasonable promptness in completing discovery. These are violations of the Rules of Professional Conduct that may have to be reported to the State Bar or to the court. In addition, steps may have to be taken to provide additional ongoing supervision for Attorney X or to change the circumstances or type of work that he performs to avoid additional violations of his professional duties. The other lawyers in the firm must also take steps to mitigate the adverse consequences of Attorney X's past conduct including replacing client funds.

Rule 8.3(a) requires a lawyer "who knows that another lawyer has committed a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct that raises a substantial question as to that lawyer's honesty, trustworthiness, or fitness as a lawyer in other respects [to] inform the North Carolina State Bar or the court having jurisdiction over the matter." Only misconduct that raises a "substantial question" as to the lawyer's honesty, trustworthiness, or fitness must be reported. As noted in the Comment,

> [t]his Rule limits the reporting obligation to those offenses that a self-regulating profession must vigorously endeavor to prevent. A measure of judgment is, therefore, required in complying with the provisions of this Rule. The term "substantial" refers to the seriousness of the possible offense and not the quantum of evidence of which the lawyer is aware.
>
> Rule 8.3, cmt. [4].

If an impaired lawyer's misconduct is isolated and unlikely to recur because the mental impairment has ended or is controlled by medication or treatment, no report of incompetent or delinquent representation may be required. See RPC 243 (an "isolated incident resulting from a momentary lapse of judgment" does not raise a substantial question about honesty, trustworthiness, or fitness). "Similarly, if the firm is able to eliminate the risk of future violations of the duties of competence and diligence under the [Rules] through close supervision of the lawyer's work, it would not be required to report the impaired lawyer's violation." ABA Formal Op. 03-429.

However, reporting is required if the misconduct is serious, such as the violation of the trust accounting rules described in this inquiry, or the lawyer insists upon continuing to practice although his mental impairment has rendered him unable to represent clients as required by the Rules of Professional Conduct.[8] In either situation, a report of misconduct may not be made if it would require the disclosure of confidential client information in violation of Rule 1.6, and the client does not consent to disclosure. See Rule 8.3(c).

Rule 1.4(b) requires a lawyer to "explain a matter to the extent reasonably necessary to permit the client to make informed decisions regarding the representation." If the managing lawyers determine that the impaired lawyer cannot provide competent and diligent representation and should be removed from a client's case, the situation must be explained to the client so that the client can decide whether to agree to be represented by another lawyer in the firm or to seek other legal counsel.

Rule 5.1(c) requires a partner or a lawyer with comparable managerial authority or with supervisory authority over another lawyer to take reasonable remedial action to avoid the consequences of the lawyer's violation of the Rules. Even if the impaired lawyer is removed from a representation, the firm lawyers must make every effort to mitigate any adverse consequences of the impaired lawyer's prior representation of the client.

Inquiry #3:

If the firm partners determine that Attorney X has violated the Rules and there is a duty to report under Rule 8.3, may they fulfill the duty by reporting Attorney X to the State Bar's Lawyer Assistance Program (LAP)?

Opinion #3:

No. 2003 Formal Ethics Opinion 2 addressed this issue in the context of reporting opposing counsel as follows:

> The report of misconduct should be made to the Grievance Committee of the State Bar if a lawyer's impairment results in a violation of the Rules that is sufficient to trigger the reporting requirement. The lawyer must be held professionally accountable. See, e.g., Rule .0130(e) of the Rules on Discipline and Disability of Attorneys, 27 N.C.A.C. 1B, Section .0100 (information regarding a member's alleged drug use will be referred to LAP; information regarding the member's alleged additional misconduct will be reported to the chair of the Grievance Committee).
>
> Making a report to the State Bar, as required under Rule 8.3(a), does not diminish the appropriateness of also making a confidential report to LAP.

The Bar's disciplinary program and LAP often deal with the same lawyer and are not mutually exclusive. The discipline program addresses conduct; LAP addresses the underlying illness that may have caused the conduct. Both programs, in the long run, protect the public interest.

Inquiry #4:

Attorney X announces his intent to leave the firm to set up his own solo practice and to take all of his client files with him. The other lawyers in the firm are concerned that, absent any supervision or assistance, Attorney X will be unable to competently represent clients because of his mental impairment.

What are the duties of the remaining lawyers in the firm if Attorney X leaves and sets up his own practice?

Opinion #4:

In addition to any duty to report, the remaining lawyers may have a duty to any current client of Attorney X to ensure that the client has sufficient information to make an informed decision about continuing to be represented by Attorney X.

As noted in Opinion #2, Rule 1.4(b) requires a lawyer to "explain a matter to the extent reasonably necessary to permit the client to make informed decisions regarding the representation." The clients of an impaired lawyer who leaves a firm must decide whether to follow the departed lawyer to his new law practice. To make an informed decision, the clients must be informed of "the facts surrounding the withdrawal to the extent disclosure is reasonably necessary for those clients to make an informed decision about the selection of counsel." ABA Formal Op. 03-429. There is no comparable duty to former clients of the impaired lawyer as long as the firm avoids any action that might be interpreted as an endorsement of the services of the departed, impaired lawyer, including sending a joint letter regarding the lawyer's departure from the firm.

The remaining lawyers in the firm may conclude that, while under their supervision and support, the impaired lawyer did not violate the Rules and, therefore, there is no duty to report to the State Bar under Rule 8.3. Nevertheless, subject to the duty of confidentiality to clients under Rule 1.6, voluntarily reporting the impaired lawyer to LAP (or another lawyer assistance program approved by the State Bar) would be appropriate. The impaired lawyer will receive assistance and support from LAP and this may help to prevent harm to the interests of the impaired lawyer's clients.

Inquiry #5:

Associate lawyers and staff members are often the first to observe behavior indicating that a lawyer has a mental impairment. If an associate lawyer or a staff member reports behavior by Attorney X that indicates that Attorney X is impaired and may be unable to represent clients competently and diligently, what is a partner's or supervising lawyer's duty upon receiving such a report?

Opinion #5:

If a partner or supervising lawyer receives a report of impairment from an associate lawyer or a staff member, regardless of whether the lawyer suspected of impairment is a senior partner or an associate, the partner or supervising lawyer must investigate and, if it appears that the report is meritorious, take appropriate measures to ensure that the impaired lawyer's conduct conforms to the Rules of Professional Conduct. See Opinion #1 and Rule 5.1(a). It is never appropriate to protect the impaired lawyer by refusing to act upon or ignoring a report of impairment or by attempting to cover up the lawyer's impairment.

Inquiry #6:

If an associate lawyer in the firm observes behavior by Attorney X that indicates that Attorney X is not competent to represent clients, what should the associate lawyer do?

Opinion #6:

The associate lawyer must report his or her observations to a supervising lawyer or the senior management of the firm as necessary to bring the situation to the attention of lawyers in the firm who can take action.

Inquiry #7:

An associate lawyer in the firm reports to his supervising lawyer that he suspects that Attorney X is mentally impaired. He also describes to the supervising lawyer conduct by Attorney X that violated Rules 1.1 and 1.3. The supervising lawyer tells the associate to ignore the situation and to not say anything to anyone about his observations including clients, other lawyers in the firm, or staff members. The associate concludes that no action will be taken to investigate or address Attorney X's behavior. Does the associate lawyer have any further obligation?

Opinion #7:

A subordinate lawyer is bound by the Rules of Professional Conduct notwithstanding that the subordinate lawyer acts at the direction of another lawyer in the firm. Rule 5.2(a). If the associate lawyer believes that the duty to report professional misconduct under Rule 8.3 may be triggered by the conduct of Attorney X, the associate lawyer should discuss this concern with his supervising lawyer. If the supervising lawyer declines to address the situation, the associate lawyer should seek guidance as to his professional responsibilities from the lawyers at the State Bar who provide informal ethics advice.

Inquiry #8:

Assume that Attorney X is the sole principal in the firm and there is one associate lawyer. Attorney X displays behavior that may indicate that he is in the early stages of Alzheimer's disease or dementia. There is no senior management to whom the associate lawyer can report. What should the associate lawyer do?

Opinion #8:

If the associate lawyer believes that the duty to report professional misconduct under Rule 8.3 may be triggered by the conduct of Attorney X, the associate lawyer should seek guidance as to his professional responsibilities from the lawyers at the State Bar who provide informal ethics advice. See Opinion #7. Regardless of whether Attorney X's conduct triggers the duty to report, the associate lawyer may seek advice and assistance from the LAP or from another approved lawyer assistance program, or may contact a trusted, more experienced lawyer in another firm to serve as a mentor or advisor on how to address the situation.

Inquiry #9:

Assume Attorney X is a sole practitioner and the lawyers in his community observe behavior that may indicate that he is in the early stages of Alzheimer's disease or dementia. What is the responsibility of the lawyers in the community?

Opinion #9:

The Rules of Professional Conduct impose no specific duty on other members of the bar to take action relative to a potentially impaired fellow lawyer except the duty to report to the State Bar if the other lawyer's conduct raises a substantial question about his honesty, trustworthiness, or fitness to practice law and the information about the lawyer is not confidential client information. See Opinion #7. Nevertheless, as a matter of professional responsibility, attendant to the duties to seek to improve the legal profession and to protect the interests of the public that are articulated in the Preamble to the Rules of Professional Conduct, the lawyers in the community are encouraged to assist the potentially impaired lawyer to find treatment or to transition from the practice of law. A mental health professional, the LAP, or another lawyer assistance program can be consulted for advice and assistance.

Inquiry #10:

Do the responses to any of the inquiries above change if the lawyer's impairment is due to some other reason such as substance abuse or mental illness?

Opinion #10:

No.

Endnotes

1. ABA Comm. on Ethics and Prof'l Responsibility, Formal Op. 03-429 (2003) (citing George Edward Bailly, Impairment, the Profession, and Your Law Partner, 11 No.1 Prof. Law. 2 (1999)) [hereinafter ABA Formal Op. 03-429].
2. This opinion does not address the issues that may arise under the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990, 42 US C. §§12101 et seq. (2003) (the ADA) relative to an employer's legal responsibilities to an impaired lawyer. Lawyers are advised to consult the ADA and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission's website, eeoc.gov, for guidance.
3. "Firm" as used in the Rules of Professional Conduct and this opinion denotes "a lawyer or lawyers in a law partnership, professional corporation, sole proprietorship, or other association authorized to practice law; or lawyers employed in a legal services organization or the legal department of a corporation, government entity, or other organization." Rule 1.0(d).

4. "Partner" as used in the Rules of Professional Conduct and this opinion denotes "a member of a partnership, a shareholder in a law firm organized as a professional corporation, or a member of an association authorized to practice law." Rule 1.0(h).
5. It is improper for a firm to charge a client for additional supervision for an impaired lawyer if the supervision exceeds what is normally required to ensure competent representation unless the client is advised of the reason for the additional supervision and agrees to the charges. See Rule 1.5(a).
6. ABA Formal Op. 03-429 provides the following examples of accommodation:

   A lawyer who, because of his mental impairment, is unable to perform tasks under strict deadlines or other pressures, might be able to function in compliance with the [Rules] if he can work in an unpressured environment. In addition, the type of work involved, as opposed to the circumstances under which the work occurs, might need to be examined when considering the effect that an impairment might have on a lawyer's performance. For example, an impairment may make it impossible for a lawyer to handle a jury trial or hostile takeover competently, but not interfere at all with his performing legal research or drafting transaction documents.

7. One such program is the Transitioning Lawyers Commission (or "TLC") of the North Carolina Bar Association, which considers issues of aging and cognitive impairment and helps lawyers to wind down their law practices to "retire gracefully." See more at: tlc.ncbar.org.
8. ABA Formal Op. 03-429 cautions that when reporting an impaired lawyer pursuant to Rule 8.3, disclosure of the impairment may be necessary; however, the reporting lawyer should be careful to avoid violating the ADA.
9. ABA Formal Op. 03-429 counsels that, when providing a client with information about the departed lawyer, a firm lawyer "must be careful to limit any statement to ones for which there is a reasonable factual foundation." This will avoid violating the prohibition on false and misleading communications in Rule 7.1 and the prohibition on deceit and misrepresentation in Rule 8.4(c).

2013 Formal Ethics Opinion 9

October 25, 2013

Role of Lawyer for Public Interest Law Organization

Opinion provides guidance to lawyers who work for a public interest law organization that provides legal and non-legal services to its clientele and that has an executive director who is not a lawyer.

Facts:

Attorney A is a staff lawyer for Immigrant Aid Corporation (IAC), a public interest, nonprofit corporation that provides services to immigrants with limited income. Public interest law firms are subject to the requirements of NC Gen. Stat. §84-5.1.

IAC is tax exempt under 26 U.S.C. §501(c)(3). A nonlawyer is the executive director of IAC. IAC has satellite offices that are managed by nonlawyers. The services provided by the organization to immigrants include legal assistance with immigration matters. These services are provided by staff lawyers and by Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA) representatives. BIA representatives are nonlawyers who are authorized by the federal government to handle certain immigration matters.

IAC charges its clients nominal fees for the legal services it provides. There is a separate, predetermined fee for each separate aspect of a case or task to be performed by a lawyer or a BIA representative. The organization does not have income qualification guidelines and does not use a sliding income scale to determine what a client will pay for a service.

A new client of the corporation is asked to sign a document entitled "Retainer Agreement" for the services to be provided by staff lawyers. The agreement states that "if the process to obtain the benefit I seek requires more than one step, each step will be a separate case with a separate fee and separate service plan." A schedule of the separate fees is not provided with the agreement. Instead, the agreement specifies a total fee, which is the aggregate of the fees for the various legal services that it is anticipated the client will need.

The Retainer Agreement states that the executive director or the office manager will determine the outcome of a client's request for a waiver of a legal fee, a client's complaint regarding legal services, and any dispute regarding legal fees. In the case of a fee dispute, a disgruntled client speaks first to a supervising staff lawyer, then, if the dispute is not resolved, to an office manager who is not a lawyer, and finally to the executive director.

When a client pays a fee by cash or check, the cash or check is locked in a staff member's desk until the funds can be deposited in IAC's operating account.

Inquiry #1:

Are North Carolina lawyers who work for IAC subject to the North Carolina Rules of Professional Conduct although they are not employed by a law firm?

Opinion #1:

Yes. The North Carolina Rules of Professional Conduct apply not only to lawyers working at law firms, but also to lawyers working in-house at public and private companies and for non-profit organizations. See Rule 1.0(d) ("'Firm' or 'law firm' denotes a lawyer or lawyers in a law partnership, professional corporation, sole proprietorship, or other association authorized to practice law; or lawyers employed in a legal services organization or the legal department of a corporation, government entity, or other organization.") See also Preamble, Rule 0.1 ("Every lawyer is responsible for observance of the Rules of Professional Conduct").

Inquiry #2:

Is a North Carolina lawyer allowed to work for a 501(c)(3) corporation in which a nonlawyer serves as the executive director or as the manager of the satellite office where the lawyer works?

Opinion #2:

Yes. Pursuant to NC Gen. Stat. §84-5.1, a nonprofit corporation, tax exempt under 26 U.S.C. §501(c)(3), organized or authorized under Chapter 55A of the General Statutes of North Carolina, and operating as a public interest law firm as defined by the applicable Internal Revenue Service guidelines, may render legal services provided by lawyers licensed to practice law in North Carolina for the purposes for which the nonprofit corporation was organized. "The nonprofit corporation must have a governing structure that does not permit an individual or group of individuals other than an attorney duly licensed to practice law in North Carolina to control the manner or course of the legal services rendered and must continually satisfy the criteria established by the Internal Revenue Service for 26 U.S.C. §501(c)(3) status, whether or not any action has been taken to revoke that status." NC Gen. Stat. §84-5.1(a). See also Rule 5.4, cmt. [3] (nonlawyer may serve as a director or officer of a professional corporation organized to practice law if permitted by law).

Inquiry #3:

If the answer to Inquiry #2 is "yes," to what extent may the executive director or office manager supervise or instruct the staff lawyers in the performance of legal services?

Opinion #3:

The nonlawyers associated with the IAC may not "direct or regulate" the staff lawyer's professional judgment in rendering legal services. Rule 5.4(c). As required by NC Gen. Stat. §84-5.1, the IAC "must have a governing structure that does not permit an individual or group of individuals other than an attorney duly licensed to practice law in North Carolina to control the manner or course of the legal services rendered."

Inquiry #4:

The fees to be charged for a legal service performed by a staff lawyer or by a BIA representative are finally approved by the executive director. May a staff lawyer permit a nonlawyer to have final approval authority for fees to be charged for the lawyer's work?

Opinion #4:

A nonlawyer may have final approval authority for fees to be charged for the lawyer's work only if the approval process does not interfere with the staff lawyer's exercise of professional judgment and there is a method for the lawyer to object if the fee is clearly excessive in violation of Rule 1.5(a).

Inquiry #5:

By allowing IAC to collect and retain legal fees, is a staff lawyer participating in fee-sharing with a nonlawyer which is prohibited by Rule 5.4?

Opinion #5:

No. As noted in comment [1] to the Rule 5.4, the traditional limitations on sharing fees prevent interference in the independent professional judgment of a lawyer by a nonlawyer. NC Gen. Stat. §84-5.1 prohibits a nonprofit public interest law corporation from having a governing structure that permits such interference. So long as IAC is complying with the statutory requirements, the fee-splitting prohibition is not triggered by this arrangement.

Inquiry #6:

If money is collected in advance from clients of IAC to pay for legal services to be provided by staff lawyers, does the staff lawyer have to insure that money is deposited into a trust account established and managed pursuant to Rule 1.15 of the Rules of Professional Conduct?

If money is collected for a consultation with an IAC client at the time of the consultation, does the staff lawyer have to insure that the money is deposited into a trust account or may it be deposited into the corporation's operating account?

Does the title "Retainer Agreement" allow the staff lawyer to consider the payment a true retainer, which is earned upon payment, and which may be deposited in IAC's operating account?

Opinion #6:

If money is collected for a staff lawyer's services, the lawyer must insure that IAC handles the money in a manner that is consistent with the lawyer's duty to safekeep client property. Rule 1.15. Comment [2] to Rule 1.15 provides that "[a]ny property belonging to a client or other person or entity that is received by or placed under the control of a lawyer in connection with the lawyer's furnishing of legal services or professional fiduciary services must be handled and maintained in accordance with this Rule 1.15." Pursuant to Rule 1.15-2(b), "[a]ll trust funds received by or placed under the control of a lawyer shall be promptly deposited in either a general trust account or a dedicated trust account of the lawyer." "Entrusted property" includes "trust funds, fiduciary funds, and other property belonging to someone other than the lawyer which is in the lawyer's possession or control in connection with the performance of legal services or professional fiduciary services." Rule 1.15-1(e).

The title of the representation agreement, in this case "Retainer Agreement," does not determine the actual nature of the agreement. Whether money paid in advance by a client is "entrusted property" that must be placed in a trust account will depend on the nature of the advance payment (advance fee, general retainer, flat fee, or minimum fee) and whether the fee is earned upon payment. The IAC must follow the guidelines set out in 2008 FEO 10 as to fees paid in advance and place any fees that are not earned immediately into a trust account.

Inquiry #7:

If money is collected for costs that may be incurred in conjunction with the provision of legal services, should the staff lawyer insure that the money is deposited into a trust account?

Opinion #7:

Yes. Any portion of a payment that is intended to cover costs must be deposited in a trust account. If IAC receives a check from a client that represents costs and fees, the check must be deposited in a trust account before IAC may withdraw that portion of the funds that constitutes immediately earned legal fees. See RPC 158.

Inquiry #8:

Until the money is deposited in a bank account, may a client's cash or check be locked in a staff member's desk?

Opinion #8:

A lawyer has a duty to safekeep client funds and property. Rule 1.15-2. Rule 1.15-2(b) provides that"[a]ll trust funds received by or placed under the control of a lawyer shall be promptly deposited in either a general trust account or a dedicated trust account of the lawyer." Any check representing any portion of legal fees that are not earned immediately must be promptly deposited in a trust account. In the event that trust funds cannot be immediately deposited in a trust account, the funds should be securely maintained until they can be deposited.

Inquiry #9:

Should a staff lawyer require that a schedule of the fees for services be included in the Retainer Agreement or discussed with the client at the time of execution of the agreement?

Opinion #9:

Yes. Rule 1.4(b) provides that a lawyer shall "explain a matter to the extent reasonably necessary to permit the client to make informed decisions regarding the representation." In this scenario, the client cannot make an informed decision about entering into the representation agreement without sufficient knowledge of the legal fees being charged for each specific service.

Inquiry #10:

May the agreement include the following statement: "If I decide not to continue a case with the agency and the service I requested has been performed or completed, I will not be entitled to a refund, full or partial, of the fee"?

Opinion #10:

The use of the term "nonrefundable fee" in fee agreements is prohibited because a fee is always subject to refund, in whole or in part, if the fee is clearly excessive under the circumstances. 2008 FEO 10. Therefore, a fee agreement may state that a client "will not be entitled to a refund of any portion of a fee unless it can be demonstrated that the total fee was clearly excessive under the circumstances." See "Model Fee Provisions" in 2008 FEO 10.

Inquiry #11:

May a staff lawyer ask a client to sign the "Retainer Agreement" if it states that IAC "is not obligated to continue representing me in all steps of the legal process, and may withdraw its representation and close my case upon written notification to the client and to the administrative law agency"?

Opinion #11:

No. The statement in the Retainer Agreement misrepresents the ethical duties owed by the staff lawyer to the client and the administrative law agency or tribunal by the staff lawyer.

Pursuant to Rule 1.2(c), "[a] lawyer may limit the scope of the representation if the limitation is reasonable under the circumstances." When the scope of representation is limited, it is appropriate to define the scope of representation in the representation agreement. The agreement should set forth the "steps of the legal process" for which IAC will provide a lawyer to represent the client. The representation may be limited to those "steps" if reasonable under the circumstances.

If the staff lawyer withdraws from the matter before completing the "steps," the lawyer must comply with Rule 1.16(c) requiring notice to or permission of the tribunal, consistent with applicable law, when terminating a representation. In addition, Rule 1.16(d) requires a lawyer to "take steps to the extent reasonably practicable to protect a client's interests, such as giving reasonable notice to the client, allowing time for employment of other counsel, surrendering papers and property to which the client is entitled, and refunding any advance payment of fee or expense that has not been earned or incurred."

Inquiry #12:

May a staff lawyer agree to or participate in IAC's process for resolving fee disputes with clients? Should the agreement reference the fee dispute resolution program of the State Bar required by Rule 1.5(f) of the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion #12:

The IAC may establish an internal mechanism for reviewing clients' complaints about legal fees. However, that mechanism will not replace the obligation of a North Carolina lawyer to participate in the North Carolina State Bar's fee dispute resolution program. Participation in the fee dispute resolution program of the North Carolina State Bar is mandatory for the lawyer when a client requests resolution of a disputed legal fee. Rule 1.5(f).

Inquiry #13:

If a client disputes a fee, should the amount of any fee previously paid by the client and converted to IAC's use be deposited in a trust account?

Opinion #13:

No. If fees have been deposited in IAC's operating account based on a contract providing that the fees were earned upon receipt, there is no requirement to deposit the funds into a trust account pending the resolution of a fee dispute.

Inquiry #14:

A lawyer who is not a director, officer, or manager of IAC is designated as the supervising lawyer for the other lawyers on the staff. Is the supervising lawyer responsible for IAC's compliance with the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion #14:

Pursuant to Rule 5.1(a), "[a] lawyer who individually or together with other lawyers possesses comparable managerial authority, shall make reasonable efforts to ensure that the firm or the organization has in effect measures giving reasonable assurance that all lawyers in the firm or the organization conform to the Rules of Professional Conduct." Pursuant to Rule 5.1(b), "[a] lawyer having direct supervisory authority over another lawyer shall make reasonable efforts to ensure that the other lawyer conforms to the Rules of Professional Conduct."

Inquiry #15:

What are the duties and responsibilities of the subordinate lawyers in the organization relative to compliance with the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion #15:

Rule 5.2 sets out the responsibilities of subordinate lawyers regarding compliance with the Rules of Professional Conduct. Rule 5.2(a) states that a lawyer "is bound by the Rules of Professional Conduct notwithstanding that the lawyer acted at the direction of another person." However, Rule 5.2(b) states that a subordinate lawyer does not violate the Rules of Professional Conduct "if that lawyer acts in accordance with a supervisory lawyer's reasonable resolution of an arguable question of professional duty."

Inquiry #16:

IAC maintains a referral list of private lawyers to use when it is necessary to refer a person elsewhere. At the request of management, may a staff lawyer refer an inquiring person to one or two specific lawyers on the list?

Opinion #16:

Yes, if the lawyers are qualified to handle the client's matter and nothing of value has been given by the lawyers for the referral. Rule 7.2(b).

Inquiry #17:

A BIA representative is designated by IAC as an "Immigration Specialist" on business cards, email, and other written communications to clients and prospective clients. Is a staff lawyer required to take any action to prevent or challenge such designation?

Opinion #17:

Rule 5.5(d) provides that a lawyer "shall not assist another person in the unauthorized practice of law." If, in the context of IAC's operations, the use of the term "Immigration Specialist" by a BIA representative is misleading as to the representative's authority to practice law in North Carolina, then a staff lawyer must take steps to remedy the misrepresentation.

Inquiry #18:

IAC advertises that its legal services are provided at "reasonable prices" without explanation or clarification. Does such a statement violate the advertising rules for lawyers?

Opinion #18:

The statement that legal services are provided at "reasonable prices" is permissible so long as it is truthful. Whether a fee is reasonable depends upon a number of factors, including the current rates in the particular community. See also Rule 1.5(a) (listing factors to be considered in determining whether a fee is clearly excessive).

Inquiry #19:

What duty does a staff lawyer or a supervising lawyer have to review notices that IAC places in newspapers and social media about its legal services for compliance with the advertising rules?

Opinion #19:

A lawyer employed by IAC has a duty to ensure that the content of any information IAC provides to prospective clients about the lawyer or the lawyer's services is truthful and not misleading. Rule 7.1; 2004 FEO 1.

Inquiry #20:

IAC posts the following announcement on Facebook: "IAC will be hosting a FREE citizenship workshop on [date] at [address]. We will help applicants fill out their applications for citizenship and a lawyer will review each application. If you or a friend are interested in getting help with your citizenship application at the workshop, please contact [lawyer]." Does this announcement violate the advertising rules for lawyers?

Opinion #20:

No. IAC may conduct educational workshops for non-clients and may offer to provide free legal services. See RPC 36. IAC may advertise the seminars so long as the advertisements comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct. 2007 FEO 4. To comply with the rules, it may be necessary for the announcement to include any limitations on the free services IAC will provide.

Inquiry #21:

If a staff lawyer concludes that IAC's current fee structure violates IRS and BIA regulations, what should the staff lawyer do?

Opinion #21:

Pursuant to Rule 1.13(b), if a lawyer for an organization knows that an officer, employee, or other person associated with the organization is engaged in action that:

> is a violation of law which reasonably might be imputed to the organization, and is likely to result in substantial injury to the organization, then the lawyer shall proceed as is reasonably necessary in the best interest of the organization. Unless the lawyer reasonably believes that it is not necessary in the best interest of the organization to do so, the lawyer shall refer the matter to higher authority in the organization, including, if warranted by the circumstances, to the highest authority that can act on behalf of the organization as determined by applicable law.
>
> Rule 1.13(c) further states that:
>
> If, despite the lawyer's efforts in accordance with paragraph (b), the highest authority that can act on behalf of the organization insists upon action, or a refusal to act, that is clearly a violation of law and is likely to result in substantial injury to the organization, the lawyer may reveal such information outside the organization to the extent permitted by Rule 1.6 and may resign in accordance with Rule 1.16.

2013 Formal Ethics Opinion 10

October 25, 2013

Participation in Online Group Legal Advertising Using Territorial Exclusivity

Opinion rules that, with certain disclosures, a lawyer may participate in an online group legal advertising service that gives a participating lawyer exclusive rights to contacts arising from a particular territory.

Facts:

Total Attorneys is a for-profit company that provides group advertising services to lawyers. In exchange for an advertising fee, Total Attorneys provides participating lawyers with a license to use a Total Attorneys website (TotalBankruptcy.com or TotalDivorce.com, for example) to advertise the participating lawyer's legal services. The license is geographically exclusive and only one lawyer within a particular zip code is licensed to use the advertising site. Participating lawyers pay a specified fee per contact per month to cover the costs of advertising and marketing services, including the design and operation of the website, telephone support services, and customer management software.

Total Attorneys establishes and maintains a website that provides consumers with information on certain legal subjects such as bankruptcy law. Consumers who wish to contact the participating lawyer within the consumer's zip code may either call a toll free number provided by the website call center, or fill out an online contact form. Total Attorneys forwards the contact to the participating lawyer. The interactions between the website call center and the consumer are limited to obtaining basic information and facilitating the first contact with the participating lawyer. The website call center does not engage in any screening or evaluation of the consumer, or the consumer's potential legal concern.

Each page on the website includes a disclaimer similar to the following: PAID ATTORNEY ADVERTISEMENT: THIS WEB SITE IS A GROUP ADVERTISEMENT AND THE PARTICIPATING ATTORNEYS ARE INCLUDED BECAUSE THEY PAY AN ADVERTISING FEE. It is not a lawyer referral service or prepaid legal services plan. Total Bankruptcy is not a law firm. Your request for contact will be forwarded to the local lawyer who has paid to advertise in the ZIP code you provide. Total Bankruptcy does not endorse or recommend any lawyer or law firm who participates in the network, nor does it analyze a person's legal situation when determining which participating lawyers receive a person's inquiry. It does not make any representation and has not made any judgment as to the qualifications, expertise, or credentials of any participating lawyer. No representation is made that the quality of the legal services to be performed is greater than the quality of legal services performed by other lawyers. The information contained herein is not legal advice. Any information you submit to Total Bankruptcy does not create an attorney-client relationship and may not be protected by attorney-client privilege. Do not use the form to submit confidential, time-sensitive, or privileged information. All photos are of models and do not depict clients. All case evaluations are performed by participating attorneys. An attorney responsible for the content of this site is Kevin W. Chern, Esq., licensed in Illinois with offices at 25 East Washington, Suite 400, Chicago, Illinois 60602. To see the attorney in your area who is responsible for this advertisement, please click here, or call 866-200-8052.

Inquiry:

May a lawyer participate in the online legal service described above?

Opinion:

Yes, provided each Total Attorneys website fully, accurately, and prominently discloses the following: it provides paid group advertising services to lawyers; it is not a law firm and cannot provide legal advice; it is not a referral service; it does not recommend or endorse a particular lawyer; it does not vouch for the qualifications of participating lawyers; and each participating lawyer is licensed to use the advertising site and has paid to be the sole lawyer listed for a particular zip code.

The Arizona State Bar issued an ethics opinion that holds that a lawyer may ethically participate in an Internet-based group advertising program that limits participation to a single lawyer for each zip code from which prospective clients may come, provided the service fully and accurately discloses its advertising nature and, specifically, that each lawyer has paid to be the sole lawyer listed for a particular zip code. Ariz. State Bar Comm. on the Rules of Prof'l Conduct, Op. 2011-02 (2011).

The New Jersey Advisory Committee on Advertising similarly concluded that territorial exclusivity is permissible when such exclusivity is disclosed, the methodology for the selection of the attorney based on zip code is made clear, and the website does not assess consumers' legal needs or vouch for the qualifications of the participating attorney. NJ Advisory Comm. on Prof'l Ethics, Op. 43 (2011).

2012 FEO 10 examined numerous issues relative to a web-based company that provides litigation and administrative support services to "network" lawyers who represent clients with a particular type of legal matter (e.g., landlord's eviction) while simultaneously providing non-legal services to the same clients. In response to the exclusive arrangement with each lawyer whereby no other network lawyer may provide legal services to a participating client in a designated territory, the opinion concludes that the service is a for-profit referral service prohibited by Rule 7.2(d).

Nevertheless, the reasoning of the Arizona State Bar and the New Jersey Committee on Advertising is persuasive. With sufficient disclosure that the purpose of the website is to provide advertising and not referrals, and with disclosure of the exclusive territorial arrangement with participating lawyers, any concerns about misleading members of the public are alleviated. Provided the disclosures are truthful and there is no sharing of legal fees with the service, Total Attorneys is merely group advertising and not a for-profit lawyer referral service. See 2004 FEO 1 (holding that a lawyer may participate in an online service that is similar to both a lawyer referral service and a legal directory provided there is no fee sharing with the service and all communications about the lawyer and the service are truthful).

To the extent 2012 FEO 10 is inconsistent with this opinion, it is overruled.

2013 Formal Ethics Opinion 12

July 25, 2014

Disclosure of Settlement Terms to Former Lawyer Asserting a Claim for Fee Division

Opinion rules that, in a worker's compensation case, when a client terminates representation, the subsequently hired lawyer may disclose the settlement terms to the former lawyer to resolve a pre-litigation claim for fee division pursuant to an applicable exception to the duty of confidentiality.

Facts:

Client hired Lawyer A to represent Client in a workers' compensation matter. A year later, Client discharged Lawyer A and subsequently hired Lawyer B. Lawyer A filed a motion to withdraw as counsel while reserving her right to a legal fee. Lawyer B settled Client's workers' compensation case and the Industrial Commission entered an order approving the settlement and the legal fee to be paid from the proceeds of the settlement. Lawyer A asked Lawyer B for a copy of the Industrial Commission's order. Client instructed Lawyer B to keep the settlement information confidential. Lawyer B therefore refused to provide Lawyer A with a copy of the Industrial Commission's order, and also refused to disclose the settlement amount. However, Lawyer B asked Lawyer A to submit an accounting of Lawyer A's hours in the case and Lawyer A's hourly rate. Lawyer A refused to provide an accounting of her time without more information about the settlement. Lawyer A insists that she needs to know the settlement amount to determine the amount of the fee that is to be divided between the two lawyers. Lawyer A further asserts that before she can determine the amount of her fee, she must know which injury claims are subject to the settlement.

Inquiry:

May Lawyer B share the settlement details with Lawyer A?

Opinion:

Keeping a client's information confidential is paramount among the duties a lawyer owes to the client. Unless Client consents to the disclosure of information about the settlement, or one of the exceptions set out in Rule 1.6(b) applies, Lawyer B may not reveal the details of the settlement to Lawyer A.

A client has the right to discharge his lawyer at any time. Where a lawyer with a contingency fee contract is terminated before the matter is concluded, the discharged lawyer has a claim for quantum meruit recovery from the proceeds of the matter. Covington v. Rhodes, 38 NC App. 61, 247 S.E.2d 305 (1978), disc. rev. denied, 296 NC 410, 251 S.E.2d 468 (1979). Furthermore, the discharged lawyer may file his claim for quantum meruit against the client or against the subsequent lawyer. Guess v. Parrott, 160 NC App. 325, 585 S.E.2d 464 (2003).

Rather than wait for Lawyer A to file suit, however, the better practice is to attempt to resolve a dispute before litigation. To this end, at the beginning of the representation, Lawyer B should counsel Client about the law pertaining to Lawyer A's claim for a legal fee based on quantum meruit. Lawyer B also should explain to Client that Rule 1.6(b)(6) permits a lawyer to disclose confidential client information, without the client's consent, "to respond to allegations in any proceeding concerning the lawyer's representation of the client," and that the exception to the rule, as noted in the comment, "does not require the lawyer to await the commencement of an action or proceeding…" Rule 1.6, cmt [11]. Therefore, Lawyer B may disclose the details of the settlement to resolve Lawyer A's claim for a share of the fee. Only that information relevant to the valuation of Lawyer A's legal services may be disclosed.

2013 Formal Ethics Opinion 13

January 24, 2014

Disbursement Against Funds Credited to Trust Account by ACH and EFT

Opinion rules that a lawyer may disburse immediately against funds that are credited to the lawyer's trust account by automated clearinghouse (ACH) transfer and electronic funds transfer (EFT) despite the risk that an originator may initiate a reversal.

Inquiry:

The originator of an automated clearinghouse (ACH) transfer[1] or an electronic funds transfer (EFT) can initiate a reversal of the transaction. However, the reversal must be requested by the originating bank and approved by the receiving bank. When a bank receives a reversal request, it typically will attempt to obtain authorization from the individual whose account was credited before making a reversal.

May a lawyer disburse immediately against funds that are credited to her trust account by ACH or EFT if there is some risk that the originator may initiate a reversal?

Opinion:

Yes. Electronic funds transfers, whether ACH or EFT, are designed to make funds available immediately, like wired funds. While there is some risk that the originator may initiate a reversal, the risk of reversal is slight. Moreover, the lawyer should get notice from the receiving bank in time to take action to prevent the reversal or otherwise to protect other client funds on deposit in the trust account. See, e.g., 97 FEO 9 (lawyer may accept payments to a trust account by credit card although the bank is authorized to debit the trust account in the event a credit card charge is disputed).

A lawyer is not guilty of professional misconduct if that lawyer, upon learning that an ACH or EFT has been reversed, immediately acts to protect the funds of the lawyer's other clients on deposit in the trust account. This may be done by personally depositing the funds necessary to address the deficit created by the reversal or by securing or arranging payment from sources available to the lawyer other than trust account funds of other clients. See RPC 191.

Endnote

1. When a paper check is converted to an automated clearinghouse (ACH) debit, the check is taken either at the point-of-sale or through the mail for payment, the account information is captured from the check, and an electronic transaction is created for payment through the ACH system. The original physical check is typically destroyed by the converting entity (although an image of the check may be stored for a certain period of time). A law firm may convert the paper checks that it receives on behalf of a client or a client matter for payment to the trust account through the ACH system.

   Authorized ACH debits from the trust account that are electronic transfers of funds (in which no checks are involved) are allowed provided the lawyer maintains a record of the transaction as required by Rule 1.15-3(b)(3) and (c)(3). The record, whether consisting of the instructions or authorization to debit the account, a record or receipt from the register of deeds or a financial institution, or the lawyer's independent record of the transaction, must show the amount, date, and recipient of the transfer or disbursement, and, in the case of a general trust account, also show the name of the client or other person to whom the funds belong.

   Nevertheless, checks drawn on a trust account should not be converted to ACH because the lawyer will not receive a physical check or a check image that can be retained in satisfaction of the record-keeping requirements in Rule 1.15-3. The transaction will appear on the lawyer's trust account statement as an ACH debit with limited information about the payment (e.g., dollar amount, date processed, originator of the ACH debit). For this reason, lawyers are required to use business-size checks that contain an Auxiliary-On-Us field in the MICR line of the check because these checks cannot be converted to ACH. See Rule 1.15-3(a).

   See generally Rule 1.15, comments [17] and [18] .

2013 Formal Ethics Opinion 14

January 23, 2015

Representation of Parties to a Commercial Real Estate Loan Closing

Opinion rules that common representation in a commercial real estate loan closing is, in most instances, a "nonconsentable" conflict meaning that a lawyer may not ask the borrower and the lender to consent to common representation.

Background:

In the standard closing of a commercial loan secured by real property (a "commercial loan closing"), the borrower and the lender have separate legal counsel. The borrower's lawyer traditionally handles most aspects of the closing including the preparation of the settlement statement as well as the collection of funds, the payoffs, and the disbursements. The borrower understands that its lawyer represents its interests alone. Unlike a residential real estate closing in which the lender's documents can rarely be modified once entered into by the borrower/buyer, it is common in a commercial loan closing for the borrower's lawyer to be actively involved in negotiating provisions of the commitment letter that establishes the basic terms of the mortgage, and to also negotiate specific revisions to the loan documents to address material matters such as default, disbursement of insurance proceeds, permitted transfers, and indemnification.

A large regional bank recently changed its commercial loan closing policies to require all lawyers who close commercial loans with the bank to be employed by law firms that are "authorized" by the bank to close its loans. These lawyers are designated as "Bank's Counsel." Bank's Counsel is asked by the bank to handle the entire closing including the title search, title certification, and the holding and disbursing of the closing funds.

Lawyers who traditionally represent the borrower in a commercial loan closing are concerned about this policy for a number of reasons including the following:

- Having closing funds delivered to the lender's lawyer instead of the borrower's lawyer subjects the borrower to responsibility for the funds without the benefit of its own legal counsel's guidance, protection, and assistance;
- Once the loan funds are committed to the borrower by the lender, they become the responsibility of the borrower. When there is separate, independent representation of the borrower, the protections of malpractice insurance and the closing protection letter are available to the borrower.
- The borrower's recourses may be limited if closing funds are mishandled and the borrower suffers a loss in connection with Bank's Counsel's preparation of the closing statement and disbursement of the loan proceeds. However, when the borrower's lawyer performs the escrow and closing functions, the lender gets an insured closing letter and a legal opinion relative to authority and enforceability from the borrower's lawyer and has protection.
- Having the lender's lawyer perform the property and business due diligence functions may result in the disclosure of confidential information relative to the borrower's property or its business interests that would not be disclosed if the borrower's lawyer performed these functions.
- Unless the borrower is sophisticated and instructs its lawyer to be actively involved, the borrower's lawyer may be placed in the role of "outsider" or passive observer, which may limit the quality and scope of the representation that the borrower receives. It will also invite, notwithstanding disclosure, the perception that the lender's lawyer is looking out for the interests of all of the parties.

Inquiry #1:

May a lawyer represent both the borrower and the lender for the closing of a commercial loan secured by real property? If so, is informed consent of both the borrower and the lender required, and what information must be disclosed to obtain informed consent?

Opinion #1:

In most instances, a lawyer may not represent both the borrower and the lender for the closing of a commercial loan even with consent.

Rule 1.7 prohibits the representation of a client if the representation involves a concurrent conflict of interest unless certain conditions are met. A concurrent conflict of interest exists if the representation of one client will be directly adverse to another client or the representation of one client may be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client. Rule 1.7(a). The closing of a commercial loan secured by real estate is an "arm's length" business transaction in which large sums of money are at stake, the documentation is complex, and the opportunities to negotiate on behalf of each party are numerous. As observed in the comment to Rule 1.7:

> Even where there is no direct adverseness, a conflict of interest exists if a lawyer's ability to consider, recommend, or carry out an appropriate course of action for the client may be materially limited as a result of the lawyer's other responsibilities or interests. For example, a lawyer asked to represent a seller of commercial real estate, a real estate developer, and a commercial lender is likely to be materially limited in the lawyer's ability to recommend or advocate all possible positions that each might take because of the lawyer's duty of loyalty to the others. The conflict in effect forecloses alternatives that would otherwise be available to the client. The mere possibility of subsequent harm does not itself preclude the representation or require disclosure and consent. The critical questions are the likelihood that a difference in interests will eventuate and, if it does, whether it will materially interfere with the lawyer's independent professional judgment in considering alternatives or foreclose courses of action that reasonably should be pursued on behalf of the client.

Rule 1.7, cmt. [8].

Rule 1.7(b) allows a lawyer to proceed with a representation burdened with a concurrent conflict of interest, but only if the lawyer determines that the representation of all of the affected clients will be competent and diligent and each affected client gives informed consent. In other words, the lawyer must decide whether the conflict is "consentable." Rule 1.7, cmt. [2]. If the lawyer's exercise of independent professional judgment on behalf of any client will be compromised, the conflict is not consentable. As noted in the comment to Rule 1.7:

> [S]ome conflicts are nonconsentable, meaning that the lawyer involved cannot properly ask for such agreement or provide representation on the basis of the client's consent...Consentability is typically determined by considering whether the interests of the clients will be adequately protected if the clients are permitted to give their informed consent to representation burdened by a conflict of interest...[R]epresentation is prohibited if in the circumstances the lawyer cannot reasonably conclude that the lawyer will be able to provide competent and diligent representation.

Rule 1.7, cmt.[14]-[15]. Although deleted from the comment to Rule 1.7 when the Rules of Professional Conduct were comprehensively revised in 2003, the following is an excellent test for determining whether a conflict is "consentable": "when a disinterested lawyer would conclude that the client should not agree to the representation under the circumstances, the lawyer involved cannot properly ask for such agreement or provide representation on the basis of the client's consent." Rule 1.7, cmt. [5] (2002).

In RPC 210, the Ethics Committee held that a lawyer may represent the seller, borrower/buyer, and lender in a residential real estate closing with the informed consent of all of the parties. Even so, the opinion includes the following cautionary language:

> A lawyer may reasonably believe that the common representation of multiple parties to a residential real estate closing will not be adverse to the interests of any one client if the parties have already agreed to the basic terms of the transaction and the lawyer's role is limited to rendering an opinion on title, memorializing the transaction, and disbursing the proceeds. Before reaching this conclusion, however, the lawyer must determine whether there is any obstacle to the loyal representation of both parties. The lawyer should proceed with the common representation only if the lawyer is able to reach the following conclusions: he or she will be able to act impartially; there is little likelihood that an actual conflict will arise out of the common representation; and, should a conflict arise, the potential prejudice to the parties will be minimal.

A commercial loan closing is substantially different from a residential closing in which there is little opportunity to negotiate on behalf of the borrower/buyer once the purchase contract and loan commitment letter are signed. In a commercial loan closing, there are numerous opportunities for a lawyer to negotiate on behalf of the parties, so impartiality is rarely possible. There are also numerous opportunities for an actual conflict to arise between the borrower and the lender and, if a conflict does arise, the prejudice to the parties would be substantial. Therefore, common representation in a commercial loan closing is, in most instances, a "nonconsentable" conflict, meaning that a lawyer may not ask the borrower and the lender to consent to common representation. Restatement (Third) of The Law Governing Lawyers, §122, Comment g(iv), cites decisions in which the court denied the possibility of client consent as a matter of law in certain categories of cases. These decisions include Baldasarre v. Butler, 625 A. 2d 458 (N.J. 1993), in which the Supreme Court of New Jersey observed:

> This case graphically demonstrates the conflicts that arise when an attorney, even with both clients' consent, undertakes the representation of the buyer and the seller in a complex commercial real estate transaction. The disastrous consequences of [the lawyer's] dual representation convinces us that a new bright-line rule prohibiting dual representation is necessary in commercial real estate transactions where large sums of money are at stake, where contracts contain complex contingencies, or where options are numerous. The potential for conflict in that type of complex real estate transaction is too great to permit even consensual dual representation of buyer and seller. Therefore, we hold that an attorney may not represent both the buyer and seller in a complex commercial real estate transaction even if both give their informed consent.

635 A. 2d at 467. See also Fla. Bar. Prof'l Ethics Comm., Op. 97-2 (1997)(lawyer may not represent both buyer and seller in closing of sale of business where material terms of contract have not been agreed to or discussed by parties).

In summary, dual representation of the borrower and the lender for the closing of a commercial real estate loan is a nonconsentable conflict of interest unless the following conditions can be satisfied: (1) the contractual terms have been finally negotiated prior to the commencement of the representation; (2) there are no material contingencies to be resolved; (3) the lawyer reasonably believes that the lawyer will be able to provide competent and diligent representation to each affected client; (4) it is unlikely that a difference in interests will eventuate and, if it does, it will not materially interfere with the lawyer's independent professional judgment in considering alternatives or foreclose courses of action that should be pursued on behalf of a client; (5) the lawyer reasonably concludes that he will be able to act impartially in the representation of both parties; (6) the lawyer explains to both parties that his role is limited to executing the tasks necessary to close the loan and that this limitation prohibits him from advocating for the specific interests of either party; (7) the lawyer discloses that he must withdraw from the representation of both parties if a conflict arises; and (8) after the foregoing full disclosure, both parties give informed consent confirmed in writing.

Regardless of the above conditions allowing common representation of the borrower and lender, consent may never be sought to represent the lender, the borrower, and the seller of real property if the seller will provide secondary financing for the transaction and accept a secondary deed of trust. In this situation, the risks to the interests of the seller are too great to permit a lawyer to seek consent to common representation.

Inquiry #2:

The bank intends for Bank's Counsel to represent only the bank (lender) but to handle all aspects of the closing.

May a lawyer represent only the lender but handle all aspects of a commercial loan closing including the title search, title certification, marshalling the necessary documents, and holding and disbursing of the closing funds? If so, what information must be disclosed by Bank's Counsel to the borrower relative to the role of Bank's Counsel?

Opinion #2:

Yes, a lawyer may be the lead lawyer for the closing ("the closing lawyer") provided the lawyer represents only one party—either the lender or the borrower. Because the title work and other due diligence are for the benefit of the lender, there is no prohibition on the lender's lawyer performing these tasks. See 2004 FEO 10 (because buyer is the intended beneficiary of the deed although not a signatory, buyer's lawyer may prepare deed without creating a lawyer-client relationship with seller). However, if the closing lawyer represents the lender, certain conditions must be satisfied.

In 2006 FEO 3, the Ethics Committee considered whether a lawyer may represent a lender on the closing of the sale to a third party of property acquired by the lender as result of foreclosure by execution of the power of sale in the deed of trust on the property. The opinion holds (among other things) that a lawyer may serve as the closing lawyer and limit his representation to the lender/seller if there is disclosure to the buyer:

> Attorney A must fully disclose to Buyer that [the lender/seller] is his sole client, he does not represent the interests of Buyer, the closing documents will be prepared consistent with the specifications in the contract to purchase, and, in the absence of such specifications, he will prepare the documents in a manner that will protect the interests of his client, [the lender/seller], and, therefore, Buyer may wish to obtain his own lawyer. See, e.g., RPC 40 (disclosure must be far enough in advance of the closing that the buyer can procure his own counsel), RPC 210, 04 FEO 10, and Rule 4.3(a). Because of the strong potential for Buyer to be misled, the disclosure must be thorough and robust.
>
> Consistent with the holding in 2006 FEO 3, in a commercial loan closing, the lender's lawyer may serve as the closing lawyer provided the borrower is informed that the closing lawyer will not represent its interests and will interpret loan documents in the light that is most favorable to the lender; the borrower is given a reasonable opportunity to retain its own counsel and is not mislead as to its right to do so; the lawyers for both parties advise their clients about the risks and benefits of a having the lender's lawyer serve as the closing lawyer; and the borrower's lawyer is allowed to observe and participate in the transaction to the extent necessary to protect the borrower's interests.

This opinion cannot address all of the concerns expressed in the Background section above relative to the additional risks to the borrower if the lawyer for the closing is the lender's lawyer. However, if the closing funds are deposited to and disbursed from the trust account of the lender's lawyer in accordance with the requirements of the trust accounting rule, Rule 1.15, the funds should not be at risk. To the extent that there are other risks to the interests of the borrower, the borrower's lawyer must analyze those risks and advise the borrower about steps that may be taken to minimize the risks including negotiating with the lender's lawyer for aspects of the closing to be handled by the borrower's lawyer.

2013 Formal Ethics Opinion 15

January 24, 2014

Return of Records to Client upon Termination of Representation

Opinion rules that records relative to a client's matter that would be helpful to subsequent legal counsel must be provided to the client upon the termination of the representation, and may be provided in an electronic format if readily accessible to the client without undue expense.

Inquiry #1:

In the age of electronic records, what information must be given to a departing client when the client requests the file?

Opinion #1:

Rule 1.16(d) of the Rules of Professional Conduct requires a lawyer, upon termination of representation, to "take steps to the extent reasonably practicable to protect a client's interests, such as...surrendering papers and property to which the client is entitled..."

Comment 10 to Rule 1.16 specifically provides that copies of "all correspondence received and generated by the withdrawing or discharged lawyer should be released; and anything in the file that would be helpful to successor counsel should be turned over."

Competent representation includes organized record-keeping practices that safeguard the documentation and information necessary to enable the lawyer to (1) readily retrieve information required for the representation; (2) remain abreast of the status of the case; and (3) be adequately prepared to handle the client's matter. 2002 FEO 5; Rule 1.1, cmt. [6]. The standards for record-keeping, including record retention, for electronic communications, documents, records, and other information ("records") are the same as the standards for paper records. As stated in 2002 FEO 5 on the retention of email in a client's file, "[a] lawyer must exercise his or her legal judgment when deciding what documents or information to retain in a client's file." Whether a lawyer should retain an electronic record that relates to a client's representation "depends upon the requirements of competent representation under the circumstances of the particular case." Id.

A lawyer must also exercise legal judgment, subject to the duty of competent representation, when deciding which format (electronic or paper) is the most appropriate for the retention of records generated during the representation of a client. 2002 FEO 5; see also RPC 234 (paper documents in client's file may be converted and saved in an electronic format if original documents with legal significance, such as wills, are stored in a safe place or returned to the client, and documents stored in electronic format can be reproduced in a paper format).

If an electronic record relative to a client's matter would be helpful to successor counsel, the electronic record is a part of the client's file. As explained in CPR 3, a client file does not include "the lawyer's personal notes and incomplete work product," or "preliminary drafts of legal instruments or other preliminary things which, unexplained, could place a lawyer in a bad light without furthering the interest of his former client." Therefore, a lawyer may omit from the records that are considered a part of the client's file the following: (1) email containing the client's name if the email is immaterial, represents incomplete work product, or would not be helpful to successor counsel; (2) drafting notes saved in preliminary versions of a filed pleading since these are incomplete work product; (3) notations or categorizations on documents stored in a discovery database since these are incomplete work product; and (4) other items that are associated with a particular client such as backups, voicemail recordings, and text messages unless the items would be helpful to successor counsel.

If the lawyer determines that an electronic record is a part of a client's file, then the lawyer has a duty to provide a copy of the record to the client upon the termination of the representation. Conversely, if the lawyer, in the exercise of legal judgment, determines that the electronic record is not a part of the client's file, then the lawyer is not required, but may, provide a copy of the electronic record to the client.

Inquiry #2:

Are lawyers required to organize or store electronic records relative to a specific client matter in any particular manner?

Opinion #2:

An organized record-keeping system designed to safeguard client information must include electronic records. See Opinion #1. The electronic records must be organized in a manner that can be searched and compiled as necessary for the representation of the client and for the release of the file to the client upon the termination of the representation. A document management system to track records by client and matter is recommended.

Because of the potential for electronic records to accumulate, one important aspect of an organized record-keeping system is a procedure for regularly exercising legal judgment as to whether to retain an electronic record in the client's virtual file. Such a procedure would, for example, require the regular identification of emails that should be retained and made a part of the client's virtual file. Waiting until the representation has ended and the client has requested the file to identify electronic records that are a part of the client's file may increase the likelihood that an important electronic record will not be identified properly.

Inquiry #3:

When the representation terminates and the client requests the file, is the lawyer or law firm required to provide the records in the format (electronic or paper) requested by the client?

Opinion #3:

Many clients, or successor counsel, will have the technical expertise and financial ability to receive client records in an electronic format without experiencing any problem or undue expense in opening, using, or reproducing the records. These clients will probably prefer to receive the records in an electronic format. However, there are clients, such as individuals or small businesses with limited financial means or technical expertise, that cannot afford to purchase expensive software or computer equipment simply to gain access to the records in their own legal files. There must be a weighing of the interests of the lawyer or law firm in producing the client's file in an efficient and cost-effective manner against the client's interest in receiving the records in a format that will be useful to the client or successor counsel.

Therefore, records that are stored on paper may be copied and produced to the client in paper format if that is the most convenient or least expensive method for reproducing these records for the client. If converting paper records to an electronic format would be a more convenient or less expensive way to provide the records to the client, this is permissible if the lawyer or law firm determines that the records will be readily accessible to the client in this format without undue expense. Similarly, electronic records may be copied and provided to the client in an electronic format (they do not have to be converted to paper) if the lawyer or law firm determines that the records will be readily accessible to the client in this format without undue expense. See 2002 FEO 5 ("in light of the widespread availability of computers," emails may be provided to a departing client in an electronic format even if the client requests paper copies).

A lawyer should in most instances bear the reasonable costs of retrieving and producing electronic records for a departing client. However, a lawyer or law firm may charge a client the expense of providing electronic records if the client asks the lawyer or law firm to do any of the following: (1) convert electronic records from a format that is already accessible using widely used or inexpensive business software applications; (2) convert electronic records to a format that is not readily accessible using widely used or inexpensive business software applications; or (3) provide electronic records in a manner that is unduly expensive or burdensome.

Nevertheless, if the usefulness of an electronic record in a client file would be undermined if the document is provided to the client or successor counsel in a paper format, the record must be provided to the client in an electronic format unless the client requests otherwise. For example, providing a spreadsheet without the underlying formulas or providing a complex discovery database printed in streams of text on reams of paper would destroy the usefulness of such data to both the client and successor counsel. Similarly, a video recording cannot be reduced to a paper format and therefore must be provided to the client in its original format.

Lawyers are encouraged to discuss with a client at the beginning of a representation the records that will be retained as a part of the client's file, and the format in which the records will be produced at the termination of the representation.

2014 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

February 1, 2016

Protecting Confidential Client Information when Mentoring

Opinion encourages lawyers to become mentors to law students and new lawyers ("protégés") who are not employees of the mentor's firm, and examines the application of the duty of confidentiality to client communications to which a protégé maybe privy.

Editor's Note: This opinion does not apply to law students certified pursuant to the Rules Governing the Practical Training of Law Students (27 N.C.A.C 1C, Section .0200) or to law students who are participating in formal law school *pro bono p*rograms, externship programs, and clinics in which students participate in client representation under the supervision of a lawyer. In addition, the opinion does not apply to lawyers, employees, or law clerks (paid or volunteer) being mentored or supervised by a lawyer within the same firm. This opinion addresses issues pertaining to informal mentoring relationships between lawyers, or between a lawyer and a law student, as well as to established bar and/or law school mentoring programs. Mentoring relationships between a lawyer and a college or a high school student are not addressed by this opinion because such relationships require more restrictive measures due to these students' presumed inexperience and lack of understanding of a lawyer's professional responsibilities, particularly the professional duty of confidentiality.

For a legal analysis of whether a third party is an agent of the lawyer or the client such that the attorney-client privilege is not waived although the third party is privy to client-lawyer communications, see Berens v. Berens, No. COA15–230, 2016 WL 1569215 (N.C. April 19, 2016)(applying State v. Murvin, 304 N.C. 523, 284 S.E.2d 289 (1981)).

Inquiry #1:

May a lawyer who is mentoring a law student ("protégé") allow the student to observe confidential client consultations between the lawyer and the lawyer's client?

Opinion #1:

Yes, if the client gives informed consent.

The duty of confidentiality is set forth in Rule 1.6. It provides that all communications relative to a client's matter are confidential and cannot be disclosed unless the client consents, the client's consent is implied as necessary to carry out the representation, or one of the specific exceptions to the duty of confidentiality in Rule 1.6(b) applies. If a law student/protégé is not an agent of the lawyer for the purpose of representing the client, there is no implied client consent to disclosure of the client's confidential information to the student. Moreover, none of the specific exceptions to the duty of confidentiality apply in this situation. Only the express informed consent of the client will permit disclosure of confidential client information to a law student/protégé.

"Informed consent," as defined in Rule 1.0, Terminology, "denotes the agreement by the person to a proposed course of conduct after the lawyer has communicated adequate information and explanation appropriate under the circumstances." Rule 1.0(f). Informed consent must be given in writing by the client or confirmed in writing by the lawyer. See Rule 1.0(c). In the mentoring situation, obtaining the client's informed consent requires the lawyer to explain the risks to the representation of the client that will be presented by the law student's knowledge of client confidential information and the law student's presence during client consultations.

One such risk is the possibility that the law student, who is not subject to the Rules of Professional Conduct, will intentionally or unintentionally reveal the client's confidential information to unauthorized persons. To minimize this risk, it is recommended that the law student be required to sign a confidentiality agreement that emphasizes the duty not to disclose any client confidential information unless the client and the lawyer give express consent.

The lawyer should also explain to the client any risk that the attorney-client privilege[1] will not attach to client communications with the lawyer because of the presence of the law student during the lawyer's consultation with the client. If the lawyer concludes that the student's presence will jeopardize the attachment of the privilege and the resulting harm to the client's interests is substantial, the lawyer should consider carefully whether it is appropriate to ask the client to consent to the student's presence during the consultation.

Inquiry #2:

A lawyer wants to be a mentor to a new lawyer ("protégé") who is not employed by or affiliated with the lawyer/mentor's law firm. The lawyer/mentor wants to allow the new lawyer to observe his consultations with clients and he also wants to observe the new lawyer's consultations with the new lawyer's clients in order to critique and advise the new lawyer.

May the lawyer/mentor allow the lawyer/protégé to observe confidential client consultations between the lawyer/mentor and his client? May the lawyer/protégé allow the lawyer/mentor to observe confidential client consultations between the lawyer/protégé and his client?

Opinion #2:

Yes, these observations are allowed with the client's informed consent. See Opinion #1. The observing lawyer should sign an agreement to maintain the confidentiality of the information of the other lawyer's client, in accordance with Rule 1.6, and to avoid representations adverse to the client in accordance with Rule 1.7 and Rule 1.9.

Both the lawyer/protégé and the lawyer/mentor should avoid the creation of a conflict of interest with any existing or former clients by virtue of the mentoring relationship. For example, the lawyer/protégé should not consult with a lawyer he knows has represented the opposing party in the past without first ascertaining that the matters are not substantially related and that the opposing party is not represented in the current matter by the lawyer/mentor. Similarly, the lawyer/mentor should obtain information sufficient to determine that the lawyer/protégé's matter is not one affecting the interests of an existing or former client. Rule 1.7 and Rule 1.9.

Inquiry #3:

When a lawyer seeks advice from a lawyer/mentor, what actions should be taken to protect confidential client information?

Opinion #3:

If possible, the lawyer/protégé should try to obtain guidance from the lawyer/mentor without disclosing identifying client information. This can often be done by using a hypothetical. If the consultation is general and does not involve the disclosure of identifying client information, client consent is unnecessary.

If the consultation is intended to help the lawyer/protégé comply with the ethics rules, client consent is not required because Rule 1.6(b)(5) allows a lawyer to reveal protected client information to the extent that the lawyer reasonably believes necessary "to secure legal advice about the lawyer's compliance with [the Rules of Professional Conduct]." Pursuant to Comment [10] to Rule 1.6:

> A lawyer's confidentiality obligations do not preclude a lawyer from securing confidential legal advice about the lawyer's personal responsibility to comply with [the Rules of Professional Conduct.] In most situations, disclosing information to secure such advice will be impliedly authorized for the lawyer to carry out the representation. Even when the disclosure is not impliedly authorized, paragraph (b)(5) permits such disclosure because of the importance of a lawyer's compliance with the Rules of Professional Conduct.

If the consultation is for the client's benefit, limited disclosure of client information may be "impliedly authorized to carry out the representation." See Rule 1.6(a). The lawyer should only disclose client information to a colleague if the lawyer has determined that the confidentiality of the consultation is adequately protected. Once the lawyer makes that determination, the client's express consent is unnecessary.

If the consultation does not involve advice about the lawyer's compliance with the Rules of Professional Conduct, a hypothetical is not practical, or the consultation is not for the client's benefit, the lawyer/protégé must obtain client consent. See Opinion #2.

Under all circumstances, the lawyer/protégé and the lawyer/mentor should avoid the creation of a conflict of interest with any existing or former clients by virtue of the mentoring relationship. See Opinion #2; Rule 1.7 and Rule 1.9.

Endnote

1. The attorney-client evidentiary privilege to avoid compelled testimony applies to client communications with a lawyer if (1) the relation of attorney and client existed at the time the communication was made, (2) the communication was made in confidence, (3) the communication relates to a matter about which the attorney is being professionally consulted, (4) the communication was made in the course of giving or seeking legal advice for a proper purpose although litigation need not be contemplated, and (5) the client has not waived the privilege. State v. McIntosh, 336 N.C. 517, 444 S.E.2d 438 (1994).

2014 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

April 25, 2014

Dual Representation of Trustee and Secured Creditor in Contested Foreclosure

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not represent both the trustee and the secured creditor in a contested foreclosure proceeding.

Inquiry:

A law firm has entered into a contract with an independent corporation to serve as substitute trustee in any foreclosure proceeding initiated by the law firm. No member of the law firm, or anyone related to any member of the law firm, has any affiliation with or financial interest in the corporation.

May the law firm represent the corporation serving as the trustee in a contested foreclosure proceeding, while also representing the secured creditor in the proceeding?

Opinion:

No. As noted in NC Gen. Stat. §45-21.16(c), a trustee on a deed of trust is "a neutral party and, while holding that position in the foreclosure proceeding, may not advocate for the secured creditor or for the debtor in the foreclosure proceeding." Because of the conflict between the neutral, fiduciary role of trustee and the role of an advocate for one of the parties to a contested foreclosure, a number of ethics opinions hold that a lawyer serving as a trustee in a contested foreclosure proceeding may not represent the secured creditor or the debtor in the proceeding. 2008 FEO 11 (listing opinions).

By extension, a lawyer representing the trustee in a contested foreclosure proceeding is also prohibited from representing the secured creditor or the debtor in the proceeding. This is because the lawyer must advise the trustee on maintaining a neutral role, and this representation would be materially limited by the advocacy required to represent either the secured creditor or the debtor. In fact, 2008 FEO 11 specifically prohibits the simultaneous representation in a contested foreclosure proceeding of the secured creditor and a corporate trustee specifically created by the lawyer's firm to serve in this capacity. 2008 FEO 11, Opinion #5.

The Ethics Committee has recognized a limited exception to the prohibition on representation of the secured creditor by a lawyer for the trustee in a contested foreclosure proceeding. This exception permits joint representation of both the trustee and the secured creditor, but not in the contested foreclosure itself. In 2004 FEO 3, a lawyer proposed to represent both the secured creditor and the trustee in an unfair debt collection action filed by the borrower against the secured creditor and the trustee. To enjoin the pending foreclosure proceeding, the trustee was named as a party-defendant in the action. The opinion holds that the lawyer may represent both the secured creditor and the trustee as codefendants in this separate, tangential lawsuit brought by the borrower if the lawyer determines that his representation will not be impaired, and both the secured creditor and the trustee give informed consent. 2004 FEO 3 (applying a conflict of interest analysis under Rule 1.7).

2014 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

April 25, 2014

Pro Bono Legal Services Provided by Government and Public Sector Lawyers

Opinion encourages government lawyers to engage in pro bono representation unless prohibited by law from doing so.

Inquiry:

May a lawyer who works for the government or the public sector (hereafter "government lawyer") provide pro bono legal services to private individuals and organizations pursuant to Rule 6.1?

Opinion:

Yes, if the government lawyer is not otherwise prohibited by law from engaging in the private practice of law.

All lawyers have a professional responsibility to provide legal services to those who are unable to pay as stated in Rule 6.1:

> Every lawyer has a professional responsibility to provide legal services to those unable to pay. A lawyer should aspire to render at least (50) hours of pro bono publico legal services per year. In fulfilling this responsibility, the lawyer should:
>
> (a) provide a substantial majority of the (50) hours of legal services without fee or expectation of fee to:
>
> (1) persons of limited means;
>
> (2) charitable, religious, civic, community, governmental, and educational organizations in matters that are designed primarily to address the needs of persons of limited means; or
>
> (3) individuals, groups, or organizations seeking to secure or protect civil rights, civil liberties, or public rights, or charitable, religious, civic, community, governmental, and educational organizations in matters in furtherance of their organizational purposes, where the payment of standard legal fees would significantly deplete the organization's economic resources or would be otherwise inappropriate.
>
> ...

Some government lawyers, however, are prohibited by statute from engaging in the private practice of law. See, e.g., NC Gen. Stat. §84-2 ("No justice, judge, magistrate, full-time district attorney, full-time assistant district attorney, public defender, assistant public defender, clerk, deputy, or assistant clerk of the General Court of Justice, register of deeds, deputy, or assistant register of deeds, sheriff, or deputy sheriff shall engage in the private practice of law.") and NC Gen. Stat. §7A-754 ("Neither the chief administrative law judge nor any administrative law judge may engage in the private practice of law...").

A government lawyer is subject to the requirements of the Rules of Professional Conduct when providing pro bono legal services. Although the pro bono legal services may be very different from the legal work that the government lawyer performs for his or her employer, the government lawyer must provide competent and diligent representation. See Rule 1.1 and Rule 1.3. Therefore, the government lawyer must ensure that he or she has the training necessary to represent the pro bono client competently. In addition, the government lawyer must communicate to the pro bono client that, in the course of providing pro bono legal services, the lawyer is not acting on behalf of a government agency or office but in his or her private capacity. See Rule 1.2 and Rule 1.4.

A government lawyer must also avoid conflicts of interests that may arise when providing pro bono legal services to private persons or entities. See Rule 1.7. The Arizona State Bar opined that the unique position of a lawyer employed by the government suggests that a heightened level of scrutiny for possible conflicts of interest is warranted when a government lawyer engages simultaneously in the private practice of law, albeit on a pro bono basis. Az. State Bar, Ethics Op. 93-08 (1993). The government lawyer must examine whether his or her employer and/or any public body that the government lawyer represents has an interest in the pro bono matter. If so, and the interests of the prospective private client are adverse to the government, or the government lawyer's representation of either the government or the prospective private client will be materially limited, the lawyer must decline the representation unless both the government and the prospective client give informed consent. See Rule 1.7. Similarly, if the government lawyer formerly represented a public body in the same matter or a matter that is substantially related to the proposed pro bono representation, the government lawyer is prohibited from taking on the pro bono representation if it would be adverse to formerly represented public body unless this former client gives informed consent. See Rule 1.9. Because of the potential for conflicts to arise, it is recommended that a government lawyer limit his or her pro bono activities to practice areas that are unrelated to the lawyer's government work.

Government and public sector lawyers must abide by the confidentiality rule. Rule 1.6(a) provides that a lawyer shall not reveal information acquired during the professional relationship with a client unless the client gives informed consent, the disclosure is impliedly authorized to carry out the representation, or the disclosure is permitted by an exception set forth in paragraph (b) of the rule. If the government lawyer is prohibited by his or her employer from entering into a confidentiality agreement with a private person or entity, the lawyer may not provide pro bono legal services to private clients. Nevertheless, the government lawyer may still find opportunities to provide *pro bono s*ervice by participating in activities for improving the law, the legal system, or the legal profession. See Rule 6.1(b)(2).

If a government lawyer intends to provide pro bono services outside the context of a legal services organization or a nonprofit organization, before doing so the lawyer would be wise to consult with a liability insurance carrier to determine whether to carry malpractice insurance. If the government lawyer will be providing pro bono services under the auspices of a legal services organization or other nonprofit or charitable organization, the government lawyer would be wise to determine whether the legal services or nonprofit organization has liability insurance that will cover the government lawyer's pro bono activities.

Government agencies and public sector offices are encouraged to adopt internal policies that will facilitate pro bono legal service by government lawyers. These policies should address, inter alia, the definition of pro bono, the types of pro bono services to be performed, conflicts of interests, use of the employer's resources such as support staff and office equipment, and whether pro bono legal services are to be provided during working hours or after.

2014 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

July 25, 2014

Serving Subpoenas on Health Care Providers Covered by HIPAA

Opinion rules that a lawyer may send a subpoena for medical records to an entity covered by HIPAA without providing the assurances necessary for the entity to comply with the subpoena as set out in 45 C.F.R. §164.512(e)(ii).

Introduction:

The Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 (HIPAA) required the US Department of Health and Human Services (USDHHS) to establish a set of national standards for the protection of certain health information including identifiable medical records of individual patients. Pursuant to this mandate, the USDHHS issued Standards for Privacy of Individually Identifiable Health Information (the Privacy Rule), which established national standards for the protection of protected health information. The Privacy Rule applies to any health care provider who transmits health information in electronic form in connection with certain specified transactions.[1]

At issue in this inquiry is 45 C.F.R. §164.512(e) of the Privacy Rule, which pertains to disclosure of protected health information in judicial and administrative proceedings. Pursuant to 45 C.F.R. §164.512(e), covered entities may disclose protected health information in a judicial or administrative proceeding if the request for the information is in response to an order from a court or administrative tribunal. Such information may also be disclosed in response to a subpoena or other lawful process if certain assurances regarding notice to the individual or a protective order are provided. Specifically, a covered entity may disclose protected health information if the covered entity receives satisfactory assurance from the party seeking the information that reasonable efforts have been made by such party to ensure that the individual who is the subject of the requested protected health information was given notice of the request, or the covered entity received satisfactory assurance from the party seeking the information that reasonable efforts were made by such party to secure a qualified protective order. 45 C.F.R. §164.512(e)(1)(ii)(2013).

However, 45 C.F.R. §164.512(e)(1)(vi) allows a covered entity to disclose protected health information in response to a subpoena without receiving satisfactory assurance from the requesting party if the covered entity itself makes reasonable efforts to provide notice to the individual or to seek a qualified protective order.

Inquiry #1:

May a lawyer send a subpoena to an entity covered by HIPAA and demand compliance without providing the assurances set out in 45 C.F.R. §164.512(e)(ii)?

Opinion #1:

Yes, assuming the subpoena complies with the Rules of Civil Procedure.

As a matter of professional courtesy, if the lawyer does not provide the necessary assurances set out in the Privacy Rule, the lawyer may include a letter with the subpoena alerting the entity that certain health information may be subject to state and/or federal privacy laws and informing the entity that it may delay compliance with the subpoena for a reasonable amount of time to comply with any applicable privacy laws. See Rule 1.2(a)(2) (lawyer does not violate rules by treating others with courtesy). In addition to being a matter of professional courtesy, it may be in the client's best interest to seek compliance with federal and state privacy laws to avoid subsequent objections to the disclosure of the produced materials that may cause delay, additional expense, or prohibit the use of the produced materials.

Inquiry #2:

Would the response to Inquiry #1 be different if the health care provider receiving the subpoena is also a client of the lawyer's firm in an unrelated matter?

Opinion #2:

Assuming that the client seeking the medical records and the provider/client have the same interest in seeing that the medical records are produced in accordance with applicable law, the lawyer serving the subpoena may, with the informed consent confirmed in writing of both clients, provide advice to the provider/client relative to the requirements of the various privacy rules and may give the provider/client a reasonable amount of time to comply.

If the lawyer provides advice to the provider/client relative to the subpoena and a conflict arises pertaining to the subpoena (i.e., provider/client desires to quash the subpoena or, upon the provider/client's failure to respond to the subpoena, the client seeking the medical records is required to file a motion to compel or a motion for sanctions), the lawyer may not represent either the client seeking the records or the provider/client relative to the enforcement of the subpoena, unless both clients give their informed consent confirmed in writing.

Endnote

1. Summary of the HIPAA Privacy Rule, OCR Privacy Brief, US Department of Health and Human Services, Office for Civil Rights: hhs.gov/ocr/privacy/hipaa/ understanding/summary/index.html.

2014 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

July 17, 2015

Advising a Civil Litigation Client about Social Media

Opinion rules a lawyer must advise a civil litigation client about the legal ramifications of the client's postings on social media as necessary to represent the client competently. The lawyer may advise the client to remove postings on social media if the removal is done in compliance with the rules and law on preservation and spoliation of evidence.

Inquiry #1:

A client's postings and other information that the client has placed on a social media[1] website (referred to collectively as "postings") are relevant to the issues in the client's legal matter and, if the matter is litigated, might be used to impeach the client. The client's lawyer does not use social media and is unfamiliar with how social media functions.

What is the lawyer's duty to be knowledgeable of social media and to advise the client about the effect of the postings on the client's legal matter?

Opinion #1:

Rule 1.1 requires lawyers to provide competent representation to clients. Comment [8] to the rule specifically states that a lawyer "should keep abreast of changes in the law and its practice, including the benefits and risks associated with the technology relevant to the lawyer's practice." "Relevant technology" includes social media. As stated in an opinion of the New Hampshire Bar Association, N. H. Bar Ass'n Op. 2012-13/05, "counsel has a general duty to be aware of social media as a source of potentially useful information in litigation, to be competent to obtain that information directly or through an agent, and to know how to make effective use of that information in litigation."

If the client's postings could be relevant and material to the client's legal matter, competent representation includes advising the client of the legal ramifications of existing postings, future postings, and third party comments.

Inquiry #2:

The client's legal matter will probably be litigated, although a law suit has not been filed. May the lawyer instruct the client to remove postings on social media?

Opinion #2:

A lawyer may not counsel a client or assist a client to engage in conduct the lawyer knows is criminal or fraudulent. Rule 1.2(d). In addition, a lawyer may not unlawfully obstruct another party's access to evidence or unlawfully alter, destroy, or conceal a document or other material having potential evidentiary value. Rule 3.4(a). The lawyer, therefore, should examine the law on preservation of information, spoliation[2] of evidence, and obstruction of justice to determine whether removing existing postings would be a violation of the law.

If removing postings does not constitute spoliation and is not otherwise illegal, or the removal is done in compliance with the rules and law on preservation and spoliation of evidence, the lawyer may instruct the client to remove existing postings on social media. The lawyer may take possession of printed or digital images of the client's postings made for purposes of preservation. See N.Y. State Bar, Ethics Op. 745 (2013)(lawyer may advise a client about the removal of postings if the lawyer complies with the rules and law on preservation and spoliation of evidence).

Inquiry #3:

May the lawyer instruct the client to change the security and privacy settings on social media pages to the highest level of restricted access?

Opinion #3:

Yes, if doing so is not a violation of law or court order.

Endnotes

1. "Social media" is defined as "forms of electronic communication ([such] as Websites for social networking and microblogging) through which users create online communities to share information, ideas, personal messages, and other content ([such] as videos)." Social Media, Merriam-Webster, merriam-webster.com/dictionaty/social%20 media (last visited Jan. 20, 2015).
2. Black's Law Dictionary 1437 (8th ed. 2004) defines spoliation as the intentional concealment, destruction, alteration or mutilation of evidence, usually documents, thereby making them unusable or invalid. The doctrine of spoliation of evidence holds that when "a party fails to introduce in evidence documents that are relevant to the matter in question and within his control...there is a presumption, or at least an inference that the evidence withheld, if forthcoming, would injure his case." Jones v. GMRI, Inc., 144 N.C. App. 558, 565, 551 S.E.2d 867, 872(2001) (quoting Yarborough v. Hughes, 139 N.C. 199, 209, 51 S.E. 904, 907-08 (1905)).

2014 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

July 25, 2014

Duty to Avoid Conflicts When Advising Members of Nonprofit Organization

Opinion rules that a lawyer who provides free brief consultations to members of a nonprofit organization must screen for conflicts prior to conducting a consultation.

Inquiry:

A nonprofit organization of nonlawyer professionals provides its members with contact information for certain medical and other professionals who have agreed to provide the members with brief consultations to answer questions on various subjects that are relevant to the members' professional practices.

The organization has asked Lawyer if she is willing to provide such consultations to its members concerning their legal questions. If Lawyer agrees, she will be described by the organization on its website as a member support legal resource. It will be clear that Lawyer is not an employee of the organization and that she has volunteered to provide such consultations directly to the organization's members. Such consultations will be without charge to the members, and the organization will not compensate Lawyer for her services.

Lawyer will secure the informed consent of each inquiring member to the limited scope of such representation. However, Lawyer believes that it would be impractical for Lawyer to conduct a conflicts search on each member who calls her before she consults with that member concerning his or her legal question.

It is reasonable to suppose that some members who call Lawyer for a free consultation may, thereafter, wish to engage her to represent them on a paid basis. However, the initial consultation is not conditioned on such continued representation. Lawyer will conduct a conflicts check as to any member who seeks to engage her in an ongoing representation before commencing such representation.

Rule 6.5(a), Limited Legal Services Programs, provides:

> A lawyer who, under the auspices of a program sponsored by a nonprofit organization or court, provides short-term limited legal services to a client without expectation by either the lawyer or the client that the lawyer will provide continuing representation in the matter: (1) is subject to Rules 1.7 and 1.9(a) only if the lawyer knows that the representation of the client involves a conflict of interest; and (2) is subject to Rule 1.10 only if the lawyer knows that another lawyer associated with the lawyer in a law firm is disqualified by Rule 1.7 or 1.9(a) with respect to the matter.

Is Lawyer's initial consultation with members of the organization governed by Rule 6.5 such that Lawyer is subject to Rules 1.7 and 1.9(a) only if she knows that the representation of the client involves a conflict of interest?

Opinion:

No. Rule 6.5 does not apply. Comment [1] to Rule 6.5 states that "[l]egal services organizations, courts, and various nonprofit organizations have established programs through which lawyers provide short-term limited legal services—such as advice or the completion of legal forms—that will assist persons to address their legal problems without further representation by a lawyer." Rule 6.5 is designed to encourage lawyers to participate in nonprofit programs offering limited legal services on a short-term basis. Examples of such programs include legal-advice hotlines, advice-only clinics, or pro se counseling programs. See Rule 6.5, cmt. [1]. As noted in Comment [1] to Rule 6.5: "Such programs are normally operated under circumstances in which it is not feasible for a lawyer to systematically screen for conflicts of interest as is generally required before undertaking a representation." Therefore, Rule 6.5 relaxes the application of the conflict of interest rules.

Rule 6.5 was adopted in response to concerns that a strict application of the conflicts of interest rules may be deterring lawyers from serving as volunteers in programs providing short-term limited legal services under the auspices of a nonprofit organization or a court-annexed program. See Ann. Model Rules of Prof'l Conduct R. 6.5 (7th ed. 2009). Rule 6.5's exception to the duty to avoid conflicts of interest applies only where it is not feasible for the lawyer to complete a comprehensive conflicts check prior to undertaking the representation. The proposed arrangement with Lawyer does not present such a scenario. Upon being contacted by a member of the nonprofit organization, it is feasible for Lawyer to complete a conflicts check prior to conducting the initial consultation. Therefore, Rule 6.5 does not apply and Lawyer has a duty to screen for conflicts of interest as otherwise set out in the Rules of Professional Conduct.

2014 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

October 24, 2014

Use of North Carolina Subpoena to Obtain Documents from Foreign Entity or Individual

Opinion rules that a lawyer may provide a foreign entity or individual with a North Carolina subpoena accompanied by a statement/letter explaining that the subpoena is not enforceable in the foreign jurisdiction, the recipient is not required to comply with the subpoena, and the subpoena is being provided solely for the recipient's records.

Editor's note: This opinion supplements and clarifies 2010 FEO 2, Obtaining Medical Records from Out of State Health Care Providers.

Inquiry #1:

In a state legal matter, a lawyer wishes to obtain documents from a medical provider or other entity that is not located in North Carolina and does not have a registered agent in the state (foreign entity). The lawyer contacts the foreign entity and requests the documents. The lawyer informs the foreign entity that the subpoena power set out in N.C. R. Civ. P. 45 does not extend to the foreign jurisdiction. The foreign entity indicates that it will comply with the request for documents upon the receipt of a North Carolina subpoena "for its records."

May the lawyer provide the foreign entity with a North Carolina subpoena accompanied by a statement/letter explaining that the subpoena is not enforceable in the foreign jurisdiction and is provided to the entity solely for the entity's records?

Opinion #1:

Yes. Rule 8.4(c) states that it is professional misconduct for a lawyer to engage in conduct involving dishonesty, fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation. RPC 236 provides that it is false and deceptive for a lawyer to use the subpoena process to mislead the custodian of documentary evidence as to the lawyer's authority to require the production of such documents. 2010 FEO 2 prohibits a lawyer's use of a subpoena to request medical records under the authority of Rule 45 knowing that the North Carolina subpoena is unenforceable. 2010 FEO 2 explains that if "the North Carolina subpoena is not enforceable out of state, the lawyer may not misrepresent to the out of state health care provider that it must comply with the subpoena."

RPC 236 and 2010 FEO 2 prohibit a lawyer from making misrepresentations to the subpoena recipient that the lawyer has the legal authority to issue the subpoena under Rule 45 or misleading the recipient as to whether compliance with the subpoena is required by law.

If the subpoena is accompanied by a statement/letter explaining that the subpoena is not enforceable in the foreign jurisdiction, the recipient is not required to comply with the subpoena, and the subpoena is being provided solely for the entity's records, the lawyer has not made misrepresentations to, nor misled, the subpoena recipient. The subpoena recipient is aware that it cannot be compelled to comply with the subpoena and may determine whether to provide the requested documents voluntarily.

Inquiry #2:

Would the answer differ if the lawyer wishes to obtain the appearance and testimony of an individual over which the North Carolina court does not have in personam jurisdiction?

Opinion #2:

No. If an individual requests a North Carolina subpoena, knowing that the North Carolina court lacks in personam jurisdiction over the individual and the subpoena will not be enforceable, the lawyer may provide the individual with the subpoena, accompanied by a statement/letter explaining that the subpoena is not enforceable as to the individual and is being provided solely at the individual's request.

2014 Formal Ethics Opinion 8

January 23, 2015

Accepting an Invitation from a Judge to Connect on LinkedIn

Opinion rules that a lawyer may accept an invitation from a judge to be a "connection" on a professional networking website, and may endorse a judge. However, a lawyer may not accept a legal skill or expertise endorsement or a recommendation from a judge.

Facts:

Lawyer has a profile listing on LinkedIn, a social networking website for people in professional occupations. The website allows registered users ("members") to maintain a list of contact details on their LinkedIn pages for people with whom they have some level of relationship via the website. These contacts are called "connections." Members can invite anyone (whether a site user or not) to become a connection.

LinkedIn can be used to list jobs and search for job candidates, to find employment, and to seek out business opportunities. Members can view the connections of other members, post their photographs, and view the photos of other members. Members can post comments on another member's profile page. Members can also endorse or write recommendations for other members. Such endorsements or recommendations, if accepted by the recipient, are posted on the recipient's profile listing.

Inquiry #1:

May a lawyer with a professional profile on LinkedIn accept an invitation to connect from a judge?

Opinion #1:

Yes. Interactions with judges using social media are evaluated in the same manner as personal interactions with a judge, such as an invitation to dinner. In certain scenarios, a lawyer may accept a judge's dinner invitation. Similarly, in certain scenarios, a lawyer may accept a LinkedIn invitation to connect from a judge. However, if a lawyer represents clients in proceedings before a judge, the lawyer is subject to the following duties: to avoid conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice; to not state or imply an ability to influence improperly a government agency or official; and to avoid ex parte communications with a judge regarding a legal matter or issue the judge is considering. See Rule 3.5 and Rule 8.4. These duties may require the lawyer to decline a judge's invitation to connect on LinkedIn.

Rule 8.4(d) provides that it is professional misconduct for a lawyer to "engage in conduct that is prejudicial to the administration of justice." Rule 8.4(e) provides that it is professional misconduct for a lawyer to "state or imply an ability to influence improperly a government agency or official." Lawyers have an obligation to protect the integrity of the judicial system and to avoid creating an appearance of judicial partiality. See 2005 FEO 1.

If a lawyer receives an invitation to connect from a judge during the pendency of a matter before the judge, and the lawyer concludes that accepting the invitation will impair the lawyer's compliance with these duties, the lawyer should not accept the judge's invitation to connect until the matter is concluded. The lawyer may communicate to the judge the reason the lawyer did not accept the judge's invitation. Such a communication with the judge is not a prohibited ex parte communication provided the communication does not include a discussion of the underlying legal matter.

Rule 3.5 prohibits lawyers from engaging in ex parte communications with a judge. Because connected members can post comments on each other's profile pages, the connection between a judge and a lawyer appearing in a matter before the judge could lead to improper ex parte communications. Therefore, while the lawyer has a matter pending before a judge, the lawyer may not use LinkedIn or any other form of social media to communicate with the judge about the pending matter.

Rule 8.4(f) provides that it is professional misconduct for a lawyer to "knowingly assist a judge or judicial officer in conduct that is a violation of applicable rules of judicial conduct or other law." To the extent that a judge is prohibited by the North Carolina Code of Judicial Conduct from participating in LinkedIn, or from sending invitations to connect to lawyers, a lawyer may not assist the judge in violating such prohibitions.

Inquiry #2:

May the lawyer send an invitation to connect to a judge?

Opinion #2:

Yes, subject to the limitations described in Opinion #1.

Inquiry #3:

A LinkedIn member has the option of displaying a "skills & expertise" section within his profile. A member can add items to the "skills & expertise" section of his profile page. In addition, some connections can add a new item to another member's "skills & expertise" section, can "endorse" a skill or expertise already listed for the member, or write a recommendation for the member. A member who is being endorsed by another member will receive a notification containing the identity of the endorser and the specific skill or expertise that is being endorsed. The member may decline the endorsement entirely or choose the specific endorsements to be displayed. The endorsed member may also subsequently edit the "skills & expertise" section to "hide" selected endorsements. If a member endorses another member, and the endorsement is not declined by the recipient, the endorser's name and profile picture will appear next to the skill on the endorsed member's profile.

A recommendation is a comment written by a LinkedIn member to recognize or commend another member. When someone recommends a member, the recommended member will receive a message in the recommended member's LinkedIn inbox and a notification on the member's "Manage Recommendations" page. Recommendations are only visible to connections. A member can choose to hide a recommendation from the member's profile but cannot delete it. Recommendations written for others can be withdrawn or revised.

May a lawyer endorse a judge's legal skills or expertise or write a recommendation on the judge's profile page?

Opinion #3:

Yes, subject to the limitations explained in Opinion #1.

Inquiry #4:

May a lawyer accept an endorsement or recommendation from a judge and display the endorsement or recommendation on his profile page?

Opinion #4:

No. Displaying an endorsement or recommendation from a judge on a lawyer's profile page would create the appearance of judicial partiality and the lawyer must decline. See Rule 8.4(e).

Inquiry #5:

May a lawyer accept and post endorsements and recommendations on his LinkedIn profile page from persons other than judges?

Opinion #5:

Lawyers are professionally obligated to ensure that communications about the lawyer or the lawyer's services are not false or misleading. See Rule 7.1(a). Provided that the content of the endorsement or recommendation is truthful and not misleading in compliance with the requirements of Rule 7.1, the lawyer may post endorsements and recommendations from persons other than judges on the lawyer's LinkedIn profile page. See 2012 FEO 8.

Inquiry #6:

Lawyer A previously accepted and displayed on his LinkedIn profile page an endorsement or recommendation from Lawyer B, who subsequently became a judge. Is Lawyer A required to remove Lawyer B's endorsement or recommendation?

Opinion #6:

Yes, if Lawyer A knows, or reasonably should know, that Lawyer B has become a judge. See Opinion #4.

Inquiry #7:

Do the holdings in this opinion apply to other social media applications such as Facebook, Twitter, Google+, Instagram, and Myspace?

Opinion #7:

The holdings apply to any social media application that allows public display of connections, endorsements, or recommendations between lawyers and judges.

2014 Formal Ethics Opinion 9

July 17, 2015

Use of Tester in an Investigation that Serves a Public Interest

Opinion rules that a private lawyer may supervise an investigation involving misrepresentation if done in pursuit of a public interest and certain conditions are satisfied.

Note: This opinion does not apply to the conduct of a government lawyer. As explained in comment [1] to Rule 8.4, the prohibition in Rule 8.4(a) against knowingly assisting another to violate the Rules of Professional Conduct or violating the Rules of Professional Conduct through the acts of another does not prohibit a government lawyer from providing legal advice to investigatory personnel relative to any action such investigatory personnel are lawfully entitled to take.

In addition, this opinion is limited to private lawyers who advise, direct, or supervise conduct involving dishonesty, deceit, or misrepresentation as opposed to a lawyer who personally participates in such conduct.

Inquiry:

Attorney A was retained by Client C to investigate and, if appropriate, file a lawsuit against Client C's former employer, E. Employer E employed Client C as a janitor and required him to work 60 hours per week. E paid Client C a salary of $400 per week. Attorney A believes that because his client's employment was a "non-exempt position" under the North Carolina Wage and Hour Act, the payment method used by E was unlawful. Instead, E should have paid Client C at least $7.25 (minimum wage) per hour for each of the first 40 hours Client C worked per week, and at least $10.88 (time and a half) for each hour in excess of 40 (overtime) that Client C worked per week.

Prior to filing a lawsuit, Attorney A wants to retain a private investigator to investigate E's wage payment practices. The private investigator suggests using lawful, but misleading or deceptive tactics, to obtain the information Attorney A seeks. For example, the private investigator may pose as a person interested in being hired by E in the same capacity as Client C to see if E violates the North Carolina Wage and Hour Act when compensating the investigator.

Prior to filing a lawsuit, may Attorney A retain a private investigator who will misrepresent his identity and purpose when conducting an investigation into E's wage payment practices?

Opinion:

The Rules of Professional Conduct are rules of reason and there are instances when the use of misrepresentation does not violate Rule 8.4(a)'s prohibition on the use of third parties to engage in conduct involving misrepresentation. See Rule 0.2, Scope, and Rule 8.4(a) and (c).

Other jurisdictions have interpreted their Rules of Professional Conduct to permit lawyer supervision of investigations involving misrepresentation in circumstances similar to that set out in the instant inquiry. For example, the bars of Arizona and Maryland permit lawyers to use "testers" who employ misrepresentation to collect evidence of discriminatory practices. Ariz. State Bar Comm. on the Rules of Prof'l Conduct, Op. 99-11 (1999); Maryland Bar Ass'n, Op. 2006-02 (2005). These ethics opinions conclude that testers are necessary to prove discriminatory practices and, therefore, serve an important public policy. The State Bar of Arizona opined that it would be inconsistent with the intent of the Rules of Professional Conduct to interpret the rules to prohibit a lawyer from supervising the activity of testers. Ariz. State Bar Comm. on the Rules of Prof'l Conduct, Op. 99-11 (1999).

The objective of Rule 8.4 is set out in comment [3] to the rule: "The purpose of professional discipline for misconduct is not punishment, but to protect the public, the courts, and the legal profession." The challenge is to balance the public's interest in having unlawful activity fully investigated and possibly thereby stopped, with the public's and the profession's interest in ensuring that lawyers conduct themselves with integrity and honesty. In an attempt to balance these two important interests, we conclude that a lawyer may advise, direct, or supervise an investigation involving pretext under certain limited circumstances.

In the pursuit of a legitimate public interest such as in investigations of discrimination in housing, employment and accommodations, patent and intellectual property infringement, and the production and sale of contaminated and harmful products, a lawyer may advise, direct, and supervise the use of misrepresentation (1) in lawful efforts to obtain information on actionable violations of criminal law, civil law, or constitutional rights; (2) if the lawyer's conduct is otherwise in compliance with the Rules of Professional Conduct;[1] (3) the lawyer has a good faith belief that there is a reasonable possibility that a violation of criminal law, civil law, or constitutional rights has taken place, is taking place, or will take place in the foreseeable future;[2] (4) misrepresentations are limited to identity or purpose; and (5) the evidence sought is not reasonably available through other means. A lawyer may not advise, direct, or supervise the use of misrepresentation to pursue the purely personal interests of the lawyer's client, where there is no public policy purpose, such as the interests of the principal in a family law matter.

If Attorney A concludes that each of the above conditions is satisfied, he may retain a private investigator to look into E's wage payment practices, which investigation may include misrepresentations as to identity and purpose.

Endnotes

1. Rule 4.2(a) prohibits a lawyer from communicating about the subject of the representation with a person the lawyer knows to be represented by another lawyer in the matter unless the other lawyer consents or the communication is authorized by law or court order. A lawyer may not violate this rule through the acts of another, including an investigator. Rule 8.4(a).

2. Government evidence or data that supports the conclusion that random testing will uncover illegal discriminatory conduct is a sufficient basis for a lawyer's "good faith belief" under this condition. For example, federal funding and contracts for Legal Aid of North Carolina, Inc.'s (LANC) Fair Housing Project require the performance of systematic fair housing testing to uncover patterns, practices, barriers, and other more subtle forms of unlawful housing discrimination in North Carolina. Studies and evidence developed by US Department of Housing and Urban Development confirm that systematic fair housing testing is an important tool to detect housing discrimination. A LANC lawyer may rely on such evidence to form a good faith belief that there is a reasonable possibility that a violation of fair housing law has, is, or will take place and that random audits by "testers" supervised by the lawyer will uncover such conduct.

2014 Formal Ethics Opinion 10

January 23, 2015

Lawyer Owned Adoption Agency

Opinion rules that a lawyer who handles adoptions as part of her or his law practice and also owns a financial interest in a for-profit adoption agency may, with informed consent, represent an adopting couple utilizing the services of the adoption agency but may not represent the biological parents.

Facts:

Attorneys A and B, who handle independent adoptions as part of their law practice, also manage a for-profit adoption agency called "Adopt a Child." Adopt a Child is a limited liability company. Attorneys A and B receive compensation from Adopt a Child. The agency's office is located in separate office space within Attorneys A and B's firm. It has a separate telephone number, signage, fax machine, and copy machine. Adopt a Child is staffed by one employee. Adopt a Child contracts with independent social workers to screen and counsel birthmothers. Without assistance or influence from Attorneys A and B, a social worker conducts a home study on the adopting couple. The social worker then prepares a report which is reviewed by a supervisor and a review committee. A director of Adopt a Child may or may not be a member of the review committee. If the review committee approves the home study, the adoption proceeds. The adopting couple then engages a lawyer to represent their interests. If the home study report is unfavorable, the report is sent to the Department of Social Services. The adopting couple thereafter cannot become a client of Adopt a Child.

Typically, adopting couples learn about Adopt a Child through the agency's website and advertisements. An initial consultation with Attorney A or Attorney B is arranged. Attorney A or Attorney B meets with the adopting couple to discuss the adoption process. If the adopting couple has identified a child to adopt, then Attorneys A and B proceed with the legal work necessary to complete an independent adoption. If the adopting couple is interested in adoption, but needs assistance in finding a child, a list of licensed adoption agencies is provided to the adopting couple. The adopting couple is informed that Attorneys A and B manage and own Adopt a Child. The adopting couple is encouraged to investigate other available agencies. If the adopting couple decides to use Adopt a Child, the adopting couple is given an application form and asked to pay a $200 application fee. Once approved, the adopting couple becomes a client of Adopt a Child.

Adopting couples pay a $4,500 fee to Adopt a Child, which gives adopting couples the following services: a completed home study, a family profile by a local artist, a two-page website, and access to birthmothers. Once there is a match between a birthmother and an adopting couple, the adopting couple signs a fee contract with the law firm and pays a legal fee to the law firm for legal services. Additional fees may occur in the form of pass-through costs for the birthmother's living and medical expenses, and legal fees as necessary for termination of parental rights, interstate legal representation, etc. The adopting couple is informed that if there is a conflict of interest, such as a dispute between the birthmother and the adopting couple or between the adopting couple and Adopt a Child, the adopting couple must hire another lawyer to represent them.

Inquiry #1:

May Attorneys A and B co-manage and accept compensation as managers of Adopt a Child and provide legal services to the adopting couple and Adopt a Child?

Opinion #1:

Yes. The primary concern in this inquiry is the ability of Attorneys A and B to identify and manage conflicts of interest. Actual or potential conflicts of interest exist based on (1) the lawyers' ownership of Adopt a Child, and (2) the referral of an adopting couple represented by Attorney A or Attorney B to Adopt a Child, or the referral of a client of Adopt a Child to Attorney A or Attorney B for legal representation in the adoption.

Rule 1.7 prohibits concurrent conflicts of interest. One type of concurrent conflict of interest exists if the representation of one or more clients may be materially limited by a personal interest of the lawyer. Comment [10] to Rule 1.7 provides, "[t]he lawyer's own interests should not be permitted to have an adverse effect on representation of a client. In addition, a lawyer may not allow related business interests to affect representation, for example, by referring clients to an enterprise in which the lawyer has an undisclosed financial interest."

Before Adopt a Child may refer an adopting couple to Attorney A and Attorney B for legal services, the agency, acting through the two lawyers, must reasonably conclude that the lawyers can adequately protect the interests of the adopting couple and that their professional judgment on behalf of the adopting couple will not be adversely affected by their financial interest in Adopt a Child. The adopting couple must give informed consent to the representation, confirmed in writing. As part of the disclosure necessary for informed consent, the adopting couple must be informed that in the event of a conflict between the adopting couple and Adopt a Child, Attorneys A and B must withdraw from the representation and the adopting couple will need to obtain new counsel. See Rule 1.7(b).

If a couple that wants to adopt are already clients of either Attorney A or Attorney B, the lawyers may refer the couple to Adopt a Child for adoption services only in compliance with the Rules of Professional Conduct.

The referral of the adopting parents to Adopt a Child implicates Rule 5.7 as well as Rule 1.8. Adopt a Child provides "law-related services." Rule 5.7 sets out the ethical responsibilities for a lawyer who provides such services. Comment [6] to Rule 5.7 provides that when a client-lawyer relationship exists with a person who is referred by a lawyer to an ancillary business controlled by the lawyer, the lawyer must comply with Rule 1.8(a) pertaining to business transactions with clients. See also Rule 1.8, cmt. [1]. Pursuant to Rule 1.8(a) a lawyer may only enter into a business transaction with a client if: (1) the transaction and terms are fair and reasonable to the client and are fully disclosed and transmitted in writing in a manner that can be reasonably understood by the client; (2) the client is advised in writing of the desirability of seeking, and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek, the advice of independent legal counsel on the transaction; and (3) the client gives informed consent, in writing signed by the client, to the essential terms of the transaction and the lawyer's role in the transaction. Accordingly, a lawyer must make these disclosures and secure the requisite consent before providing law related services to a client.

In 2000 FEO 9, the Ethics Committee held that a lawyer who was also a certified public accountant could provide legal services and accounting services from the same office. The opinion cites Rule 1.7 and provides that the lawyer may offer accounting services to his legal clients, provided the lawyer fully discloses his self-interest in making a referral to himself, and the lawyer determines that the referral is in the best interest of the client.

Before referring legal clients to Adopt a Child, Attorneys A and B must make an independent professional determination that the services offered by Adopt a Child will best serve the interests of the adopting couple. In addition, the adopting couple must be informed that, if they become clients of Adopt a Child, they are not obligated to employ Attorneys A and B to handle the legal work related to an adoption, and that they have the right to legal counsel of their choice. Likewise, if a couple comes in for a legal consultation concerning adoption, Attorneys A and B must explain the relationship between Adopt a Child and their firm and their financial interest in the agency before referring the adopting couple to their agency. The adopting couple must be given access to other agencies and the freedom to choose another adoption agency even if they decide to retain Attorneys A and B to perform their legal work.

If Attorneys A and B comply with the requirements set out in Rule 1.7(b), Rule 1.8(a), and Rule 5.7, they may refer their legal clients to Adopt a Child. Similarly, if Attorneys A and B comply with the requirements of Rule 1.7(b) and Rule 1.8(a), they may accept referrals from Adopt a Child.

Inquiry #2:

May Attorneys A and B simultaneously represent the adopting couple, Adopt a Child, and the birth parent(s)?

Opinion #2:

No. Rule 1.7(a) provides that a lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation involves a concurrent conflict of interest. A concurrent conflict of interest exists if (1) the representation of one client will be directly adverse to another client; or (2) the representation of one or more clients may be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client.

In an informal opinion, the ABA opined as follows,

> An adoption is a highly emotional undertaking for both the adoptive and the biological parent. In such situations, the lawyer must take particular care that the client fully understands the significance of the legal actions being taken. The lawyer has the obligation not only to advise the client of the legal rights and responsibilities, but also to counsel regarding the advisability of the action contemplated. See Rule 1.4. The biological parent is entitled to a full disclosure of all rights and obligations involved in the consent to the adoption , revocation of consent, post-adoptive rights, and post-adoptive restrictions, as well as the rights and obligations assumed by the adoptive parent. Where represented by counsel, the biological parent has the right to expect the lawyer to anticipate the consequences of the surrender and advise accordingly.
>
> The rights surrendered by the biological parent and those assumed by the adoptive parent are in potential conflict . The biological parent's right to revoke the consent is in direct conflict with the interests of the adoptive parent. The biological parent has the right to independent advice regarding the revocation of the consent.
>
> The lawyer representing the adoptive parent owes the duty to counsel the adoptive parent and to assist the adoptive parent in securing the consent and avoiding revocation. The rights of the adoptive parent after the adoption decree is final may be antagonistic to perceived rights of the biological parent.
>
> The inherent conflicts cannot be reconciled. Thus, the lawyer seeking to represent both the adoptive and biological parents in a private adoption proceeding cannot have a reasonable belief that the representation of one client would not adversely affect the relationship with or representation of the other client. See Rule 1.7

ABA Comm. on Ethics and Prof'l Responsibility, Informal Op. 87-1523 (1987).

We agree with the reasoning of the ABA opinion and conclude that it is a nonconsentable conflict for Attorneys A and B to represent the birth parents and simultaneously represent the adopting couple and/or Adopt a Child.

Inquiry #3:

What, if any, communication may Attorneys A and B have with a birth parent?

Opinion #3:

Rule 4.3 provides,

> [i]n dealing on behalf of a client with a person who is not represented by counsel, a lawyer shall not: (a) give legal advice to the person, other than the advice to secure counsel, if the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the interests of such person are or have a reasonable possibility of being in conflict with the interests of the client; and (b) state or imply that the lawyer is disinterested. When the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the unrepresented person misunderstands the lawyer's role in the matter, the lawyer shall make reasonable efforts to correct the misunderstanding.

Any communication between a birth parent and the law firm must be limited to providing or collecting information to be used to complete the forms required by Adopt a Child.

Attorneys A and B must ensure that the birth parent(s) are provided with a written disclosure statement that explains that Adopt a Child is not a law firm; Attorneys A and B do not represent the birth parent(s) and cannot provide the birth parent(s) with legal advice; any communication with the law firm does not create a client-lawyer relationship; and the birth parent(s) are entitled to retain separate legal representation; and that the adopting couple will pay the legal fees.

2015 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

April 17, 2015

Preparing Pleadings and Other Filings for an Unrepresented Opposing Party

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not prepare pleadings and other filings for an unrepresented opposing party in a civil proceeding currently pending before a tribunal if doing so is tantamount to giving legal advice to that person.

Background:

The Ethics Committee recently received several inquiries on whether a lawyer may prepare a pleading or other filing for an unrepresented opposing party in a civil proceeding. There are a number of rules and ethics opinions that address this issue, but not collectively. The purpose of this opinion is to provide guiding principles for when a lawyer may prepare a pleading or other filing for an unrepresented opposing party.

This opinion is limited to the drafting of pleadings and filings attendant to a proceeding that is currently pending before a tribunal (as that term is defined in Rule 1.0(n)), and to the drafting of any agreement between the parties to resolve the issues in dispute in the proceeding including a release or settlement agreement. The principles do not address the drafting of documents necessary to close a business transaction or other matters that are not the subject of a formal proceeding before a tribunal. "Pleading or filing" is used throughout the opinion to include any document that is filed with the tribunal and any agreement between the parties to settle their dispute and terminate the proceeding.

Survey of Rules and Opinions:

Rule 4.3(a) provides that, in dealing on behalf of a client with a person who is not represented by counsel, a lawyer shall not give legal advice to the person, other than the advice to secure counsel, if the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the interests of such person are or have a reasonable possibility of being in conflict with the interests of the client.

Comment [2] to Rule 4.3 clarifies that Rule 4.3 does not prohibit a lawyer from negotiating the terms of a transaction or settling a dispute with an unrepresented person. As long as the lawyer explains that the lawyer represents an adverse party and is not representing the person, the lawyer may inform the person of the terms on which the lawyer's client will enter into an agreement or settle a matter and may prepare documents that require the unrepresented person's signature.

CPR 296, which was adopted in 1981 under the Code of Professional Responsibility which was then in effect, opines that a lawyer may not send to or directly make available to an unrepresented defendant an acceptance of service and waiver form waiving the right to answer and to be notified of the date of trial. However, a lawyer may send to a defendant a form solely for acceptance of service. See CPR 121.

RPC 165, adopted in 1993, states that, "[i]n order to accomplish her client's purposes, the attorney may draft a confession of judgment for execution by the adverse party and solicit its execution by the adverse party so long as the attorney does not undertake to advise the unrepresented party concerning the meaning or significance of the document or to state or imply that she is disinterested." The opinion continues:

> [a]lthough previous ethics opinions, CPRs 121 and 296, have ruled that it is unethical for a lawyer to furnish consent judgments to unrepresented adverse parties for their consideration and execution, there appears to be no basis for such a prohibition when the lawyer is not furnishing a document which appears to represent the position of the adverse party such as an answer, and the lawyer furnishing a confession of judgment or consent judgment does not undertake to advise the adverse party or feign disinterestedness. CPRs 121 and 296 are therefore overruled to the extent they are in conflict with this opinion.

2009 Formal Ethics Opinion 12 rules that a lawyer may prepare an affidavit and confession of judgment for an unrepresented adverse party provided the lawyer explains who he represents and does not give the unrepresented party legal advice; however, the lawyer may not prepare a waiver of exemptions for the adverse party.

2002 Formal Ethics Opinion 6 provides that the lawyer for the plaintiff may not prepare the answer to a complaint for an unrepresented adverse party to file pro se. The basis for this holding is also the prohibition on giving legal advice to a person who is not represented by the lawyer.

Guiding Principles

The survey of the existing opinions demonstrates that some pleadings or filings that solely represent the interests of one party to a civil proceeding may be prepared by a lawyer representing the interests of the opposing party.

However, because of the prohibitions in Rule 4.3, a lawyer may not draft a pleading or filing to be signed solely by an unrepresented opposing party if doing so is tantamount to giving legal advice to that person. A lawyer may draft a pleading or filing to be signed solely by an unrepresented opposing party if the document is necessary to settle the dispute with the lawyer's client and will achieve objectives of both the lawyer's client and the unrepresented opposing party. Pursuant to Rule 4.4(a), which prohibits the use of "means" that have no substantial purpose other than to embarrass, delay, or burden a third person, when presenting a pleading or filing for execution, the lawyer must avoid using tactics that intimidate or harass the unrepresented opposing party.

In applying these guiding principles, a lawyer must avoid the overreaching which is tantamount to providing legal advice to an unrepresented opposing party. The lawyer should consider whether (1) the rights, if any, of the unrepresented opposing party will be waived, lost, or otherwise adversely impacted by the pleading or filing, and the significance of those rights; (2) the pleading or filing solely represents the position of the unrepresented opposing party (e.g., an answer to a complaint); (3) the pleading or filing gives the unrepresented opposing party some benefit (e.g., acceptance of service to avoid personal service by the sheriff at the person's home or work place); (4) the legal consequences of signing the document are not clear from the document itself (e.g., the hidden consequences of signing a waiver of right to file an answer in a divorce proceeding has hidden consequences); (5) the pleading or filing goes beyond what is necessary to achieve the client's primary objectives; or (6) the pleading or filing will require the signature of a judge or other neutral who can independently evaluate the pleading or filing. If a disinterested lawyer would conclude that the unrepresented opposing party should not agree to sign the pleading or filing under any circumstances without advice of counsel, or the lawyer is not able to articulate why it is in the interest of the unrepresented opposing party to rely upon the lawyer's draft of the document, the lawyer cannot properly ask the unrepresented opposing party to sign the document.

Opinion:

Applying the guidelines and considerations above leads to the conclusion that a lawyer may prepare the following pleadings or filings for an unrepresented opposing party: an acceptance of service, a confession of judgment, a settlement agreement, a release of claims, an affidavit that accurately reflects the factual circumstances and does not waive the affiant's rights, and a dismissal with (or without) prejudice pursuant to settlement agreement or release. However, prior to obtaining the signature of the unrepresented opposing party on the pleading or filing, the person must be given the opportunity to review and make corrections to the pleading or filing. It is recommended that the pleading or filing include a written disclosure that indicates the name of the lawyer preparing the document, and specifies that the lawyer represents the other party and has not and cannot provide legal advice to the unrepresented opposing party except the advice to seek representation from independent counsel.

A lawyer should not prepare on behalf of an unrepresented opposing party a waiver of right to file an answer to a complaint, an answer to a complaint, or a waiver of exemptions. A waiver of notice of hearing should only be prepared for the unrepresented opposing party if the lawyer is satisfied that, upon analysis of the considerations indicated above, the lawyer is not asking the unrepresented opposing party to relinquish significant rights without obtaining some benefit.

Neither of the above lists of pleadings or filings is intended to be exhaustive. Before determining whether a pleading or filing may be prepared for an unrepresented opposing party, the lawyer must conclude that she is able to comply with the guiding principles above.

2015 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

April 17, 2015

Preparing Waiver of Right to Notice of Foreclosure for Unrepresented Borrower

Opinion rules that when the original debt is $100,000 or more, a lawyer for a lender may prepare and provide to an unrepresented borrower, owner, or guarantor a waiver of the right to notice of foreclosure and the right to a foreclosure hearing pursuant to N.C.G.S. § 45-21.16(f) if the lawyer explains the lawyer's role and does not give legal advice to any unrepresented person. However, a lawyer may not prepare such a waiver if the waiver is a part of a loan modification package for a mortgage secured by the borrower's primary residence.

Inquiry #1:

N.C. Gen. Stat. §45-21.16(f) provides that in a nonjudicial power of sale foreclosure, any person entitled to notice of the foreclosure (including owners, borrowers, and guarantors) (the "Notice Parties") "may waive after default the right to notice and hearing by written instrument signed and duly acknowledged by such party." The statute provides that in foreclosures where the original debt was less than $100,000, only the clerk may send the waiver form to the Notice Parties and the form can only be sent "after service of the notice of hearing." In foreclosures where the original debt is $100,000 or more, the statute does not specify how the waiver form shall be provided to the Notice Parties or who can draft the waiver form.

It is common practice for lenders dealing with defaulted loans in excess of $100,000 to require Notice Parties to execute a N.C. Gen. Stat. §45-21.16(f) waiver in connection with a forbearance, modification, or reinstatement agreement.

The filing of a foreclosure notice of hearing does not require a Notice Party to file an answer or to attend the foreclosure hearing. See N.C.G.S. §45-21.16(c)(7)(a) (requiring foreclosure notice to inform debtor that "failure to attend the hearing will not affect the debtor's right to pay the indebtedness...or to attend the actual sale, should the debtor elect to do so.") The execution of a N.C. Gen. Stat. §45-21.16(f) waiver "waives" the right to receive notice of the foreclosure hearing and the right to require a foreclosure hearing to be held. The clerk is still required to receive evidence and make the findings required by N.C.G.S. § 45-21.16(d), but can do so based upon affidavits from the lender without holding a formal hearing.

May a lawyer who represents the lender on a debt of $100,000 or more draft a N.C. Gen. Stat. §45-21.16(f) waiver form and provide the waiver form to unrepresented Notice Parties for execution?

Opinion #1:

Yes, provided the lawyer complies with the requirements of N.C. Gen. Stat. §45-21.16 and with Rule 4.3 (Dealing with Unrepresented Persons). However, in the consumer context, when the property subject to foreclosure is the borrower's primary residence, compliance with Rule 4.3 prohibits a lawyer from drafting the waiver form for inclusion in a loan modification package for execution by the unrepresented borrower.

In dealing on behalf of a client with a person who is not represented by counsel, Rule 4.3(a) states that a lawyer shall not give legal advice to the person, other than the advice to secure counsel if the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the interests of such person are or have a reasonable possibility of being in conflict with the interests of the client. In addition, paragraph (b) of the rule prohibits the lawyer from stating or implying that the lawyer is disinterested and requires the lawyer to make reasonable efforts to correct any misunderstanding that the unrepresented person may have in this regard.

The Ethics Committee has previously considered whether a lawyer may prepare documents for execution by an unrepresented person. 2004 FEO 10 rules that the lawyer for the buyer in a residential real estate closing may prepare a deed as an accommodation to the needs of her client, the buyer, provided the lawyer makes the disclosures required by Rule 4.3 and does not give legal advice to the seller other than the advice to obtain legal counsel. Similarly, 2009 FEO 12 holds that a lawyer may prepare an affidavit and confession of judgment for an unrepresented adverse party as long as the lawyer explains who he represents and does not give the unrepresented party legal advice. Accord RPC 165.

However, other opinions have held that a lawyer may not prepare an answer or an acceptance of service and waiver form for an unrepresented opposing party. See CPR 121, CPR 296, RPC 165. 2002 FEO 6 explains the rationale for these prior opinions as follows:

> The committee has consistently held, however, that a lawyer representing the plaintiff may not send a form answer to the defendant that admits the allegations of the divorce complaint nor may the lawyer send the defendant an "acceptance of service and waiver" form waiving the defendant's right to answer the complaint. CPR 121, CPR 125, CPR 296. The basis for these opinions is the prohibition on giving legal advice to a person who is not represented by counsel.

Except as noted below, the waiver form contemplated by the current inquiry is like a deed or a confession of judgment: it is prepared to accommodate the needs of the lawyer's client and usually prepared in conjunction with negotiations between the lender and the borrower relative to avoiding the consequences of a default by execution of a forbearance, modification, or reinstatement agreement. A foreclosure notice of hearing does not require a Notice Party to take any action prior to a foreclosure hearing or to attend the hearing. After execution of a waiver form, the borrower may still pay the indebtedness or attend the foreclosure sale. Therefore, except as noted below, preparing a N.C. Gen. Stat. §45-21.16(f) waiver form for unrepresented Notice Parties is not tantamount to giving legal advice to an unrepresented person and the lender's lawyer may draft the waiver and give it to unrepresented Notice Parties if the lawyer does not undertake to advise the unrepresented Notice Parties concerning the meaning or significance of the waiver form or state or imply that the lawyer is disinterested.

There is an exception to this holding in the consumer context. When the property subject to foreclosure is the borrower's primary residence, compliance with Rule 4.3 prohibits a lawyer from drafting a waiver form for inclusion in a loan modification package for execution by the unrepresented borrower. In this context, preparation of the waiver form is tantamount to giving legal advice to an unrepresented person because the waiver prospectively eliminates a significant right or interest of the unrepresented person—the borrower's right to notice of foreclosure upon default on the new or modified loan—and there is a substantial risk that an unsophisticated, distressed borrower will not understand this. See Proposed 2015 FEO 1.

Inquiry #2:

Does it make a difference if the waiver is executed in conjunction with other lender prepared documents, such as a forbearance agreement, modification agreement, or reinstatement agreement?

Opinion #2:

Subject to the limitation noted in the last paragraph of Opinion #1 on drafting a waiver form for inclusion in a loan modification package for a loan secured by the unrepresented borrower's primary residence, this does not make a difference. Comment [2] to Rule 4.3 clarifies that Rule 4.3 does not prohibit a lawyer from negotiating the terms of a transaction or settling a dispute with an unrepresented person. So long as the lawyer has explained that the lawyer represents an adverse party, the lawyer may inform the unrepresented person of the terms on which the lawyer's client will enter into an agreement or settle a matter and may prepare documents that require the unrepresented person's signature. In dealing with unrepresented Notice Parties, however, the lender's lawyer must fully disclose that the lawyer represents the interests of the lender and will draft the documents consistent with the interests of the lender. The lawyer may not give any legal advice to the Notice Parties except the advice to obtain legal counsel. Rule 4.3.

2015 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

April 17, 2015

Offering Prospective Client a Computer Tablet in Direct Mail Solicitation

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not offer a computer tablet to a prospective client in a direct mail solicitation letter.

Inquiry #1:

Lawyer represents clients in personal injury matters. Lawyer advertises his legal services by way of targeted direct mail solicitation. The solicitation letter includes a flyer that states:

> NEW CLIENTS TO LAW FIRM: NEW COMPUTER TABLET
>
> New clients of law firm wishing to communicate electronically may be issued a computer tablet with an internet-capable web cam that will allow low cost-free video conferences and electronic mail directly with the lawyer.
>
> Disclaimer: Any equipment issued is issued free-of-charge to new clients to better facilitate communication with the law firm during representation.

The flyer does not indicate that the computer tablet is on loan and must be returned to Lawyer at the conclusion of the representation.

After a client hires the firm, Lawyer presents the client with an office equipment agreement. The agreement provides that the tablet must be returned to Lawyer at the end of the representation and, at that time, the client will have the option to purchase the tablet at cost. The client must pay for the tablet if it is not returned timely and in good condition. If the tablet is damaged, the client agrees to repair the tablet, replace the tablet with one of equal value, or purchase the tablet at cost from Lawyer.

May Lawyer offer a computer tablet to a prospective client in a direct mail solicitation letter?

Opinion #1:

No. A lawyer shall not make false or misleading communications about the lawyer or the lawyer's services. Rule 7.1. Neither Lawyer's direct mail solicitation letter nor the flyer makes clear that the tablet is on loan and must be returned at the conclusion of the representation unless the client elects to purchase the tablet from Lawyer. The disclaimer included on the flyer is inadequate under the circumstances and is misleading.

Even with an adequate disclaimer, Lawyer's direct mail solicitation campaign is not permissible. A lawyer may advertise legal services by way of direct mail solicitation letters, but is prohibited from engaging in in-person, live, or telephone solicitation of prospective clients with whom the lawyer has no prior professional relationship. Rule 7.3. Rule 7.3(a) prohibits lawyer-initiated telephone solicitation of a prospective client because of the potential for abuse inherent in live telephone contact by a lawyer with a person known to be in need of legal services. An offer of promotional merchandise, whether on loan or as a gift, in a targeted direct mail solicitation letter is an inducement to a prospective client to call the lawyer's office solely to inquire about the merchandise, thereby giving the lawyer the improper opportunity to solicit the caller in person. 2004 FEO 2 (lawyer may not offer promotional merchandise in a targeted direct mail solicitation letter as an inducement to call the lawyer's office).

Inquiry #2:

Lawyer sends direct mail solicitation letters to prospective clients known to be in need of legal services. Lawyer does not offer merchandise to prospective clients in the solicitation letter. After being hired by a client, may Lawyer offer to clients temporary use of a computer tablet for purposes of communicating with Lawyer or gathering information and/or evidence to be used for the client's matter?

Opinion #2:

Rule 1.8(e) prohibits a lawyer from providing financial assistance to a client in connection with pending or contemplated litigation, except the lawyer may advance court costs and expenses of litigation.

Pursuant to comment [10] to Rule 1.8:

> Lawyers may not subsidize lawsuits or administrative proceedings brought on behalf of their clients, including making or guaranteeing loans to their clients for living expenses, because to do so would encourage clients to pursue lawsuits that might not otherwise be brought and because such assistance gives lawyers too great a financial stake in the litigation. These dangers do not warrant a prohibition on a lawyer lending a client court costs and litigation expenses, including the expenses of medical examination and the costs of obtaining and presenting evidence, because these advances are virtually indistinguishable from contingent fees and help ensure access to the courts. Similarly, an exception allowing lawyers representing indigent clients to pay court costs and litigation expenses regardless of whether these funds will be repaid is warranted. [Emphasis added.]

Lawyer may loan a tablet to a client provided the tablet is necessary for the client to communicate with Lawyer and/or for the collection of evidence; the tablet is not quid pro quo for hiring Lawyer or law firm; and the client understands that the tablet is not a gift, but is on loan and must be returned to

Lawyer or purchased at the end of the representation. Lawyer may not give a tablet to a client solely for use that is unrelated to the representation because to do so would be tantamount to loaning money to the client for living expenses. See 2001 FEO 7 (advancing cost of rental car prohibited if vehicle used only occasionally for client's transportation to medical exams).

2015 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

July 17, 2015

Disclosing Potential Malpractice to a Client

Introduction

Lawyers will, inevitably, make errors, mistakes, and omissions (referred to herein as an "error" or "errors") when representing clients. Such errors may constitute professional malpractice, but are not necessarily professional misconduct. This distinction between professional or legal negligence and professional misconduct is explained in comment [9] to Rule 1.1, Competence:

> An error by a lawyer may constitute professional malpractice under the applicable standard of care and subject the lawyer to civil liability. However, conduct that constitutes a breach of the civil standard of care owed to a client giving rise to liability for professional malpractice does not necessarily constitute a violation of the ethical duty to represent a client competently. A lawyer who makes a good-faith effort to be prepared and to be thorough will not generally be subject to professional discipline, although he or she may be subject to a claim for malpractice. For example, a single error or omission made in good faith, absent aggravating circumstances, such as an error while performing a public records search, is not usually indicative of a violation of the duty to represent a client competently.

Although an error during the representation of a client may not constitute professional misconduct, the actions that the lawyer takes following the realization that she has committed an error should be guided by the requirements of the Rules of Professional Conduct. This opinion explains a lawyer's professional responsibilities when the lawyer has committed what she believes may be legal malpractice.

This opinion does not address requirements under a lawyer's malpractice insurance policy to give the insurer notice or to report a potential claim. Lawyers are encouraged to read their policies. This opinion also does not address settlement of a malpractice claim. Lawyers are reminded that Rule 1.8(h)(2) prohibits settlement of a malpractice claim with an unrepresented client or former client unless the person is advised in writing of the desirability of seeking and given a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of independent legal counsel.

Inquiry #1:

When the lawyer determines that an error that may constitute legal malpractice has occurred, is the lawyer required to disclose the error to the client?

Opinion #1:

Disclosure of an error to a client falls within the duty of communication. Rule 1.4(a)(3) requires a lawyer to "keep the client reasonably informed about the status of the matter," while paragraph (b) of the rule requires a lawyer to "explain a matter to the extent reasonably necessary to permit the client to make informed decisions regarding the representation." Comment [3] to the rule explains that paragraph (a)(3) requires that the lawyer keep the client reasonably informed about "significant developments affecting the timing or the substance of the representation." Comment [7] to Rule 1.4 adds that "[a] lawyer may not withhold information to serve the lawyer's own interest or convenience or the interests or convenience of another person."

In the spectrum of possible errors,[1] material errors that prejudice the client's rights or claims are at one end. These include errors that effectively undermine the achievement of the client's primary objective for the representation, such as failing to file the complaint before the statute of limitations runs. At the other end of the spectrum are minor, harmless errors that do not prejudice the client's rights or interests. These include nonsubstantive typographical errors in a pleading or a contract or missing a deadline that causes nothing more than delay. Between the two ends of the spectrum are a range of errors that may or may not materially prejudice the client's interests.

Whether the lawyer must disclose an error to a client depends upon where the error falls on the spectrum and the circumstances at the time that the error is discovered. The New York State Bar Association, in a formal opinion, described the duty as follows:

> [W]hether an attorney has an obligation to disclose a mistake to a client will depend on the nature of the lawyer's possible error or omission, whether it is possible to correct it in the present proceeding, the extent of the harm resulting from the possible error or omission, and the likelihood that the lawyer's conduct would be deemed unreasonable and therefore give rise to a colorable malpractice claim.

N.Y. State Bar Ass'n Comm. Prof'l Ethics, Op. 734 (2000). Under this analysis, it is clear that material errors that prejudice the client's rights or interests as well as errors that clearly give rise to a malpractice claim must always be reported to the client. Conversely, if the error is easily corrected or negligible and will not materially prejudice the client's rights or interests, the error does not have to be disclosed to the client.

Errors that fall between the two extremes of the spectrum must be analyzed under the duty to keep the client reasonably informed about his legal matter. If the error will result in financial loss to the client, substantial delay in achieving the client's objectives for the representation, or material disadvantage to the client's legal position, the error must be disclosed to the client. Similarly, if disclosure of the error is necessary for the client to make an informed decision about the representation or for the lawyer to advise the client of significant changes in strategy, timing, or direction of the representation, the lawyer may not withhold information about the error. Rule 1.4. When a lawyer does not know whether disclosure is required, the lawyer should err on the side of disclosure or should seek the advice of outside counsel, the State Bar's ethics counsel, or the lawyer's malpractice carrier.[2]

Inquiry #2:

Applying the analysis in Opinion #1, the lawyer has determined that her error must be disclosed to the client. Is the lawyer also required to withdraw from the representation?

Opinion #2:

No, unless the conditions in Rule 1.7, Conflict of Interest: Current Clients, that allow a representation burdened with a conflict to proceed cannot be satisfied.

Rule 1.7(a)(2) states that a lawyer may not represent a client if the representation of a client may be materially limited by a personal interest of the lawyer. When a lawyer realizes that she made an error that may give rise to a malpractice claim against her, the lawyer's personal interest in avoiding liability may materially impair her professional judgment. Specifically, she may take actions that are contrary to the interests of the client to protect herself from liability. This is the essence of a conflict of interest.

Nevertheless, in many instances the lawyer may reasonably believe that she can mitigate or avoid any loss to the client by taking corrective action.[3] For example, an error made in a title search may be readily repaired or a motion in limine may prevent the use of privileged communications that were improperly produced in discovery. It is often in the best interest of both the lawyer and the client for the lawyer to attempt such repair. When the interests of the lawyer and the client are aligned in this way, withdrawal is not required if the conditions for consent in Rule 1.7(b) are satisfied.

Rule 1.7(b) allows a lawyer to proceed with a representation burdened by a conflict if the lawyer reasonably believes that she will be able to provide competent and diligent representation to the client and the client gives informed consent, confirmed in writing. If the lawyer reasonably concludes that she is still able to provide the client with competent and diligent representation—that she can exercise independent professional judgment to advance the interests of the client and not solely her own interests—the lawyer may seek the informed consent of the client to continue the representation.

Of course, when an error is such that the client's objective can no longer be achieved, as when a claim can no longer be filed because the statute of limitations has passed, the lawyer must disclose the error to the client and terminate the representation.

Inquiry #3:

If an error must be disclosed to a client, what must the lawyer tell the client?

Opinion #3:

The lawyer must candidly disclose the material facts surrounding the error, including the nature of the error and its effect on the lawyer's continued representation. If the lawyer believes that she can take steps to remedy the situation or mitigate or avoid a loss, the lawyer should discuss these with the client while informing the client that the client has the right to terminate the representation and seek other counsel. Rule 1.4.

Whether a lawyer must inform the client that the client may have a malpractice action against the lawyer was addressed in Colorado Formal Ethics Opinion 113. The opinion states that

> The lawyer need not advise the client about whether a claim for malpractice exists, and indeed the lawyer's conflicting interest in avoiding liability makes it improper for the lawyer to do so. The lawyer need not, and should not, make an admission of liability. What must be disclosed are the facts that surround the error, and the lawyer should inform the client that it may be advisable to consult with an independent lawyer with respect to the potential impact of the error on the client's rights or claims.

Co. Formal Ethics Op. 113 (November 19, 2005). The Colorado approach appropriately limits the possibility that a lawyer will attempt to give legal advice to a client about a potential malpractice claim against the lawyer. To do so would place the lawyer squarely in a nonconsentable conflict between the client's interest and the lawyer's personal interest. However, the lawyer is required to tell the client the operative facts about the error and to recommend that the client seeking independent legal advice about the consequences of the error.

Under this approach, the lawyer is not required to inform the client of the statute of limitations applicable to legal malpractice actions, nor is she required to give the client information about the lawyer's malpractice insurance carrier or information about how to file a claim with the carrier. Nevertheless, the lawyer should seek the advice of her malpractice insurance carrier prior to disclosing the error to the client, and should discuss with the carrier what information, if any, should be provided to the client about the lawyer's malpractice coverage or how to file a claim.

Inquiry #4:

Is there any information that the lawyer should not provide to the client when disclosing her error to the client?

Opinion #4:

The lawyer should not disclose to the client whether a claim for malpractice exists or provide legal advice about legal malpractice. See Opinion #3.

Inquiry #5:

When is the lawyer required to inform the client of the error?

Opinion #5:

The error should be disclosed to the client as soon as possible after the lawyer determines that disclosure of the error to the client is required. See Rule 1.4(a)(1) (lawyer shall promptly inform the client of any decision requiring consent).

Inquiry #6:

Is filing a motion to undo the error based upon excusable neglect sufficient disclosure to the client if the client is copied with the motion? May the lawyer wait until the court has ruled on the motion to send a copy of the motion and order to the client?

Opinion #6:

As noted above, comment [3] to Rule 1.4 explains that a lawyer must keep the client reasonably informed about "significant developments affecting the timing or the substance of the representation." If the client will lose a significant right or interest if the motion fails, the client is entitled to know about the error in order to determine whether the client is willing to allow the lawyer to attempt to correct the error or would prefer that the motion be handled by another lawyer. The client must be advised of the error prior to filing the motion to allow the client to make an informed decision about the representation. Rule 1.4(b).

Inquiry #7:

When disclosing the error to the client, may the lawyer refer the client to another lawyer for advice?

Opinion #7:

Yes, if the lawyer concludes that she can exercise impartial, independent professional judgment in recommending other counsel to the client. See Opinion #2.

Inquiry #8:

If the client has paid legal fees to the lawyer, is the lawyer required to return some or all of the fees that she received?

Opinion #8:

Rule 1.5(a) prohibits a lawyer from collecting a clearly excessive fee. As stated in 2000 FEO 5, > there is always a possibility that a lawyer will have to refund some or all of any type of advance fee, if the client-lawyer relationship ends before the contemplated services are rendered. At the conclusion of the representation, the lawyer must review the entire representation and determine whether, in light of the circumstances, a refund is necessary to avoid a clearly excessive fee.

Therefore, the lawyer must determine whether, in light of the lawyer's error and its consequences for the client's interests and legal representation, a refund is necessary to avoid a clearly excessive fee. In addition, the lawyer should never charge or collect legal fees for any legal work or expenses necessitated by the lawyer's attempts to mitigate the consequences of the lawyer's error.

Endnotes

1. The "spectrum" concept of legal errors is borrowed from Colorado Formal Ethics Op. 113 (November 19, 2005).
2. Rule 1.6(b)(5) allows a lawyer to disclose confidential client information to secure legal advice about the lawyer's compliance with the Rules of Professional Conduct.
3. Insurance carriers are experienced at repairing malpractice. A lawyer should seek the advice and assistance of her carrier.

2015 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

October 23, 2015

Authority to Discuss Former Client's Appellate Case with Successor Lawyer

Opinion provides that in post-conviction or appellate proceedings, a discharged lawyer may discuss a former client's case and turn over the former client's file to successor counsel if the former client consents or the disclosure is impliedly authorized.

NOTE: As a general rule, lawyers representing a client in the pre-conviction stages of a case have more personal contact and receive confidential information that is not relevant to or shared with post-conviction lawyers. While the Rules of Professional Conduct are the same for each, the application of the relevant rules must be guided by the unique relationship that both the pre-conviction and the post-conviction lawyer have with the client. As a result, this opinion only applies to the situation where this issue arises between a discharged appellate lawyer and the subsequent appellate lawyer.

Inquiry:

Lawyer A is appointed to represent a criminal defendant in an appellate matter. Subsequently, Lawyer A withdraws from the representation of the client and Lawyer B is appointed successor appellate counsel.

Must Lawyer A obtain the former client's consent prior to discussing the client's case with Lawyer B or prior to turning over the former client's file to Lawyer B?

Opinion:

No. Unless the former client specifically instructed Lawyer A not to discuss his case with Lawyer B or not to give his appellate file to Lawyer B, such actions are permissible without the former client's express consent.

CPR 300 (1981), an ethics opinion adopted under that now superseded North Carolina Code of Professional Responsibility (in effect from 1973 to 1985), provides that a lawyer who withdraws from a client's case may not discuss the client's confidences and secrets with the client's successor lawyer unless the client gives express consent. Although the Code has been superseded, the ethics opinions that were issued under the Code still provide guidance on issues of professional conduct except to the extent that a particular opinion is overruled by a subsequent opinion or by a provision of the current North Carolina Rules of Professional Conduct. See NC Rules of Prof'l Conduct, NC State Bar Lawyer's Handbook (editor's note) (2014).

CPR 300 analyzes a lawyer's duty of confidentiality pursuant to the Code's Disciplinary Rule 4-101, Preservation of Confidences and Secrets of a Client. DR

4-101(B)(1) provides that, with certain exceptions, a lawyer may not knowingly reveal "a confidence or secret of his client." The duty to protect client confidences has been modified since the time of the Code and is currently embodied in Rule 1.6 of the Rules of Professional Conduct, Confidentiality of Information.

Rule 1.6(a) provides that a lawyer "shall not reveal information acquired during the professional relationship with a client unless the client gives informed consent, the disclosure is impliedly authorized in order to carry out the representation, or the disclosure is permitted by paragraph (b)." Thus, under the current confidentiality rule, a lawyer may disclose client information if the client consents or the disclosure is impliedly authorized. A disclosure is impliedly authorized if the disclosure is appropriate to carry out the representation and there are no client instructions or special circumstances that limit the lawyer's authority. Rule 1.6 [cmt. 5].

Providing a client's new appellate counsel with information about the client's case, and turning over the client's appellate file to the successor appellate counsel, is generally considered appropriate to protect the client's interests in the appellate representation.

2015 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

October 23, 2015

Lawyer's Professional Responsibility When Third Party Steals Funds from Trust Account

Opinion rules that when funds are stolen from a lawyer's trust account by a third party who is not employed or supervised by the lawyer, and the lawyer was managing the trust account in compliance with the Rules of Professional Conduct, the lawyer is not professionally responsible for replacing the funds stolen from the account.

NOTE: This opinion is limited to a lawyer's professional responsibilities and is not intended to opine on a lawyer's legal liability.

Inquiry #1:

John Doe, a third party unaffiliated with Lawyer, created counterfeit checks that were identical to Lawyer's trust account checks. John Doe made the counterfeit checks, purportedly drawn on Lawyer's trust account, payable to himself and presented the counterfeit checks for payment at Bank. Bank honored some of the counterfeit checks. As a consequence, client funds held by Lawyer in his trust account were utilized for an unauthorized purpose. Lawyer properly supervised all nonlawyer staff participating in the record keeping for the trust account. Lawyer also maintained the trust account records and reconciled the trust account as required by Rule 1.15-3. Lawyer had no knowledge of the fraud and had no opportunity to prevent the theft.

Does Lawyer have a professional responsibility to replace the stolen funds?

Opinion #1:

No.

A lawyer who receives funds that belong to a client assumes the responsibilities of a fiduciary to safeguard those funds and to preserve the identity of the funds by depositing them into a designated trust account. Rule 1.15-2, RPC 191, and 97 FEO 9. The responsibilities of a fiduciary include the duty to ensure that the funds of a particular client are used only to satisfy the obligations of that client. RPC 191 and 97 FEO 9. Rule 1.15-3 requires a lawyer to keep accurate records of the trust account and to reconcile the trust account. A lawyer has an obligation to ensure that any nonlawyer assistant with access to the trust account is aware of the lawyer's professional obligations regarding entrusted funds and is properly supervised. Rule 5.3.

If Lawyer has managed the trust account in substantial compliance with the requirements of the Rules of Professional Conduct (see Rules 1.15-2, 1.15-3, and 5.3) but, nevertheless, is victimized by a third party theft, Lawyer is not required to replace the stolen funds. If, however, Lawyer failed to follow the Rules of Professional Conduct on trust accounting and supervision of staff, and the failure is a proximate cause of theft from the trust account, Lawyer may be professionally obligated to replace the stolen funds. Compare RPC 191 (if a lawyer disburses against provisionally credited funds, the lawyer is responsible for reimbursing the trust account for any losses caused by disbursing before the funds are irrevocably credited).

Under all circumstances, Lawyer must promptly investigate the matter and take steps to prevent further thefts of entrusted funds. Lawyer must seek out every available option to remedy the situation including researching the law to determine if Bank is liable;[1] communicating with Bank to discuss Bank's liability; asking Bank to determine if there is insurance to cover the loss; considering whether it is appropriate to close the trust account and transfer the funds to a new trust account; and working with law enforcement to recover the funds.

Inquiry #2:

Prior to learning of the fraud and theft from the trust account, Lawyer issued several trust account checks to clients and/or third parties for the benefit of a client. Despite the theft, there are sufficient total funds in the trust account to satisfy the outstanding checks. However, because of the theft, funds belonging to other clients will be used if the outstanding checks are cashed.

What is Lawyer's duty to safeguard the remaining funds in the trust account?

Opinion #2:

Lawyer must take reasonable measures to ensure that funds belonging to one client are not used to satisfy obligations to another client. Such reasonable measures include, but are not limited to, requesting that Bank issue stop payments on outstanding trust account checks; providing Bank with a list of outstanding checks and requesting that Bank contact Lawyer before honoring any outstanding checks; and determining if Bank is liable and, if so, demanding the outstanding checks be covered by Bank. If Lawyer determines Bank is not liable or liability is unclear, Lawyer must maintain the status quo and prevent further loss by not issuing new trust account checks. If payment will be stopped on the outstanding checks, Lawyer must contact the payees and alert them to the problem.

Inquiry #3:

Assume the same facts in Inquiry #2 except there are insufficient funds in the trust account to satisfy the outstanding checks. Must Lawyer deposit funds into the trust account to ensure that the outstanding checks are not presented against an account with insufficient funds?

Opinion #3:

No. In addition to the remedial measures listed in Opinion #2, Lawyer should notify the payees if Lawyer knows that the checks will not clear.

Inquiry #4:

Hacker gains illegal access to Lawyer's computer network and electronically transfers the balance of the funds in Lawyer's trust account to a separate account that is controlled by Hacker. Lawyer's trust account now has a zero balance. Lawyer has written several trust account checks to clients and/or third parties for the benefit of clients. Because of the theft, there are insufficient funds in the trust account to satisfy the outstanding checks.

Does Lawyer have a professional responsibility to replace the stolen funds?

Opinion #4:

No, Lawyer is not obligated to replace the stolen funds provided he has taken reasonable care to minimize the risks to client funds by implementing reasonable security measures in compliance with the requirements of Rule 1.15.

Rule 1.15 requires a lawyer to preserve client property, to deposit client funds entrusted to the lawyer in a separate trust account, and to manage that trust account according to strict recordkeeping and procedural requirements. To fulfill the fiduciary obligations in Rule 1.15, a lawyer managing a trust account must use reasonable care to minimize the risks to client funds on deposit in the trust account. 2011 FEO 7.

In 2011 FEO 7 the Ethics Committee opined that a lawyer has affirmative duties to educate himself regularly as to the security risks of online banking; to actively maintain end-user security at the law firm through safety practices such as strong password policies and procedures, the use of encryption and security software, and the hiring of an information technology consultant to advise the lawyer or firm employees; and to insure that all staff members who assist with the management of the trust account receive training on and abide by the security measures adopted by the firm.

If Lawyer has taken reasonable care to minimize the risks to client funds, Lawyer is not ethically obligated to replace the stolen funds. If, however,

Lawyer failed to use reasonable care in following the Rules of Professional Conduct on trust accounting and supervision of staff, and the failure is a proximate cause of theft from the trust account, Lawyer may be professionally obligated to replace the stolen funds.

Inquiry #5:

Lawyer is retained to close a real estate transaction. Prior to the closing, Lawyer obtains information relevant to the closing, including the seller's name and mailing address. Lawyer also receives into his trust account the funds necessary for the closing. Lawyer's normal practice after the closing is to record the deed and disburse the funds. Lawyer then mails a trust account check to the seller in the amount of the seller proceeds.

Hacker gains access to information relating to the real estate transaction by hacking the email of one of the parties (lawyer, realtor, or seller). Hacker then creates a "spoof" email address that is similar to realtor's or seller's email address (only one letter is different). Hacker emails Lawyer with disbursement instructions directing Lawyer to wire funds to the account identified in the email instead of mailing a check to seller at the address included in Lawyer's file as previously instructed.[2] Lawyer follows the instructions in the email without first implementing security measures such as contacting the seller by phone at the phone number included in Lawyer's file to confirm the wiring instructions. After the closing and disbursement, the true seller calls Lawyer and demands his funds. Lawyer goes to Bank to request reversal of the wire. Bank refuses to reverse the wire and will not cooperate or communicate with Lawyer without a subpoena.

While pursuing other legal remedies, does Lawyer have a professional responsibility to replace the stolen funds?

Opinion #5:

Yes. Lawyers must use reasonable care to prevent third parties from gaining access to client funds held in the trust account. As stated in Opinion #4, Lawyer has a duty to implement reasonable security measures. Lawyer did not verify the disbursement change by calling seller at the phone number listed in Lawyer's file or confirming seller's email address. These were reasonable security measures that, if implemented, could have prevented the theft. Lawyer is, therefore, professionally responsible and must replace the funds stolen by Hacker. If it is later determined that Bank is legally responsible, or insurance covers the stolen funds, Lawyer may be reimbursed.

Inquiry #6:

While pursuing the remedies described in Opinion #2, may Lawyer deposit his own funds into the trust account?

Opinion #6:

Yes.

Generally, no funds belonging to a lawyer shall be deposited in a trust account or fiduciary account of the lawyer. Rule 1.15-2(f). The exceptions to the rule permit the lawyer to deposit funds sufficient to open or maintain an account, pay any bank service charges, or pay any tax levied on the account. Id. The exceptions were expanded in 1997 FEO 9 to include the deposit of lawyer funds when a bank would not route credit card chargeback debits to the lawyer's operating account. These exceptions to the prohibition on commingling enable lawyers to fulfill the fiduciary duty to safeguard entrusted funds.

Therefore, notwithstanding the prohibition on commingling, Lawyer may deposit his own funds into the trust account to replace the stolen funds until it is determined whether the Bank is liable for the loss, insurance is available to cover the loss, or the funds are otherwise recovered. If Lawyer decides to deposit his own funds, he must ensure that the trust accounting records accurately reflect the source of the funds, the reason for the deposit, the date of the deposit, and the client name(s) and matter(s) for which the funds were deposited.

Inquiry #7:

With regard to all of the situations described in this opinion, what duties does Lawyer owe to the clients whose funds were stolen?

Opinion #7:

Lawyer must notify the clients of the theft and advise the clients of the consequences for representation; help the clients to identify any source of funds, such as bank liability and insurance, to cover their losses; defer a client's matter (by seeking a continuance, for example) if necessary to protect the client's interest; and explain to third parties or opposing parties as necessary to protect the client's interests. If stop payments are issued against outstanding checks, Lawyer must take the remedial measures outlined in Opinions #1 and #2 to protect the client's interest. Finally, Lawyer must report the theft to the North Carolina State Bar's Trust Accounting Compliance Counsel.

Endnote

1. See e.g. N.C. Gen. Stat. §25-4-406.
2. The inquiry assumes that Lawyer believed that, by wiring the funds to the account designated in the email, he was disbursing the funds to the seller as required by the settlement statement.

This opinion does not address the issues of professional responsibility raised when a lawyer knowingly makes disbursements contrary to a settlement statement.

2015 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

October 23, 2015

Prior Business Relationships Permit In-Person Solicitation

Opinion rules that the business relationships with health care professionals created by a lawyer previously employed as a health care consultant constitute prior professional relationships within the meaning of Rule 7.3(a) thus permitting the lawyer to directly solicit legal employment by in-person, live telephone, or real-time electronic contact with the health care professionals.

Inquiry:

Smith is a lawyer and also holds a graduate degree. Following her admission to the North Carolina bar, Smith worked as a health care consultant for a health care consulting firm. During her years as a consultant, she developed a number of professional relationships with health care professionals. Recently, Smith joined a law firm where she concentrates on health law. She now wishes to contact directly those health care professionals with whom she developed professional relationships when she was a health care consultant. Her purpose in doing so is to inform the health care professionals of her career change and her availability to provide legal services in health care related matters.

Rule 7.3(a) prohibits a lawyer from soliciting professional employment from a potential client for the lawyer's pecuniary gain via "in-person, live telephone, or real-time electronic contact..." Among the exceptions to the rule, a lawyer is not prohibited from soliciting professional employment by direct contact if the person contacted "has a family, close personal, or prior professional relationship with the lawyer" [emphasis added].

Are Smith's prior relationships with health care professionals "prior professional relationships" as that term is used in Rule 7.3(a), thereby allowing her to engage in in-person solicitation of the health care professionals?

Opinion:

Yes.

The purpose of the prohibition on in-person solicitation is to prevent undue influence, intimidation, and over-reaching by the lawyer. Comment [2] to Rule 7.3 provides:

> There is a potential for abuse when a solicitation involves direct in-person, live telephone, or real-time electronic contact by a lawyer with someone known to need legal services....The situation is fraught with the possibility of undue influence, intimidation, and over-reaching.

The rule specifically exempts prior relationships because it is unlikely that a lawyer will engage in abusive practices when the lawyer has a family, close personal, or prior professional relationship with the person she is contacting. See Rule 7.3, cmt [5].

"Professional relationship" is not defined in the Rules of Professional Conduct. However, the Ethics Committee previously opined that a lawyer, who is also a certified public accountant working for an accounting firm, may call or visit a prospective client to solicit legal business if the lawyer established a "prior professional relationship" with the individual as a client of the accounting firm. See 2000 FEO 9. This indicates that the phrase "prior professional relationship" as used in Rule 7.3(a) is not limited to prior client-lawyer relationships, but includes business relationships such as client-accountant relationships. Therefore, the business relationships Smith developed while working as a health care consultant constitute "prior professional relationships" within the meaning of Rule 7.3(a), and Smith may directly contact these individuals to solicit legal employment.

2015 Formal Ethics Opinion 8

July 22, 2016

Representing One Spouse on Domestic and Estate Matters After Representing Both Spouses

Opinion rules that a lawyer who previously represented a husband and wife in several matters may not represent one spouse in a subsequent domestic action against the other spouse without the consent of the other spouse unless, after thoughtful and thorough analysis of a number of factors relevant to the prior representations, the lawyer determines that there is no substantial relationship between the prior representations and the domestic matter.

Inquiry #1:

Lawyer A is a partner in ABC Law Firm. Lawyer A represented Husband and Wife jointly for over 15 years. During this time, Lawyer A prepared wills for Husband and Wife, represented the estate of Wife's mother, represented the couple's son on several traffic citations, represented the couple on the purchase of three parcels of real property, and advised the couple on the filing of a joint bankruptcy petition (which was not filed). Lawyer A has not represented Husband and Wife on any matter in two years.

Husband and Wife are having marital difficulties and have separated. Husband has asked Lawyer A to represent him on all matters related to the dissolution of the marriage.

May Lawyer A represent Husband in the domestic action against Wife?[1]

Opinion #1:

No, Lawyer A has a conflict of interest under Rule 1.9(a) and may not represent Husband in the domestic action unless Wife gives informed consent.

In RPC 32 (1989), the Ethics Committee considered an inquiry essentially the same as the current inquiry and ruled that the lawyer had a conflict of interest in representing the husband against the wife in alimony and equitable distribution proceedings. The opinion holds that it is a conflict because of the nature of the prior representations and the information received by the lawyer:

> [t]hese [prior representations] all require or involve communication concerning property, income, and matters relevant to the spouses' financial circumstances so that Lawyer A will necessarily have received confidential information relevant to the pending proceedings.

RPC 32.

The Ethics Committee affirms the holding in RPC 32; however, the opinion provides little analysis of why representation of a husband and wife may disqualify a lawyer from the subsequent representation of one spouse in the legal actions attendant to a domestic dissolution. Because this situation occurs frequently—especially in small communities where there are a limited number of lawyers—the committee concluded that more explicit guidance should be provided.

Rule 1.9(a) states that a lawyer who has formerly represented a client in a matter is prohibited from representing another person in the same or a substantially related matter in which that person's interests are materially adverse to the interests of the former client unless the former client gives informed consent. Obviously, Husband's and Wife's interests in the domestic action are materially adverse. However, whether the domestic action is the same or substantially related to the prior representations of Husband and Wife by Lawyer A is more difficult to determine.

Comment [3] to Rule 1.9 states that matters are substantially related "if they involve the same transaction or legal dispute or if there otherwise is a substantial risk that information as would normally have been obtained in the prior representation would materially advance the client's position in the subsequent matter." As further noted in comment [3],

> [a] former client is not required to reveal the information learned by the lawyer to establish a substantial risk that the lawyer has information to use in the subsequent matter. A conclusion about the possession of such information may be based on the nature of the services the lawyer provided the former client and information that would in ordinary practice be learned by a lawyer providing such services.

A "domestic dissolution" or "domestic action" is essentially a winding-up and comprehensive reorganization of the economic affairs of a husband and a wife. The legal representation of either spouse necessitates an examination of the financial affairs of both spouses. Confidential information from a prior representation relative to the financial interests of the other spouse may materially advance a client's position in the domestic dissolution.

To determine whether there is a disqualifying "substantial relationship" conflict when a lawyer who previously represented spouses proposes to represent one spouse in a domestic action, the lawyer must exercise discretion in the thoughtful and thorough analysis of the following: (1) the nature of prior representations, including an examination of whether any representation involved sensitive family issues or serious financial matters (e.g., representation on a contemplated bankruptcy); (2) the number and frequency of the prior representations; (3) the passage of time since the last representation;[2] and (4) the substance of the confidential information received by the lawyer during any of the representations.

In addition to the protection of confidences, loyalty is an essential element of a lawyer's relationship to a client. See Rule 1.7, Cmt. [1]. There are few situations in which a former client will feel more acutely that this loyalty has been compromised than when a marriage is dissolving and a lawyer who was considered the "family lawyer" takes the side of one spouse. For this reason, the lawyer must consider the totality of the circumstances and has the burden of demonstrating that prior representations of the husband and wife were not substantially related to the domestic dissolution. When it is unclear whether there is a substantial relationship between the prior representations and the current one, the lawyer must err on the side of declining to represent one spouse unless the other spouse gives informed consent.

In light of the number of prior representations over a number of years, the serious and sensitive financial interests and personal issues addressed in the prior representations, the limited passage of time since the last representation, and the relevant confidential information received during the prior representations of Husband and Wife, there is a substantial relationship between the prior representations and current representation of Husband in the domestic action. Therefore, the proposed representation of Husband violates Rule 1.9(a). Accordingly, unless Wife gives her informed consent, Lawyer A has a conflict of interest and may not undertake representation of Husband.

Inquiry #2:

May another lawyer in ABC Law Firm represent Husband in the domestic matter?

Opinion #2:

No, if Lawyer A has a conflict of interest, that conflict is imputed to all of the other lawyers in the firm. Rule 1.10(a). Another lawyer in the firm may represent Husband only with the informed consent of Wife.

Inquiry #3:

Lawyer A also previously represented Husband and Wife jointly on the preparation of reciprocal wills. May Lawyer A, or another lawyer in his firm, prepare a new will/estate plan for Husband?

Opinion #3:

Yes, if there is a separation agreement between Husband and Wife that authorizes each spouse to prepare a new estate plan, the wife gives informed consent confirmed in writing, or an order of divorce has been entered. Cf. RPC 229 (1996)(lawyer who jointly represented husband and wife on estate plan may not prepare codicil to the will of one spouse without knowledge of the other if each spouse agreed not to change estate plan without informing other spouse).

As noted in Opinion #1, Rule 1.9(a) prohibits a lawyer who has represented a client in a matter from representing another client in the same or a substantially related matter in which the new client's interests are materially adverse to those of the former client unless the former client consents. Lawyer A's prior representation of Husband and Wife on the preparation of reciprocal wills constitutes the same matter as the preparation of a new will for Husband. However, once the couple has executed an agreement to waive their claims against each other's estates or they are divorced, the element of material adversity required for disqualification under Rule 1.9 is no longer present.

Endnotes

1. This opinion applies to all domestic partner relationships.
2. See Rule 1.9, Comment [3]: "[i]nformation acquired in a prior representation may have been rendered obsolete by the passage of time, a circumstance that may be relevant in determining whether two representations are substantially related."

2015 Formal Ethics Opinion 9

July 22, 2016

Holding Out Non-Equity Firm Lawyers as "Partners"

Opinion rules that a lawyer who does not own equity in a law firm may be held out to the public by the designation "partner," "income partner," or "non-equity partner," provided the lawyer was officially promoted based upon legitimate criteria and the lawyer complies with the professional responsibilities arising from the designation.

Inquiry:

ABC Law Firm is a North Carolina professional corporation. Three lawyers, A, B, and C, are shareholders in the firm and own all of the equity of the firm. In the firm's communications, Lawyers A, B, and C are held out as "partners" at the firm, and they are referred to internally as "equity partners."

Lawyers E and F also work for the firm, but they do not own any interest in the firm and are not shareholders. However, Lawyers A, B, and C consider Lawyers E and F to be "partners in every sense of the word except actual ownership." Lawyers E and F have the authority to bind the firm and to sign opinion letters on behalf of the firm, but they do not vote on matters of corporate governance. Within the firm, Lawyers E and F are referred to as "income partners."

The firm would like to hold Lawyers E and F out to the public as "partners" or "income partners." May the firm do so?

Opinion:

Yes, provided that any lawyer who is held out by the firm as a "partner," "income partner," or "non-equity partner" has been officially promoted by the law firm's management or pursuant to the law firm's governing documents and such promotion is based upon legitimate criteria.

Black's Law Dictionary defines "partner" as "[o]ne of two or more persons who jointly own and carry on a business for profit." Black's Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014). However, within the legal profession, the designation is often used without regard to the legal definition. For example, shareholders in a professional corporation for the practice of law are frequently referred to as "partners." Like lawyers themselves, laymen generally equate the designation with the achievement by a lawyer of a certain level of experience, status, or authority within a law firm.

Nevertheless, referring to a lawyer as a "partner" in external communications cannot be a sham. Rule 7.1(a)(1) states that a communication is false or misleading if it "contains a material misrepresentation of fact or law, or omits a fact necessary to make the statement considered as a whole not materially misleading." To avoid misrepresentation, a law firm may designate a lawyer as a partner, regardless of whether the lawyer satisfies the legal definition of that term, if the lawyer was promoted to the position by formal action or vote of firm management or pursuant to the firm's governing documents. Further, to prevent the public from being misled as to the lawyer's achievements, the promotion must be based upon criteria that indicates that the lawyer is worthy of the promotion. The Ethics Committee acknowledges that law firms have different standards or criteria for promoting a lawyer to equity or non-equity partner, and the committee declines to dictate what those criteria must be. However, the following list provides examples of legitimate criteria for such a promotion:

• Experience: Engaged in the practice of law for a substantial period of time.

• Integrity: Adherence to principles of honesty and high professional ethics.

• Industry: Willingness to work hard, beyond normal hours where clients' needs and professional development so require, evidencing a drive to achieve.

• Intelligence: Ability to analyze law and facts; imagination and creativity.

• Communication: Ability to express thoughts clearly, both orally and in writing.

• Legal knowledge: Skill in general and specialized areas of law.

• Motivation: Willingness to accept responsibility for client's problems, to perform work assigned punctually.

• Judgment: Ability to make logical, practical decisions.

• Efficiency: Ability to do high quality work in a reasonable amount of time.

• Involvement: Participation in professional, civic, and other outside activities.

Any firm lawyer who is identified as a "partner" shall be held to the professional responsibilities in the Rules of Professional Conduct that may arise from that designation. See, e.g., Rule 5.1.

2016 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

July 22, 2016

Duty of Defense Counsel Appointed after Defendant Files Pro Se Motion for Appropriate Relief

Opinion rules that, when advancing claims on behalf of a criminal defendant who filed a pro se Motion for Appropriate Relief, subsequently appointed defense counsel must correct erroneous claims and statements of law or facts set out in the previous pro se filing.

Inquiry:

A motion for appropriate relief (MAR) is a procedure whereby defendants may challenge a conviction or sentencing. A MAR seeks relief from an error committed at the trial level and may be made before or after the entry of judgment. See N.C. Gen. Stat. §15A-1411. Indigent defendants filing pro se MARs may have legal counsel appointed. See N.C. Gen. Stat. §7A-451(a) (3). Pursuant to the statute and upon request, the court will appoint defense counsel to represent the defendant on the MAR. Defense counsel is generally allowed 120 days to investigate the defendant's case and file either an amended MAR or a written notice of intent not to file an amended MAR. The district attorney and his or her assistants are responsible for filing a response on behalf of the state.

In support of the defendant's legal arguments and request for relief, many of the MARs filed by pro se defendants cite case law that has been overruled by an appellate court and is, therefore, no longer binding authority.

If in defense counsel's informed and reasonable legal opinion the MAR is frivolous, is defense counsel professionally obligated to file an amended MAR or provide written notice to the tribunal that the legal authority cited in the pro se MAR is no longer good law?

Opinion:

No.

This is a difficult position for defense counsel who has an obligation to protect defendant's constitutional rights and to seek relief from the court, but must also adhere to her duties to the court.

As an advocate for the defendant, defense counsel is duty-bound to abide by the defendant's decisions concerning the objectives of the representation, and as required by Rule 1.4, to consult with the client as to the means by which they are to be pursued. Rule 1.2. Defense counsel must pursue defendant's objectives unless doing so would violate the law, a court order, or the Rules of Professional Conduct.

Defense counsel must provide competent and diligent representation to the defendant. Competent and diligent representation requires defense counsel to familiarize herself with the facts in defendant's underlying criminal matter; research the relevant law, including the statutes and case law cited in the defendant's pro se MAR; and determine whether a reasonable interpretation of the law cited in the MAR supports the defendant's claims for relief. See Rule 1.1 and Rule 1.3. Defense counsel must also determine whether there is a good faith basis in law and fact, that is not frivolous, to proceed. See Rule 3.1.

The comment to Rule 3.1 provides,

> [w]hat is required of lawyers, however, is that they inform themselves about the facts of their clients' cases and the applicable law and determine that they can make good faith arguments in support of their clients' positions. Such action is not frivolous even though the lawyer believes that the client's position ultimately will not prevail. The action is frivolous, however, if the lawyer is unable either to make a good faith argument on the merits of the action taken or to support the action taken by a good faith argument for an extension, modification, or reversal of existing law.

Rule 3.1, cmt 2.

Ordinarily, defense counsel is prohibited from defending a claim she knows is frivolous. See Rule 3.1. However, as stated in Rule 3.1, "[a] lawyer for the defendant in a criminal proceeding, or the respondent in a proceeding that could result in incarceration, may nevertheless so defend the proceeding, as to require that every element of the case be established."

The Ethics Committee has previously opined that a lawyer may not proceed if the lawyer determines that the client's civil claims are frivolous. In 2006 FEO 9 the Ethics Committee concluded that if after filing a civil complaint the lawyer concludes that pursuit of the lawsuit is frivolous, but the client insists on continuing the litigation, the lawyer must move to withdraw from the representation. But see 2008 FEO 17 (Ethics Committee found that a lawyer may sign and file a notice of appeal although the lawyer did not believe that the appeal had merit because the notice of appeal preserves a client's options and does not assert a particular legal argument).

In addition to following the requirements of Rule 3.1, defense counsel must follow Rule 3.3, Candor Toward the Tribunal. The rule provides, in pertinent part, that,

> [a] lawyer shall not knowingly fail to disclose to the tribunal legal authority in the controlling jurisdiction known to the lawyer to be directly adverse to the position of the client and not disclosed by opposing counsel...

Rule 3.3(a) (2).

Legal argument based on a knowingly false representation of law constitutes dishonesty toward the tribunal. The underlying concept is that legal argument is a discussion seeking to determine the legal premises properly applicable to the case. Rule 3.3, cmt [4].

Under the present circumstances, the MAR was filed pro se by defendant. Defense counsel did not affirmatively make representations to the court that defense counsel knew to be false, inaccurate, or frivolous. Defense counsel, by virtue of being appointed, is not professionally obligated to assume defendant's position in the pro se MAR or any other pro se filing. If defense counsel elects to advance any potential MAR claims on behalf of defendant, counsel must observe the duties under Rule 3.1 and Rule 3.3 regarding any such claim and statement of law or fact upon which counsel will rely to advance the claim including any statement of law or fact in a previous pro se filing. However, if defense counsel is allowed to withdraw from the representation before advancing any of defendant's potential MAR claims, counsel is not professionally obligated to correct any previous pro se filing.

If after reviewing the pro se MAR defense counsel reaches an informed and reasonable legal opinion that there is no good faith basis in fact or law for the MAR and that the MAR is frivolous, defense counsel must advise defendant of the same. Defense counsel must further advise defendant that she is prohibited from affirmatively making an argument (oral or written) to the court that she believes is frivolous. If defendant insists that defense counsel make frivolous arguments to the court, defense counsel must seek the court's permission to withdraw. See Rule 1.16(a).

2016 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

January 27, 2017

Negotiating Private Employment with Opposing Counsel

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not negotiate for employment with another firm if the firm represents a party adverse to the lawyer's client unless both clients give informed consent.

Note: This opinion is limited to the explanation of the professional responsibilities of a lawyer moving from one place of private employment to another. Rule 1.11(d)(2)(B) governs the conduct of a government lawyer seeking private employment.

Inquiry:

May a lawyer negotiate for employment with a law firm that represents a party on the opposite side of a matter in which the lawyer is also representing a party?

Opinion:

Yes, with client consent.

A lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation of a client may be materially limited by a personal interest of the lawyer unless the lawyer reasonably believes that he can provide competent and diligent representation to the affected client and the client gives informed consent, confirmed in writing. Rule 1.7(b)(2). As observed in Rule 1.7, cmt. [10], when a lawyer has discussions concerning possible employment with an opponent of the lawyer's client, or with a law firm representing the opponent, such discussions could materially limit the lawyer's representation of the client.

On the same issue, ABA Formal Ethics Op. 96-400 (1996) advises that there are two overriding factors affecting the "likelihood that a conflict will eventuate" and "materially interfere with the lawyer's independent professional judgment in considering alternatives or foreclosing courses of action": the nature of the lawyer's role in the representation of the client; and the extent to which the lawyer's interest in the firm is concrete, and has been communicated and reciprocated. The ABA opinion states:

> [t]he likelihood that a lawyer's job search will adversely affect his "judgment in considering alternatives or foreclosing courses of action" is far greater when the lawyer has an active and material role in representing a client. Thus, if the posture of the case is such that there is no call on the lawyer's judgment in representing a client during the period of his job search, it is not likely that his search and negotiations will adversely affect his judgment. Furthermore, if a lawyer's interest in another firm, or its interest in him, is not reciprocated, it seems unlikely, in most cases, that such unreciprocated interest will have a material effect on a lawyer's judgment in a matter between them.

While the exact point at which a lawyer's own interest may materially limit his representation of a client may vary, the committee believes that clients, lawyers, and their firms are all best served by a rule that requires consultation and consent at the earliest point that a client's interests could be prejudiced.

The ABA opinion concludes that a lawyer who is interested in negotiating employment with a firm representing a client's adversary must obtain the client's consent before engaging in substantive discussions[1] with the firm or the lawyer must withdraw from the representation.

The Restatement (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyers advises that once the discussion of employment has become concrete and the interest is mutual, the lawyer must promptly inform the client; without effective client consent, the lawyer must terminate all discussions concerning the employment, or withdraw from representing the client. Restatement (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyers: A Lawyer's Personal Interest Affecting the Representation of a Client, §125, cmt. d (2000). See also Kentucky Ethics Op. E-399 (1998) (lawyer may not negotiate for employment with another firm where firms represent adverse parties and lawyer is involved in the client's matter or has actual knowledge of protected client information, unless the client consents to negotiation).

We agree: a job-seeking lawyer who is representing a client, or has confidential information2 about the client's matter, may not engage in substantive negotiations for employment with the opposing law firm without the client's informed consent.

To obtain the client's informed consent, the job-seeking lawyer must explain to the client the current posture of the case, including what, if any, additional legal work is required, and whether another firm lawyer is available to take over the representation should the lawyer seek to withdraw. If the client declines to consent, the job-seeking lawyer must either cease the employment negotiations until the client's matter is resolved or withdraw from the representation but only if the withdrawal can be accomplished without material adverse effect on the interests of the client. Rule 1.16(b)(1). Because personal conflicts of interests are not imputed to other lawyers in the firm, another lawyer in the firm may continue to represent the client. Rule 1.10(a).

Similarly, the hiring law firm must not engage in substantive employment negotiations with opposing counsel unless its own client consents. If the client does not consent, the firm must cease the employment negotiations or withdraw from the representation. The firm may only withdraw if the withdrawal can be accomplished without material adverse effect on the interests of the client. Rule 1.16(b) (1).

Endnote

1. A substantive discussion entails a communication between the job-seeking lawyer and the hiring law firm about the job-seeking lawyer's skills, experience, and the ability to bring clients to the firm; and the terms of association. ABA Formal Ethics Op. 96-400 (1996). Thus there is a two-prong test for "substantive discussions." There must be (1) a discussion/negotiation that is (2) substantive. Sending a resume blind to a potential employer is not a "discussion." Speaking generally with a colleague at a social event about employment opportunities is not "substantive."

2016 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

January 27, 2017

Disclosing Confidential Information to Execute on a Judgment for Unpaid Legal Fees

Opinion rules that lawyer may not disclose financial information obtained during the representation of a former client to assist the sheriff with the execution on a judgment for unpaid legal fees.

Inquiry:

A lawyer with Firm represents Client in a domestic matter. Client fails to pay Firm for legal services and Firm withdraws from representation. Firm provides Client written notice of the North Carolina State Bar's Fee Dispute program. Client waives the right to participate in the program. Firm files a lawsuit against Client to recover the unpaid legal fees and obtains a default judgment against Client. Firm now wants to execute on its judgment against Client.

During the course of Firm's representation of Client, Firm learned financial information about Client, including the location of Client's bank accounts and the account numbers. Firm does not know if that information is still accurate. Firm would like to provide this information to the sheriff to aid the sheriff in executing on a writ of execution.

May Firm provide the sheriff with information about Client's bank accounts to execute on Firm's judgment for unpaid fees against Client?

Opinion:

No. Disclosing Client's financial information to the sheriff would violate Rule 1.6(a) of the Rules of Professional Conduct.

Rule 1.6(a) provides that a lawyer "shall not reveal information acquired during the professional relationship with a client unless the client gives informed consent, the disclosure is impliedly authorized in order to carry out the representation or the disclosure is permitted by paragraph (b)." None of the exceptions set out in Rule 1.6(b) applies to the instant scenario.

It is true that Rule 1.6(b)(6) allows a lawyer to disclose information to "establish a claim or defense on behalf of the lawyer in a controversy between the lawyer and the client; to establish a defense to a criminal charge or civil claim against the lawyer based upon conduct in which the client was involved; or to respond to allegations in any proceeding concerning the lawyer's representation of the client." Comment [12] to Rule 1.6 specifically addresses actions to collect legal fees and provides that "[a] lawyer entitled to a fee is permitted by paragraph (b)(6) to prove the services rendered in an action to collect it."

The instant scenario does not fall within the Rule 1.6(b)(6) exception because the action to collect the unpaid legal fees has concluded. Firm has proven the legal services rendered and has obtained a default judgment against Client. The purpose of the exception to the duty of confidentiality having been fulfilled, Firm may not now use Client's confidential information to collect on the judgment. Firm may utilize post-judgment procedures to obtain information about Client's assets without breaching the duty of confidentially set out in Rule 1.6.

2017 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

April 21, 2017

Text Message Advertising

Opinion rules that lawyers may advertise through a text message service that allows the user to initiate live telephone communication.

Background:

ABC Texting is a Short Message Service (SMS) that provides a free subscriber-based text messaging service. Subscribers go to the ABC Texting website and register by providing a cell phone number and zip code. No other information is provided. Once registered, subscribers receive text messages from ABC Texting for various products and services, including, but not limited to, messages from lawyers offering legal services in the subscriber's specific zip code. Subscribers can unsubscribe at any time. ABC Texting earns revenue by selling text message advertising to businesses and professional service providers that wish to advertise to subscribers in a specified zip code.

Inquiry #1:

Lawyer represents clients in workers' compensation matters and would like to purchase advertising with ABC Texting. Lawyer's advertisements would be sent via text message to ABC Texting subscribers. The text message advertisement will state, "Injured at work? We can help." The text message will also include a link to Lawyer's website. The subscriber will have the option to click on the link or delete the text message. If the subscriber chooses to click on the link, he will be directed to Lawyer's website. The website provides information about Lawyer's firm, including areas of practice, location, contact information, and Lawyer's profile.

May Lawyer advertise through this text message service?

Opinion #1:

Yes, provided the text message advertising complies with Rules 7.1, 7.2, and 7.3 and all applicable federal and state laws, rules, and regulations.

Rule 7.1 requires all communications about a lawyer and the lawyer's services to be truthful and not misleading. Rule 7.2(a) permits a lawyer to advertise services through written, recorded, or electronic communications subject to the requirements of Rule 7.1 and Rule 7.3. Rule 7.2(b) permits a lawyer to pay the reasonable costs of advertisement or communications permitted by the rule. Rule 7.2(c) requires that any communication about the lawyer or the lawyer's services include the name and office address of at least one lawyer or law firm responsible for the advertisement. Rule 7.3 limits direct contact with potential clients for the purpose of soliciting business.

Advertising through the ABC Texting service is an electronic communication about Lawyer's services. However, it is not a solicitation that requires the extra precautionary measures set out in Rule 7.3(c) governing targeted communications.[1] Comment [1] to Rule 7.3 provides,

A solicitation is a communication initiated by the lawyer that is directed to a specific person and that offers to provide, or can reasonably be understood as offering to provide, legal services. In contrast, a lawyer's communication typically does not constitute a solicitation if it is directed to the general public, such as through a billboard, an Internet banner advertisement, a website, or a television commercial, or if it is in response to a request for information or is automatically generated in response to Internet searches.

Text message advertising as described herein is akin to billboard or banner advertisement directed to the general public. Therefore, Lawyer may advertise through ABC Texting. However, before Lawyer can allow ABC Texting to send his advertisement to subscribers, the advertisement must be revised to comply with Rule 7.2(c). The advertisement must include Lawyer's name (or law firm name) and office address, or a website address wherein the lawyer's office address can be found.

Inquiry #2:

If the answer to Inquiry # 1 is yes, may Lawyer use text message advertising if the subscriber has the option to reply to the text message as follows:

ABC Texting: Have you or someone you know been injured at work? If so, type YES.
Subscriber: YES
ABC Texting: Lawyer can help. May we contact you at this number? If so, type YES.
Subscriber: YES
ABC Texting: Thank you. A representative will contact you soon.

If the subscriber replies YES to both questions, ABC Texting provides the subscriber's cell phone number to Lawyer. Lawyer will then contact subscriber directly.

Opinion #2:

Yes. The communication as described above is not a prohibited live telephone or real time electronic contact.

Rule 7.3(a) provides that, "[a] lawyer shall not by in-person, live telephone, or real-time electronic contact solicit professional employment from a potential client when a significant motive of the lawyer's doing so is the lawyer's pecuniary gain." Comment [2] explains the prohibition as follows:

There is a potential for abuse when a solicitation involves direct in-person, live telephone, or real-time electronic contact by a lawyer with someone known to need legal services. These forms of contact subject a person to the private importuning of the trained advocate in a direct interpersonal encounter. The person, who may already feel overwhelmed by the circumstances giving rise to the need for legal services, may find it difficult fully to evaluate all available alternatives with reasoned judgment and appropriate self-interest in the face of the lawyer's presence and insistence upon being retained immediately. The situation is fraught with the possibility of undue influence, intimidation, and over-reaching.

In the context of autodialed recorded telephone advertising, the Ethics Committee opined in 2006 FEO 17 that,

[A]lthough it appears that recorded telephone advertising messages are permitted by the Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 7.3(a) and the comment to the rule do not contemplate that a recorded message will lead to an interpersonal encounter with a lawyer (or the lawyer's agent) at the push of a button on the telephone key pad. To avoid the risks of undue influence, intimidation, and over-reaching, a potential client must be given an opportunity to contemplate the information about legal services received in a recorded telephone solicitation. This cannot occur if a brief, unexpected, and unsolicited telephone call leads to an in-person encounter with a lawyer, even if the recipient of the phone call must choose to push a number to be connected with the lawyer.

However, in 2006 FEO 17, the legal advertisement at issue was an unsolicited communication about a lawyer's services and required an immediate response from the potential client.

2011 FEO 8 addresses utilizing live chat support service on law firm websites. The opinion concludes that lawyers may use a live chat support service on the lawyer's website even though a live chat communication constitutes a real-time electronic contact. In the opinion, the website visitor made the initial contact with the firm. Similar to the ABC Texting service, the website visitor described in 2011 FEO 8 chose to visit the law firm's website and has the ability to ignore the live chat button or to indicate with a click that he or she wishes to participate in a live chat session.

In the instant scenario, the subscriber voluntarily registered with ABC Texting expecting to receive various advertisements from various service providers, including lawyers. In addition, the subscriber is given the opportunity to accept or decline Lawyer's offer to contact the subscriber. "It is important to note that the prohibition in Rule 7.3(a) applies only to lawyer-initiated contact. Rule 7.3 does not prohibit real-time electronic contact that is initiated by a potential client." 2001 FEO 8. The potential for abuse that Rule 7.3 is intended to guard against is not present. Therefore, because the subscriber consents to a phone call, Lawyer may call subscriber and offer legal services.

Inquiry #3:

Does the answer to Inquiry #2 change if the second text message from ABC Texting includes Lawyer's phone number and an invitation to call Lawyer?

Opinion #3:

No.

Endnote

1. The assumption in this inquiry is that this is not a targeted communication to someone known to be in need of legal services in a particular matter. Such communications must comply with Rule 7.3(c).

2017 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

October 27, 2017

Maintaining Fiduciary Account in Accordance with Rule 1.15

Opinion rules that a lawyer representing an estate must maintain the checking account for the estate in accordance with Rule 1.15 consistent with the extent to which the lawyer has control over the account.

Background:

On June 9, 2016, the North Carolina Supreme Court approved amendments to Rule 1.15, Safekeeping Property, and its subparts (frequently referred to as the "trust accounting rules"). The following opinion concerns a lawyer's obligations with respect to a fiduciary account, such as an estate account. Inquiries are answered based upon the rule as amended.

Inquiry #1:

A's will names Lawyer as executor. After A dies, Lawyer opens a client file for the estate in his law office and begins serving as the personal representative for the estate. Lawyer intends to seek compensation for his services. Lawyer opens a checking account for the estate, makes himself the signatory on the account, and manages the checking account throughout the administration of the estate. What are Lawyer's management obligations for the account under Rule 1.15?

Opinion #1:

The checking account must be established as a lawyer's fiduciary account and managed in accordance with the provisions of Rule 1.15 and its subparts.

As the personal representative for the estate, Lawyer will serve in the role of a fiduciary and provide professional fiduciary services. The phrase "professional fiduciary services" is defined and explained in Rule 1.15-1(l) and cmt. [6] as service by a lawyer in any one of the various fiduciary roles undertaken by a lawyer that is not, of itself, the practice of law, but is frequently undertaken in conjunction with the practice of law. This includes service as a trustee, guardian, personal representative of an estate, attorney-in-fact, and escrow agent, as well as service in other fiduciary roles "customary to the practice of law." Rule 1.15, cmt. [6].

The funds Lawyer receives for the benefit of the estate are fiduciary funds and must be deposited in a fiduciary account. Fiduciary funds, another term defined in Rule 1.15-1, denotes funds belonging to someone other than the lawyer that are received by or placed under the control of the lawyer in connection with the performance of professional fiduciary services. Rule 1.15-1(g). A "fiduciary account," also defined in Rule 1.15, is "an account, designated as such, maintained by a lawyer solely for the deposit of fiduciary funds or other entrusted property of a particular person or entity." Rule 1.15-1(f).

Any property belonging to the estate received by or placed under the control of the lawyer in connection with the lawyer's furnishing of legal services or professional fiduciary services must be handled and maintained in accordance with all of the applicable provisions of Rule 1.15, including but not limited to:

- Rule 1.15-2: General Rules
- Rule 1.15-3(a): Check Format
- Rule 1.15-3(b) or (c)(as appropriate): Minimum Records
- Rule 1.15-3(f): Accountings for Fiduciary Property
- Rule 1.15-3(g): Minimum Record Keeping Period
- Rule 1.15-3(i): Reviews

See Rule 1.15, cmts. [2], and [6]-[9].

These duties include promptly depositing all fiduciary funds received by or placed under the control of the lawyer in a fiduciary account. Rule 1.15-2(c). They also include (1) review of the monthly bank statements and canceled checks for the account each month (the "monthly review"); (2) for each quarter, review of the statement of costs and receipts, client ledger, and cancelled checks of a random sample of representative transactions completed during the quarter (the "quarterly review"); (3) resolution within ten days of any discrepancies found during the monthly or quarterly reviews; and (4) preparation of a signed and dated report on each monthly and quarterly review. Rule 1.15-3(i). This list is not exhaustive and Lawyer is obligated to review Rules 1.15-2 and 1.15-3 to ensure compliance.

Inquiry #2:

Lawyer represents Estate of B and the personal representative of Estate of B in her official capacity. Lawyer opens a checking account for the estate and designates the personal representative as the signatory on the account. The personal representative will receive the bank statements. Lawyer, however, intends to retain possession of the checkbook, preparing checks for the personal representative's signature as needed and depositing estate funds into the account when obtained. What are Lawyer's obligations for the account under Rule 1.15?

Opinion #2:

The requirements of Rule 1.15-2 and 1.15-3 apply only to the extent that the lawyer has control over the estate account. In the instant inquiry, Lawyer has possession of the checkbook, but does not have signatory authority.

Therefore, Lawyer is not obligated to follow the requirements of Rule 1.15 and its subparts that apply to the maintenance and disbursement of funds by one having signatory authority over the account, or with the review and reconciliation requirements of Rule 1.15-3. Lawyer, however, is obligated to follow the requirements of Rule 1.15 as applicable to items over which Lawyer has possession or control, such as properly safeguarding checks received for the estate, properly safeguarding the checkbook for the estate account, and not using any debit card received for the estate account to withdraw funds from the estate account.

For example, if Lawyer receives a check or other entrusted property for the benefit of the estate, Lawyer must comply with the provisions of Rule 1.15 governing the handling of entrusted funds, including Rule 1.15-2(a), which sets forth the duty to identify, hold, and maintain entrusted property separate from the property of the lawyer and to deposit, disburse, and distribute only in accordance with Rule 1.15. This would include labeling a check or funds as property of the estate, and placing the check or funds in a suitable place of safekeeping until deposited in the estate account. Notice must be promptly given to the personal representative if the personal representative is responsible for depositing funds to the account.

Lawyer represents the estate and the personal representative in her official capacity. RPC 137. Therefore, Lawyer has a duty to provide competent and diligent representation. Rule 1.1 and Rule 1.3. Competent and diligent representation requires Lawyer to advise the personal representative of her fiduciary responsibilities relative to the safekeeping of the funds of the estate and her duty to administer the estate in compliance with the law. See generally 2002 FEO 3 (lawyer for estate may seek removal of personal representative if the personal representative's breach of fiduciary duties constitutes grounds for removal under the law). To ensure that the estate account is properly managed, checks are not written against insufficient funds, and estate funds are protected from theft, competent and diligent representation dictates that Lawyer periodically meet with the personal representative to review the estate account documents, including the bank statements and canceled checks. If Lawyer prepares checks for the personal representative's signature, Lawyer must conduct a periodic review of the balance for the estate account sufficient to guard against the preparation of a check for the personal representative's signature that would exceed the balance of the account.

Inquiry #3:

Lawyer represents Estate of C and the personal representative of the Estate of C in her official capacity. Lawyer opens the checking account for the estate. Lawyer and the personal representative are designated as signatories on the estate account. Lawyer has the checkbook for the account and receives the bank statements. Although Lawyer is the person primarily responsible for depositing funds into the estate account and writing checks, the personal representative may also deposit funds into the estate account and write checks. What are Lawyer's duties with regard to the estate account?

Opinion #3:

As stated in Opinion #2, the requirements of Rule 1.15-2 and Rule 1.15-3 apply only to the extent the lawyer has control over the estate account. Because Lawyer has signatory authority, has possession of the checkbook, and receives the bank statements, Lawyer has control of the estate account and is, therefore, obligated to follow the requirements of Rule 1.15-2 and Rule 1.15-3. Lawyer must open the estate account as a lawyer's fiduciary account and review the estate account in accordance with Rule 1.15-3(i): Reviews. Furthermore, Lawyer must advise the personal representative of her fiduciary responsibilities relative to the safekeeping of the funds of the estate and her duty to administer the estate in compliance with the law. See Opinion #2.

Inquiry #4:

Lawyer represents Estate of D and the personal representative of Estate of D in her official capacity. The personal representative opens the checking account for the estate and manages the account, including the preparation of checks at Lawyer's direction. What are Lawyer's obligations for the account under Rule 1.15?

Opinion #4:

Lawyer is not obligated to follow Rule 1.15. See Opinion #2.

Inquiry #5:

Lawyer represents Estate of E and the personal representative of Estate of E in her official capacity. The personal representative opens a checking account for the estate and manages the account, including receipt of the bank statements and the preparation of checks. The personal representative is the only signatory on the estate checking account. The personal representative, however, asks Lawyer's paralegal to take possession of the checkbook. Each month, the personal representative goes to Lawyer's law firm, writes checks, and gives the bills and the checks to paralegal. Paralegal then mails out the checks. What are Lawyer's obligations to the estate account under these circumstances?

Opinion #5:

See Opinion #2. Additionally, under Rule 5.3(b), Lawyer must make reasonable efforts to ensure that the paralegal's conduct is compatible with the professional obligations of Lawyer. This includes making reasonable efforts to ensure that the paralegal understands and complies with the professional obligation of Lawyer to safeguard the checkbook under Rule 1.15-2(d) as well as with the professional obligation of Lawyer under Rule 8.4(b) and (c) not to misappropriate fiduciary funds by means of forged checks or other methods.

Inquiry #6:

Did the June 2016 amendments to Rule 1.15 change or add to the obligations of a lawyer with respect to a fiduciary account, or otherwise change the answers to Inquiries #1 and #2 above?

Opinion #6:

Yes. The 2016 amendments found in Rule 1.15-3(i) now require monthly and quarterly reviews for fiduciary accounts as well as general trust accounts.

Inquiry #7:

In the representations described in Inquiries #1 and #2 above, may Lawyer delegate the management of the fiduciary account to a nonlawyer assistant?

Opinion #7:

Day-to-day management of the account may be delegated to a nonlawyer assistant. However, the responsibility for conducting the monthly and quarterly reviews required by Rule 1.15-3(i) may not be delegated. The rule specifies that "the lawyer" shall review the records. To fulfill the intended purpose of this provision, the lawyer, rather than an assistant, must conduct these reviews. Lawyer must periodically review underlying bank records, independently of any records prepared or provided by the assistant, to ensure that the nonlawyer's conduct is compatible with the professional obligations of the lawyer. As explained in comment [23] to Rule 1.15:

> The mandatory monthly and quarterly reviews and oversight measures in Rule 1.15-3(i) facilitate early detection of internal theft and early detection and correction of errors. They are minimum fraud prevention measures necessary for the protection of funds on deposit in a firm trust or fiduciary account from theft by any person with access to the account. Internal theft from trust accounts by insiders at a law firm can only be timely detected if the records of the firm's trust accounts are routinely reviewed. For this reason, Rule 1.15-3(i)(1) requires monthly reviews of the bank statements and cancelled checks for all general, dedicated, and fiduciary accounts.

Although Lawyer may delegate day-to-day management of the account to a nonlawyer assistant, Lawyer remains professionally responsible for compliance with the requirements of Rule 1.15 and its subparts. Therefore, the assistant must be appropriately instructed, trained, and supervised concerning the requirements of the rule. Rule 5.3.

Inquiry #8:

If Lawyer delegates the day-to-day management of a fiduciary account to a nonlawyer assistant, may that assistant be a signatory on the account?

Opinion #8:

The trust accounting rules do not prohibit this. However, the practice increases the risk of internal fraud. See, e.g., Rule 1.15-2(s) (prohibiting an assistant responsible for reconciling a trust account from being a signatory on the account). A lawyer should not permit an assistant to be a signatory on a fiduciary account unless the lawyer or law firm has established fraud prevention procedures that will protect the fiduciary funds from internal theft. See Rule 1.15, cmt. [25].

2017 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

July 28, 2017

Advertisement with URL and No Other Identifying Information

Opinion rules that a billboard advertisement need not contain the lawyer's name, firm name, or the firm's office address if the URL address on the advertisement lands on the lawyer's website where such information can be easily found.

Editor's Note: The opinion is not limited to billboard advertisements; it applies to all forms of legal advertisement.

Inquiry:

Law Firm owns numerous Uniform Resource Locators (URLs) such as www.ABCtowndwi.com. Each of the URLs is a "landing page" for Law Firm's website. Law Firm's website includes Law Firm's full name, the names of the individual lawyers in Law Firm, and Law Firm's office address.

Law Firm would like to start a billboard advertising campaign. Law firm does not want to include Law Firm's full name, the names of the individual lawyers in Law Firm, or Law Firm's office address in the advertisement, but does intend to include one of the URLs.

Is the proposed billboard campaign permissible under the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion:

Yes. Rule 7.1 requires all communications about a lawyer and the lawyer's services to be truthful and not misleading. Rule 7.2(c) requires any communication about a lawyer or a lawyer's services to include the name and office address of at least one lawyer or law firm responsible for its content.

Traditionally, Rule 7.2(c) has been applied so as to require all forms of print and media legal advertising to include the listed information to avoid misleading the public about the identity of the responsible lawyer or firm and the location of the firm. However, the Rules of Professional Conduct are rules of reason to be applied in a reasonable manner under the circumstances. See Rule 0.2, Scope, cmt. [1]. For example, in 2012 FEO 6, the Ethics Committee determined that a law firm may use a leased time-shared office address or a post office address to satisfy the address disclosure requirement for advertising communications in Rule 7.2(c). In 2005 FEO 14, the Ethics Committee concluded that, "as long as a URL of a law firm is not otherwise misleading or false and the homepage of the website identifies the sponsoring law firm or lawyer, the URL does not have to contain language specifically identifying the website as one belonging to a law firm." Similarly, 2017 FEO 1 holds that a text message advertisement that does not include the lawyer's office address but does include the lawyer's website address, where the office address can be found, satisfies the requirements of Rule 7.2(c).

A law firm's website will generally contain more than enough information to satisfy the requirements of Rule 7.2(c) and avoid misleading the public. Utilizing a website address in an advertisement actually provides a consumer with the ability to access more information about the lawyer or law firm than an advertisement that contains only the lawyer's or the firm's name and office address. Therefore, an advertisement that includes a URL for a law firm's website complies with Rule 7.2(c) so long as the law firm's website contains the law firm's official name or trade name, or the name of a responsible lawyer, and the firm's office address. The firm name, trade name, or the name of the lawyer must appear on the website homepage. The firm's office address need not appear on the homepage provided it can be easily found on the website.

2017 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

July 28, 2017

Settlement Funds Subject to Statutory Lien

Opinion rules that a lawyer is prohibited from disbursing settlement funds pursuant to the client's directive if the funds are subject to a perfected lien.

Inquiry:

Client was injured in a vehicular collision. Client was not at fault for the collision. Client incurred various medical expenses as a result of the collision. Lawyer represents Client in her personal injury case against the driver who caused the collision. All medical providers perfected liens on Client's anticipated recovery pursuant to the requirements for perfection of a medical lien on a personal injury settlement set forth in N.C. Gen. Stat. § 44-49. With Client's consent, Lawyer settled the matter. Lawyer received and deposited Client's settlement proceeds in his trust account. The settlement proceeds do not cover the entirety of Client's medical expenses, so Lawyer prepared a proposed pro rata disbursement plan, consistent with N.C. Gen. Stat. §44-50 (lien "shall in no case, exclusive of attorney's fees, exceed 50% of the amount of damages recovered"), and submits the proposal to Client for approval.

Client disapproves of the proposed disbursement, explaining that she does not want one particular medical provider (Provider A) to receive any funds from the settlement. Lawyer advises Client of Provider A's perfected lien, but Client instructs Lawyer not to pay Provider A.

May Lawyer disburse Client's settlement proceeds in accordance with Client's instructions not to pay Provider A such that the funds designated for Provider A are disbursed to Client instead?

Opinion:

No, if the lien is perfected. Generally, a lawyer must follow a client's directives as to the disbursement of settlement proceeds. Rule 1.15-2(n) provides that a lawyer "shall promptly pay or deliver to the client, or to third persons as directed by the client, any entrusted property belonging to the client and to which the client is currently entitled." However, Provider A has perfected a lien against the settlement proceeds pursuant to N.C Gen. Stat. § 44-49. The perfected lien creates a question as to whether Client is "currently entitled" to the share of the settlement proceeds designated for Provider A.

Comment [15] to Rule 1.15 recognizes that a third party may have a lawful claim (such as a medical provider lien) against specific funds in a lawyer's custody, and a lawyer "may have a duty under applicable law to protect such third-party claims against wrongful interference by the client."

The applicable law provides that a lien exists upon any sums recovered as damages for personal injury in any civil action. N.C. Gen. Stat. § 44-49(a). The lien is in favor of any provider to whom the injured person may be indebted for any medical attention rendered in connection with the injury. Id. The lien attaches to all funds paid to a lawyer in compensation for or settlement of the personal injury claim. To perfect the lien, the medical provider must furnish an itemized statement, hospital record or medical report, without charge, for the lawyer to use in the resolution of the personal injury claim and give written notice to the lawyer of the lien claim. N.C. Gen. Stat. § 44-49(b).

Before disbursing settlement proceeds subject to a perfected lien, N.C. Gen. Stat. § 44-50 provides that the lawyer "shall retain out of any recovery or any compensation so received a sufficient amount to pay the just and bona fide claims." Section 44-50 further states that a client's instructions for the disbursement of settlement proceeds are "not binding on the disbursing attorney" to the extent that the instructions conflict with the requirements of the medical lien statutes. However, when the client disputes the amount of the claim, N.C. Gen. Stat. § 44-51 provides that payment of the claim is not compelled until the claim is "fully established and determined, in the manner provided by law." Comment [15] to Rule 1.15 provides that when a third-party claim "is not frivolous under applicable law, the lawyer must refuse to surrender the property to the client until the claim is resolved" (emphasis added). Therefore, when a statute requires a lawyer not to disburse settlement funds to a client, the lawyer must comply with the law regardless of any instructions by the client to the contrary.

Lawyer must determine whether Provider A's lien is perfected. If so, Lawyer must segregate and retain the funds in question in Lawyer's trust account and inform Client that, absent a prompt resolution of Provider A's claim that is satisfactory to both parties, Lawyer will eventually be obligated to deposit the funds into the court for disposition. In the interim, if a final judgment is entered on Provider A's claim such that the claim is no longer in dispute, pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat. § 44-50, Lawyer must pay Provider A over the client's objections.

To the extent that RPC 69 and RPC 125 conflict with this opinion, they are overruled.

2017 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

October 27, 2017

Agreement Not to Solicit or Hire Lawyers from Another Firm as Part of Merger Negotiations

Opinion rules that an agreement between law firms engaged in merger negotiations not to solicit or hire lawyers from the other firm for a relatively short period of time after expiration of the term of the agreement is permissible because it is a de minimis restriction on lawyer mobility that does not impair client choice and is reasonable under the circumstances.

Inquiry:

Law Firm A entered into an agreement with Law Firm B to explore merger of the two law firms. In addition to provisions addressing non-disclosure of confidential client and proprietary firm information, the agreement included the following provision:

> Non-Solicitation. During the term of this Agreement and, should Law Firm A and Law Firm B decide not to merge, for a period of two (2) years after termination of this Agreement (the "Non-Solicitation Period"), (i) Law Firm A agrees that it shall not induce or solicit any of the partners, associates, or other employees of Law Firm B to join Law Firm A; and (ii) Law Firm B agrees that it shall not induce or solicit any of the partners, associates, or other employees of Law Firm A to join Law Firm B. The foregoing restriction shall not apply to (i) associates or other employees who are hired through a party's recruiting efforts resulting from the placement of general media advertisements or the retention of "headhunters" (provided that the headhunters are not specifically directed to solicit associates or other employees from the other party), or (ii) the hiring by a party of the other party's associates or other employees who make unsolicited contacts seeking employment so long as such individuals did not directly participate in meetings, negotiations, or similar discussions between the parties concerning the terms of the potential merger. Each party agrees not to hire or engage as partners or counsel any individual who is currently a partner or counsel with the other party to this Agreement for a period of two years from the termination of this Agreement.

The term of the agreement is one year, but is subject to early termination based upon ten days' notice by a party. Therefore, the potential period of restriction may be as long as three years.

Attorney X is a partner in Law Firm A and is interested in joining Law Firm B. She did not participate in meetings, negotiations, or discussions between the law firms relative to the agreement or to a potential merger with Law Firm B. Nevertheless, the managing lawyers for Law Firm B have refused to talk to her about becoming a partner because the period of restriction has not expired. Law Firm B will talk to Attorney X about joining the firm if she obtains a waiver of the restriction from Law Firm A.

Is this provision of the agreement prohibited under Rule 5.6(a)?

Opinion:

No, because it imposes a de minimis restriction on the mobility of the lawyers in the firms, does not impair client choice, and is reasonable under the circumstances.

Rule 5.6(a) prohibits a lawyer from participating in offering or making a partnership, shareholder, operating, employment, or other similar type of agreement that restricts the right of a lawyer to practice after termination of the relationship, except an agreement concerning benefits upon retirement. As explained in 2012 FEO 12, "[t]his prohibition on restrictive covenants protects the freedom of clients to choose a lawyer and promotes lawyer mobility and professional autonomy." Rule 5.6, cmt. [1]." Ethics opinions interpreting the rule usually address the former concern. For example, three State Bar opinions evaluate whether financial disincentives upon departure from a law firm are disguised penalties for competition because "firm" clients will follow the departing lawyer. See 2007 FEO 6, 2008 FEO 8, and 2012 FEO 12. There are no opinions that provide insight into agreements that solely restrict the mobility of lawyers as does the agreement at issue. Therefore, this is a matter of first impression.

Restrictive covenants are not, however, foreign to the Rules of Professional Conduct. Rule 1.17, Sale of a Law Practice, permits a lawyer to sell a law practice or an area of law practice, including good will, if a number of conditions are satisfied, including the following: "the seller ceases to engage in the private practice of law, or in the area of practice that has been sold, from an office that is within a one-hundred (100) mile radius of the purchased practice..." Rule 1.17(a). Where a reasonable business purpose exists, the Rules permit some limitations on lawyer mobility.

Similarly, 2007 FEO 6 and 2008 FEO 8 recognize that a financial disincentive upon the departure of a lawyer may be permissible. Those opinions permit partnership, shareholder, or other similar agreements to include a post-departure repurchase, buy-out, or fee division provision if the provision is fair, takes into account the loss in firm value generated by the lawyer's departure, and is not based solely upon loss in value due to the loss of client billings. Again, if there is a reasonable business purpose, a restriction that impacts lawyer mobility may be permissible.

The non-solicitation provision in this inquiry is primarily a restriction on the law firms that are a party to the agreement in that it restricts the recruiting activities of the firms. To the extent that the provision restricts the mobility of lawyers in the two firms, the restriction is for a relatively short, defined period of time and only with regard to employment with one other law firm; the lawyers in the firms are free to seek employment with any other law firm. In addition, the provision does not prevent or inhibit a client from following a lawyer who departs one of the firms for employment with a firm not subject to the agreement. Thus, the provision imposes a de minimis restriction on lawyer mobility and does not impair client choice

As noted in the Scope section of the Rules, "[t]he Rules of Professional Conduct are rules of reason. They should be interpreted with reference to the purposes of legal representation and of the law itself." Rule 0.2, cmt. [1]. It is surmised that the non-solicitation provision was included in the agreement to foster the trust necessary for both firms to disclose financial information about the productivity of the lawyers in the firms without fear that, should the merger negotiations be abandoned, the other firm would attempt to lure highly productive lawyers or "rainmaker" lawyers away from the other firm. The provision was reasonable[1] under the circumstances and, given its limited duration and effect, does not violate Rule 5.6(a).

No opinion is expressed on the legal enforceability of the provision in this inquiry or other similar provisions.

Endnote

1. Whether a restriction on lawyer mobility in an agreement between law firms engaged in merger negotiations is reasonable will depend on various factors, including the specific terms of the restriction, the number of law firms involved in the merger negotiations, and the likelihood of employment opportunities with law firms not involved in the merger negotiations.

2018 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

July 27, 2018

Participation in Website Directories and Rating Systems that Include Third Party Reviews

Opinion explains when a lawyer may participate in an online rating system, and a lawyer's professional responsibility for the content posted on a profile on a website directory.

Inquiry #1:

May a lawyer "claim her profile" or set up a profile on a website directory or business listing service such as Google's My Business, LinkedIn, or Avvo and provide information for inclusion in the profile?

Opinion #1:

Yes, if the information provided by the lawyer and as presented in the profile is truthful and not misleading. Rule 7.1(a).

Inquiry #2:

May a lawyer pay to be included in a website directory of lawyers?

Opinion #2:

Yes. A lawyer may pay the reasonable costs of advertisements. Rule 7.2(b).

Inquiry #3:

May a lawyer provide profile information to a website that will use the information to rate the lawyer in an online lawyer rating system?

Opinion #3:

Yes, if the information provided by the lawyer is truthful and not misleading. Rule 7.1(a). In addition, no money may be paid by the lawyer for a rating and, before voluntarily providing information to a rating system, the lawyer must determine that the rating system uses objective standards that are verifiable and would be recognized by a reasonable lawyer as establishing a legitimate basis for evaluating the lawyer's services. See, e.g., 2003 FEO 3 and 2007 FEO 14. Further, the standards for the rating system must be disclosed to the public at a location on the website that a user of the website can readily find.

Inquiry #4:

If a lawyer participates in a website directory, is the lawyer professionally responsible for claims on the website about participating lawyers such as statements that the participating lawyers are "top rated" or "the best"?

Opinion #4:

Yes, the lawyer is professionally responsible for statements or claims made about the lawyer or the lawyer's services and may not participate in any communication about the lawyer that is false or misleading in violation of Rule 7.1.

Pursuant to Rule 7.1(a)(3), a communication is false or misleading if it "compares the lawyer's services with other lawyers' services, unless the comparison can be factually substantiated." Further explanation of this prohibition is set out in comment [3] to Rule 7.1 which states that "[a]n unsubstantiated comparison of the lawyer's services or fees with the services or fees of other lawyers may be misleading if presented with such specificity as would lead a reasonable person to conclude that the comparison can be substantiated." Characterizing lawyers listed in a website directory as "top rated" or "the best" is a comparison of the participating lawyers' services with those of other lawyers. A lawyer may not participate in such a directory unless objective, verifiable standards for participation, as required by 2007 FEO 14, Advertising Inclusion in List in North Carolina Super Lawyers and Other Similar Publications, are applied and disclosed by the website.

Inquiry #5:

A website directory that permits lawyers to "claim their profiles" also allows consumers—usually present and former clients—to post "reviews" of a lawyer on the lawyer's profile page. May a lawyer ask present or former clients to post reviews on her profile page?

Opinion #5:

Yes, as long as there is no quid pro quo. Rule 7.2(b) (a lawyer shall not give anything of value to a person for recommending the lawyer's services). Under no circumstances may a lawyer solicit, encourage, or assist in the posting of fake, false, or misleading reviews. Rule 8.4(c).

Inquiry #6:

When a client is pleased with the lawyer and her services, the client's posted review on the lawyer's profile or webpage may contain hyperbolic accolades such as the lawyer was "the best," "awesome," "the smartest," "the toughest," etc. Rule 7.1(a)(2) and (3) prohibit a lawyer from engaging in misleading communications that create unjustified expectations or that compare a lawyer's services with the services of other lawyers unless the comparison can be factually substantiated. Is a lawyer required to seek the removal of any review that does not meet this standard?

Opinion #6:

Yes. Most users of the Internet understand that reviews by third parties generally contain statements of opinion, not fact. To the extent that a third party review is a statement of opinion about the lawyer or her services, the lawyer is not professionally responsible for the statement and does not have to disclaim the review or take action to have the review removed or redacted from the lawyer's profile or webpage. If a review contains a material misstatement of objective fact, however, the lawyer must take action to have the review removed or edited to delete the misstatement, or to post a disclaimer. For example, the lawyer must take action to remove, redact, or disclaim a review that falsely states that the lawyer obtained a million dollar settlement.

Inquiry #7:

Lawyer A, at the urging of a marketing firm, initially claimed her website profile or set up business pages on a number of websites like Facebook. However, she tired of posting to the profiles and pages, and soon ceased to visit the majority of them altogether. Most of the profiles and website pages allow for third party reviews that Lawyer A no longer reads. Is Lawyer A responsible for the content of the reviews posted on these website profiles and pages?

Opinion #7:

No, a lawyer is professionally responsible only for third-party content about the lawyer of which the lawyer is aware or reasonably should be aware. The lawyer is not required to monitor online profiles or pages if the lawyer does not visit the website, post to that website, or otherwise actively participate in the website. If a lawyer has abandoned a profile or webpage and the lawyer is unaware of the content of the reviews posted on the profile or webpage, the lawyer has no professional responsibility relative to that content. However, if the lawyer becomes aware, or reasonably should be aware, that material misstatements of fact are included in reviews posted on her profile or webpage, the lawyer is professionally responsible and must take action to have the offensive content removed or an explanatory disclaimer posted.

Inquiry #8:

A lawyer determines that third-party generated content on her profile on an online directory contains material misstatements of fact and that she is professionally responsible for seeking to remove or disclaim the misstatements. When she asks the website to remove the content or post an explanatory disclaimer, the website refuses to do so. What should the lawyer do?

Opinion #8:

The lawyer must withdraw from participation in the website and seek to have the lawyer's profile or page on the website removed.

Inquiry #9:

Is a lawyer required to seek the removal of negative reviews that the lawyer perceives to be false or misleading?

Opinion #9:

Because there is no risk of creating unjustified expectations, there is no duty to correct or seek removal of a negative review posted on a lawyer's profile or website page. Nevertheless, the lawyer may seek removal of negative reviews to protect the lawyer's reputation. Lawyers are cautioned to avoid disclosing confidential client information when responding to a negative review. See Rule 1.6(a).

Inquiry #10:

For a monthly fee, a website offers a premium service called "Pro" that is promoted as enabling a lawyer to "upgrade" the lawyer's profile on the website. This service provides the following benefits according to the website: no competitive ads will be shown on the lawyer's profile page; the lawyer's contact information is shown in a search result; the lawyer can see who is contacting her by phone, email, or on her website; the lawyer can select the best reviews and promote them at the top of the profile page; and the lawyer can write her own headline at the top of her profile. In addition, under the lawyer's photo, whether it appears on the lawyer's profile page or in a search result, the word "Pro" appears. On search results, a sidebar states that "Pro" indicates that information is "verified." May a lawyer subscribe to this service?

Opinion #10:

Yes, if the information on the profile page continues to be truthful and not misleading and an explanation of the "Pro" designation appears in a prominent location beside or near the designation wherever the designation appears on the lawyer's profile or webpages. In the absence of the explanation that the designation indicates that the lawyer paid for enhanced services, the designation implies that lawyers without the designation are not professional or "Pro." This is a comparison of the lawyer's services with the services of other lawyers that cannot be factually substantiated in violation of Rule 7.1(a)(3). If the website does not post the explanation, the lawyer must do so or must discontinue the premium service.

In addition, to avoid misleading users, if only selected reviews can be read by a user, there must be an explanation that the lawyer has selected the best reviews to promote. If there is an implication that the selected reviews are the only reviews that the lawyer has received or, if the lawyer has received unfavorable reviews and the profile page falsely implies that the "promoted reviews" are typical, there must be an explanation.

2018 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

July 27, 2018

Duty to Disclose Adverse Legal Authority

Opinion rules that a lawyer has a duty to disclose to a tribunal adverse legal authority that is controlling as to that tribunal if the legal authority is known to the lawyer and is not disclosed by opposing counsel.

Inquiry:

Rule 3.3(a)(2) provides that a lawyer shall not knowingly "fail to disclose to the tribunal legal authority in the controlling jurisdiction known to the lawyer to be directly adverse to the position of the client and not disclosed by opposing counsel."

Does the duty of disclosure set out in Rule 3.3(a)(2) require a lawyer to inform the tribunal of rulings entered in lateral and lower courts?

Opinion:

Pursuant to Rule 3.3(a)(2), the lawyer's duty is to disclose to the tribunal legal authority that is controlling as to that tribunal. The lawyer must make a legal determination as to the legal authority that is controlling for the particular tribunal.

Rule 3.3, Candor Toward the Tribunal, sets forth the duties of lawyers as officers of the court "to avoid conduct that undermines the integrity of the adjudicative process." Rule 3.3, cmt. [2]. Preserving the integrity of the adjudicative process is consistent with the principle of stare decisis.

As an officer of the court, a lawyer has a duty to assist the tribunal in fulfilling its duty to apply the law fairly and properly. Therefore, a lawyer must not allow the tribunal to be misled by false statements of law and "must recognize the existence of pertinent legal authorities." Rule 3.3, cmt. [4]. As explained in Rule 3.3, cmt. [4], the "underlying concept is that legal argument is a discussion seeking to determine the legal premises properly applicable to the case."

The comments to Rule 3.3 reference "pertinent legal authorities" and "legal premises properly applicable" to the case. These phrases indicate that the lawyer's duty is to disclose to the tribunal legal authority that is controlling as to that tribunal. The disclosure duty covers not only court decisions, but also statutes and regulations adverse to a client's position. A lawyer is not required to inform the tribunal of authority that is not controlling.

Pursuant to Rule 3.3(a)(2), a lawyer has a duty to disclose to a tribunal considering a matter legal authority that is controlling as to the tribunal if the authority is directly adverse to the position of the lawyer's client, is known to the lawyer, and is not disclosed by opposing counsel. The lawyer's knowledge of the adverse authority may be inferred from the circumstances. See Rule 1.0(g).

2018 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

July 27, 2018

Use of Suspended Lawyer's Name in Law Firm Name

Opinion rules that the name of a lawyer who is under an active disciplinary suspension must be removed from the firm name.

Inquiry #1:

Lawyer is a named partner in a law firm. Pursuant to an order issued by the Disciplinary Hearing Commission, Lawyer is actively suspended from the practice of law. Must Lawyer's name be removed from the law firm name during the suspension period?

Opinion #1:

Yes. A suspended lawyer may not be associated with her former firm during the suspension period. The Regulations for Professional Corporations and Professional Limited Liability Companies Practicing Law state that if a shareholder in a professional corporation or member of a professional limited liability company becomes legally disqualified to render professional services in North Carolina, the name of the professional corporation or professional limited liability company shall be promptly changed to eliminate the name of such shareholder or member, and such shareholder or member shall promptly dispose of her shares of stock in the corporation or interest in the professional limited liability company. 27 N.C. Admin. Code 1E, Rule .0102. In addition, Rule 5.5(b) of the Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits a lawyer who is not admitted to practice law in North Carolina from holding out to the public or otherwise representing that the lawyer is admitted to practice law in this jurisdiction.

Therefore, within a reasonable timeframe from the effective date of the active disciplinary suspension not to exceed three months and until the active suspension ends, the suspended lawyer's name must be removed from the firm name, firm signage, letterhead, all forms of advertisement, and the firm website. The law firm is reminded to amend the articles of incorporation with the North Carolina secretary of state and, if the suspended lawyer's name is contained in the firm's website URL, to change or redirect the URL to a URL that does not contain the suspended lawyer's name. (If a URL with appropriate is not available, the law firm may adopt a trade name for its URL provided the URL is registered with and approved by the North Carolina State Bar. 2005 FEO 8.)

Inquiry #2:

Does the answer to Inquiry #1 change if Lawyer is under a stayed disciplinary suspension?

Opinion #2:

Yes. If Lawyer's disciplinary suspension is stayed, she is permitted to practice law. Therefore, inclusion of Lawyer's name in the firm name, firm signage, letterhead, all forms of advertisement, and the firm website is not false or misleading in violation of Rule 7.1, and does not violate other State Bar rules.

Should the suspension become active and Lawyer is no longer permitted to practice law, Lawyer's name must be removed from the firm name, firm signage, letterhead, all forms of advertisement, and the firm website. See Opinion #1.

Inquiry #3:

Lawyer is administratively suspended for failure to pay State Bar membership dues and/or failure to satisfy the continuing legal education (CLE) requirements of State Bar membership. Must Lawyer's name be removed from the firm name?

Opinion #3:

Yes. Whenever a member of the North Carolina State Bar fails to fulfill an administrative obligation of membership in the State Bar, the member is subject to administrative suspension. 27 N.C. Admin. Code 1D, Rule .0903. However, unlike a disciplinary suspension, administrative suspensions can be cured within a relatively short period of time. See 27 N.C. Admin. Code 1D, Rule .0904(f) (Reinstatement by Secretary of the State Bar). As noted in the Scope section, the Rules of Professional Conduct are rules of reason. Rule 0.2, Scope. It would be impractical and expensive for a firm to remove a lawyer's name from the firm name, firm signage, letterhead, all forms of advertisement, and the firm website if the administrative suspension is of limited duration. Therefore, provided Lawyer is reinstated to active status within a reasonable period of time not to exceed three months from the effective date of the administrative suspension, it is not a violation of Rule 7.1 or Rule 7.5 for Lawyer's name to remain in the firm name, firm signage, letterhead, all forms of advertisement, and the firm website.

2018 Formal Ethics Opinion 4

April 20, 2018

Offering Clients On-site Access to Financial Brokerage Company for Legal Fee Financing

Opinion rules that a lawyer may offer clients on-site access to a financial brokerage company as a payment option for legal fees so long as the lawyer is satisfied that the financial arrangements offered by the company are legal, the lawyer receives no consideration from the company, and the lawyer does not recommend one payment option over another.

Inquiry:

Lawyer would like to associate with a financial brokerage company

(Company) that would assist clients in obtaining legal fee financing. Company is not a lending institution. Company would act as a broker to find lenders willing to finance the client's legal fees. Company charges Lawyer an initial setup fee of $1,500 and a monthly fee of $99 for maintaining the payment webpage and administration. Lawyer also pays a merchant fee of 4.99 % on the amount of the financed legal fee. The loan brokerage service would be explained to clients as a "payment option" along with any other options such as credit card, check, cash, etc.

Company provides a loan application for clients who wish to pursue a loan for legal fees. Approved clients receive offers from competing banks, and are free to pick the offer that works best for them, or to decline all offers. If the client accepts an offer, the loan amount is paid from a third-party lender directly to the client. The client pays the fees to Lawyer in accordance with the fee agreement.

The company maintains that the program helps lawyers get paid and also removes the cost barrier for clients who are seeking legal representation.

May Lawyer associate with Company under the proposed arrangement?

Opinion:

Yes, under certain circumstances. Many law firms currently accept credit card payments for legal fees or offer in-house payment plans. In 2000 FEO 4, the Ethics Committee concluded that a lawyer may refer a client in need of money for living expenses to a finance company if the lawyer is satisfied that the company's financing arrangement is legal, the lawyer receives no consideration from the financing company for making the referral, and, in the lawyer's opinion, the referral is in the best interest of the client. The lawyer may not allow his own financial interests to interfere with his duty to act in the best interests of his client. Rule 1.7(a) (concurrent conflict exists if representation of client is materially limited by personal interest of lawyer). For example, in 2006 FEO 2, the Ethics Committee concluded that a lawyer may not refer a client to a company that pays a cash lump sum to a client in exchange for the client's interest in a structured settlement merely as a means of paying the lawyer for his legal services.

A lawyer does not put his own financial interests ahead of those of his client by providing payment options to a client who requires financial assistance in paying the lawyer's legal fees. However, given the lawyer's self interest in being paid in full for his services, the lawyer may not recommend one payment option over another. Therefore, Lawyer may offer clients on-site access to Company as a payment option for Lawyer's legal fees—along with any other potential payment options—so long as Lawyer is satisfied that the financial arrangements offered by Company are legal, Lawyer receives no consideration from Company, and Lawyer does not recommend one payment option over another.

2018 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

July 19, 2019

Accessing Social Network Presence of Represented or Unrepresented Persons

Opinion reviews a lawyer's professional responsibilities when seeking access to a person's profile, pages, and posts on a social network to investigate a client's legal matter.

Introduction

Social networks are internet-based communities that individuals use to communicate with each other and to view and exchange information, including photographs, digital recordings, and files. Examples of currently popular social networks include, but are not limited to, Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, and LinkedIn. On some forms of social media, such as Facebook, users create a profile page with personal information that other users may access online. Websites that host the social networks often allow the user to establish the level of privacy for the profile page and postings thereon, and to limit those who may view the profile page and postings to "friends"—those who have specifically sent a computerized request to view the profile page which the user has accepted. NYCBA Formal Op. 2010-2 (September 2010).

Lawyers increasingly access social networks to prepare or to investigate a client's matter. However, the use of social networks has ethical implications. Several rules restrict a lawyer's communications with people involved in a client's matter. Rule 4.2 restricts a lawyer's communications with persons represented by counsel. Rule 4.3 restricts a lawyer's communications with unrepresented persons. Furthermore, all communications by a lawyer are subject to Rule 4.1's prohibition on knowingly making a false statement of material fact or law to a third person and to Rule 8.4(c)'s prohibition on conduct involving dishonesty, fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation that reflects adversely on the lawyer's fitness as a lawyer.

The technology and features of social networks are constantly changing. It is impossible to address every aspect of a lawyer's ethical obligation when utilizing a social network to prepare or to investigate a client's legal matter. Every lawyer is required by the duty of competence to keep abreast of the benefits and risks associated with the technology relevant to the lawyer's practice, including social networks. Rule 1.1, cmt. [8]. Further, when using a social network as an investigative tool, a lawyer's professional conduct must be guided by the Rules of Professional Conduct.

This opinion will address ethical issues that arise when lawyers, either directly or indirectly, seek access to social network profiles, pages, and posts (collectively referred to as "social network presence") belonging to another person. Throughout the opinion, "person" refers to opposing parties and to witnesses.

This opinion does not obviate comment [1] to Rule 8.4. The comment explains that the prohibition in Rule 8.4(a) against knowingly assisting another to violate the Rules of Professional Conduct or violating the Rules of Professional Conduct through the acts of another does not prohibit a lawyer from advising a client or, in the case of a government lawyer, investigatory personnel, of action the client, or such investigatory personnel, is lawfully entitled to take. See 2014 FEO 9 (use of tester in investigation that serves a public interest).

For guidance on communicating with a judge on a social network, see 2014 FEO 8. For the restrictions on communicating with a juror or a member of the jury venire, see Rule 3.5.

Inquiry #1:

Regardless of the privacy setting established by a user, some social network sites allow public access to certain limited user information. May a lawyer representing a client in a matter view the public portion of a person's social network presence?

Opinion #1:

Yes. The public portion of a person's social network presence refers to any information or posting that is viewable by anyone using the internet or anyone who is a member of the social network. Such information is no different than other information that is publicly available. Nothing in the Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits a lawyer from accessing publicly available information.

As noted by the Colorado Bar Association, "[a] lawyer's conduct in viewing [the public portion of a person's social media profile or any public posting made by an individual] does not implicate any of the restrictions upon communications between a lawyer and certain others involved in the legal system." Colorado Formal Op. 127 (September 2015).

Some social networks automatically notify a person when his or her presence has been viewed. The person whose presence is viewed may receive information about the individual who viewed the presence. Under these circumstances, when a lawyer views a person's public social network presence, it is the social network sending a communication, not the lawyer. Therefore, the notification generated by the social network is not a prohibited communication by the lawyer. See, e.g., ABA Formal Op. 466 (2014) (communication generated because of technical feature of electronic social media service is communication by the service, not the lawyer). However, a lawyer who engages in repetitive viewing of a person's social network presence so as to generate multiple notifications from the network may be in violation of Rule 4.4(a). That rule prohibits a lawyer from using means that have no substantial purpose other than to embarrass, delay, or burden a third person, and from using methods of obtaining evidence that violate the legal rights of such a person.

Lawyers may view the public portion of a person's social network presence. However, the lawyer may not engage in repetitive viewing of a person's social network presence if doing so would violate Rule 4.4(a).

Inquiry #2:

May a lawyer use deception to access a restricted portion of a person's social network presence?

Opinion #2:

No. Lawyers must never use deception, dishonesty, or pretext to gain access to a person's restricted social network presence. Rules 4.1 and 8.4(c). When seeking access to a person's restricted social network presence, a lawyer must not state or imply that he is someone other than who he is or that he is disinterested. Furthermore, lawyers may not instruct a third party to use deception.

Inquiry #3:

May a lawyer, using his true identity, request access to the restricted portions of an unrepresented person's social network presence?

Opinion #3:

Yes. A lawyer's duty of competent and diligent representation under Rules 1.1 and 1.3 encompasses the use of readily available forms of informal discovery. A lawyer who seeks informal discovery may request the same access to an unrepresented person's social network presence that is available to any nonlawyer, as long as the lawyer uses his true identity and does not engage in deception or dishonesty. The person contacted is free to accept, reject, or ignore the request, or to ask for additional information. If the unrepresented person asks the lawyer for additional information, the lawyer must accurately provide the information or withdraw the request.

Rule 4.3(b) provides that a lawyer, in dealing on behalf of a client with a person who is not represented by counsel, shall not "state or imply that the lawyer is disinterested." In addition, when the lawyer "knows or reasonably should know that the unrepresented person misunderstands the lawyer's role in the matter, the lawyer shall make reasonable efforts to correct the misunderstanding."

By simply requesting access, the lawyer does not violate Rule 4.3. A lawyer who requests access is not making any statement, nor is he implying disinterest. See Oregon State Bar, Formal Opinion No. 2013-189 (2016 Revision) ("A simple request to access nonpublic information does not imply that Lawyer is 'disinterested' in the pending legal matter."). The person contacted has full control over who views the information on her social network site. A grant of the lawyer's request, without additional inquiry, does not indicate a misunderstanding of the lawyer's role.

Inquiry #4:

May a lawyer, using his true identity, request access to the restricted portions of a represented person's social network presence?

Opinion #4:

No. During the representation of a client, a lawyer shall not communicate about the subject of the representation with a person the lawyer knows to be represented by another lawyer in the matter, unless the lawyer has the consent of the other lawyer or is authorized to do so by law or by court order. Rule 4.2(a). Rule 4.2 contributes to the proper functioning of the legal system by protecting a person who has chosen to be represented by a lawyer in a matter against possible overreaching by other lawyers who are participating in the matter, interference by those lawyers with the client-lawyer relationship and the uncounseled disclosure of information relating to the representation. Rule 4.2, comment [1].

Unless the lawyer has obtained express consent from the represented person's lawyer, the request interferes with the attorney-client relationship and could lead to the uncounseled disclosure of information relating to the representation. Therefore, requesting access to the restricted portions of a represented person's social network presence is prohibited unless the lawyer obtains consent from the person's lawyer. Furthermore, the lawyer may not direct a third party to request access to restricted portions of a represented person's social network presence. See Rule 8.4(a).

Inquiry #5:

May a lawyer request or accept information from a third party with access to restricted portions of a person's social network presence?

Opinion #5:

Yes. Nothing in the Rules of Professional Conduct prevents a lawyer from engaging in lawful and ethical informal discovery such as communicating with third party witnesses to collect information and evidence to benefit a client. Witnesses who have obtained information from the restricted portions of a person's (represented or unrepresented) social network presence are no different in this regard than any other witness with information relevant to a client's matter. Therefore, when a lawyer is informed that a third party has access to restricted portions of a person's social network presence and can provide helpful information to the lawyer's client, the lawyer is not prohibited from requesting such information from the third party or accepting information volunteered by the third party. Similarly, a lawyer may accept information from a client who has access to the opposing party's or a witness's restricted social network presence.

However, the lawyer may not direct or encourage a third party or a client to use deception or misrepresentation when communicating with a person on a social network site. See Opinion #2.

2018 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

July 27, 2018

Shifting Cost of Litigation Cost Protection Insurance to Client

Opinion rules that, with certain conditions, a lawyer may include in a client's fee agreement a provision allowing the lawyer's purchase of litigation cost protection insurance and requiring reimbursement of the insurance premium from the client's funds in the event of a settlement or favorable trial verdict.

Inquiry:

Lawyer would like to purchase "litigation cost protection" insurance for matters he handles on a contingency fee basis. The insurance is purchased by a lawyer on a case-by-case basis for a one-time premium payment. The insurance is available for purchase up until 90 days after the initial complaint has been served upon the defendant(s). The insurance reimburses a lawyer for litigation costs advanced by the lawyer only in the event of a trial loss.

Inquiry #1:

Do the Rules of Professional Conduct prohibit a lawyer from purchasing litigation cost protection insurance for his contingency fee cases?

Opinion #1:

No. A lawyer has a duty to avoid conflicts of interest with his client. According to Rule 1.7(a), a lawyer has a conflict of interest if the representation of a client will be materially limited by a personal interest of the lawyer. The purpose of the insurance policy is to protect the lawyer's investment in the costs and expenses of litigation. However, the insurance reimburses the lawyer only in the event of a trial loss. The lawyer and the client may have different cost-benefit calculations. Therefore, the terms of the policy incentivize going to trial in certain scenarios, which raises the possibility of a conflict of interests between the lawyer and the client.

However, there are inherent conflicts of interests present in every case taken on a contingency basis. A lawyer may prefer that his client accept a low settlement offer to ensure that the lawyer receives his fee, while the client wants to reject a settlement offer and take his chances at trial. In either event, the client has the ultimate authority regarding settlement of the client's matter. Rule 1.2(a)(1). The presence or absence of a litigation cost protection insurance policy does not alter this dynamic of the client-lawyer relationship.

Lawyer may purchase litigation cost protection insurance so long as Lawyer does not allow the terms of the coverage to adversely affect Lawyer's independent professional judgment, the client-lawyer relationship (including the client's ultimate authority as to settlement), or the client's continuing best interests.

Inquiry #2:

If Lawyer recovers funds for the client through a settlement or favorable trial verdict, Lawyer proposes to be reimbursed for the insurance premium from the judgment or settlement funds. Lawyer intends to disclose the cost of the insurance to the client as part of the representation agreement.

May Lawyer include in a client's fee agreement a provision allowing Lawyer's purchase of litigation cost protection insurance and requiring reimbursement of the insurance premium from the client's funds in the event of a settlement or favorable trial verdict?

Opinion #2:

Yes. A provision in a fee agreement requiring client reimbursement of a particular expense implicates a lawyer's professional duties under Rule 1.5. Rule 1.5(a) provides that a lawyer shall not charge an illegal or clearly excessive fee or charge or collect a clearly excessive amount for expenses. Rule 1.5(b) requires a lawyer who has not regularly represented a client to communicate to the client the basis of the fee and expenses for which the client will be responsible. Specifically as to contingency fees, Rule 1.5(c) provides:

> A contingent fee agreement shall be in a writing signed by the client and shall state the method by which the fee is to be determined, including the percentage or percentages that shall accrue to the lawyer in the event of settlement, trial, or appeal; litigation and other expenses to be deducted from the recovery; and whether such expenses are to be deducted before or after the contingent fee is calculated [emphasis added]. The agreement must clearly notify the client of any expenses for which the client will be liable whether or not the client is the prevailing party....

The premium for the insurance is an "other expense" that Lawyer intends to deduct from any recovery. Therefore, the amount of the insurance premium must not be clearly excessive, and the circumstances under which the client is responsible for reimbursement of the premium must be clearly communicated to the client and clearly set out in the written fee agreement. Lawyer must describe with specificity what the insurance is and why Lawyer believes a litigation cost protection policy will serve the client's best interests. Lawyer must also inform the client that other lawyers may choose not to purchase or to charge the client for the cost of a litigation cost protection policy. Finally, Lawyer must provide the client with the opportunity to review the insurance policy.

The Florida Bar determined that litigation cost protection insurance is "part of a business agreement, albeit with a third party rather than with the client, creating circumstances resembling the conflicts of interest that can arise, and be cured, pursuant to [Rule 1.8(a)]." Florida Bar Staff Opinion 37289 (Revised 2018). Florida's version of Modal Rule 1.8(a) (which is substantially the same as NC Rule 1.8(a)) provides that a lawyer may enter into a business transaction with a client or acquire a pecuniary interest directly adverse to a client if: (1) the transaction and terms are fair and reasonable to the client and are fully disclosed and transmitted in writing in a manner that can be reasonably understood by the client; (2) the client is advised in writing of the desirability of seeking, and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek, the advice of independent legal counsel on the transaction; and (3) the client gives informed consent, in a writing signed by the client, to the essential terms of the transaction and the lawyer's role in the transaction.

The Florida Bar concluded that in each instance in which a lawyer wishes to purchase litigation cost protection insurance and shift the cost to the client, the lawyer must consider the ethics concerns set out in Rule 1.8(a). Florida Bar Staff Opinion 37289 (Revised 2018). The Florida Bar also concluded that, prior to seeking the client's informed consent, the lawyer must make "an objectively reasonable determination" that purchasing the insurance benefits the client prior to seeking the client's informed consent. Id.

Similarly, a North Carolina lawyer must satisfy these professional responsibilities, in addition to those implicated by Rule 1.5, when the lawyer intends to be reimbursed for the insurance premium from the judgment or settlement proceeds. The lawyer may include in a client's fee agreement a provision allowing the lawyer's purchase of litigation cost protection insurance and requiring reimbursement of the insurance premium from the client's funds in the event of a settlement or favorable trial verdict upon satisfying the following conditions:

(1) the amount to be charged to the client is not clearly excessive under the guidelines set out in Rule 1.5;

(2) the circumstances under which the client is responsible for reimbursement of the insurance premium are clearly communicated to the client and clearly set out in the written fee agreement;

(3) the lawyer fully explains to the client what litigation cost protection insurance is, why the lawyer believes a litigation cost protection policy will serve the client's best interests, and that other lawyers may advance the client's costs without charging the client the cost of a litigation cost protection policy;

(4) the lawyer provides the client with the opportunity to review the litigation cost protection policy;

(5) the transaction and terms are fair and reasonable to the client pursuant to the guidelines set out in Rule 1.8(a);

(6) the client is advised in writing of the desirability of seeking, and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek, the advice of independent legal counsel regarding the arrangement;

(7) the lawyer obtains the client's informed consent in writing at the beginning of the representation; prior to seeking the required informed consent, the lawyer has to make an objectively reasonable determination that purchasing the insurance benefits the client; and

(8) the lawyer does not allow the terms or availability of coverage under the insurance policy to adversely affect the lawyer's independent professional judgment, the client-lawyer relationship (including the client's ultimate authority as to settlement), or the client's continuing best interests.

2018 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

October 26, 2018

Online Review Solicitation Service July 26, 2018

Opinion rules that, subject to certain conditions, a lawyer may participate in an online service for soliciting client reviews that collects and posts positive reviews to increase the lawyer's ranking on internet search engines.

Repsight.com is an online service that offers to help lawyers accumulate more positive client reviews. Repsight contends that positive client reviews give law firms added credibility with potential customers and help increase search rankings in Google searches. For a monthly fee, Repsight will contact a client via text or email to solicit a review from the client. The number of contacts made by Repsight is based on the amount of the monthly fee.

After completing legal services for a client, the lawyer will log in to Repsight.com and enter the client's email address or phone number and presses the "send" button. Repsight then sends the client a text or an email thanking the client for the client's business and asks the client to click a button to rate the lawyer's services. The client then chooses between 1 and 5 stars, with 5 stars being the highest rating. If the client rates the lawyer 3 stars or less, Repsight redirects the client to a private feedback form. The lawyer will receive the client's comments, but the comments will not be posted on the lawyer's Google review page. If the client gives the lawyer a 4- or 5-star review, the client is redirected to the lawyer's Google review page (with 5 stars already populated) so that the client can leave the lawyer a positive review.

Inquiry #1:

May a lawyer participate in the Repsight service?

Opinion #1:

Yes, if certain conditions are met.

A client's name and contact information are confidential and may not be revealed unless the client gives informed consent. Rule 1.6(a). Before the lawyer may provide a client's contact information to Repsight, the lawyer must obtain the client's informed consent. "Informed consent" denotes the agreement by a person to a proposed course of conduct after the lawyer has communicated adequate information and explanation appropriate to the circumstances. Rule 1.0(f).

To obtain the client's informed consent and to avoid misrepresentation, the lawyer must explain to the client that the lawyer uses Repsight. The lawyer is also obligated to disclose Repsight's process, to wit: the lawyer pays a monthly fee for Repsight services; the lawyer will provide the client's name and contact information to Repsight after the representation has concluded; Repsight will contact the client regarding the review; only 4- and 5-star reviews will be posted on Google and other internet search engines; and 3 stars or less reviews will be shared with the lawyer, but will not be posted by Repsight or the lawyer anywhere on the internet. See Rule 1.4; Rule 8.4(c).

Inquiry #2:

If a lawyer obtains the client's informed consent to provide the client's contact information to Repsight, must the lawyer post or direct Repsight to post all reviews, including reviews of 3 stars or less?

Opinion #2:

No, provided the lawyer does not deceive the client about the treatment of negative reviews and adequately explains that reviews of 3 stars or less will not be posted on the internet. See Rule 8.4(c).

Inquiry #3:

When a client gives a lawyer a negative review, the lawyer may contact the client to address the client's concerns. If after the communication the client agrees to change the negative review and provide a 4- or 5-star review, may the lawyer direct Repsight to contact the client to obtain and post the revised review?

Opinion #3:

Yes, subject to certain conditions. There can be no quid pro quo for the revised review. See Rule 7.2(b). Also, the lawyer may not solicit, encourage, or assist in the posting of fake, false, or misleading reviews. See Rule 8.4(c). Finally, the lawyer may not threaten, bully, or harass the client to provide a positive 4- or 5-star review. See Rule 8.4, cmt. [5]. See generally 2018 FEO 1.

2018 Formal Ethics Opinion 8

October 25, 2019

Advertising Inclusion in Self-Laudatory List or Organization

Opinion rules that a lawyer may advertise the lawyer's inclusion in a list or membership in an organization that bestows a laudatory designation on the lawyer subject to certain conditions.

Editor's Note: 2007 FEO 14, Advertising Inclusion in List in North Carolina Super Lawyers and Other Similar Publications, was withdrawn by the State Bar Council on October 25, 2019 upon adoption by the Council of the opinion below.

Inquiry:

Numerous companies and organizations provide lawyers with the opportunity to be included in a list or to become members of a group that describes itself with self-laudatory terms and/or bestows self-provided accolades to its members. Examples of such lists or groups are those that describe their included lawyers as "best," "super," and "distinction." Lawyers then advertise their inclusion in these groups or lists to consumers.

Do the Rules of Professional Conduct permit a lawyer to advertise their inclusion in such self-laudatory groups or lists?

Opinion:

Yes, subject to certain conditions.

Rule 7.1(a) prohibits a lawyer from making false or misleading communications about himself or his services. The rule defines a false or misleading communication as a communication that contains a material misrepresentation of fact or law, or omits a necessary fact; one that is likely to create an unjustified expectation about results the lawyer can achieve; or one that compares the lawyer's services with other lawyers' services, unless the comparison can be factually substantiated.

Rule 7.1 derives from a long line of Supreme Court cases holding that lawyer advertising is commercial speech that is protected by the First Amendment and subject to limited state regulation. In Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, 433 U.S. 350 (1977), the Supreme Court first declared that First Amendment protection extends to lawyer advertising as a form of commercial speech. The Court held that a state may not constitutionally prohibit a lawyer's advertisement for fees for routine legal services although it may prohibit commercial expression that is false, deceptive, or misleading and may impose reasonable restrictions as to time, place, and manner. Id. at 383-84. Subsequent Supreme Court opinions clarified that the commercial speech doctrine set forth in Central Hudson Gas & Electric Corporation v. Public Service Commission of N.Y., 447 U.S. 557 (1980), is applicable to lawyer advertising. See In re R.M.J., 455 U.S. 191 (1982). Specifically, a state may absolutely prohibit inherently misleading speech or speech that has been proven to be misleading; however, other restrictions are appropriate only where they serve a substantial state interest, directly advance that interest, and are no more restrictive than reasonably necessary to serve that interest. Id. at 200-04.

Thirteen years after Bates, in P*eel v. Attorney Registration and Disciplinary Commission of Illinois*, 496 U.S. 91 (1990), a plurality of the Supreme Court concluded that a lawyer has a constitutional right, under the standards applicable to commercial speech, to advertise his certification as a trial specialist by the National Board of Trial Advocacy (NBTA). The Court found NBTA to be a "bona fide organization," with "objectively clear" standards, which had made inquiry into Peel's fitness for certification and which had not "issued certificates indiscriminately for a price." Id. at 102, 110. If a state is concerned that a lawyer's claim to certification may be a sham, the state can require the lawyer "to demonstrate that such certification is available to all lawyers who meet objective and consistently applied standards relevant to practice in a particular area of the law." Id. at 109. In concluding that the NBTA certification advertised by Peel in his letterhead was neither actually nor potentially misleading, the Court emphasized "the principle that disclosure of truthful, relevant information is more likely to make a positive contribution to decision-making than is concealment of such information." Id. at 108.

Ibanez v. Florida Department of Business and Professional Regulation, Board of Accountancy, 512 U.S. 136 (1994), similarly held that a state may not prohibit a CPA from advertising her credential as a "Certified Financial Planner" (CFP) where that designation was obtained from a private organization. As in Peel, the Court found that a state may not ban statements that are not actually or inherently misleading such as a statement of certification, including the CFP designation, by a "bona fide organization." Id. at 145. The Court dismissed concerns that a consumer will be mislead because he or she cannot verify the accuracy or value of the designation by observing that a consumer may call the CFP Board of Standards to obtain this information. Id.

The question here is whether advertising one's membership in a group or inclusion on a list of lawyers that implies that the lawyer is, for example, "best" or "super" or "distinguished" is misleading because the term creates the unjustified expectation that the lawyer can achieve results that an ordinary lawyer cannot or compares the lawyer's services with the services of other lawyers without factual substantiation. When a potential consumer of legal services sees the words "super" or "distinguished" associated with a lawyer by way of a bestowed award or accolade purporting to pertain to legal services, the consumer may view these awards or accolades as evidence of a lawyer's competence and achievement. Therefore, to avoid misleading consumers, a lawyer may advertise such accolades or inclusion in self-laudatory groups or lists only when certain conditions are met.

First, no compensation may be paid by the lawyer, or the lawyer's firm, for the award or accolade being bestowed upon the lawyer or for inclusion in the group or listing. Although a lawyer may pay the reasonable costs of advertisements as a result of inclusion, see Rule 7.2(b) and 2018 FEO 1, marketing or advertising fees that must be paid prior to the lawyer's inclusion in the group or listing or the lawyer's receipt of the accolade or award effectively become compensation required from the lawyer for inclusion or for the accolade. As such, the accolade, award, or inclusion is misleading in violation of Rule 7.1(a) because it is bestowed, at least in part, because of a lawyer's willingness and ability to pay, and not for reasons that are objective, verifiable, and bona fide. After the award, accolade, or inclusion has been granted, a lawyer may pay the reasonable costs of advertisements concerning the inclusion. However, marketing or advertising fees charged by the self-laudatory group that serve as a barrier to the lawyer's inclusion in the group or receipt of an accolade are not permissible.

Second, before advertising the inclusion or any award associated with inclusion, the lawyer must ascertain that the organization conferring the award is a bona fide organization that made adequate and individualized inquiry into the lawyer's qualifications for the inclusion or award. The selection methodology must be based upon objective, verifiable, and consistently applied factors relating to a lawyer's qualifications (including but not limited to a lawyer's years of practice, types of experience, peer review, professional discipline record, publications and/or presentations, and client and other third-party testimonials) that would be recognized by a reasonable lawyer as establishing a legitimate basis for determining whether the lawyer has the knowledge, skill, experience, or expertise indicated by the designated membership.

Third, any advertisement by the lawyer of his inclusion in a self-laudatory group or list must also contain an explanation of the standards for inclusion or provide the consumer with information on how to obtain the inclusion standards. See Bates, 433 U.S. at 375. The explanation of the standards for inclusion – wherever located – must be such that a potential consumer of legal services can reasonably determine how much value to place in the lawyer's inclusion in such group or list. Additionally, the advertisement must state only that the lawyer was included in the list, and not suggest that the lawyer has the attribute(s) conferred by the group or list. This requirement applies equally to groups or lists that contain a superlative in the name of the group or list itself, such as "super" or "best," and groups or lists that do not contain superlatives in the name of the group or list but bestow such superlatives on its included lawyers through the group's or list's marketing materials (including its online presence). When the group or list inclusion may create unjustified expectations, such as the expectation that a lawyer obtains a high-dollar verdict in every case, the advertisement must also include a disclaimer providing notice that similar results are not guaranteed, and that each case is different and must be evaluated separately See 99 FEO 7, 2000 FEO 1, and 2003 FEO 3. Lastly, the advertisement must indicate the year(s) in which the lawyer received the award or was a member of the organization.

A lawyer must determine whether a particular group or list satisfies each of these requirements before advertising their inclusion in the group or list, and a lawyer has a continuing obligation to ensure the group or list remains compliant with the requirements of this opinion upon each renewal. If all requirements are met, the lawyer may advertise his inclusion in the group or list.

2019 Formal Ethics Opinion 1

April 26, 2019

Lawyer as an Intermediary

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not jointly represent clients and prepare a separation agreement.

Inquiry:

Lawyer represents clients in domestic relations matters. Lawyer has been contacted by a married couple wishing to separate and then later obtain a divorce. No litigation has been initiated. The married couple agree on the terms of separation. The couple does not have sufficient funds to pay two lawyers and wants Lawyer to prepare the separation agreement for both parties. May Lawyer prepare a separation agreement for both parties?

Opinion:

No. Rule 1.7 provides that a lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation involves a concurrent conflict of interest. A concurrent conflict of interest exists if the representation of one client will be directly adverse to another client, or the representation of one or more clients may be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client. Rule 1.7(a).

Rule 1.7(b) recognizes that a conflict can be resolved by client consent. However, some conflicts are nonconsentable, meaning that the lawyer involved cannot properly ask for such agreement or provide representation on the basis of the client's consent. Rule 1.7, cmt. [14]. The commentary to Rule 1.7 further provides,

> Consentability is typically determined by considering whether the interests of the clients will be adequately protected if the clients are permitted to give their informed consent to representation burdened by a conflict of interest. Thus, under paragraph (b)(1), representation is prohibited if in the circumstances the lawyer cannot reasonably conclude that the lawyer will be able to provide competent and diligent representation. See Rule 1.1 (competence) and Rule 1.3 (diligence).

Rule 1.7, cmt. [15].

In 2013 FEO 14, the Ethics Committee determined that, in most instances, common representation in a commercial loan closing is nonconsentable. Common representation was found to be inappropriate because of the "numerous opportunities for a lawyer to negotiate on behalf of the parties" and "numerous opportunities for an actual conflict to arise between the borrower and the lender." 2013 FEO 14.

These same issues and concerns are present in the case of a separation agreement. Although the parties may believe they have agreed on the terms of separation, there are potentially numerous opportunities for Lawyer to negotiate on behalf of the parties regarding, inter alia, custody, property division, and family support. In the event an actual conflict arises, the prejudice to the parties would be substantial.

Lawyer has a professional duty to provide competent and diligent representation to each client and ensure that the legal interests of each client are protected. Rules 1.1 and 1.3. When the clients are legally adverse to each other in the same matter and there are numerous opportunities for Lawyer to negotiate on behalf of the parties, impartiality is rarely possible. See 2013 FEO 14. Lawyer, therefore, cannot adequately advise one client without compromising the interest of the other client. Because Lawyer cannot adequately represent the interests of each client, Lawyer has a nonconsentable conflict and cannot prepare the separation agreement for both parties.

2019 Formal Ethics Opinion 2

April 26, 2019

Conditions Imposed on Lawyer by Client's ERISA Plan

Opinion rules that a lawyer may not agree to terms in an ERISA plan agreement that usurp client's authority as to the representation.

Lawyer represents an injured worker in a denied workers' compensation claim. Client participated in a self-funded health benefits plan (Plan) though his workplace. The Plan was established under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA), 29 U.S.C.A. § 1001 et seq. As a precondition to issuing payments for Client's medical expenses, the Plan requested that Client and Lawyer sign an Agreement that includes the provisions described below.

The Agreement between the Plan and Lawyer's client (referred to as "the promisor") sets out that the promisor was injured on the job; that the promisor is currently proceeding or promises to initiate a claim against his employer; that the promisor's claim is disputed; and that the promisor is in need of benefits under the Plan.

The Agreement states that, as a condition of receiving Plan benefits, the promisor agrees to fully prosecute his pending claim and agrees not to abandon or settle his claim without the written approval of the Plan. The Agreement states that the promises made in the Agreement are binding upon the promisor and the promisor's attorney and requires the signature of the promisor's attorney.

Inquiry:

Do the Rules of Professional Conduct permit Lawyer to agree not to abandon or settle the Client's claim without the approval of the Plan?

Opinion:

No. Lawyer may not agree to any terms in the Agreement that contradict Lawyer's professional responsibility to abide by Client's directives regarding the representation as set out in Rule 1.2.

The Agreement requires Client and his counsel to fully prosecute the pending workers' compensation claim and to obtain written approval from the Plan before abandoning or settling the claim. As to Lawyer, these requirements conflict with Lawyer's professional responsibilities to Client as set out in Rule 1.2. Pursuant to Rule 1.2, Lawyer has an ethical obligation to "abide by a client's decisions concerning the objectives of representation" and "abide by a client's decision whether to settle a matter." If Client signs the Agreement and subsequently decides to abandon or settle the matter without the Plan's approval, Lawyer has a professional obligation to follow Client's directives. Lawyer may not agree to the conditions in the Agreement that usurp Client's authority as to the objectives of the representation.

2019 Formal Ethics Opinion 3

April 26, 2019

Engaging in Intimae Relationship with Opposing Counsel

Opinion rules that an ongoing sexual relationship between opposing counsel creates a conflict of interest in violation of Rule 1.7(a).

Introduction:

The Rules of Professional Conduct apply to all lawyers in their various representative capacities. Accordingly, although this opinion is based upon a scenario involving representation in a criminal matter, the conduct at issue may threaten the integrity of both the criminal and civil justice systems, and therefore the analysis contained herein is applicable to lawyers in both criminal and civil matters.

Lawyer A is an assistant district attorney in District Q. Lawyer B represents criminal defendants in District Q. Lawyer A and Lawyer B engage in a sexual relationship over a one- to three-month period. During the relationship, Lawyer A prosecutes several cases in which Lawyer B represents the defendants. Lawyer A and Lawyer B do not inform their respective clients or superiors about the relationship.

Inquiry #1:

Does Lawyer A's and Lawyer B's conduct violate the Rules of Professional Conduct?

Opinion #1:

Yes. Rule 1.7(a) states that "a lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation involves a concurrent conflict of interest." The Rule goes on to say that a concurrent conflict of interest exists "if the representation of one or more clients may be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client, a former client, or a third person, or by a personal interest of the lawyer." Rule 1.7(a)(2). Rule 1.7 addresses situations where there is both an actual material limitation and a potential material limitation. See id. ("...may be materially limited...") (emphasis added). Comment 8 to Rule 1.7 states that "[t]he mere possibility of subsequent harm does not itself preclude the representation or require disclosure and consent." Instead, the critical questions to consider in determining whether a material limitation exists as a result of a personal interest during a representation are "[1] the likelihood that a difference in interests will eventuate and, if it does, [2] whether it will materially interfere with the lawyer's independent professional judgment in considering alternatives or foreclose courses of action that reasonably should be pursued on behalf of the client." Rule 1.7, cmt. [8]. Accordingly, determining whether a materially limiting personal interest exists depends on an examination of the surrounding circumstances of the situation at issue. If a materially limiting personal interest exists, representation may only continue if the lawyer satisfies the terms of Rule 1.7(b), including that the lawyer reasonably believes that s/he will be able to provide competent and diligent representation to the affected client, and the lawyer discloses the conflicting interest to his/her client and obtain the client's written, informed consent to continue in the representation. See also Rule 1.4(b) ("A lawyer shall explain a matter to the extent reasonably necessary to permit the client to make informed decisions regarding the representation.").

We have previously opined that spouses cannot participate in a matter as opposing counsel unless their relationship is disclosed to the affected clients and the clients provide written, informed consent to continue in the representation. See RPC 11. Other jurisdictions have similarly determined spousal relationships between opposing counsel constitute a conflict of interest. See generally Mich. Formal Op. R-3 (1989) ("A lawyer whose spouse represents the opposing party in a case may not continue to handle the case unless the parties are informed of the relationship between the lawyers and consent to continued representation."). At least one jurisdiction (New York) found that dating relationships between opposing counsel can constitute a conflict of interest because "[a] dating relationship between adversaries is inconsistent with the independence of professional judgment[.]" N.Y. State Bar Ass'n Op. 660 (1993). ("Whatever hereafter may be said of friendships in varying degrees, we believe that a frequent dating relationship is clearly over the line that separates ethically cognizable conflicting interests from those which are not.") That same opinion found that criminal cases required heightened scrutiny in evaluating potential conflicts of interest resulting from personal relationships to preserve the integrity of the criminal justice system. Id. ("Irrespective of the subjective intent of the prosecutor and defense counsel, and regardless of howsoever scrupulous they may be in the conduct of their professional obligations, the appearance of partiality in the administration of justice is so strong that a couple who date frequently should not be permitted to appear opposite one another in criminal cases.")

In Commonwealth v. Croken, the Supreme Court of Massachusetts vacated a trial court's denial of the defendant's motion for a new trial based in part on the question of whether the defendant's counsel engaged in a conflict of interest by participating in an intimate relationship with a member of the prosecuting office during the representation. Commonwealth v. Croken, 432 Mass. 266, 277 (2000). In reaching its conclusion, the court held:

> A lawyer's personal interests surely include his interest in maintaining amicable relations with his relatives, his spouse, and anyone with whom he is comparably intimate. This interest is, of course, often significantly pecuniary in character, but it also has irreducible emotional and moral dimensions, and it heavily bears on how any ordinary human being goes about making important decisions. It follows that in a case where a lawyer's representation of a client may be significantly limited by his ties to his relatives and intimate companions, professional ethics are implicated just as they would in a case where the lawyer represents a second client with litigation interests potentially adverse to those of the first client....We do hold that, where a criminal defense lawyer represents a client and a close relative or an intimate companion is a colleague of the prosecutor who seeks to convict the client, the requirements of [Rule 1.7] must be met.

Id. at 273.

We find the reasoning expressed in the New York and Massachusetts opinions persuasive. The nature of a continuing, sexually intimate relationship between opposing counsel during an ongoing dispute creates a personal interest for the participating lawyers that materially limits the lawyers' respective abilities to exercise independent judgment, preserve confidences, and otherwise render unencumbered representation. Such a relationship could also detrimentally impact the profession and the administration of justice, as the relationship could serve as grounds for post-conviction or post-judgment relief, as well as contribute to the negative image of lawyers. As noted in comment 1 to Rule 1.7, "Loyalty and independent judgment are essential elements in the lawyer's relationship to a client." A client should be informed of the possibility that his or her lawyer may be professionally or emotionally compromised due to the lawyer's ongoing sexual relationship with the opposing lawyer.

This opinion does not undertake the task of determining the point at which a personal relationship with opposing counsel triggers the protection afforded to clients under Rule 1.7(a)(2). However, under the circumstances presented in this inquiry, a lawyer's representation of a client is materially limited by the lawyer's personal interest in an ongoing sexual relationship with opposing counsel, and that conflict of interest requires the participating lawyers to satisfy the conditions of Rule 1.7(b) in order to continue the representation, including disclosing the relationship to their clients and obtaining their clients' written, informed consent. The personal interest conflict is not imputed to members of the lawyer's firm or office under Rule 1.10 so long as the conflict "does not present a significant risk of materially limiting the representation of the client by the remaining lawyers in the firm." Rule 1.10(a).

Inquiry #2:

Assume Lawyer B notifies his client(s) and the provisions of Rule 1.7(b) were met. Does Lawyer A have an obligation to obtain such consent? If so, from whom?

Opinion #2:

Yes. Lawyer A also has a conflict and must satisfy the requirements of Rule 1.7(b) to continue in the representation. See Opinion #1. Elected district attorneys are entitled to enact their own internal office policies in accordance with the law of this state. The identification of the person or governmental body to whom the assistant district attorney's report should be made is a legal and policy question that is beyond the purview of this committee.

Inquiry #3:

Would the answer to Inquiry #1 change if the relationship was a more long-standing, emotionally involved relationship?

Opinion #3:

No. The relationship described in this inquiry is more akin to a marital relationship and therefore must be disclosed to the client to continue with the representation, in addition to complying with the other requirements of Rule 1.7(b). See RPC 11; see also N.Y. State Bar Ass'n Op. 660 (1993). The added circumstance of a long-standing, emotionally involved relationship enlarges the personal interest conflict and creates a likelihood of material limitation in violation of Rule 1.7(a)(2).

2019 Formal Ethics Opinion 5

October 25, 2019

Receipt of Virtual Currency in Law Practice

Opinion rules that a lawyer may receive virtual currency as a flat fee for legal services, provided the fee is not clearly excessive and the terms of Rule 1.8(a) are satisfied. A lawyer may not, however, accept virtual currency as entrusted funds to be billed against or to be held for the benefit of the lawyer, the client, or any third party.

Introduction:

Virtual currency[1] – most notably, Bitcoin – is increasingly used for conducting business and service-related transactions.[2] Although advocates for and users of virtual currency treat these assets as actual currency, the Internal Revenue Service in 2014 classified virtual currency as property, not recognized currency. See IRS Notice 2014-21, https://www.irs.gov/pub/irs-drop/n-14-21.pdf. Accordingly, for the purpose of determining a lawyer's professional responsibility in conducting transactions related to her law practice using virtual currency, this opinion adopts the IRS's position and views virtual currencies as property, rather than actual currency.

Inquiry #1:

Client wants to retain Lawyer for representation in a pending matter. Lawyer charges Client a flat fee for the representation. Client wants to pay Lawyer using virtual currency. May Lawyer accept virtual currency from Client as a flat fee in exchange for legal services?

Opinion #1:

Yes, provided the fee is not clearly excessive and the lawyer complies with the requirements in Rule 1.8(a).

A flat fee is a "fee paid at the beginning of a representation for specified legal services on a discrete legal task or isolated transaction to be completed within a reasonable amount of time[.]" 2008 FEO 10. With client consent, a flat fee is considered "earned immediately and paid to the lawyer or deposited in the firm operating account[.]" Id. Rule 1.5(a) prohibits a lawyer from making an agreement for, charging, or collecting an illegal or clearly excessive fee. Comment 4 to Rule 1.5 states that "a fee paid in property instead of money may be subject to the requirements of Rule 1.8(a) because such fees often have the essential qualities of a business transaction with the client." Rule 1.8(a) prohibits a lawyer from entering into a business transaction with a client unless the following provisions are met:

(1) the transaction and terms on which the lawyer acquires the interest are fair and reasonable to the client and are fully disclosed and transmitted in writing in a manner that can be reasonably understood by the client;

(2) the client is advised in writing of the desirability of seeking and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of independent legal counsel on the transaction; and

(3) the client gives informed consent, in a writing signed by the client, to the essential terms of the transaction and the lawyer's role in the transaction, including whether the lawyer is representing the client in the transaction.

Rule 1.8(a)(1) – (3).

As of the date of this opinion, the value of virtual currencies fluctuates significantly and unpredictably from day to day. Considering this extreme fluctuation, any transaction involving virtual currencies inherently involves a great deal of risk by the parties on the ultimate value of the services rendered. Without an express agreement between Lawyer and Client on when the valuation of the virtual currency is determined, Lawyer could receive an inappropriate windfall in the form of extreme overpayment for legal services. Accordingly, considering the nature of the property at issue in this exchange, Client's payment of virtual currency to Lawyer for legal services has "the essential qualities of a business transaction with the client." Rule 1.5, cmt. 4. As such, Lawyer must comply with the requirements of Rule 1.8(a) when conducting a transaction wherein legal services are exchanged for virtual currency. Therefore:

1. Lawyer must ensure the terms of the transaction are fair and reasonable to Client, and Lawyer must fully disclose the terms in writing to Client in a manner that can be reasonably understood by Client. To ensure a flat fee, which is earned upon receipt (see 2008 FEO 10), is not clearly excessive under Rule 1.5, and for the purposes of any potential required refunds following withdrawal or termination from the representation, Lawyer and Client must reach a mutually agreed upon determination of the value of the virtual currency exchanged at the time of the transaction. That valuation must be included as part of the written terms of the transaction;

2. Lawyer must advise Client in writing of the desirability of seeking independent legal counsel on the transaction, and Lawyer must give Client a reasonable opportunity to obtain that counsel; and

3. Lawyer must obtain Client's written, informed consent to the essential terms of the transaction as well as Lawyer's role in the transaction. Although Rule 1.8(a)(3) contemplates that Lawyer could represent Client in this transaction, Lawyer's potentially significant monetary interest in acquiring the virtual currency suggests that Lawyer may not represent Client in the transaction.

This opinion does not reach the legal issues surrounding an individual's receipt of and transacting in virtual currency. Before transacting in virtual currency, lawyers should apprise themselves of the legal ramifications surrounding the use of virtual currency, including potential tax and criminal implications. As with other forms of payment, lawyers should take the appropriate steps to ensure any virtual currency received is not the product of or otherwise connected to illegal activity.

Inquiry #2:

May Lawyer accept virtual currency from a third party on behalf of Client as a flat fee in exchange for legal services rendered?

Opinion #2:

Yes. Lawyer may receive compensation from a third party for the benefit of Client provided that a) Client provides informed consent to Lawyer regarding the third party's virtual currency payment, b) there is no interference with Lawyer's independence of professional judgment, or with the client-lawyer relationship, and c) information obtained by Lawyer during the client-lawyer relationship remains confidential and protected in accordance with Rule 1.6. See Rule 1.8(f). See also Answer #1.

Inquiry #3:

Client wants to retain Lawyer for representation in a pending matter. Lawyer plans to charge Client an hourly rate for the representation, and Lawyer wants Client to deposit a set amount of virtual currency with Lawyer to be billed against as work is completed by Lawyer. May Lawyer accept virtual currency from Client as an advance payment, against which Lawyer will bill Lawyer's hourly rate?

Opinion #3:

No. An advance payment is "a deposit by the client of money that will be billed against, usually on an hourly basis, as legal services are provided[.]" 2008 FEO 10. The advance payment is "not earned until legal services are rendered" and therefore must be deposited in the lawyer's trust account, with the unearned portion of the advance payment refunded to the client upon termination of the client-lawyer relationship. Id. Virtual currency is property and not actual currency; accordingly, virtual currency cannot be deposited in a lawyer trust account or fiduciary account in accordance with Rule 1.15-2. Instead, virtual currency – and all other non-currency property received as entrusted property – must be "promptly identified, labeled as property of the person or entity for whom it is to be held, and placed in a safe deposit box or other suitable place of safekeeping." Rule 1.15-2(d).

Generally, virtual currency is received, held or maintained in, and distributed from an individual's computer (referred to as "cold storage") or in a digital "wallet" typically maintained by an individual through a digital asset exchange. Deidre A. Liedel, The Taxation of Bitcoin: How the IRS Views Cryptocurrencies, 66 Drake L. Rev. 107, 111-12 (2018). Holders of virtual currency access and exchange their virtual currency through the use of the holder's public and private keys associated with their virtual currency activity. See generally Lisa Miller, Getting Paid in Bitcoin, 41 Los Angeles Lawyer 18, 19-20 (December 2018); Carol Goforth, The Lawyer's Cryptionary: A Resource for Talking to Clients about Crypto-transactions, 41 Campbell L. Rev. 47, 112-13 (2019). Due to the decentralized nature of virtual currency, exchanges of virtual currency from one account to another cannot be reversed, and a virtual currency holder cannot recover a lost private key to access his or her virtual currency.

The methods in which virtual currency are held are not yet suitable places of safekeeping for the purpose of protecting entrusted client property under Rule 1.15-2(d). Rule 1.15-2(d)'s reference to "a safe deposit box or other suitable place of safekeeping" demonstrates that the "suitable place of safekeeping" referenced in the Rule is one that ensures confidentiality for the client and provides exclusive control for the lawyer charged with maintaining the property, as well as the ability of the client or lawyer to rely on institutional backing to access the safeguarded property through appropriate verification should the lawyer's ability to access the property disappear (be it through the lawyer's misplacement of a physical key, or the lawyer's unavailability due to death or disability). The environment in which virtual currency presently exists, however, does not afford similar features that allow clients to confidently place entrusted virtual currency in the hands of their lawyers. A February 2019 report found that even knowledgeable users of virtual currency experienced a variety of complications and concerning issues in exchanging virtual currency that threatened the execution of and confidence in the exchange, including sending virtual currency to the wrong individual by inputting the wrong public key, losing their own private key (thereby rendering the user's virtual currency permanently inaccessible), or being subject to phishing attacks or other attempted hacks to illegally access their digital wallets. See Foundation for Interwallet Operability, Blockchain Usability Report (February 2019), https://fio.foundation/wp-content/themes/fio/dist/files/blockchain-usability-report-2019.pdf ("While the blockchain industry has grown dramatically over the last year, usability is clearly still an ongoing struggle and the use of blockchain in actual commerce and utility is still very limited. Blockchain transactions are, by definition, immutable. With immutable transactions, users must have extremely high confidence that transactions are occurring as intended, with the right counter party, for the right amount and for the right type of token. Today – blockchain is still far from achieving that high standard."). Any virtual currency received from a client by a lawyer – including lawyers who are experienced in handling and exchanging virtual currency – is subject to being permanently lost with no recourse available to secure the client's property as a result of a lawyer's private key becoming inaccessible, a lawyer's mistaken input of a public key destination for a transfer of virtual currency, or a sophisticated hack of the lawyer's virtual wallet.

This opinion does not preclude the possibility that, in time, digital wallets and other methods in which virtual currency may be held and exchanged could improve in terms of security and accessibility. Such improvements may warrant reconsideration of this opinion. This opinion also does not address the difficulty in reconciling the frequent and significant fluctuation in value of virtual currency while held by a lawyer during the representation, nor does the opinion address the need to segregate clients' virtual currency or the difficulty associated with investigating claims of lawyer misappropriation of a client's virtual currency. These concerns may present further barriers to a lawyer's ability under the Rules of Professional Conduct to handle virtual currency in an entrusted capacity. However, as of the date of this opinion, and with the primary interest of the State Bar being the protection of the public, the methods in which virtual currency are held and exchanged are not yet suitable places of safekeeping as required by Rule 1.15-2(d) for the proper safeguarding of virtual currency as entrusted client property. Accordingly, a lawyer may not receive, maintain, or disburse entrusted virtual currency.

Inquiry #4:

Client has retained Lawyer for a pending matter. Client and opposing party settle their dispute. As part of the settlement, Client agrees to provide opposing party with a set amount of virtual currency. Client and opposing party ask Lawyer to hold Client's virtual currency in trust for the benefit of opposing party via Lawyer's digital wallet until all settlement terms are satisfied, at which point Lawyer will transfer Client's virtual currency to opposing party. May Lawyer accept virtual currency as entrusted property to be held for the benefit of a third party?

Opinion #4:

No, a lawyer may not receive, maintain, or disburse entrusted virtual currency. See Answer #3.

Endnotes

1. This opinion uses the Internal Revenue Service's term "virtual currency" in referring to cryptocurrency and other financially-related digital assets.

2. In light of the abundance of information available on the topics of virtual currency and blockchain technology, this opinion will not recite a detailed overview of technological backgrounds or technical operations of these topics, but instead will presume a basic level of familiarity and understanding with the topic by the reader. For background information on these topics, consider the following resources:

   Nebraska Ethics Advisory Opinion No. 17-03 (2017);

   Deidre A. Liedel, The Taxation of Bitcoin: How the IRS Views Cryptocurrencies, 66 Drake L. Rev. 107, 111-12 (2018);

   Lisa Miller, Getting Paid in Bitcoin, 41 Los Angeles Lawyer 18, 19-20 (December 2018); and Carol Goforth, The Lawyer's Cryptionary: A Resource for Talking to Clients about Crypto-transactions, 41 Campbell L. Rev. 47, 112-13 (2019).

2019 Formal Ethics Opinion 6

October 25, 2019

Offering Incentive to Engage with Law Practice's Social Networking Sites

Opinion rules that, depending on the function of the social media platform, offering an incentive to engage with a law practice's social media account is misleading and constitutes an improper exchange for a recommendation of the law practice's services.

Inquiry:

Lawyer maintains an account for his law practice on various social media platforms. These platforms allow social media users to "connect" with other users, including both individuals and business-related entities, through the use of "likes," "follows," and "subscriptions". Some platforms also allow users to comment on posted content or share posted content on their own social networks.

To increase his social media exposure, Lawyer wants to offer a prize incentive to anyone who connects or interacts with any of his social media platforms. All users who connect or interact with Lawyer's law practice social media account will be entered into a drawing for a prize. The giveaway is open to all users of the social media platform used by Lawyer.

May Lawyer offer an incentive to all social media users to connect or interact with Lawyer's law practice social media account?

Opinion:

No. If a social media platform will broadcast or display a user's connection or interaction with Lawyer's law practice social media account to other users of the platform, Lawyer may not offer prize chances in exchange for activity on or with his social media accounts.

Generally, lawyers may not give anything of value to a person for recommending the lawyer's services. Rule 7.2(b). Certain social media platforms, such as Facebook, allow users to connect with or otherwise follow a business or service entity's social media account by "liking" the entity on the social media platform. Similarly, users may also comment on or share social media posts made by the business or service entity's account. The user's decision to "like" or follow the entity and the user's comments on the entity's posts are then displayed not only within the user's social media feed, but can also be displayed on the feeds of other users who have previously connected with that user. Also, when an individual "likes" a business' social media page, that business' posts/advertisements may appear in the individual's social media feed and may appear in the news feeds of the individual's other "friends" or connections with a caption such as "Jane Smith likes No Name law firm."

Without further context, other users could interpret an individual "liking" a law practice as a personal endorsement and recommendation of that law practice. If the social media platform broadcasts the user's "like" of the law practice on other users' social media feeds, Lawyer's offer of an entry in a giveaway for a prize to social media users in exchange for the user "liking" the law practice's social media account violates Rule 7.2(b).

Additionally, a lawyer may not make a false or misleading communication about the lawyer or the lawyer's services. Rule 7.1(a). A communication is false or misleading if it contains a material misrepresentation of fact or law, or omits a fact necessary to make the statement considered as a whole not materially misleading. Id. The purpose behind Rule 7.2(b)'s prohibition on offering something of value in exchange for recommending services is to ensure that recommendations for a lawyer's services are based upon actual experiences or legitimate opinions of the lawyer's service, rather than financial incentive. The displayed "like" of a law practice may indicate some prior experience with the law practice or the personnel associated with the practice upon which the user's "liking" of the practice is based. Similarly, the credibility attributed to a particular social media account could be influenced by the number of account followers or subscribers. When the "like" or follow of a law practice's social media account is based upon the user's interest in a prize giveaway, the incentivized "like," follow, or other interaction received by Lawyer and displayed on social media is misleading in violation of Rule 7.1(a).

This opinion does not prohibit a lawyer or law firm from having a social media presence, or encouraging or inviting other users to like, share, follow, or otherwise interact with the lawyer's or law firm's social media account. Non-incentivized social media interactions are not prohibited.

2019 Formal Ethics Opinion 7

January 24, 2020

Attorney Eyes Only Disclosure Restriction

Opinion rules that a lawyer may agree to an "attorney eyes only" disclosure restriction.

Inquiry:

Lawyer represents Client in a wrongful discharge action and seeks production of discovery related to other employees (including employee personnel files). Due to the sensitivity of the information, opposing counsel agrees to produce the requested material only if Lawyer agrees to a "Stipulated Protective Order" containing an "Attorney Eyes Only" provision, which provides that opposing counsel may designate certain sensitive or highly confidential information as "Attorney Eyes Only," and discovery materials designated as "Attorney Eyes Only" may not be disclosed to Client.

Lawyer reasonably believes that the requested material is necessary for Lawyer to effectively advise and represent Client. Lawyer is concerned that refusal to accept the "Attorney Eyes Only" restriction will cause opposing counsel to object to the discovery request and/or move for a protective order, resulting in delayed production, entry of a protective order for the requested material, or an order denying Lawyer's request for the material.

May Lawyer agree to the Stipulated Protective Order containing the "Attorney Eyes Only" provision?

Opinion:

Yes. Rule 1.2(a)(3) allows a lawyer to "exercise his or her professional judgment to waive or fail to assert a right or position of the client." Accordingly, a lawyer may agree to receive information under certain restrictions such as an "attorney eyes only" condition if the lawyer determines that doing so is in the client's best interest and is in accordance with applicable law. In evaluating an "attorney eyes only" disclosure restriction, the lawyer should consider whether such a restriction is appropriate in the client's specific matter. If the lawyer concludes that such a restriction is reasonably necessary to obtain relevant materials to effectively represent his or her client, the lawyer can receive the information pursuant to the restrictive conditions, but the lawyer should consider negotiating for the least restrictive disclosure requirement. Nevertheless, the lawyer may rely on his or her professional judgment to receive the information pursuant to an "attorney eyes only" or other limiting agreement. Rule 1.2(a)(3).

A lawyer, however, should proceed with caution when evaluating an "attorney eyes only" agreement. The use of an "attorney eyes only" disclosure restriction may create a conflict of interest for the lawyer under Rule 1.7(a)(2) in that the lawyer's representation of the client may be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to opposing counsel via the disclosure restriction. This is particularly true in a criminal case, where a lawyer's duties under such an agreement could conflict with the client's statutory or constitutional rights to receive certain information. In addition, the lawyer must promptly inform his or her client of the discovery agreement. See Rule 1.4. If the lawyer and client cannot agree about the means to be used to accomplish the client's objectives, and the lawyer cannot reach a mutually acceptable resolution with the client, the lawyer may need to withdraw from the representation. Rule 1.2, cmt. [2].

Authorized Practice Advisory Opinions

Authorized Practice Advisory Opinion 2002-1

October 18, 2002

Revised January 26, 2012

On the Role of Laypersons in the Consummation of Residential Real Estate Transactions

The North Carolina State Bar has been requested to interpret the North Carolina unauthorized practice of law statutes (N.C. Gen. Stat. §§84-2.1 to 84-5) as they apply to residential real estate transactions. The State Bar issues the following authorized practice of law advisory opinion pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat. §84-37(f) after careful consideration and investigation. This opinion supersedes any prior opinions and decisions of any standing committee of the State Bar interpreting the unauthorized practice of law statutes to the extent those opinions and decisions are inconsistent with the conclusions expressed herein.As a result of its review of the activities of more than 50 nonlawyer service providers since the adoption of this opinion on January 24, 2003, including injunctions issued against two companies, the Committee is clarifying the opinion concerning issues that it has addressed since adoption of the opinion.

Issue 1:

May a nonlawyer handle a residential real estate closing for one or more of the parties to the transaction?

Opinion 1:

No. Residential real estate transactions typically involve several phases, including the following: reviewing the purchase agreement for any conditions that must be met before closing; abstracting titles; providing an opinion on title; applying for title insurance policies, including title insurance policies that may require tailored coverage to protect the interests of the lender, the owner, or both[1]; preparing legal documents, such as deeds (in the case of a purchase transaction), deeds of trust, and lien waivers or affidavits; interpreting and explaining documents implicating parties' legal rights, obligations, and options; resolving possible clouds on title and issues concerning the legal rights of parties to the transaction; overseeing execution and acknowledgement of documents in compliance with legal mandates; handling the recordation and cancellation of documents in accordance with North Carolina law; disbursing proceeds when legally permitted after legally-recognized funds are available and all closing conditions have been satisfied; and providing a post-closing final opinion of title for title insurance after all prior liens have been satisfied. These and other functions are sometimes called, collectively, the "closing" of the residential real estate transaction. As detailed below, the North Carolina General Assembly has determined specifically that only persons who are licensed to practice law in this state may handle most of these functions.[2]

A person who is not licensed to practice law in North Carolina and is not working under the direct supervision of an active member of the State Bar may not perform functions or services that constitute the practice of law.[3] Under the express language of N.C. Gen. Stat. §§84-2.1 and 84-4, a non-lawyer who is not working under the direct supervision of an active member of the State Bar would be engaged in the unauthorized practice of law if he or she performs any of the following functions for one or more of the parties to a residential real estate transaction: (i) preparing or aiding in preparation of deeds, deeds of trust, lien waivers or affidavits, or other legal documents; (ii) abstracting or passing upon titles; or (iii) advising or giving an opinion upon the legal rights or obligations of any person, firm, or corporation.Under the express language of N.C. Gen. Stat. § 84-4, it is unlawful for any person other than an active member of the State Bar to hold himself or herself out as competent or qualified to give legal advice or counsel or as furnishing any services that constitute the practice of law.Additionally, under N.C. Gen. Stat. § 84-5, a business entity, including a corporation or limited liability company, may not provide or offer to provide legal services or the services of attorneys to its customers even if the services are performed by licensed attorneys employed by the entity. See, Duke Power Co. v. Daniels, 86 N.C. App. 469, 358 S.E.2d 87 (1987); Gardner v. North Carolina State Bar, 316 N.C. 285, 341 S.E.2d 517 (1986), and State ex rel. Seawell v. Carolina Motor Club, Inc., 209 N.C. 624, 184 S.E. 540 (1936).

Accordingly, a nonlawyer is engaged in the unauthorized practice of law if he or she performs any of the following functions in connection with a residential real estate closing (identified only as examples):

1. Abstracts or provides an opinion on title to real property;

2. Explains the legal status of title to real estate, the legal effect of anything found in the chain of title, or the legal effect of an item reported as an exception in a title insurance commitment except as necessary to underwrite a policy of insurance and except that a licensed title insurer, agency, or agent may explain an underwriting decision to an insured or prospective insured, including providing the reason for such decision;

3. Explains or gives advice or counsel about the rights or responsibilities of parties concerning matters disclosed by a land survey under circumstances that require the exercise of legal judgment or that have implications with respect to a party's legal rights or obligations;

4. Provides a legal opinion, advice, or counsel in response to inquiries by any of the parties regarding legal rights or obligations of any person, firm, or corporation, including but not limited to the rights and obligations created by the purchase agreement, a promissory note, the effect of a pre-payment penalty, the rights of parties under a right of rescission, and the rights of a lender under a deed of trust;

5. Advises, counsels, or instructs a party to the transaction with respect to alternative ways for taking title to the property or the legal consequences of taking title in a particular manner;

6. Drafts a legal document for a party to the transaction or assists a party in the completion of a legal document, or selects or assists a party in selecting a form legal document among several forms having different legal implications;

7. Explains or recommends a course of action to a party to the transaction under circumstances that require the exercise of legal judgment or that have implications with respect to the party's legal rights or obligations;

8. Attempts to settle or resolve a dispute between the parties to the transaction that will have implications with respect to their respective legal rights or obligations;

9. Determines that all conditions of the purchase agreement or the loan closing instructions have been satisfied in accordance with the buyer's or the lender's interests or instructions;

10 Determines that the deed and deed of trust may be recorded after an update of title for any intervening conveyances or liens since the preliminary opinion;

11. Determines that the funds may be legally disbursed pursuant to the North Carolina Good Funds Settlement Act, N.C. Gen. Stat. § 45A-1 et seq.[4]

The foregoing list of examples of functions that constitute the practice of law is not exclusive, but reflects a range of responsibilities and duties that involve the following: the exercise of legal judgment; the preparation of legal documents such as deeds, deeds of trust, and title opinions; the explanation or interpretation of legal documents in circumstances that require the exercise of legal judgment; the provision of legal advice or opinions; and the performance of other services that constitute the practice of law.

Issue 2:

May a nonlawyer who is not acting under the supervision of a lawyer licensed in North Carolina (1) present and identify the documents necessary to complete a North Carolina residential real estate closing, direct the parties where to sign the documents, and ensure that the parties have properly executed the documents; and (2) receive and disburse the closing funds?

Opinion 2:

Yes. So long as a nonlawyer does not engage in any of the activities referenced in Opinion 1, or in other activities that likewise constitute the practice of law, a nonlawyer may: (1) present and identify the documents necessary to complete a North Carolina residential real estate closing, direct the parties where to sign the documents, and ensure that the parties have properly executed the documents; or (2) receive and disburse the closing funds.

Although these limited duties may be performed by nonlawyers, this does not mean that the nonlawyer is handling the closing.Since, as described in issue 1 above, the closing is a collection of services, most of which involve the practice of law, a lawyer must provide the necessary legal services.[5]And, since N.C. Gen. Stat. § 84-5 prohibits nonlawyers from arranging for or providing the lawyer or any legal services, nonlawyers may not advertise or represent to lenders, buyers/borrowers, or others in any manner that suggests that the nonlawyer will (i) handle the "closing;" (ii) provide the legal services associated with a closing, such as providing title searches, title opinions, document preparation, or the services of a lawyer for the closing; or (iii) "represent" any party to the closing.[6] The lawyer must be selected by the party for whom the legal services will be provided.

Notwithstanding this opinion, evidence considered by the State Bar with respect to this advisory opinion indicates that, at the time documents are presented to the parties for execution, a lawyer who is present may identify or be asked about important issues affecting the legal rights or obligations of the parties. A lawyer may provide important legal guidance about such issues, but a nonlawyer is not permitted to do so. Moreover, a consumer's retention of a licensed North Carolina lawyer provides financial protection to the consumer. The North Carolina Rules of Professional Conduct require a lawyer to properly handle all fiduciary funds, including residential real estate closing proceeds. In the event a lawyer mishandles the closing proceeds, the lawyer is subject to professional discipline, and the State Bar Client Security Fund may provide financial assistance for a person injured by the lawyer's improper application of funds. On the whole, the evidence considered by the State Bar indicates that it is in the best interest of a consumer to be represented by a lawyer with respect to all aspects of a residential real estate transaction.

The evidence the State Bar has considered suggests, however, that performing administrative or ministerial activities in connection with the execution of residential real estate closing documents and the receipt and disbursement of the closing proceeds does not necessarily require the exercise of legal judgment or the giving of legal advice or opinions. Indeed, the execution of closing documents and the disbursement of closing proceeds may be accomplished—and often have been accomplished—by mail, by email, or by other electronic means, or by some other procedure that would not involve the lawyer and the parties being physically present at one place and time. The State Bar therefore concludes that it should not be presumed that performing the task of overseeing the execution of residential real estate closing documents and receiving and disbursing closing proceeds necessarily involves giving legal advice or opinions or otherwise engaging in activities that constitute the practice of law.

Nonlawyers who undertake such responsibilities, and those who retain their services, should also be aware that (1) the North Carolina State Bar retains oversight authority concerning complaints about activities that constitute the unauthorized practice of law; (2) the North Carolina criminal justice system may prosecute instances of the unauthorized practice of law; and (3) that N.C. Gen. Stat. §84 10 provides a private cause of action to recover damages and attorneys' fees to any person who is damaged by the unauthorized practice of law against both the person who engages in unauthorized practice and anyone who knowingly aids and abets such person. In addition, non-lawyers and consumers should bear in mind that other governmental authorities such as the Federal Trade Commission, the North Carolina Attorney General, district attorneys, and the banking commissioner, have jurisdiction over unfair trade practices and violations of requirements regarding lending practices.

Endnotes

1. By statute, title insurance in North Carolina can be issued only after the title insurance company has received an opinion of title from a licensed North Carolina attorney who is not an employee or agent of the company and who "has conducted or caused to be conducted under the attorney's direct supervision a reasonable examination of the title."N.C. Gen. Stat. § 58 26 1.
2. Except as permitted under State v. Pledger, 257 N.C. 634, 127 S.E.2d 337 (1962), which allows a party having a "primary interest" in a transaction to prepare deeds of trust and other documents to effectuate the transaction.
3. The State Bar notes that the North Carolina General Assembly and Supreme Court are the entities that have the power to make the ultimate determination whether an activity constitutes the practice of law.
4. Since the original adoption of this opinion, the Committee has reviewed numerous complaints concerning nonlawyers, many of whom hold out to the closing parties that they will conduct "closings," including disbursement of funds, at any time of day, including after normal business hours.However, under the Good Funds Settlement Act, N.C. Gen. Stat. § 45A 4, funds may not be disbursed until the deed and deed of trust (if any) have been recorded, which in most counties requires physical delivery to the Register of Deeds during normal business hours.Accordingly, while execution of the documents may be conducted at any time, the actual "closing" and disbursement of funds may not occur until after the required documents are recorded.
5. Except as permitted under State v. Pledger, supra, or by an individual pro se.
6. Almost without exception, these nonlawyer service providers are corporations or limited liability companies that market their services to lenders, not consumers.Most are also title insurance agents.Accordingly, lenders commonly inform borrowers that the nonlawyer will be conducting the closing without any meaningful opportunity for the borrower to decide to retain a lawyer to protect its interests.Additionally, when the nonlawyer is a title insurance agent, the borrower usually is given no choice on insurer or available rates.The Committee expresses no opinion whether these actions may violate N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75 17, which prohibits a lender from requiring its borrower to obtain a policy of title insurance from a particular insurance company, agent, broker or other person specified by the lender.Title companies (and other parties) may refer lenders or borrowers to attorneys at their customer's request, but may not require the use of a specific attorney or charge a fee for any such referral.

Authorized Practice Advisory Opinion 2006-1

October 20, 2006

Appearances at Quasi-Judicial Hearings on Zoning and Land Use

Inquiry:

May a person who is not a lawyer appear before planning boards, boards of adjustment, or other governmental bodies conducting quasi-judicial hearings in a representative capacity for another party?

Opinion:

At its October 2005 meeting, the Authorized Practice Committee responded to an inquiry concerning the propriety of a person who is not a lawyer appearing before planning boards, boards of adjustment, and city and county government in a representative capacity. The committee's advisory opinion distinguished appearances on legislative concerns, such as general rezoning cases and ordinance amendments, from appearances on behalf of petitioners for special use permits and variances, which are quasi-judicial matters. The committee has received comments from a number of interested parties, including architects, land use planners, and city and county attorneys as a result of that opinion. The committee is issuing this advisory opinion to supplement the prior opinion.

First, the committee reiterates that the adoption of ordinances and amendments to official zoning maps (i.e. general rezoning cases) by the elected officials in city and county governments are legislative in nature and that any interested person may appear and speak on such matters before governmental bodies, even as representatives of groups or interested parties, without engaging in the unauthorized practice of law. Nonetheless, the general statutory prohibitions on unauthorized practice of law still apply even to persons who appear before governmental bodies on legislative matters. Non-lawyers may not hold themselves out as attorneys, provide legal services or advice, or draft any legal documents with regard to such matters. See N.C. Gen. Stat. §§ 84 2.1 and 4.

The law is clear that hearings on applications for special use permits and variances under zoning ordinances, as well as appeals from staff level interpretations related to permits, are quasi-judicial proceedings. N.C. Gen. Stat. §§ 153A-345 and 160A-381 and 388. See, Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. Bd. of Aldermen of Chapel Hill, 284 N.C. 458, 202 S.E.2d 129 (1974) and Woodhouse v. Board of Comm'rs of Nags Head, 299 N.C. 211, 261 S.E.2d 882 (1980). (For simplicity, the quasi-judicial hearings before these bodies are hereafter referenced to as a "variance hearing" unless the context indicates otherwise.) The governmental body before which the variance hearing is conducted sits in a judicial role of applying the standards of an ordinance to the particular circumstances of a particular party. Accordingly, the role of the governmental body is to receive evidence and make decisions based upon the evidence presented.

Variance hearings require the governmental body hearing the matter to observe certain formalities. Evidence, including witness evidence, is presented to the hearing body, although the Rules of Evidence need not be strictly observed. All witnesses before the body must be sworn and their testimony is subject to cross-examination. The hearing body has the power and authority to issue subpoenas to compel witness testimony. A record of the proceedings must be preserved. The decision is to be based upon the evidence presented at an open hearing, and not on extraneous matters or personal knowledge of the members of the board. The applicant has the burden of proof. The board must make written findings of fact to support its decision. And, the decision of the board is reviewable by the courts on appeal based solely upon the record of the proceedings.

The committee believes that the law is also clear that an appearance on behalf of another person, firm, or corporation in a representative capacity for the presentation of evidence through others, cross-examination of witnesses, and argument on the law at a quasi-judicial proceeding is the practice of law. N.C. Gen. Stat. §§ 84 2.1 and 4. Consequently, because the variance hearings are by definition quasi-judicial proceedings, the committee concludes that it is the unauthorized practice of law for someone other than a licensed attorney to appear in a representative capacity to advocate the legal position of another person, firm, or corporation that is a party to the proceeding.

The committee has been urged to recognize that architects, landscape architects, land use planners, and engineers play a vital role at these quasi-judicial proceedings by presenting necessary facts and information on behalf of their clients at variance hearings. The committee agrees that the information these professionals can present is critical to the decision before the hearing body. These professionals are subject matter experts whose expert opinions, as witnesses, must be presented to the hearing body. They are witnesses who are in the best position to explain to the hearing body the facts of the proposed design and its anticipated effects on a variety of factors, including traffic, environment, and aesthetics, within the framework of matters properly under consideration at the variance hearing. The committee does not believe that the role of legal advocate by attorneys in quasi-judicial proceedings should interfere with or inhibit the role of non-lawyer professionals who speak as witnesses and present information at these quasi-judicial proceedings. In fact, their roles should be complementary.

It is axiomatic that the committee has no authority to amend or formulate exceptions to the statutes. In issuing an advisory opinion, it simply articulates how it believes a court would ultimately resolve the question for the guidance of the public. The committee cannot recognize or create exceptions to the law as expressed by the legislature and the courts. Further, we believe, as a practical matter, that effective representation of parties in variance hearings is becoming increasingly dependent upon legal advocacy of the rights of the parties with an eye toward compiling a supportable record in the event of an appeal. These are the skills an attorney provides. While it is true that many of these hearings involve routine and non-controversial matters, even questions about matters such as the height of residential fences may become the subject matter of an appeal where the appellate courts may only consider the record produced at the variance hearing. See Robertson v. Zoning Board of Adjustment for the City of Charlotte, 167 N.C. App. 531, 605 S.E.2d 723 (2004). It is difficult to predict in advance when a matter may require a comprehensive record for appellate purposes. Therefore, with this further elaboration, the committee re-affirms its initial opinion expressed by letter dated October 31, 2005, that the representation of another person at a quasi-judicial hearing is the practice of law.

That said, this opinion should not be interpreted to diminish the role and expertise of land use professionals as witnesses at variance hearings. These professionals may still present their evidence in support of the position of their clients. However, they may not examine or cross-examine other witnesses or advocate the legal position of their clients.

The committee's opinion is also not intended to affect the ability of city and county planning staff to present factual information to the hearing board, including a recitation of the procedural posture of the application, and to offer such opinions as they may be qualified to make without an attorney for the government present, as the committee understands is the proper, current practice and role of the planning staff. Further, nothing in this opinion should be interpreted as limiting the ability of a corporate officer or employee from testifying on factual matters on behalf of a corporate party during a hearing or suggesting that individual parties may not represent themselves before these boards.

In sum, the committee is of the opinion that land use professionals, including architects, engineers, and land use planners, may appear and testify as to factual matters and any expert opinions that they are qualified to present at quasi-judicial proceedings, but the presentation of other evidence, including the examination and cross-examination of witnesses, making legal arguments, and the advocacy for results on behalf of others before quasi-judicial zoning and land use hearings, is the practice of law that may be performed only by licensed attorneys at law.

Index to Ethics Opinions

Editor's Note:

"RPC" denotes an ethics opinion that was adopted prior to July 24, 1997, under the superseded 1985 Rules of Professional Conduct. "FEO" denotes a "Formal Ethics Opinion" adopted under the Rules of Professional Conduct as comprehensively revised on July 24, 1997, and on February 27, 2003. See the editor's note that precedes the Rules, supra, for background on the 1997 and 2003 revisions of the Rules. The editor's note also explains the effect of the adoption and amendment of the Rules on ethics opinions promulgated under the 1985 Rules and the 1997 and 2003 versions of the Rules.

FIDUCIARY ACCOUNTS

FILES OF CLIENT

FINANCING LITIGATION

FORECLOSURES

Questions and Answers about IOLTA

Q. How can I get answers to questions about my trust account(s)?

The Trust Account Handbook published by the NC State Bar explains all trust account practices and policies. It can be found on the State Bar website at ncbar.gov/for-lawyers/trust-accounting.

If you cannot find the answer you need using the Trust Account Handbook, a number of staff people in different departments at the NC State Bar may be able to assist with your trust account question.

Questions about trust accounts generally fall into one of four categories:

1. For questions regarding client records, disbursement guidelines, client communication, and other trust account practices, contact the ethics department at 919-828-4620 ext. 575 or ethicsadvice@ncbar.gov.

2. For questions regarding trust account reconciliations, contact Anne Parkin at 919-828-4620 ext. 259.

3. For questions, explanations, or issues regarding a NSF (non-sufficient funds) notification, contact Joe Commisso 919-828-4620 ext. 200 or Sonja Puryear at 919-828-4620 ext. 203.

4. For questions regarding IOLTA compliance such as how to establish or close an IOLTA account or certify as to compliance, contact IOLTA at 919-828-0477.

Q. How do I comply with the NC State Bar rules regarding NC IOLTA?

All active members of the North Carolina State Bar who maintain general client trust accounts in North Carolina must ensure that all their general client trust accounts are established as interest-bearing IOLTA accounts.

On the annual State Bar dues notice form or electronically via the State Bar website, each active member of the State Bar must annually certify either (1) that all of the lawyer's and/or firm's general client trust accounts for North Carolina client funds are established as North Carolina IOLTA Accounts or (2) that neither the lawyer nor their employer maintain any general trust accounts holding North Carolina client funds.

Lawyers must be in compliance with this requirement no later than June 30 of each calendar year. A lawyer who fails to comply with all administrative requirements of the NC IOLTA Rules—including the annual certification—shall be reported to the NC State Bar's Administrative Committee, which may initiate proceedings to suspend administratively the lawyer's active membership status and eligibility to practice law.

Q. How do I notify IOLTA about new or closed accounts?

Lawyers must inform NC IOLTA when opening or closing IOLTA accounts. The NC IOLTA Information Update Form should be used for this purpose. It should also be used to report employment or address changes. See nciolta.org/media/425598/status-update.pdf.

Q. Where can I hold an IOLTA account?

As of July 1, 2010, lawyers may hold IOLTA accounts only at "eligible" banks that agree to pay IOLTA accounts the highest rate available to that bank's other customers when the IOLTA accounts meet the same minimum balance or other account qualifications. NC IOLTA maintains a list of eligible banks at nciolta.org/eligible-banks.

Some banks have agreed to go above and beyond the requirements to support the NC IOLTA program in its mission to ensure that low-income North Carolinians have access to critically needed legal aid. Prime Partners are banks that pay a net yield of 75% of the Federal Funds target rate or 0.75%, whichever is higher. These banks are specially recognized on the Eligible Bank list.

Many banks waive service charges on IOLTA accounts. Banks that waive service charges are noted on the list.

If you would like to have more information about IOLTA policies or accounts at a particular bank, you may call the NC IOLTA office at 919-828-0477.

Q. What if I want to open my general trust account at a bank that does not currently hold North Carolina IOLTA accounts?

A list of North Carolina banks eligible to hold IOLTA accounts is maintained by NC IOLTA. See nciolta.org/eligible-banks. If you wish to establish an IOLTA account at a bank that is not listed, please have the bank contact the IOLTA office at 919-828-0477.

Q. What forms are required to open an IOLTA account?

Rule 1.15-2(l) requires lawyers to file a bank directive with the financial institution for every trust account, whether it is a general trust account, designated trust account or fiduciary trust account. The Bank Directive can be found at ncbar.gov/media/425601/bank-directive.pdf.

No other forms are required by NC IOLTA to open the account as an IOLTA account. However, the NC IOLTA Information Update Form should be submitted to IOLTA once the account has been opened.

Q. How should my general trust account be labeled?

A trust account must be clearly labeled as a "trust account" and the name of the account should clearly identify the lawyer/firm—not NC IOLTA—as the fiduciary agent for the account. Lawyers/firms may use identifying names on their accounts such as Real Estate Trust Account, General Trust Account, IOLTA Trust Account, etc.

Q. Which of my law practice accounts must be established and maintained as IOLTA accounts?

All general client trust accounts must be established and maintained as interest-bearing IOLTA accounts, interest from which is remitted to NC IOLTA at the State Bar. General client trust accounts are those accounts that hold nominal and short-term deposits of client funds. Lawyers retain discretion to determine whether a trust deposit is of sufficient size or duration to justify placement in a separate (dedicated) interest-bearing account for the benefit of single client or transaction.

IOLTA accounts are subject to all trust account requirements established by the North Carolina State Bar Rules of Professional Conduct. For additional information about trust account requirements, see Trust Accounting Questions and Answers and Rules 1.15 thru 1.15-3 of the Rules of Professional Conduct.

You may also visit the State Bar's website and download the Trust Account Handbook at ncbar.gov/for-lawyers/trust-accounting.

Q. Does maintaining IOLTA accounts deprive clients of any funds to which they are entitled?

No. Trust moneys of the type placed in IOLTA accounts (nominal in amount or expected to be held for a short duration) have traditionally been deposited in lawyers' pooled trust accounts. Prior to the IOLTA program, such accounts did not earn interest. The North Carolina State Bar now requires general trust accounts to earn interest, which is remitted to NC IOLTA for funding law-related charitable purposes.

Lawyers retain discretion to determine whether a trust deposit is of sufficient size or duration to justify placement in a separate (dedicated) interest-bearing account for the benefit of the client or a single transaction.

Should funds be placed into a general client trust account in error, NC IOLTA has policies and procedures through which the amount of interest erroneously remitted is refunded.

Q. Are there tax consequences to maintaining IOLTA accounts?

According to the Internal Revenue Service, maintaining IOLTA accounts imposes no tax consequences to the client or the lawyer. See Revenue Ruling 81-209. Each IOLTA account bears the tax identification number of the NC IOLTA Board of Trustees to ensure that all accumulated interest is reported as income of the IOLTA program. IOLTA's tax id number and related name, Board of TTEES of The N Carolina St Bar Pl For Int On Lawyers Tr Acct, are for purposes of interest reporting only and should not appear on the checks or deposits slips. If your bank needs IOLTA's tax id number or other assistance, please contact the IOLTA office at 919-828-0477.

Q. How are clients informed about IOLTA?

In 1988 the North Carolina Supreme Court approved the posting of a Client Notice Certificate to inform clients about the IOLTA program. NC IOLTA provides Client Notices to attorneys at no charge.

Q. Can a lawyer hold North Carolina client funds in an out-of-state account?

Under the Rules of Professional Conduct, North Carolina lawyers must maintain all general trust accounts holding North Carolina client funds at a bank in North Carolina or a bank with branch offices in North Carolina. As Comment [4] to Rule 1.15 notes, a law firm with offices in another state may send a North Carolina client's funds to a firm office in another state for centralized processing; however, the client funds are still subject to the requirements of the NC Rules of Professional Conduct. Therefore, the North Carolina client's funds should be placed into a general trust account established in North Carolina, the interest from which will be remitted to NC IOLTA.

Q. How are bank service charges on IOLTA accounts handled?

NC IOLTA pays routine service charges on IOLTA accounts. Some banks waive service charges on IOLTA accounts. It is permissible for banks that do not waive service charges on IOLTA accounts to deduct from interest or utilize earnings credit for routine service charges associated with the account. Routine service charges include monthly account maintenance charges, per item check or deposit charges, etc.

Business costs or costs billable to others are the responsibility of the law firm and should not be charged against client funds in the IOLTA account or against the interest or the earnings credit of an IOLTA account. These charges may be deducted from the firm's operating account, billed to the firm, or deducted from funds maintained or deposited by the lawyer in the IOLTA account for that purpose. Examples of such costs include but are not limited to check printing, NSF/OD fees, stop payment orders, wire transfer fees, account reconciliation, remote capture capability, online banking, digital imaging, CD-ROM statements, or interest charged on uncollected balances (float).

Q. How are IOLTA funds used?

The North Carolina State Bar and the North Carolina Supreme Court allow IOLTA funds to be used, after administrative expenses, to fund grants under the following four categories:

1. providing civil legal aid to indigents;
2. enhancement and improvement of grievance and disciplinary procedures for lawyers;
3. development and maintenance of a fund for student loans for legal education on the basis of need; and
4. such other programs designed to improve the administration of justice as may be proposed by the NC IOLTA Board of Trustees and approved by the North Carolina Supreme Court.

IOLTA funds are not used for the Client Security Fund, which reimburses clients who have suffered financial loss as the result of dishonest conduct of lawyers engaged in the private practice of law in North Carolina.

IOLTA administrative costs are paid from program income and are under ten percent of income since its inception.

Q. Who makes the IOLTA grant decisions?

Grant decisions are made annually by the NC IOLTA Board of Trustees, who administer the program according to the rules promulgated by the NC State Bar Council and approved by the NC Supreme Court. 27 NCAC 1D .1301-21. The board is a standing committee of the NC State Bar Council, the representative governing body of the State Bar, whose members are elected by the bar membership through the judicial districts. IOLTA trustees are appointed by the NC State Bar Council. NC IOLTA grants are for the calendar year, and all grant applications are reviewed annually by all the trustees.

A list of current and former IOLTA trustees can be found on the IOLTA website. See nciolta.org/about-nc-iolta/board-of-trustees.

Q. Where can I find rules governing NC IOLTA?

See 27 NCAC 1D, Sections .1301-.1321 of the State Bar's Administrative Rules and Rule 1.15 of the State Bar's Rules of Professional Conduct.

For more information about NC IOLTA, please contact our office.

Shannon Azzi, Accounts Data Assistant
Bethany Farrelly, Program Assistant
Claire Mills, Finance Director & Operations Manager
Mary Irvine, Executive Director

NC IOLTA
217 E. Edenton Street
Raleigh, North Carolina 27601

PO Box 25996
Raleigh, North Carolina 27611-5996

(919) 828-0477
(919) 821-9168 Fax
e-mail: iolta@ncbar.gov

2020 NC IOLTA Information Update Form

Field A – REQUIRED

Name:_____

NC State Bar #:_____

I am submitting this form to notify the IOLTA office of the following: (check all that apply)

( ) Changes to attorney contact information (Field B)
( ) New law firm or firm name change (Field C)
( ) Opening of a new IOLTA account (Field D)
( ) Closing of an IOLTA account (Field E)

Field B – Changes to Contact Information

Employer:_____

Address:_____

Phone:_____ e-mail:_____

Changes in contact information should also be reported to the NC State Bar Membership Department at 919-828-4620 or on-line at www.ncbar.gov.

Field C– New Firm Information (Include firm name changes and mergers here)

New Firm Name:_____

Address:_____

Phone:_____ e-mail:_____

Please include a list of all NC attorneys associated with the new firm.

Field D - New IOLTA Account Information

The following general trust accounts have been established as an NC IOLTA account:

Firm Name:_____

1. Account Name:_____
   Account Number:_____
   Bank Name:_____
2. Account Name:_____
   Account Number:_____
   Bank Name:_____

(For additional accounts, please attach a separate sheet.)

Field E – Closing an IOLTA account

The following IOLTA accounts have been closed:

Firm Name:_____

1. Account Name:_____
   Account Number:_____
   Bank Name:_____
   Date Closed:_____
2. Account Name:_____
   Account Number:_____
   Bank Name:_____
   Date Closed:_____

( ) My firm now has no open IOLTA accounts

NC IOLTA · PO Box 25996 · Raleigh NC · 27611-5996
919-828-0477 (phone) · 919-821-9168 (fax) · iolta@ncbar.gov

Correlation Table 1: 1997 Revised Rules of Professional Conduct and 2003 Amended Revised Rules of Professional Conduct

1997 Revised Rules of Professional Conduct	2003 Rules of Professional Conduct
Rule 1.1(a)	Rule 1.1
(b)	*
Rule 1.2(a)-(d)	Rule 1.2(a)-(d)
(e)	*
Rule 1.3	Rule 1.3
Rule 1.4	Rule 1.4
Rule 1.5(a)	Rule 1.5(a)
(b)	(a)
(c)	(b)
(d) - (f)	(d) - (f)
Rule 1.6(a)	Rule 1.6(a)
(b)	(c)
(c)	*
(d)(1)-(2)	(a)
(d)(3)	(b)(1)
(d)(4)	(b)(2)
(d)(5)	(b)(4)
(d)(6) - (7)	(b)(6)-(7)
Rule 1.7	Rule 1.7
Rule 1.8(a)-(h)	Rule 1.8(a)-(h)
(i)	*
(j)	(i)
Rule 1.9	Rule 1.9
Rule 1.10(a)	Rule 1.10(a)
(b)	(b)
(c)	(d)
Rule 1.11 (a)	Rule 1.11(a)
(b)	(c)
(c)	(d)
(d)	(e)
(e)	*
Rule 1.12	Rule 1.12
Rule 1.13	Rule 1.13
Rule 1.14	Rule 1.14
Rule 1.15-1	Rule 1.15-1
Rule 1.15-2	Rule 1.15-2
Rule 1.15-3	Rule 1.15-3
Rule 1.15-4	Rule 1.15-4
Rule 1.16(a)(1)	Rule 1.16(a)(1)
(a)(2)	*
(a)(3)	(a)(2)
(a)(4)	(a)(3)
(b)(1)	(b)(2)
(b)(2)	(b)(3)
(b)(3)	(b)(4)
(b)(4)	(b)(5)
(b)(5)	(b)(6)
(b)(6)	(b)(7)
(b)(7)	(b)(8)
(b)(8)	(b)(9)
Rule 1.16(c)-(d)	Rule 1.16(c)-(d)
Rule 1.17	Rule 1.17
Rule 1.18	Rule 1.19
Rule 2.1	Rule 2.1
Rule 2.2	*
Rule 2.3	Rule 2.3
Rule 3.1	Rule 3.1
Rule 3.2	Rule 3.2
Rule 3.3(a)(1)	Rule 3.3(a)(1)
(a)(2)	*
(a)(3)	(a)(2)
(a)(4)	(a)(3)
(b)	(c)
(c)	*
(d)	(d)
Rule 3.4	Rule 3.4
Rule 3.5	Rule 3.5
Rule 3.6(a)	Rule 3.6(a)
(b)	*
(c)	(b)
(d)	(e)
(e)	*
Rule 3.7	Rule 3.7
Rule 3.8(a)-(d)	Rule 3.8(a)-(d)
(e)	*
(f)	(e)
(g)	(f)
Rule 4.1	Rule 4.1
Rule 4.2	Rule 4.2
Rule 4.3	Rule 4.3
Rule 4.4	Rule 4.4
Rule 5.1	Rule 5.1
Rule 5.2	Rule 5.2
Rule 5.3	Rule 5.3
Rule 5.4	Rule 5.4
Rule 5.5(a)	Rule 5.5(a)
(b)	(d)
(c)	(e)
(d)	(f)
Rule 5.6	Rule 5.6
Rule 6.1 Reserved
Rule 6.2 Reserved

1997 Revised Rules of Professional Conduct	2003 Rules of Professional Conduct
Rule 6.3	Rule 6.3
Rule 6.4	Rule 6.4
Rule 6.5	Rule 6.6
Rule 7.1	Rule 7.1
Rule 7.2(a)	Rule 7.2(a)
(b)	*
(c)	(c)
(d)	(b)
(e)	(d)
Rule 7.3	Rule 7.3
Rule 7.4	Rule 7.4
Rule 7.5(a)-(e)	Rule 7.5(a)-(e)
(f)	*
Rule 8.1	Rule 8.1
Rule 8.2	Rule 8.2
Rule 8.3	Rule 8.3
Rule 8.4	Rule 8.4
Rule 8.5(a)-(b)(2)	Rule 8.5(a)-(b)(2)
(b)(2)(A)-(B)	*

Correlation Table 2: 1997 Revised Rules of Professional Conduct and 1985 Rules of Professional Conduct (Superceded)

1997 Revised Rules of Professional Conduct	Superseded Rules of Professional Conduct (1985)
Rule 1.1	Rule 6(a)
Rule 1.2(a)(1)	Rule 7.1(c)(1)
(a)(2)	(a)(1)
(a)(3)	(b)(1)
(b)	*
(c)	(b)(3)
(d)	(a)(4)
(e)	(c)(2)
Rule 1.3	Rule 6(b)(3)
Rule 1.4	Rule 6(b)(1) - (2)
Rule 1.5(a) - (b)	Rule 2.6(a) - (b)
(c)	*
(d) - (f)	(c) - (e)
Rule 1.6(a) - (b)	Rule 4(a)
(c)	(b)
(d)(1) - (4)	(c)(1) - (4)
(d)(5)	*
(d)(6) - (7)	(c)(5) - (6)
Rule 1.7	Rule 5.1(a) - (c)
Rule 1.8(a)	Rule 5.4(a)
(b)	(c)
(c)	Rule 5.5
(d)	Rule 5.4(b)
(e)	Rule 5.3(b)
(f)	Rule 5.6
(g)	Rule 5.7
(h)	Rule 5.8
(i)	Rule 5.9
(j)	Rule 5.3(a)
Rule 1.9(a)	Rule 5.1(d)
(b)	Rule 5.11(b)
(c)	*
Rule 1.10(a)	Rule 5.11(a)
(b) - (c)	(c) - (d)
Rule 1.11	Rule 9.1
Rule 1.12	Rule 9.2
Rule 1.13(a)	Rule 5.10
(b) - (e)	*

1997 Revised Rules of Professional Conduct	Superseded Rules of Professional Conduct (1985)
Rule 1.14	*
Rule 1.15-1	Rule 10.1
Rule 1.15-2	Rule 10.2
Rule 1.15-3	Rule 10.3
Rule 1.16(a)(1)	Rule 2.8(b)(2)
(a)(2)	(b)(1)
(a)(3) - (4)	(b)(3) - (4)
Rule 1.16(b)(1)	Rule 2.8(c)(5)
(b)(2)	(c)(1)(G); (c)(1)(B)
(b)(3)	(c)(1)(E)
(b)(4)	(c)(1)(F)
(b)(5)	(c)(1)(D)
(b)(6)	(c)(1)(A)
(b)(7)	(c)(6)
(c) - (d)	(a)(1) - (3)
Rule 1.17	*
Rule 1.18	*
Rule 2.1	*
Rule 2.2	*
Rule 2.3	*
Rule 3.1	Rule 7.2(a)(1) - (2)
Rule 3.2	*
Rule 3.3(a)(1)	Rule 7.2(a)(4)
(a)(2)	See 7.2(a)(8)
(a)(3)	Rule 7.6(b)(1)
(a)(4)	Rule 7.2(a)(5) - (6); see also 7.2(b)
(b) - (d)	*
Rule 3.4(a)	Rule 7.2(a)(7)
(b)	Rule 7.9(a) - (c)
(c)	Rule 7.6(a)
(d)	*
(e)	Rule 7.6(c)(1) - (4)
(f)	Rule 7.9(d)
Rule 3.5(a)(1)	See Rule 7.10(a); Rule 7.8
(a)(2)	Rule 7.8(a) - (b)
(a)(3)	Rule 7.10(b)
(a)(4)	Rule 7.6(c)(5) - (8)
(a)(5)	Rule 7.8(d)
(b) - (c)	Rule 7.8(f) - (g)
Rule 3.6	Rule 7.7
Rule 3.7(a)	Rule 5.2(a)
(b)	*
Rule 3.8(a) - (e)	Rule 7.3
(f) - (g)	*
Rule 4.1	*
Rule 4.2(a)	Rule 7.4(1)
(b)	*
Rule 4.3	Rule 7.4(2) - (3)
Rule 4.4	*
Rule 5.1	*
Rule 5.2	*
Rule 5.3	Rule 3.3
Rule 5.4(a)(1)	Rule 3.2(a)
(a)(2)	*
(a)(3) - (4)	Rule 3.2(b) - (c)
Rule 5.4(b) - (d)	*
Rule 5.5(a)	Rule 3.1(b)
(b)	(a)
(c) - (d)	(c) - (d)
Rule 5.6	Rule 2.7
Rule 6.1 Reserved
Rule 6.2 Reserved
Rule 6.3	*
Rule 6.4	*
Rule 6.5	Rule 8.1
Rule 7.1	Rule 2.1
Rule 7.2(a) - (b)	Rule 2.2(a) - (b)
(c)	(e)
(d)(1)	(c)
(d)(2)	*
(e)(1)	(d)
(e)(2)	(c)(3)
(e)(3)	(c)(1) - (2)
(e)(4)	See (c)(3)
(e)(5)	(c)(4)
(e)(6)	*
(e)(7)(i)	(c)(5)(B)
(e)(7)(ii)	*
Rule 7.3	Rule 2.4
Rule 7.4(a)	*
(b) - (c)	Rule 2.5(a) - (b)
Rule 7.5	Rule 2.3
Rule 8.1	Rule 1.1
Rule 8.2	Rule 8.2
Rule 8.3	Rule 1.3
Rule 8.4(a) - (f)	Rule 1.2
(g)	*
Rule 8.5	*

Correlation Table 3: 1985 Rules of Professional Conduct (Superceded), 1997 Revised Rules of Professional Conduct, and 1973 Code of Professional Responsibility (Superceded)

Superseded 1985 Rules of Professional Conduct	1997 Revised Rules of Professional Conduct	Superseded 1973 Code of Professional Responsibility
Rule 1.1	Rule 8.1	DR1-101
Rule 1.2	Rule 8.4(a) - (f)	DR1-102
Rule 1.3	Rule 8.3	DR1-103
Rule 2.1	Rule 7.1	DR2-101
Rule 2.2(a) - (b)	Rule 7.2(a) - (b)	DR2-103
(c)	(d)(1)	*
(c)(1)	(e)(3)	*
(c)(2)	(e)(3)	*
(c)(3)	(e)(2); see (e)(4)	*
(c)(4)	(e)(5)	*
(c)(5)(A)	*	*
(c)(5)(B)	(e)(7)(i)	*
(c)(5)(C)	*	*
(d)	(e)(1)	*
(e)	(c)	*
Rule 2.3	Rule 7.5	DR2-102
Rule 2.4	Rule 7.3	DR2-103(A)
Rule 2.5(a)	Rule 7.4(b)	DR2-105
(b)(1) - (3)	(c)(1) - (3)	*
Rule 2.6(a) - (b)	Rule 1.5(a) - (b)	DR2-106
(c)	(d)(1) - (2)	*
(d) - (e)	(e) - (f)	DR2-107
Rule 2.7	Rule 5.6	*
Rule 2.8(a)(1)	Rule 1.16(c)	DR2-110
(a)(2) - (3)	(d)	*
(b)(1)	(a)(2)	*
(b)(2)	(a)(1)	*
(b)(3) - (4)	(a)(3) - (4)	*
(c)(1)(A)	(b)(6)	*
(c)(1)(B)	(b)(2)	*
(c)(1)(C)	(b)(3)	*
(c)(1)(D)	(b)(5)	*
(c)(1)(E)	(b)(3)	*
(c)(1)(F)	(b)(4)	*
(c)(1)(G)	(b)(2)	*
(c)(2) - (4)	*	*
(c)(5)	(b)(1)	*
(c)(6)	(b)(7)	*
Rule 3.1(a)	Rule 5.5(b)	DR3-101
(b)	(a)	*
(c) - (d)	(c) - (d)	*
Rule 3.2(a)	Rule 5.4(a)(1)	DR3-102
(b)	Rule 5.4(a)(3)	*
(c)	(a)(4)	*
Rule 3.3	Rule 5.3	*

Superseded 1985 Rules of Professional Conduct	1997 Revised Rules of Professional Conduct	Superseded 1973 Code of Professional Responsibility
Rule 4(a)	Rule 1.6(a) - (b)	DR4-101
(b)(1) - (3)	(c)(1) - (3)	*
(c)(1) - (4)	(d)(1) - (4)	*
(c)(5) - (6)	(d)(6) - (7)	*
Rule 5.1(a) - (c)	Rule 1.7	DR5-101(A)
*	*	DR5-105
(d)	Rule 1.9(a)	*
Rule 5.2(a)	Rule 3.7(a)	DR5-101(B)
(b) - (c)	*	DR5-102
Rule 5.3(a)	Rule 1.8(j)	DR5-103
(b)	(e)	*
Rule 5.4(a)	Rule 1.8(a)	DR5-104
(b)	(d)	*
(c)	(b)	*
Rule 5.5	Rule 1.8(c)	*
Rule 5.6	Rule 1.8(f)	DR5-107
Rule 5.7	Rule 1.8(g)	DR5-106
Rule 5.8	Rule 1.8(h)	DR6-102
Rule 5.9	Rule 1.8(i)	*
Rule 5.10	Rule 1.13(a)	*
Rule 5.11(a)	Rule 1.10(a)	*
(b)	Rule 1.9(b)	*
(c)	Rule 1.10(b)	*
(d)	(c)	*
Rule 6(a)(1) - (2)	Rule 1.1(a) - (b)	DR6-101
(b)(1)	Rule 1.4(a)	*
(b)(2)	(b)	*
(b)(3)	Rule 1.3	*
Rule 7.1(a)(1)	Rule 1.2(a)	DR7-101
(a)(2) - (3)	*	*
(a)(4)	(d)	*
(b)(1)	(a)(3)	*
(b)(2)	*	*
(b)(3)	(c)	*
(c)(1)	(a)(1)	*
(c)(2)	(e)	*
Rule 7.2(a)(1) - (2)	Rule 3.1; see 1.16(a)(2)	DR2-109
*	*	DR7-102
(a)(3)	*	*
(a)(4)	Rule 3.3(a)(1)	*
(a)(5)	(a)(4)	*
(a)(6)	Rule 3.3(a)(4)	*
(a)(7)	Rule 3.4(a)	*
(a)(8) - (9)	See Rule 3.3(a)(2)	*
(b)	Rule 3.3(a)(4)	*
Rule 7.3	Rule 3.8(a) - (e)	DR7-103
Rule 7.4(1)	Rule 4.2(a)	DR7-104
(2) - (3)	Rule 4.3(1) - (2)	*
Rule 7.5	*	DR7-105
Rule 7.6(a)	Rule 3.4(c)	DR7-106
(b)(1)	Rule 3.3(a)(3)	*
(b)(2)	*	*
(c)(1) - (4)	Rule 3.4(e)	*
(c)(5)	Rule 3.5(a)(4)(i)	*

Superseded 1985 Rules of Professional Conduct	1997 Revised Rules of Professional Conduct	Superseded 1973 Code of Professional Responsibility
(c)(6)	(a)(4)(ii)	*
(c)(7)	(a)(4)(iii)	*
(c)(8)	(a)(4)	*
Rule 7.7	Rule 3.6	DR7-107
Rule 7.8(a) - (b)	Rule 3.5(a)(2)	DR7-108
(c)	*	*
(d)	(a)(5)	*
(e)	*	*
(f)	Rule 3.5(b)	*
(g)	(c)	*
Rule 7.9(a) - (c)	Rule 3.4(b)	DR7-109
(d)	(f)	*
Rule 7.10(a)	See Rule 3.5(a)(1)	DR7-110
(b)	(a)(3)	*
Rule 8.1	Rule 6.5	DR8-101
Rule 8.2	Rule 8.2	DR8-102
Rule 9.1	Rule 1.11	DR9-101
Rule 9.2	Rule 1.12	DR9-101
Rule 10.1	Rule 1.15-1, -2, -3	DR9-102
Rule 10.2	Rule 1.15-1, -2, -3	DR9-102
Rule 10.3	Rule 1.15-4	*

Headings for the Complete Rules of the North Carolina State Bar

(The text of the rules can be found online at ncbar.gov.)

Subchapter A: Organization of the North Carolina State Bar

Section .0100 Functions

.0101 Purpose
.0102 Division of Work
.0103 Cooperation with Local Bar Association Committees
.0104 Organization of Local Bar Associations
.0105 Annual Program
.0106 Reports Made to Annual Meeting

Section .0200 Membership - Annual Membership Fees

.0201 Classes of Membership
.0202 Register of Members
.0203 Annual Membership Fees; When Due
.0204 Good Standing Definition and Certificates

Section .0300 Permanent Relinquishment of Membership in the State Bar

.0301 Effect of Relinquishment
.0302 Conditions for Relinquishment
.0303 Allegations of Misconduct Received by the State Bar On or After the Date of Relinquishment

Section .0400 Election, Succession, and Duties of Officers

.0401 Officers
.0402 Eligibility for Office
.0403 Term of Office
.0404 Elections
.0405 Nominating Committee
.0406 Vacancies and Succession
.0407 Removal from Office
.0408 Compensation of Officers
.0409 President
.0410 President-Elect, Vice-President, and Immediate Past President
.0411 Secretary
.0412 Emergency Authority

Section .0500 Meetings of the North Carolina State Bar

.0501 Annual Meetings
.0502 Special Meetings
.0503 Notice of Meetings
.0504 Quorum
.0505 Parliamentary Rules

Section .0600 Meetings of the Council

.0601 Regular Meetings
.0602 Special and EmergencyMeetings
.0603 Notice of Meetings
.0604 Quorum
.0605 Manner of Meeting of Council
.0606 Parliamentary Rules

Section .0700 Standing Committees of the Council

.0701 Standing Committees and Boards

Section .0800 Election and Appointment of State Bar Councilors

.0801 Purpose
.0802 Election - When Held; Notice; Nominations
.0803 Election - Voting Procedures
.0804 Procedures Governing Elections by Mail
.0805 Procedures Governing Elections by Electronic Vote
.0806 Procedures Governing Early Voting
.0807 Vacancies
.0808 Bylaws Providing for Geographical Rotation or Division of Representation

Section .0900 Organization of the Judicial District Bars

.0901 Bylaws
.0902 Annual Membership Fee
.0903 Fiscal Period

Section .1000 Model Bylaws For Use by Judicial District Bars

.1001 Name
.1002 Authority and Purpose
.1003 Membership
.1004 Officers
.1005 Councilor
.1006 Annual Membership Fee
.1007 Meetings
.1008 District Bar Finances
.1009 Prohibited Activities
.1010 Committees
.1011 Board of Directors or Executive Committee
.1012 Amendment of the Bylaws
.1013 Selection of Nominees for District Court Judge

Section .1100 Office of the North Carolina State Bar

.1101 Office

Section .1200 Filing Papers with and Serving the North Carolina State Bar

.1201 When Papers Are Filed Under These Rules and Regulations

Section .1300 Seal

.1301 Form and Custody of Seal

Section .1400 Rulemaking Procedures

.1401 Publication for Comment
.1402 Review by the Executive Committee
.1403 Action by the Council and Review by the North Carolina Supreme Court

Subchapter B: Discipline and Disability Rules

Section .0100 Discipline and Disability of Attorneys

.0101 General Provisions
.0102 Procedure for Discipline
.0103 Definitions
.0104 State Bar Council: Powers and Duties in Discipline and Disability Matters
.0105 Chairperson of the Grievance Committee: Powers and Duties
.0106 Grievance Committee: Powers and Duties
.0107 Counsel: Powers and Duties
.0108 Chairperson of the Hearing Commission: Powers and Duties
.0109 Hearing Panel: Powers and Duties
.0110 Secretary: Powers and Duties in Discipline and Disability Matters
.0111 Grievances: Form and Filing
.0112 Investigations: Initial Determination; Notice and Response; Committee Referrals
.0113 Proceedings before the Grievance Committee
.0114 Proceedings Before the Discipline Hearing Commission: General Rules Applicable to All Proceedings
.0115 Proceedings Before the Disciplinary Hearing Commission: Pleadings and Prehearing Procedure
.0116 Proceedings Before the Disciplinary Hearing Commission: Formal Hearing
.0117 Proceedings Before the Disciplinary Hearing Commission: Posttrial Motions
.0118 Proceedings Before the Disciplinary Hearing Commission: Stayed Suspension
.0119 Effect of a Finding of Guilt in Any Criminal Case
.0120 Reciprocal Discipline & Disability Proceedings
.0121 Surrender of License While Under Investigation
.0122 Disability
.0123 Enforcement of Powers
.0124 Notice to Member of Action and Dismissal
.0125 Notice to Complainant
.0126 Appointment of Counsel to Protect Clients' Interests When Attorney Disappears, Dies, or Is Transferred to Disability Inactive Status
.0127 Imposition of Discipline; Findings of Incapacity or Disability; Notice to Courts
.0128 Obligations of Disbarred or Suspended Attorneys
.0129 Reinstatement
.0130 Address of Record
.0131 Disqualification Due to Interest
.0132 Trust Accounts; Audit
.0133 Confidentiality
.0134 Disciplinary Amnesty in Illicit Drug Use Cases
.0135 Noncompliance Suspension

Section .0200 Rules Governing Judicial District Grievance Committees

.0201 Organization of Judicial District Grievance Committees
.0202 Jurisdiction & Authority of District Grievance Committees
.0203 Meetings of the District Grievance Committees
.0204 Procedure Upon Institution of a Grievance
.0205 Record Keeping
.0206 Miscellaneous
.0207 Conflicts of Interest
.0208 Letter to Complainant Where Local Grievance Alleges Fee Dispute Only
.0209 Letter to Complainant Where Local Grievance Alleges Fee Dispute and Other Violations
.0210 Letter to Complainant Where District Committee Recommends Finding of No Probable Cause
.0211 Letter to Respondent Where District Committee Recommends Finding of Probable Cause
.0212 Letter to Complainant Where District Committee Recommends Finding of Probable Cause
.0213 Letter to Complainant Acknowledging Grievance
.0214 Letter to Investigating Attorney Assigning Grievance
.0215 Letter to Complainant from Investigating Attorney
.0216 Letter of Notice to Respondent Attorney
.0217 Letter Transmitting Completed File to North Carolina State Bar

Subchapter C: Rules Governing the Board of Law Examiners and the Training of Law Students

Section .0100 Board of Law Examiners

.0101 Appointment
.0102 Examination of Applicants for License
.0103 Admission to Practice
.0104 Approval of Rules and Regulations of Board of Law Examiners
.0105 Approval of Law Schools

Section .0200 Rules Governing Practical Training of Law Students

.0201 Purpose
.0202 Definitions
.0203 Eligibility
.0204 Form and Duration of Certification
.0205 Supervision
.0206 Activities
.0207 Use of Student's Name
.0208 Field Placements
.0209 Relationship of Law School and Clinics; Responsibility Upon Departure of Supervising Attorney or Closure of Clinic
.0210 Pro Bono Activities

Subchapter D: Rules of the Standing Committees of the North Carolina State Bar

Section .0100 Procedures for Ruling on Questions of Legal Ethics

.0101 Definitions
.0102 General Provisions
.0103 Informal Ethics Advisories and Ethics Advisories
.0104 Formal Ethics Opinions and Ethics Decisions
.0105 Procedures for Meetings of the Ethics Committee

Section .0200 Procedures for the Authorized Practice Committee

.0201 General Provisions
.0202 Procedure
.0203 Definitions
.0204 State Bar Council - Powers and Duties
.0205 Chairperson of the Authorized Practice Committee - Powers and Duties

.0206 Authorized Practice Committee - Powers and Duties
.0207 Counsel - Powers and Duties
.0208 Suing for Injunctive Relief

Section .0300 Disaster Response Plan

.0301 The Disaster Response Team
.0302 General Policy and Objectives
.0303 Report on Results

Section .0400 Reserved

Section .0500 Reserved

Section .0600 Rules Governing the Lawyer Assistance Program

.0601 Purpose
.0602 Authority
.0603 Operational Responsibility
.0604 Size of Board
.0605 Appointment of Members; When; Removal
.0606 Term of Office and Succession
.0607 Appointment of Chairperson
.0608 Appointment of Vice-Chairperson
.0609 Source of Funds
.0610 Meetings
.0611 Annual Report
.0612 Powers and Duties of the Board
.0613 Confidentiality
.0614 Reserved
.0615 Regional Chapters
.0616 Suspension for Impairment, Reinstatement
.0617 Consensual Inactive Status
.0618 Agents of the State Bar
.0619 Judicial Committee
.0620 Rehabilitation Contracts for Lawyers Impaired by Substance Abuse
.0621 Evaluations for Substance Abuse, Alcoholism, and/or other Chemical Addictions
.0622 Grounds for Compelling an Evaluation
.0623 Failure to Comply with an Order Compelling an Evaluation

Section .0700 Procedures for Fee Dispute Arbitration

.0701 Purpose and Implementation
.0702 Jurisdiction
.0703 Coordinator of Fee Dispute Resolution
.0704 Confidentiality
.0705 Selection of Facilitators
.0706 Powers and Duties of the Vice-Chairperson
.0707 Processing Requests for Fee Dispute Resolution
.0708 Settlement Conference Procedure
.0709 Record Keeping

Section .0800 Reserved

Section .0900 Procedures for Administrative Committee

.0901 Transfer to Inactive Status
.0902 Reinstatement from Inactive Status
.0903 Suspension for Failure to Fulfill Obligations of Membership
.0904 Reinstatement from Suspension
.0905 Pro Bono Practice by Out of State Lawyers

Section .1000 Rules Governing Reinstatement Hearings Before the Administrative Committee

.1001 Reinstatement Hearings
.1002 Review and Order of Council

Section .1100 Reserved

Section .1200 Reserved

Section .1300 Rules Governing the Administration of the Plan for Interest on Lawyers' Trust Accounts (IOLTA)

.1301 Purpose
.1302 Jurisdiction: Authority
.1303 Operational Responsibility
.1304 Size of Board
.1305 Lay Participation
.1306 Appointment of Members; When; Removal
.1307 Term of Office
.1308 Staggered Terms
.1309 Succession
.1310 Appointment of Chairperson
.1311 Appointment of Vice-Chairperson
.1312 Source of Funds
.1313 Fiscal Responsibility
.1314 Meetings
.1315 Annual Report
.1316 IOLTA Accounts
.1317 Comparability Requirements for IOLTA Accounts
.1318 Confidentiality
.1319 Certification
.1320 Noncompliance
.1321 Severability

Section .1400 Rules Governing the Administration of the Client Security Fund of the North Carolina State Bar

.1401 Purpose; Definitions
.1402 Jurisdiction: Authority
.1403 Operational Responsibility
.1404 Size of Board
.1405 Lay Participation
.1406 Appointment of Members; When; Removal
.1407 Term of Office
.1408 Staggered Terms
.1409 Succession
.1410 Appointment of Chairperson
.1411 Appointment of Vice-Chairperson
.1412 Source of Funds
.1413 Fiscal Responsibility
.1414 Meetings
.1415 Annual Report
.1416 Appropriate Uses of the Client Security Fund
.1417 Applications for Reimbursement
.1418 Processing Applications
.1419 Subrogation for Reimbursement
.1420 Authority Reserved by the Supreme Court

Section .1500 Rules Governing the Administration of the Continuing Legal Education Program

.1501 Scope, Purpose, and Definitions
.1502 Jurisdiction: Authority
.1503 Operational Responsibility
.1504 Size of Board
.1505 Lay Participation
.1506 Appointment of Members; When; Removal
.1507 Term of Office
.1508 Staggered Terms
.1509 Succession
.1510 Appointment of Chairperson
.1511 Appointment of Vice-Chairperson
.1512 Source of Funds
.1513 Fiscal Responsibility
.1514 Meetings
.1515 Annual Report
.1516 Powers, Duties, and Organization of the Board
.1517 Exemptions
.1518 Continuing Legal Education Requirements
.1519 Accreditation Standards
.1520 Registration of Sponsors and Program Approval
.1521 Credit Hours
.1522 Annual Report and Compliance Period
.1523 Noncompliance
.1524 Reinstatement
.1525 Reserved
.1526 Effective Date
.1527 Regulations

Section .1600 Regulations Governing the Administration of the Continuing Legal Education Program

.1601 General Requirements for Program Approval
.1602 Course Content Requirements
.1603 Registered Sponsors
.1604 Reserved
.1605 Computation of Credit
.1606 Fees
.1607 Reserved
.1608 Reserved
.1609 Reserved
.1610 Reserved
.1611 Reserved

Section .1700 The Plan of Legal Specialization

.1701 Purpose
.1702 Jurisdiction: Authority
.1703 Operational Responsibility
.1704 Size of Board
.1705 Lay Participation
.1706 Appointment of Members; When; Removal
.1707 Term of Office
.1708 Staggered Terms
.1709 Succession
.1710 Appointment of Chairperson
.1711 Appointment of Vice-Chairperson
.1712 Source of Funds
.1713 Fiscal Responsibility
.1714 Meetings
.1715 Annual Report
.1716 Powers and Duties of the Board
.1717 Retained Jurisdiction of the Council
.1718 Privileges Conferred and Limitations Imposed
.1719 Specialty Committees
.1720 Minimum Standards for Certification of Specialists
.1721 Minimum Standards for Continued Certification of Specialists
.1722 Establishment of Additional Standards
.1723 Revocation or Suspension of Certification as a Specialist
.1724 Right to Hearing and Appeal to Council
.1725 Areas of Specialty
.1726 Certification Standards of the Specialties of Bankruptcy Law, Estate Planning and Probate Law, Real Property Law, Family Law, and Criminal Law
.1727 Inactive Status

Section .1800 Hearing and Appeal Rules of the Board of Legal Specialization

.1801 Reconsideration of Applications, Failure of Written Examinations and Appeals
.1802 Denial, Revocation, or Suspension of Continued Certification as a Specialist
.1803 Reserved
.1804 Appeal to the Council
.1805 Judicial Review
.1806 Additional Rules Pertaining to Hearing and Appeals

Section .1900 Rules Concerning the Accreditation of Continuing Legal Education for the Purposes of the Board of Legal Specialization

.1901 General Provisions
.1902 Definitions
.1903 Accreditation Standards for Lecture-Type CLE Activities
.1904 Computation of Hours of Instruction
.1905 Alternatives to Lecture-Type CLE Course Instruction
.1906 Accreditation of Courses
.1907 Accreditation of Sponsor
.1908 Showing by Applicants

Section .2000 Rules of the Board of Legal Specialization for Approval of Independent Certifying Organizations

.2001 Policy Statement
.2002 General Procedure
.2003 Factors to be Considered in Reviewing Certifying Organizations
.2004 Standards for Approval of Certifying Organizations
.2005 Application Procedure
.2006 Effect of Approval of a Certifying Organization by the Board of Legal Specialization

Section .2100 Certification Standards for the Real Property Law Specialty

.2101 Establishment of Specialty Field
.2102 Definition of Specialty
.2103 Recognition as a Specialist in Real Property Law
.2104 Applicability of Provisions of the North Carolina Plan of Legal Specialization
.2105 Standards for Certification as a Specialist in Real Property Law

.3205 Standards for Certification as a Specialist in Utilities Law
.3206 Standards for Continued Certification as a Specialist
.3207 Applicability of Other Requirements

Section .3300 Certification Standards for the Privacy and Information Security Law Specialty

.3301 Establishment of Specialty Field
.3302 Definition of Specialty
.3303 Recognition as a Specialist in Privacy and Information Security Law
.3304 Applicability of Provisions of the North Carolina Plan of Legal Specialization
.3305 Standards for Certification as a Specialist in Privacy and Information Security Law
.3306 Standards for Continued Certification as a Specialist
.3307 Applicability of Other Requirements

Subchapter E: Regulations for Organizations Practicing Law

Section .0100 Regulations for Professional Corporations and Professional Limited Liability Companies Practicing Law

.0101 Authority, Scope, and Definitions
.0102 Name of Professional Corporation or Professional Limited Liability Company
.0103 Registration with the North Carolina State Bar
.0104 Management and Financial Matters
.0105 General and Administrative Provisions
.0106 Forms

Section .0200 Registration of Interstate and International Law Firms

.0201 Registration Requirement
.0202 Conditions of Registration
.0203 Registration Fee
.0204 Certificate of Registration
.0205 Effect of Registration
.0206 Non-renewal of Registration

Section .0300 Rules Concerning Prepaid Legal Services Plans

.0301 State Bar May Not Approve or Disapprove Plans
.0302 Registration Requirement
.0303 Definition of Prepaid Plan
.0304 Registration Procedures
.0305 Registration
.0306 Requirement to File Amendments
.0307 Annual Registration
.0308 Registration Fee
.0309 Index of Registered Plans
.0310 Advertising of State Bar Approval Prohibited
.0311 State Bar Jurisdiction
.0312 Revocation of Registration
.0313 Hearing before the Authorized Practice Committee
.0314 Action by the Council

Section .0400 Rules for Arbitration of Internal Law Firm Disputes

.0401 Purpose
.0402 Submission to Arbitration
.0403 Jurisdiction
.0404 Administration
.0405 Uniform Arbitration Act
.0406 List of Arbitrators
.0407 Selection of Arbitrators
.0408 Fees and Expenses
.0409 Confidentiality
.0410 Authority to Adopt Amendments and Regulations

Subchapter F: Foreign Legal Consultants

Section .0100 Foreign Legal Consultants

.0101 Applications
.0102 Application Form
.0103 Requirements for Applicants
.0104 Burden of Proving Moral Character and General Fitness
.0105 Failure to Disclose
.0106 Investigation by Counsel
.0107 Recommendation of Membership & Fees Committee
.0108 Appeal from Committee Decision
.0109 Hearing Procedure
.0110 Review and Order of Council
.0111 Application Fees; Refunds; Returned Checks
.0112 Permanent Record
.0113 Denial; Reapplication

Subchapter G: Certification of Paralegals

Section .0100 The Plan for Certification of Paralegals

.0101 Purpose
.0102 Jurisdiction: Authority
.0103 Operational Responsibility
.0104 Size and Composition of Board
.0105 Appointment of Members; When; Removal
.0106 Term of Office
.0107 Staggered Terms
.0108 Succession
.0109 Appointment of Chairperson
.0110 Appointment of Vice-Chairperson
.0111 Source of Funds
.0112 Fiscal Responsibility
.0113 Meetings
.0114 Annual Report
.0115 Powers and Duties of the Board
.0116 Retained Jurisdiction of the Council
.0117 Conferred and Limitations Imposed
.0118 Certification Committee
.0119 Standards for Certification of Paralegals
.0120 Standards for Continued Certification of Paralegals
.0121 Lapse, Suspension or Revocation of Certification
.0122 Right to Review and Appeal to Council
.0123 Inactive Status Upon Demonstration of Hardship
.0124 Retired Certified Paralegal Status

Section .0200 Rules Governing Continuing Paralegal Education

.0201 Continuing Paralegal Education (CPE)
.0202 Accreditation Standards
.0203 General Course Approval
.0204 Fees

Subchapter H: Attorneys Appearing Pro Hac Vice

The North Carolina State Bar
PO Box 25908
Raleigh, NC 27611

You've done the hard work, now get the recognition.

Make specialization part of your career path.

Appellate Practice • Bankruptcy • Criminal • Elder • Estate Planning & Probate
Family • Immigration • Juvenile Delinquency • Privacy & Information Security • Real Property
Social Security Disability • Trademark • Utilities • Workers' Comensation

Learn more.

919.828.4620 • www.nclawspecialists.gov

BOARD OF LEGAL SPECIALIZATION
NORTH CAROLINA STATE BAR